The Democratic press is so fond of denouncing Judge Bond that his action in instructing the jury to return a verdict of not guilty in the Barnwell county election conspiracy cases will make them feel uncomfortable.

Mr. Frye, of Maine, is a pretty good man to puncture the rebels, and he took Blackburn in hand the other day, showing that the worst fire-eaters and conspirators in the South endorse his course and shout treason in the same breath. Blackburn, Chalmers and other hot-heads get restive under the onslaught.

The Vicksburg Herald says that if the colored emigration movement is encouraged at the North the planters and business men of the South will start a line of steamers to China and bring over thousands of Chinese laborers. Perhaps this would be retaliation, but we don't exactly see where it comes in.

Another pleasant remark from the Okolona Southern States: "The men who unleashed the hounds of war upon our people in the name of 'Union' were traitors, and they must be branded as traitors before the world and damned to the depths with the Benedict Arnolds who opposed secession and secessionists in the days of the revolution."

The latest development concerning the famous Glover committee is that all the testimony taken by it has been stolen from the committee room. The supposition is that the document is in the possession of some of the fraud hunters employed by the committee, who doubtless intend to sell it to the newspapers. Efforts are being made to ascertain the whereabouts of the stolen papers, and it is not unlikely that criminal proceedings will be instituted against the guilty parties.

The Democracy of Cincinnati continue to be wonderfully exercised because a prominent German has been elected Mayor of the city by Republican votes. They first declared he had never been naturalized. The Mayor-elect produced his papers. They now take a new tack, and aver that he lacked a month of being 21 when his papers were issued. Mr. Jacob has held many offices in Cincinnati, and has been a voter and an honored citizen of the United States for nearly twenty-five years. The Democracy will gain nothing by such quibbling.

Sober Second Thoughts.

The Republican victories in the recent elections only mark the beginning of one great change in public opinion and the progress of another. To interpret them rightly it must be remembered that a marked change in public opinion on financial questions had already commenced when the elections of last year were held. A great increase in the Republican strength was then apparent. But the change this year is still more remarkable. It is due in part to the growth of sound opinions on financial questions; the Republicans are more united in support of resumption than ever before, and the theories of Greenbackism have lost their hold with a great many voters. It could hardly be otherwise, men being in any degree reasoning creatures. Resumption was greatly decried, but it has been tried. The predicted disasters do not come; on the contrary, the times are already better for everybody. The false theories which have made so much mischief have drawn most of their support from the blind desire to escape from the severe strain of settlement for the debts of inflation. As the strain is lifted, men begin to recover their common sense. It is not possible that this reaction of public opinion should be arrested as long as times continue to improve and specie payments work without disaster or distress.

But another very important change in public opinion has commenced, of which there was but little, if any, evidence last Fall. It is true, thoughtful and sincere Republicans had begun before the elections of last year to realize very fully the spirit of the Solid South, and the dangers involved by its rapid advance toward power. Appreciation of that spirit and those dangers probably turned the scale in 1876. Yet it is true that it was almost confined to earnest Republicans at that time, and it had effect mainly in kindling them to greater effort. The Solid South had not clearly shown its temper. If infamous things were done, men were ready to accept the explanation that these were the exceptional excesses of individuals. If an ugly spirit was shown, it was thought that the anxiety to get rid of local misgovernment in some of the Southern States was some excuse, and that such a spirit would be shown no longer when the Southern States should be fully controlled by their property-owning citizens. As long as these explanations were accepted, those who had separated from the Republican party because of its course on this question still remained in a hostile or independent position, and some Republicans were lukewarm.

There is an end of all doubt, at last. Every sane man now knows that the temper of the Solid South is quite as vicious, defiant, sectional, revolutionary and dangerous, as it was in 1861. It has not changed for the better, but has only adopted less manly and more insidious methods. Now, as then, it is "rule or ruin." Now, as then, the South is made solid by an infamous despotism, and the North is divided by corruption and fraud. All this the country sees, in spite of the fact that the Southern States enjoy all the freedom that they have ever desired. Liberty, kindness, patience, generous concession, all have been wasted upon the rooted hostility of the South. Now the North begins to understand the fact, just as earnest Republicans only understood it some years ago. And the change of sentiment, toward an absolute union of the North to resist the aggressive and revolutionary demands of a Solid South, is the most striking feature of the recent elections. It is no longer Republicans only who are moved. Democrats and Independents by the thousand, who were loyal when the Union was assailed by arms, now see the necessity of being not less stern and honorable but more dangerous modes of assault.

A Few Plain Words.

The Democrats are still trying hard to divert the issue. "It is not revolutionary to put riders on an appropriation bill," they scream. Who said it was? "You Republicans did it yourselves when you were in power." Well, what of it? Nobody has questioned the right of the majority in Congress to attach any sort of legislation, congruous or incongruous, to the annual supply bills. It is bad policy; it is a reprehensible abuse of power, but the Constitution does not prohibit it. There is no issue as to the right of the Democrats to pass the bills in any shape they please. All the ado they can make will not deceive the people. They came to Washington threatening to take the Government by the throat and choke it to death unless they were allowed to repeal the laws passed to secure honest elections. They said among themselves: "We cannot elect a President without New York, and we cannot carry New York if the laws remain in force which bind it as from committing frauds in the city. We must wipe out these laws the first thing we do." And then they began to bully the President, declaring that they would withhold the money needed to pay the Army, the courts and collect the revenue if he performed his plain constitutional duty of vetoing measures he disapproved. Their scheme was promptly exposed and denounced. They have not abandoned it, but they are trying hard to make the country believe that what the Republicans stigmatized as revolutionary was their purpose to do as they pleased in Congress with their own bills, and not their avowed intention of destroying the Government, unless the President would sign what he deemed obnoxious measures.

We would like to say a few plain words to these gentlemen, Messrs. Democrats, the country is tired of your protestations and grimaces. Everybody understands your game. People are ready to exclaim with Hamlet: "Leave off your damnable faces and begin." Stop your mouthfuls of mock patriotism, put your bills through speedily in any shape you wish, and make your fight with the President in a manly way. Don't sneak off on side issues. The question is a perfectly plain one. You want to repeal the election laws, so you can carry New York in 1880 as you did in 1868. You don't care a straw whether troops can be stationed at the polls or not, because you know there are scarcely enough soldiers east of the Mississippi all told to intimidate a cross roads squad of bull-dozers. Go on with your game, then. Pass your bills—you have the power—and then carry out if you dare, the threats you made when the session began.—N. Y. Tribune.

The James-Hinds Tragedy.

To say that the entire community was horrified by the terrible tragedy on Wednesday last, imperfectly describes the feeling occasioned among all classes of citizens by the fatal rencontre in which an estimable man was sent to his grave. The shooting of Mr. Isaac D. James by young Denwood B. Hinds, the seducer of his daughter, was an appropriate sequel to the ruin and murder of that unfortunate young lady. The luck that so often doth hedge a villain from richly deserved punishment stood Hinds in good stead on this occasion, not only in the protection which it afforded him from the bullet of the distracted father, but in the circumstances under which the shooting occurred.

Hinds has escaped private vengeance, and it is to be feared that he will escape the full measure of that public vengeance which his crime deserves. He did not fire until after he had been fired upon, and there is too much reason to believe that a plea of self-defense can be successfully set up in his behalf. But he escapes the punishment which he deserves if any man ever deserved to be punished, he will not escape the execration and indignation of this community. These will follow him as long as he lives and wherever he goes.

Hinds has upon his hands and upon his soul the blood of a poor girl and a wretched father, and the anguish of a heart broken mother. If he should escape with his neck, he should by all means shoot the mother and son. His work would then be artistically complete, and the whole family would be disposed of.—Baltimore.

Monday last will long be remembered as the biggest bill day ever known in the House of Representatives. In all 1,385 bills were introduced of which a much larger proportion than usual referred to general legislation. This number is unprecedented, but not more so than the amounts which many of these bills call upon the government to foot. It was Greenback day, and every member with an inflation bump upon his forehead was literally loaded down with schemes for filling somebody's pockets with unearned money, and by so much weakening the public credit. Some of these are so dangerous, so monstrous, that special attention should be attracted to them. March wants to prevent further increase of the interest-bearing debt and $50,000,000 of fractional currency. Stephens wants to perfect the double standard, the issue of bullion silver certificates, a new international gold coin worth four dollars, to be called the "stella," metric gold coins and certificates on gold bullion, a repeal of the ten per cent. tax on state banks, making the tax on state and national banks equal. Mr. Wright wants a loan of $20,000,000 for settlers. Other members wanted the unlimited coinage of silver, the repeal of the national bank law, the substitution of treasury notes for all bank notes, an income tax, trade dollars as legal-tenders, the issue of millions for improvement schemes, interest to be paid, perhaps, in the distant future; the Pacific railroads to be relieved of all obligation to the government, the completion of the system of Pacific railroads by liberal grants, a subsidized mail line to Brazil, inter-convertible bonds and the appropriation of a few thousand millions to be used as Congress shall hereafter direct. These are not all the wild-cat measures introduced, but are sufficient to show the general tenor and purpose of the majority in that branch of Congress which represents the people. The minority have a well nigh impossible task before them to defeat the most dangerous of these measures, but if they are aggressive and persistent they may succeed. They have a grand opportunity to earn the plaudits of business circles, and at the same time preserve their country from a deluge of inflation.

Secretary Sherman has begun the funding of the ten-forty bonds of the act of March 3, 1861, aggregating $191,566,300 in four per cent. bonds and certificates. If the recent call for over $100,000,000 four per cents in one day is any indication of the feeling in financial circles, all the ten-forties will be funded within the time that it was thought it would take to land the five-twenties alone. If this operation is successful, as it is believed it will be, nearly $4,000,000 will be saved annually in interest, and during the first year $1,000,000, notwithstanding the three months' double interest. Secretary Sherman is conducting the most gigantic refunding operation the world has ever seen, and that, too, without creating any disturbance in the money market. His success could not have been more complete than it is. He has not only saved millions to the government, but has strengthened its financial credit in the face of persistent attacks upon it by the Democratic Greenbackers. His course cannot be too highly praised.

The Republican party has refunded over a thousand millions of the national debt and reduced the cost of carrying it twenty millions, or almost ten per cent. of the entire cost of the administration of the government; and yet every act by means of which this magnificent triumph of financing has been accomplished has been passed against the votes of the Democratic party.

James Carroll, colored, was lynched at Point of Rocks Thursday last week by a band of masked vigilantes for having committed rape on Monday night on the person of Mrs. Regina Thomas, near Licksville, Frederick county, during the absence of her husband. Carroll was caught in Georgetown, D. C. He confessed the crime.

Charlotte News: "If the Democrats make up their mind to frame a platform that shall be half Western and half Eastern, with a sop for the Old Idea and a crumb for the national bond-holders, they will lose strength at both ends of the line. Mr. Frazier both-ways will not be chosen President in 1880."

TELEGRAPHIC.

POLITICAL.

[Special to the Cumberland News.]

BALTIMORE, April 23.—Senator Whyte announces that he is not a candidate for re-election to the United States Senate. This announcement is regarded as healing a bitter feud in regard to the Senatorship.

A. P. Gorman, W. T. Hamilton and other leaders have united on Robert M. McLane to succeed senator Whyte, and the latter will be supported by Gorman and friends as a candidate for the next Vice-Presidency of the United States.

LAST OF THE LYNCHED.

FREDERICK, MD., April 21.—The coroner's jury in the case of the lynched negro, Carroll, met in the Grand Jury room this morning. After hearing the testimony of Conductor Michael; Baggage Master Mussetter, Joseph Payne, Mayor Moberly, Charles Boyle, and several others, they rendered the following verdict:

"That he, the said James Carroll, was forcibly taken from Captain Jacob Michael's train at or near Washington Junction on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, in Frederick county, Md., on the 17th day of April, 1879, by a body of men unknown to the jury, and by said body of men unlawfully hanged."

AMERICAN FINANCES.

LONDON, April 21.—The Times this morning in an editorial article congratulates Secretary Sherman upon his success in converting the ten-forty bonds; and says the conversion of the six per cent. bonds in 1881 is likely to depend more than the present operation on the maintenance of the credit of the United States abroad. The reviving trade in the United States will by 1881 probably render it impossible to obtain money at less than 4 per cent. The Times suggests that now that conversion has been carried on as far as it can be for two years, Mr. Sherman should direct the attention of Congress and the nation to the policy of reducing the capital of the debt which has for sometime been neglected.

ROUGH WORK WITH THE MOONSHINERS.

WHEELING, W. Va., April 21.—Deputy Revenue Collector Dotson with four assistants encountered on Friday morning last, near Osborn's Ford, in Scott county, Va., a party of moonshiners, who attacked, during the darkness, Dotson's party with stones, and besieged them in the vicinity of John Cox's still-house until dawn, when a single shot from Dotson's party killed John Cox, the proprietor of the distillery. He was shot in the head and instantly killed. Cox's two brothers then surrendered, but the other three escaped. Cox had a wife and several children. The moonshiners were armed with pistols, and demanded the surrender of the revenue officers. They first used stones in the darkness, but at dawn were preparing to attack with their pistols. Cox was known as "Deceitful John Cox." The distillery was destroyed.

Deputy Collector Cooper at Madisonville, Monroe county, Tennessee, telegraphic Commissioner Baum as follows: "My raiding party of eleven men was fired on from ambush at Mill Williams' distillery, on the headwaters of Citter creek. Deputy Collector William Lindsay, of the First Division, was shot in the arm, breaking it above the elbow. Several shots were exchanged. We succeeded in the seizure and destruction of the distillery. Mill Williams, Jason Millsop and John McElvey are suspected as the assaulting party. We started out on the 17th, and destroyed four distilleries and made two arrests."

NASHVILLE, TENN., April 21.—Seven hundred violators of the revenue laws appeared before the United States Circuit Court to-day. One hundred and seventy-five accepted Attorney General Devens' amnesty, and the rest will follow suit.

ANOTHER VICTORY FOR PAROLE.

LONDON, April 22.—The race for the city and suburban hand-icaps took place to-day at the Epsom spring meeting, and resulted in a victory for the favorite, Mr. P. Lorillard's American horse Parole. Lord Roseberg's four years old bay colt Ribot came in second, and Lord Wilton's six years old brown horse Cradle third. The last betting was 3 to 1 against Parole, 25 to 1 against Ribot, and 20 to 1 against Cradle. There were eighteen starters.

FAILURE IN ELECTION CASES.

CHARLESTON, S. C., April 22.—At the opening of the United States Circuit Court this morning Judge Bond instructed the jury charged with the trial of the Barnwell county election conspiracy cases to bring in a verdict of not guilty, on the ground of a defect in the information. The information consists of five separate counts. The first four counts charged that the traversers, with other persons unknown, conspired to prevent Fred Nix, colored, and others who were qualified voters from meeting peaceably for consultation in respect to public affairs, an immunity and right guaranteed to them by the United States. The fifth count charged that the traversers conspired to injure and oppress Nix in the exercise of the right to vote at the federal election on account of his race and color. The first four counts of the information Judge Bond held could not be maintained, because they contained no allegation that the parties alleged to have been interfered with had been molested on account of their race or color. The fifth count, he said while it charged an offence under the statute, i. e., the right to vote at election without distinction of race or color, there had been no proof offered to sustain it. The jury accordingly brought in a verdict of not guilty. United States District Attorney L. C. Northrup then, much to the surprise of the vast audience in the court room, moved to continue all the political cases until the next November term of the court, and stated as his ground for making such a motion that it would be impossible after the ruling of the court just made, and in consequence of the time already consumed in dilatory motions on the part of the defence, to proceed with the trials without enormous expense to the government. There being no objections to the motion on the part of the defence, the cases were all continued until the next term.

PAYING THE PENSIONS ARREARS.

WASHINGTON, April 22.—The first Treasury warrant for the payment of the arrears of pensions was signed to-day, and it is believed that the back pensions can be paid as rapidly as the accounts are made up, or at the rate of a million and a half a month, unless unexpected appropriations should be heretofore made by Congress. After the 1st of July the enormous saving created by the process of refunding and the increased revenue caused by increased business will tell favorably upon our finances. The annual saving by refunding is $45,000,000, and two years' saving on the interest to be paid will go far toward paying these arrears of pensions, without increasing the burden of the public debt.

SHALL THE REPUBLICAN SENATE EMPLOYEES BE REMOVED?

WASHINGTON, April 18.—By way of prelude to the discussion of the Army bill, the Senate to-day spent the morning hour in debating the resolution introduced by Senator Wallace yesterday, repealing a standing order that has been in continuous operation since 1853, which prohibits the removal of any employee under the Secretary and Sergeant-at-Arms without the approval of the President of the Senate, and then only after good and sufficient reasons have been assigned for such removal. As Vice President Wheeler will not consent to the wholesale dismissal for which the majority are clamoring so loudly, and as Senator Thurman, the President pro tempore, cannot be persuaded to take advantage of Mr. Wheeler's absence to sanction the proposed division of the spoils, no other alternative has been left the Democrats but to repeal the very order which a Democratic Senate passed a quarter of a century ago. The Republicans, although knowing that the effect of the Democratic caucus must be obviated, determined not to permit the consummation of such a flagrantly partisan proceeding without giving the subject a proper airing. The Democrats evinced a disinclination to enter into the discussion, and seemed anxious to reach a vote in order that the Republican officials might be ousted as soon as possible. But the Republicans determined to force the debate upon them, and the remark by Senator Anthony, that the object now sought to be accomplished had been predetermined by the Democratic caucus, brought Senator Sinsbury to his feet with an indignant denial. This evinced Senator Anthony to remain the late Delaware Senator of Beck's declaration a few days ago to the effect that the conduct of the Democratic Senators was under the control of a committee of their caucus, of which Senator Thurman was chairman. Beck, who was in the chamber, and who has become very sad after his experience of the past week, became very nervous at this allusion to his indiscreet utterances, and not desiring to be drawn into the controversy, retreated to the cloak room.

Mr. Ben Hill, of Georgia, attempted to justify the proposed action of the Democrats by charging the Republicans with having made removals in 1861 for the purpose of making places for their own political friends. A statement which is erroneous, as it is a well known fact that a large number of Democrats remained in office for many years after the Republicans came in power in the Senate, and more than thirty of them are there to this day. The only removals that were made in the Senate in 1861 were of those persons who sympathized with the rebellion, and whose presence at the Capital was under the circumstances deemed unsafe. The question will come up again on Monday.

ADJUDICATING THE NEGRO EXODUS.

ST. LOUIS, April 18.—A number of prominent colored men in this city have organized a society called the Colored Immigration Aid Association, and elected A. Milton Turner, president, and Albert Burgess, secretary. The association has been incorporated, and it is designed to make it permanent. Its object, as stated in its constitution, is to raise funds for the establishment of colored colonies and to aid immigration of colored men from the Southern States to other sections of the Union. The board of directors is not yet completed, but it will embrace some of the most active and responsible colored men in the city. It will also have an advisory board of white men, several prominent and influential gentlemen having promised to act in that capacity. Between 300 and 400 more refugees have arrived since this week, and the Relief Committee is doing all in its power to relieve their wants and forward them to their destination.

NEW ORLEANS, April 18.—In the convention of colored people to-day the Committee on Address reported at length, showing, among other things, the disparity in the matter of population as between white and colored people in the Red river parishes, there being two colored to one white man. The point was made that if the negroes were given their rights they would carry the elections. The colored people, however, proposed to emigrate and settle where they would be free from shotguns. The address touched upon the emigration question, but made no definite suggestions. A resolution to emigrate and asking aid of the North prevailed, discussion on which led to some confusion.

PHILADELPHIA, April 18.—To-day the colored people of this city sent $197, and a large quantity of clothing to Milton Turney, ex-Minister to Liberia, now in St. Louis, for the use of the colored refugees now in that city en route to Kansas. The goods will be transported free by the Pennsylvania Railroad Company.

LOCAL NEWS.

—Miss Lou A. Thayer has been visiting in Baltimore.

—The pay car past west on Friday morning of last week.

—Dailley's new hotel is being painted by Messrs. Fringer and Ward.

—You can get the celebrated Queen City Cigar at Merrill's.

—Mr. D. H. Lorr is improving his property on Main street.

—Mr. John Dailey is erecting a new fence around his cottages.

—Spring sets of advertisements in THE REPUBLICAN will yield well.

—A United Brethren minister preached at South Point on Sunday last.

—Prof. Richardson is in Baltimore for the purpose of purchasing pianos and organs.

—Spring seems at last to have "come to stay," but we are not altogether sure about it.

—Messrs. Lashorn & Thrasher, of Deer Park, are plastering Mr. G. S. Hamill's new law office.

—A. W. DeWitt, Esq., will open a select school at Johnstown, on Monday, May 5th.

—200 sacks G. A. Salt for sale at Wm. P. Totten's Cheap Cash Store, Oakland, Md.

—The Oakland Hotel is receiving a coat of paint, and being otherwise put in order for the coming season.

—Three inches of snow fell on Sayage Mountain, west of Frostburg, on Friday night of last week.

—Miss Barbara, daughter of F. M. Granish, of Cumberland, died on Saturday of hemorrhage of the lungs.

—Mr. P. A. Chisholm is building a very neat fence for Mr. Veitch, at his residence on Oak street.

—Died—At the residence of her father, near McHenry, this county, Jennie Drane, aged about 26 years.

—The English Lutheran Church at Frostburg was dedicated on Sunday, Rev. S. W. Owen, of Hagerstown, officiating.

—Now that the soft, mild evenings are coming, the wise and prudent father whitewashes the front gate extra thick.

—Rev. David Tasker, formerly of this county, is now pastor of St. Stephen's church, King's Bridge, N. Y.

—Mr. Ed. Taggart caught a trout in Little Yough this week, 15 inches in length and weighed 1 pound and 9 ounces.

—By a mistake of the compositor the Commissioners' meeting was dated wrong. They meet Monday, May 5th, instead of Wednesday, the 7th.

—Died—At the residence of his father, near McHenry, this county, Monday morning, of erysipelas, Edward Kimmel, aged about 22 years.

—The American Star is the name of a spy little amateur paper, published at Blomington, this county, by C. C. Moody, son of Wm. Moody, Esq.

—Pedicord & Gonder have purchased a fine safe for their office, from Messrs. Bahmann & Co., of Cincinnati. Its weight is 1,100 pounds.

—Died—Near the Red House, this county, April 21st inst., Truman Edward, infant son of Christian and Eliza Martin, aged 1 month and 8 days.

—Mr. Cecil Karsner, Grand Worthy Chief Templar of the Grand Lodge of Maryland, visited Oakland Lodge of Good Templars Tuesday night.

—The Circuit Court of Allegany county has refused to release Herbert Bell, indicted for the murder of Samuel Cooper, a rival barber, of Cumberland, on bail.

—The Widow Oliver applied for the Academy of Music at Cumberland to deliver one of her lectures on the recent divorce case, but her proposition was declined.

—Last week Capt. C. H. Morgan, Messrs. Daniel Willink and Dick Thayer bagged eighteen snipe and one duck. This is the best bag of snipe made this season.

—Mrs. Springer, residing near Swanton, this county, lost ten head of young cattle recently, from an unknown disease. Mr. Geo. O'Brien, of the same neighborhood also lost two cows, similarly affected.

—Married—At the residence of the bride's parents, in Oakland, Md., by Rev. Dr. Scott, Thursday, April 24th, 1879, W. L. Houghner, Esq., of Fairmont, W. Va., and Miss Jane N. Delawder, of Oakland.

—Married—On April 3d, at the residence of Thomas Dixon, by Rev. Wm. Junkins, Mr. Wm. M. Junkins, of Garrett county, Md., to Miss Virginia C. Kuykendall, of Mineral county, W. Va.

—We read of a town in the West which has no police or constables, and in two years has spent but seven dollars of its poor fund. It has a population of 3,000. The cause of this happy condition is in the fact that it has no liquor shops.

—Many great inventors have been commemorated; but where is the monument to the man who invented punch? There are three of them—the atlas-house, the jail, and the insane asylum.

—Merrill has the best 15 cent Cigar in Oakland.

—The Rev. M. F. Moll, the new pastor of the Trinity Evangelical Lutheran church (German), of Cumberland, preached there last Sunday. He will probably be installed next Sunday.

—A large rock rolled down upon the railroad track a short distance west of Piedmont on the 18th inst., and an east-bound passenger train was stopped just before running upon it. It had to be blasted before it could be removed, and the train was delayed several hours.

—The Bedford division of the Pennsylvania railroad is preparing to run its trains into Cumberland as soon as the new road shall have been completed. It will have a fine equipment of passenger cars, and will make close connections with the express trains for the East. It is thought the new connection will be made by the last of May.

—Mrs. Blocher and her daughter, residing near the National road, about eight miles west of Frostburg, were both very seriously injured by a vicious cow on the 12th inst. Mrs. Blocher is the mother of ex-Sheriff Layman, and being a very old lady, her injuries may prove fatal. The daughter, a middle-aged lady, is also badly hurt, but it is hoped her case is not serious.

—Carroll, who was lynched at Point of Rocks recently, was a former resident of this city. His grandmother and brother reside here now. His brother is a servant in the family of Mrs. C. S. Harrison. His father is dead, and his mother is now in Pittsburgh, Pa. Carroll left here about one year since to boat on the canal.

—Third installment of Fishing Tackle sent received at Merrill's Drug Store.

—Mrs. Mary Tasker, of Oakland, is agent for the "People's Standard Edition of the Bible," containing nearly 1,300 quarto pages with 100,000 marginal readings and references. This is generally considered the best edition in print. Price from $6.50 to $20.00, according to the binding.

—A meeting of the Young Men's Christian Association was held Monday night for the purpose of taking measures to secure the presence of D. L. Moody the evangelist, in this city to conduct a series of meetings in the different churches. A large number of members of the association and four city pastors, Revs. Browning, Dana, Radisil and Tredway, were present. The matter was thoroughly discussed and Messrs. W. R. Wilson, John Wilson and C. J. Orrick were appointed a committee to confer with the city clergy and report at another meeting to be held next Monday night. Mr. Moody has consented to visit Frederick and it is thought that he can be prevailed upon to come to this city. The Hagerstown branch of the Young Men's Christian Association has invited Mr. Moody to visit that place.

—Church Services—Sunday. Lutheran Church.—Administration of the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, in the morning at 10 o'clock.

M. E. Church.—Preaching in the morning at 10; by Rev. H. Ison, and in the evening at 7 o'clock, by Rev. Mr. Smith, of Piedmont.

The Literary Society. The attendance at the Garrett Literary Society on Saturday evening last was even larger than usual. The programme for the evening was interesting and well rendered, consisting of the paper by Playford Townsend, a selection on "Ambition," by Allen Ison, an essay on the subject "Woman," by A. J. Harne, a declamation by Thos. A. Hosley and last but not least, the debate on the question, Resolved, "That the savage has a right to the soil." There appeared to be a misunderstanding on the part of the participants as to what evening the debate was to be, and for a time it was feared that both members and spectators would be disappointed, but after considerable debate, in the course of which one member observed that, as this question was one which had so long been undecided, he hoped it would now be decided, it was ordered that the debate be proceeded with. The Vice President called to his aid as Judges T. J. Peddicord and Allen Ison. The speakers for the affirmative were Fred A. Thayer and G. W. Merrill, and for the negative George Porter and C. H. Lorr. After some discussion the question was submitted to the judges, who rendered their decision for the affirmative. After a little routine business, the Society adjourned. It meets as usual to night.

Select School at Johnstown.

Mr. A. W. DeWitt will open a select school at Johnstown, Monday, May 12th. Boarding can be obtained at from $2.00 to $2.50 per week. Mr. DeWitt holds a First Grade Certificate from the Allegany county Examiner, and is fully competent to prepare young gentlemen and ladies for teaching. Instructions will be given in all the branches taught in the county.

Sunday School Reorganized.

The Davis Mills Sunday School was reorganized last Sunday, and the following officers were elected for the ensuing year: Superintendent—Geo. W. Kepler. Asst. Superintendent—Isaac King. Secretary—C. H. Cropp. Librarian—Wm. R. Cross. Asst. Lib.—Norman Bray. Treasurer—Miss Nettie Cropp.

Death of Wm. R. Davis, Esq.

Mr. William R. Davis, of Piedmont, W. Va., was attacked with apoplexy Friday morning of last week, and died Tuesday morning. Mr. Davis was a brother of Hon. H. G. Davis. He was a member of Mt. Carbon Lodge, A. F. A. M., and was buried Thursday with Masonic honors, several Masons from this place participating.

Accident News.

Everybody is delighted to hear of the mail route being changed from Deer Park to Oakland. Johnstown, Accident, Selbyport and Grantsville and the several vicinities are greatly benefited.

Nobody here seems to be thinking of politics so far. Occasionally a sort of premonitory breeze comes wafted from Grantsville, a forerunner of the storm further along. Grantsville not possess the monopoly of great expectations, however.

There is a general smoking of fine kilns all along the line. One neighbor has purchased eight hundred bushels for a town lot; another, a farmer, has burned over four thousand bushels for his own use. Never was such an epidemic of lime burning known.

Our public school has closed. Mr. Umel, of Pennsylvania, was the principal, Miss McMillen, assistant. Miss Lizzie Kahl, having been very successful this winter, has now opened quite a large subscription school.

Prof. Smith, the music teacher, will have a class in vocal music the coming summer. Prof. Smith has taught here before, and is looked upon as one of the best we have had in his branch. Four dozen new books have been ordered for Accident.

Dr. A. F. Speicher, who has long been a teacher in Garrett county, has returned from Jefferson Medical College, of Philadelphia, and has assumed the new role with success.

"Spring, beautiful spring" will be gladly welcomed by the majority of farmers. Hay and straw stacks have about all disappeared, and still the cold weather continues. Rats and mice will make the rounds in vain; smug hiding places in hay and straw have about all gone the same way, and those who have held over oats for a rise are feeling enervated.

It is freely acknowledged on all sides that THE REPUBLICAN is the best paper published in the county; we are led to this remark by hearing a Democrat express the same opinion.

Respectfully, SIMON PURE.

How Journalists are Appreciated.

There is no denying that as a rule, the editor is expected to do more for nothing, to give more for the money, to expect less thanks, or even acknowledgment for favors done, than the lawyer, doctor, clergyman, merchant, mechanic, and farmer. This does not hold good, as is generally supposed, of the country press alone, but also of the journalists of the cities, great and small. Most of the subscribers to a newspaper, be it a daily or a weekly, though they get their full money's worth and something more, are fully impressed with the idea that they have an inalienable right to dictate the course of the paper that "they take." These people would never dream of threatening to withdraw their patronage from a grocer because, on public or religious affairs, he entertained or expressed opinions at variance with their own. They would never think of asking their tailors to throw a vest because they paid for a coat; they would laugh at the idea of advising a lawyer how to conduct a case; yet, they think it the most reasonable and natural thing in the world to tell the editor that they will stop his paper if he continues to oppose re-emption or inflation, refuses to find fault with the national administration, or abstain from praising it, as the case may be. When they find it to their interests to advertise their own themselves badly used if the editor does not promptly and smilingly comply with the request for a local or editorial notice, highly favorable, of course.

New Furniture Rooms.

Attention is called to the advertisement of Shatzer & Ault, in this issue. They have recently removed to their new building on Main street, where they keep on hand or manufacture to order everything in their line, including a full line of coffins and caskets. Persons attending court are invited to call and see them, whether they wish to purchase or not. They claim that they cannot be undersold.

Dramatic Entertainment.

Last Tuesday and Wednesday evenings the citizens of Oakland were treated to a Dramatic Entertainment given in the court house, by Miss Mary Rowan, the teacher of the Catholic school, and her pupils. Before the hour for commencing the performances the Oakland Band, composed of the handsome and favored young gentlemen of our town, was on hand, and discoursed in their inimitable way, several lively airs.

At 8 o'clock the exercises began. The first part of the programme consisted of songs. Then came the performance of the drama entitled, "Temperance Doctrine," in which was shown the terrible effects of intemperance, and den ostrated conclusively that the old adage "Touch not, taste not, handle not," is the best motto after all. "Irish Assurance and Yankee Modesty" was also well performed. The exercises were concluded by the singing of a song by Miss Mary Rowan.

The entertainment was for the benefit of St. Peter's Church, and is considered a success. Among the audience were two of the Piedmont belles, who occasionally favored the audience with some exquisite duets on the piano.

Real Estate Transfers.

The following is a list of real estate transfers filed for record in the office of W. H. Tower, Clerk of the Circuit Court for Garrett county, for the week ending April 23:

Isaac King and wife to Emily J. King, their one undivided one-seventh interest in Military Lot No. 4045 & 885.

Hamilton White and wife to Jas. H. White, part of a tract of land called "B. course, or Resurvey on Recurrence," containing 150 acres; consideration named.

Susanna Friend to B. F. Friend, part of a tract of land called Friend's Factory, containing 7 acres and 116 perches; $50.

Orphans' Court.

The Orphans' Court for Garrett County was convened on Tuesday, 23d inst. Present, Hon. Jos. DeWitt, Chief Judge, and Hon. A. J. Michaels and Wm. Harvey, Associate Judges, and Wm. L. Rawlings, Register.

Among others were the following proceedings: Geo. W. Wilson, administrator de bonis non, of Thomas Wilson, deceased, settled his first account in real estate.

Ann M. Houser, guardian to Clara E. Houser and others settled her fifth account.

Henry A. Shaffer, Executor of John Beard, deceased, settled his first account in personal property.

John T. Geary, guardian to John W. Ross, settled his third account.

The last will and testament of John Steyer, deceased, was filed and admitted to probate and record.

The last will and testament of Alex. McInnes, deceased, was filed and admitted to record.

Letters of administration, C. T. A., were granted to John G. Steyer upon the estate of John Steyer, deceased, who filed a bond in the penalty of $1,200.

Court then adjourned till May 13th.

Maryland Grand Lodge, I. O. O. F.

The Grand Lodge of Maryland, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, met in annual session, in Baltimore, on Wednesday of last week. The report of the Grand Secretary, John M. Jones, giving the work of the subordinate Lodges for the year ended December 31st, shows the number of Lodges in the jurisdiction to be 166; number of members initiated, 359; admitted by card, 50; reinstated, 85; withdrawn by card, 35; suspended or dropped, 615; expelled, 7; deaths, 158; number of members at present, 11,283; number of brothers relieved, 1,851; brothers buried, 158; widowed families relieved, 170; amount paid for relief of brothers, $11,216.15; relief of widowed families, $8,778.28; paid for burying the dead, $931.19; paid for voluntary donations, $2,922.39; number of weeks' sickness for which benefits were paid, 11,172; amount of Lodge receipts, $93,233.12. The amount contributed by various Lodges for the relief of brethren in the South during the yellow-fever scourge aggregated $812.50. The number of appeals from subordinate Lodges heard and determined during the year was 16.

In 11 of which the action of the Lodges was sustained, in four reversed and in one remanded. The report of the Grand Treasurer, Alex. L. Spear, for the year ended March 31, 1879, shows the cash on hand to the credit of the Grand Lodge at the beginning of the year (March 31, 1878), to have been $1,703.70; received since from various sources, $9,633.74; total, $11,337.44. Disbursements, $9,633.55; balance on hand, $1,703.89. The Grand Lodge on January 3, 1879, had on the roll book the names of 703 children—361 boys, 342 girls—of whom 329 attended school, 50 are too young and the balance were either at work or for some cause were not attending school.

City politics is the all-engrossing subject of concern among the politicians at the present time, and for the next few months the saloons expect to reap a rich harvest from the rival candidates and their friends, and hundreds of bums, dead beats and bar flies, who are watching for opportunities to get free drinks. The dead beats thoroughly understand the office seeker. They know him by instinct. If he is ever so mean and miserly after election, they can count on his "settling 'em up" before election, and as they have but a short time to get in their work, they make a business of it for the short time between nomination days and election. The dead beat, bar flies and loafers are of no special account. How they may vote is unknown even to themselves; and money expended in softening them with whisky is thrown away. There is a class of candidates which the dead beats and the respectable class especially hold in contempt. These are that class of office-seekers who for eleven months in the year profess to be temperance men, who for eleven months would scorn to enter a saloon, but who on getting a nomination for office decide into saloons to curry favor with the saloon keeper or with the boys.—Balto. Herald.

A SWINDLER ON HIS ROUNDS.—A swindler operating on a new plan has made his appearance in Southern Berks, Chester and Delaware counties. He left a plow at a farmer's, with the verbal consent to use the plow, and if not liked to return it. He also left a printed advertisement of its merits. The farmer, looking over it, found a notice in due form, stating that where trial was made of the plow, the agent must be notified within two days and given a chance to regulate the working of it. Many farmers will never see this notice, but will take the advertisement heedlessly and then through failure will be compelled to keep the plow, inasmuch as the agent can be qualified that the farmer was duly notified and the farmer cannot deny receiving it.—Reading Eagle.

Extensive preparations are making by the Japanese government for the reception of Gen. Grant at Yokohama, in anticipation of his acceptance of the invitation sent to him. The Eario-Koran, a fine edifice where the Foreign Office has hitherto been located, is being fitted up in luxurious style for his residence. The building was occupied by the Duke of Edinburgh on the occasion of his visit. A review of the Imperial guard and a naval review are among the entertainments to be provided. The priests are instructed to propitiate the Japanese gods in behalf of the expected guests, including the God of War, which they take for granted is the firm friend of the mighty captain. The American residents design to offer the General a banquet at a ball, according to the time of his arrival.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

WANTED.

A Girl to do general housework in a small family. One accustomed to small children preferred. Enquire at THE REPUBLICAN office.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

(Advertisements under this heading will be inserted at the following rates: For Members of the Legislature, Clerk of the Circuit Court and Sheriff, $100. For State's Attorney, Surveyor and County Commissioners, $50, and for Register of Wills and Judges of the Orphans' Court, $25 each. Advertisements to run all the meeting of the Nominating Convention, or less, and 25 cents per line will be charged for each line in excess of that number. No notice will be announced until the fee is paid.)

FOR CLERK CIRCUIT COURT.

To the Republicans of Garrett County: Receiving so many voluntary assurances from all parts of the county, to the effect that the people, and especially those having consciences, in court, do not desire a change in the present mode of nominating the public officers, I have concluded to call a meeting of the public to take this method of nominating the public officers into consideration. I therefore, as a candidate for the office of Clerk of the Circuit Court for Garrett county, call to the attention of the Republican county nominating convention.

If I am again nominated, I shall appreciate the honor and thankfully accept. And if elected, shall perform the duties thereof with care and attention, to the best of my ability, as in the past.

April 2d. W. H. TOWER.

NOTICE.—My books and papers are at the office of H. Wheeler Combs, Attorney at Law, in my absence he is authorized to receipt for any money that may be due by account or otherwise.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

SHATZER & AULT

have recently removed to their new

Furniture and

Undertaking Rooms,

MAIN STREET, OAKLAND.

Where they keep constantly on hand and manufacture to order anything in the line of

HOUSEHOLD FURNITURE

All of which is offered at the

LOWEST LIVING PRICES.

Give us a call, examine our Furniture and prices, whether you wish to purchase or not. We take pleasure in showing our work.

ALL kinds of COFFINS and CASKETS on hand or furnished to order on short notice.

4 26 gm SHATZER & AULT.

Sheriff's Sale.

By virtue of a writ of fieri facias issued by A. C. Good and Alex. Osborn, two Justices of the Peace of the State of Maryland, in and for Garrett county, being Nos. 100, 120, 130, 140 and 150 on A. C. Good's docket, and one No. 9 on Alex. Osborn's docket, and to me directed, issued at the suit of Daniel E. O'Brien, against the goods and chattels, lands and tenements of Richard T. Browning, T. J. Browning, John F. Browning and Wright Thayer, I have seized and taken in execution all the right, title, interest and estate, both at law and in equity, of the said Rich. T. Browning, of land called "SKIPPO," containing as a whole about 88½ acres, and is situated on Mudley Creek, in Garrett county, State of Maryland, it being the same property acquired by the said R. T. Browning, from the said John Thayer, by deed recorded in Liber W. H. T. No. 2, folio 67, one of the Land Records of Garrett county, Md.

And I hereby give notice, that on

SATURDAY, May 17th, 1879,

at 2 o'clock, p. m., in front of Coddington's Hotel, in the said town of Oakland, I will offer for sale the said property, so seized and taken in execution, to the highest bidder, for cash, to satisfy said judgments and costs.

THOS. CODDINGTON, Sheriff.

COMMISSIONERS' MEETING.

OFFICE OF THE GARRETT COUNTY COMMISSIONERS. OAKLAND, MD., April 17th, 1879. Notice is hereby given that the County Commissioners of Garrett county will meet at their office in Oakland.

On Monday, May 5th, 1879,

for the transaction of such business as may come before the Board.

W. H. HAGANS, Clerk.

4 19 3.

JOHN RICHARDSON, Manufacturer of and Dealer in WAGONS AND FARMING IMPLEMENTS. GRAIN CHUTES A SPECIALTY. Also Improved Hand-saw and Saws. 7-1/2 ft. Near the Depot, Oakland, Md.

H. WHEELER COMBS,

REAL ESTATE AGENT,

OAKLAND, MD.

Will negotiate sales of real estate of every description.

No charge for advertising property placed in my hands.

H. WHEELER COMBS.

The following properties

have been placed in my hands

FOR SALE.

NO. 2.

One of the best little farms in Garrett county, 2½ miles west of Oakland, the county seat. This farm contains 418.75 acres in cultivation, and all susceptible of easy and profitable cultivation. Improved by a containing 8 rooms and good cellar, GOOD FARM and stable. The whole farm is upon a level, and is one of the best in the county. This farm will be offered for sale at a low price, and on easy terms. Title perfect. Limestone and coal within two miles.

New 2 Story House,

NO. 3.

One of the best little farms in Garrett county, 2½ miles west of Oakland, the county seat. This farm contains 418.75 acres in cultivation, and all susceptible of easy and profitable cultivation. Improved by a

NO. 4.

Fichtner's Mill Property.

This property, containing 250 acres, situated on Mudley Creek, in Sang Run district, Garrett county, Md., will be sold at a very low price and upon the easiest of terms. It lies 9 miles north-west of Oakland, 8 miles from Hutton's Switch and 7 miles from Cranberry county, and is surrounded by the best timbered land of the section. It is improved by an excellent containing 16 rooms; good stable attached. The whole and lots for a saw mill are upon the property, and will be sold with the property at a low price, and on easy terms. Title perfect. Limestone and coal within two miles.

FRAME HOUSE.

NO. 5.

A Desirable Property in Oakland

FOR SALE.

Lot 10010, improved by a

Excellent Frame Dwelling House,

containing 7 rooms; with good cellar. This is one of the most pleasant homes in Oakland, Md., and is one of the best in the county. It is situated on a level, and is one of the best in the county. This farm will be offered for sale at a low price, and on easy terms. Title perfect. Limestone and coal within two miles.

NO. 6.

A Desirable Property in Oakland

FOR SALE.

Lot 10010, improved by a

Excellent Frame Dwelling House,

containing 7 rooms; with good cellar. This is one of the most pleasant homes in Oakland, Md., and is one of the best in the county. It is situated on a level, and is one of the best in the county. This farm will be offered for sale at a low price, and on easy terms. Title perfect. Limestone and coal within two miles.

NO. 7.

A Desirable Property in Oakland

FOR SALE.

Lot 10010, improved by a

Excellent Frame Dwelling House,

containing 7 rooms; with good cellar. This is one of the most pleasant homes in Oakland, Md., and is one of the best in the county. It is situated on a level, and is one of the best in the county. This farm will be offered for sale at a low price, and on easy terms. Title perfect. Limestone and coal within two miles.

NO. 8.

A Desirable Property in Oakland

FOR SALE.

Lot 10010, improved by a

Excellent Frame Dwelling House,

containing 7 rooms; with good cellar. This is one of the most pleasant homes in Oakland, Md., and is one of the best in the county. It is situated on a level, and is one of the best in the county. This farm will be offered for sale at a low price, and on easy terms. Title perfect. Limestone and coal within two miles.

NO. 9.

A Desirable Property in Oakland

FOR SALE.

Lot 10010, improved by a

VARIETIES.

—The Westward hoe will soon get in its work.

—The sea-sick man finds it hard to hold his own.

—Trees begin to die at their tops—Men begin to dye there, too.

—When doctors disagree—well, its likely the patient will recover.

—Are harps struck by lightning blasted lyres?—Binghamton Republican.

—Now let the circus lions and tigers elaw up keepers and advertise themselves.

—Was Boreas ever married? Shakespeare writes of the merry wiles of wind-sail.

—The Zulu word for "tens of thousands" is "izinkulungwaneziskumi." Here's a monosyllable!

—It is reported in California papers that a Chinaman values his quene at $10,000 after it is out of.

—When a man is about to be hanged he probably doesn't feel like singing "Blest be the tie that binds."—Boston Post.

—Many people who invoke the aid of Divine Providence want Providence to do the job up unexpensively.—N. Y. Herald.

—The wages of sin are not paid in trade dollars.—Exchange. Old Nickel pay them in his own coin.—Cincinnati Commercial.

—Even the corn crop of the West demands military recognition. Such of it as is not cob likes to be called "kernel."—Free Press.

—The grim spectre of strawberry festivals will shortly startle the impetuous youth who delights in conring two girls.—Meriden Republican.

—The Pope has sent 5,000 fires to the relief of the Hungarian sufferers. The fire is a coin, not a sewing machine agent.—Danbury News.

—A dressmaker who was at the point of death recovered, and the local paper headed the item, "Survival of the Fit-test."—New York Express.

—Bismarck reads every word of advice to him in the American newspapers, and he does just as each newspaper thinks best.—Free Press.

—Curious transformations.—When a pretty bonnet becomes a pretty woman; when a man turns a horse into a pasture; when a door is found to be ajar.

—A doctor to his son: "Johnny, wouldn't you like to be a doctor?"

"No, father." "Why not my son?"

"Why, father, I could not even kill a fly."

—"Jane," said he, "I think if you lift your feet away from the fire, we might have some heat in the room."

And they hadn't been married two years either.

—If you had dandruff in your hair don't remove it. A list of 128 kings, queens, poets, scholars and artists had dandruff. Don't let the hairdresser make a mudsill of you.—Free Press.

—Another Lamont.—They were having a snarl, and she asked him if there was anything in the past he would like to recall. He heartlessly answered:

"Yes, the day you first repaid the loan."

—The walking mania found a victim at Fair Haven, Ct., in S. L. Pottress' seven-year-old Freddie, who engaged in a pedestrian contest with other boys of his age, over-exerted himself and died.

—I envy the man that can talk 365 days in the year on one subject, and think he is original and interesting all the time; but I don't want to be a sun-in-law or one of these kind or people.—Josh Billings.

—The man who walks for twenty-four hours on one stretch is considered a hero, but no one seems to have a kind word for the baby that yells straight ahead for seventeen hours.—Philadelphia Chronicle-Herald.

—Jeems—"I see, Robin, that the paper says we're to have another storm Monday." Robin—"Mon, it's terrible! Since the Yankees has gotten the weather intae their keepin' we've a storm every other day."

—Childhood's happy hour is turned into gall and wormwood by the paternal announcement Saturday morning: "Well, bub, I guess you had better let the fish alone to-day and go down cellar and sprout those potatoes."—Rochester Democrat.

—Many Southern emigrants who went to Texas and the far West last year at half rates of passage contend that the rule should work both ways, and, now that they have failed in their ventures, want the railroads to return them at the same rates.

—A telegraph operator sent a message from Boston to Springfield for accommodations for twenty "prisoners" instead of "persons," and the consequence was that a traveling dramatic company was received at the railroad by a party of deputy sheriffs.

—The happier man in this world is he who has neither riches nor poverty; neither business cares nor household anxieties, and who can lie down at night on his peaceful couch and say, "I am content." But does such a man exist?—Blackrock Republican.

—As a man was passing a house in Portland, Me., the other day, a two-year-old girl, who was playing in a second-story room, jumped out of the window and struck fairly on his head. The child fell to the pavement and was badly bruised, though not seriously hurt, and the man, except being half-seared to death, was not much injured.

—In one of the Detroit schools, the other day, a class in English history were being questioned by the teacher about Henry the VIII., and she finally asked: "Did Anne of Cleves, Henry's fourth wife, die a natural death?" There was an awful silence for half a minute, and then one miss stammered out: "No, ma'am—she was divorced."

—An art critic, who has an unfortunate habit of occasionally indulging in more wine than his health demands, recently determined, one day after luncheon, to pay a professional visit to a private art collection. Arrived in the first room, he found himself opposite a large mirror. Mechanically he drew out his pocket-book and therein wrote: "No. 1—Study of a head; unnamed; an old toper. Faded condition excellently rendered;

most likely a portrait. Seems to be acquainted with the original."

—Half-past four—Infernal bluster, ball! First harbinger of life, and warmth, and love.

No bet!—Jeeks thy cold and clammy breast, And nature weeps and lifts its eyes above. Thou art not winter and thou art not spring. A soulless wail, a salubrious child of fate. Thy bones are marrowless, thy passion fled; Begone, p'ceal, get out, abscissuate!

Now we feel somewhat better.

—A man went into a clothing store the other day, and, after picking out some very fine cloth, said: "I want to make my father a present of an overcoat. Just measure it for me. Of course it will be too big for him, but it's pretty good wearing cloth, and, as the old man's in bad health, I'll have to wear it sooner or later anyway. Just make it a little broad across the shoulders."

—Ah, he is coming! with weary step and slow music. "We have been expecting him along, for we knew he must be almost ripe. The man who knows that the peach crop is ruined by the frost, the sap being one long icicle in the center of the tree, and the buds and branches black pulp and dead sticks, is crawling out like the prophetic ground-hog to cast a shadow over every one he meets."—Baltimore News.

—The New York Times says that "a story comes from Ranch, India, where diamonds are usually found—Golconda being the place where they are merely cut and polished—that the largest diamond in the world has lately been discovered there. It is said to weigh 400 carats, thirty-three carats more than the famous stone belonging to the Rajah of Mattan. The story is, in all probability, much bigger than the diamond, and both will be likely to diminish under careful examination."

—"Playing Ball" as it Used to Be.

Now approaches the season of smashed fingers, slashed noses and mangled eyes. The time for "Red Stockings," "Champion Nines," "Leather Overalls," "Bruisers," "Caroline Proboscises," "Blue Racers," "Ginger Snappers," "Rube Ranzen" and other euphoniously named baseball clubs, has come. There was a time when base ball was fun. That time has long since passed away. There are probably remote portions of the country where there is still some amusement in a game of base ball—where the rustic inhabitants have not yet learned how awfully scientific the game has become. There, when the striker hits the ball a good, reliable whack, he runs for all he is worth. When the other fellow gets the ball he doesn't place it quietly on the base, but he hurls it with unerring precision at the runner and knocks two dollars' worth of breath out of his body. The runner is then on his feet, generally goes and lies down on the grass to think over matters and rub the spot where the ball hit. But balls in those days were not the globular bricks they are now. A boy with a little ingenuity and an old stocking could make a ball. A piece of cork or a bit of rubber to make it "bounce," did to start on. Then the old stocking was raveled and the yarn wound on this rubber basis until the ball reached proper proportions, when it was covered with leather. The boy who owned a nice, soft, covered ball was a king among his kind. Next to him came the boy who had a good bat. The principal official in the old style of base ball was the fellow who sat on the top rail of the fence and kept tally. He cut the notches for one party on one edge of a shingle, and for the other party on the other edge. Sometimes the good tallyer would do more for his favorite side than its best batsman. There were no umpires in those days for both captains to quarrel with. When the two captains were ready to choose sides, one tossed a ball up to the other, and they went hand over hand to the top; the last hand that held the club had the first choice of players. Sometimes a boy would insist that his ball was better, while it lay on the end of the bat. This was settled by another boy striking with another bat the end of the choosing bat. If the last hand could stand the strokes it was all right, but if the hand projected a little too high it was generally withdrawn after the first blow. Those were the days when base ball was not composed of four parts pieces to one of fun.—Detroit Free Press.

—Leperville.

So far, we have but nibbled the shell of this hardest of nuts to crack. Open sesame! Shades of special officers protect us! Back of the highly respectable brick buildings on the south side of Sacramento street there are pits and dead-end alleys, and over all is the blackness of darkness, for these mules can work the earth faster than the ghost of the murdered Dane. From the noisome vats three stories under ground to the hanging gardens of the fish-dryers on the roofs, there is neither noisome nor corner but is populous with Mongolian mongrels. The better class have their reserved quarters. With them there is at least space to stretch one's legs without barking the shins of one's neighbor; but from their comparative comfort to the condensation discomfort of the impoverished coolie is but a step. Between brick walls we thread our way, single file, and begin descending into the abyssal darkness. The tapers, without which it were impossible to proceed with safety, burn feebly in the double night of that subterranean tenement. Most of the habitable quarters are on the grade and like so many pig-con-houses heaped together indiscriminately. If there was sunshine enough down yonder to drink up the slime that gosses every plank, and fresh air enough to sweeten the mallow-kennels, this highly eccentric style of architecture might charm for a moment by reason of its novelty. There is, moreover, a suspicion of the picturesque lurking about the place—but heaven save us, how it smells! We pass from one black hole to another. In the first there is a kind of bin for ashes and coals, and pots and grills—it is the kitchen! A heap of fine kindling in one corner, a bench or a stool as black as soot can paint it, a few bowls, a few bits of rag, a few fragments of food and a coolie squatting over a fire—a coolie that rises out of the dense smoke like the evil genie in the Arabian tale!

There is no chimney, there is no window; there is no drainage. We are in a cubic sink in which we can scarcely stand erect. From the small door pours a dense volume of smoke, some of it stale smoke which our entry has forced out of the corners. The kitchen will hold only so much, and we have made havoc among the cubic inches. Under foot the thin planks sag into standing pools, and there is the glimmer of blue just along the foot of the walls. Gentlemen, thousands feed at these troughs!

The next apartment, smaller yet and blacker and bluer and more slippery and shiny, is an uncovered cess-pool, from which a sickening stench arises and pervades the quarter; and here are chambers, opening upon narrow galleries that run in various directions, and sometimes bridge one another in a marvelous and ingenious economy of space that outwits the ingenuity of mere white men. The majority of these chambers are just long enough to lie down in and broad enough to allow space for the narrow door to swing in between two single doors, with two sleepers in each bed. The doors are closed and secretly bolted. Our specials, by authority demand admittance. There is no response from within. A group of coolies, who live in the immediate vicinity and the folks who are such as ever since our descent into the under world, assure us, in broken English, that there is no one within. We suspect, and persist in our investigations; still no response. The door is then forced by the specials, and behold four of the seven sleepers packed into this air-tight compartment, and insensible even to the hearty greetings we offer them. The air is absolutely overpowering; we cannot find the place to rest our heads in our flight by the specials, who lead us to the gates of the catacombs and bid us follow them. I know not to what extent the earth has been riddled under the Chinese quarter; probably no man knows save he who has been there like a gopher from one living grave to another to escape taxation and the detective. I know that I have threaded dark passages cut in the earth so narrow that two of us might not pass, and he in the way of the Chinese authorities, can ferret them out. Door upon door is shut against you, or some ingenious panel is slid across your path, and you are unconsciously spirited away through these crooked passages to the infernal regions and in the retiring-rooms of the mercantile establishments. Not only cards, dice and dominoes are common, but sticks, straws, brass rings, etc., are thrown in heaps upon the table, and the fate of the player hangs literally upon a breath. "Fan," or "Fantan," literally meaning "the funds spread out," is a popular game, resembling faro. Among the boat people in China it is the custom to spread a "tan" lay-out printed on a hide, while a placard announces: "To-day we spread the hide." This sign is not infrequent in the streets of the Chinese quarter. There are more than a hundred establishments of the infernal police, some of them employing private secretaries and paying for the privilege of secretly breaking the law of the land. These hants are seldom ruled by the officers of justice, for it is almost impossible to starve the hantiers in season to catch the criminals in the very act. To-day you approach one gambling-house by the door; to-morrow the inner passages are mysteriously changed, and it is impossible to find the place without being misled, and meanwhile the alarm is sounded throughout the building and very speedily every trace of guilt has disappeared. The lottery is another favorite game, and the prizes are the wash-houses are said to be agencies for the sale of lottery tickets. Enter one of the pawn-shops, licensed by the city authorities, and cast your eye over the motley collection of unrecruited articles. There are pistols of every pattern and almost every age, the majority of them loaded; daggers in infinite variety, including the ingenious fan-stiletto, which, when sheathed, may be carried in the hand without arousing suspicion, for it bears an exact resemblance to a closed fan; entire suits of clothing, beds, bedding, tea, sugar, clocks, ornaments—some of them possibly looked for in vain by the white patrons of Chinese cheap labor—everything, in fact, save only the precious quene, without which no Chinaman may hope for honor in this life, or salvation in the next. The numerous customers who keep the pawn-shops crowded with pledges are probably most of them victims of the gambling table or the opium habit. They come from every house that employs them; your domestic is impatient of all delays, and hastens through his work in order that he may indulge his darling sin. Follow him some night and see him at the play-house or the club-house, the gambling hell, the opium den, or at the window of her whose paint and tinsel dazzle and confound him. You may have observed that he seldom stops within doors when it is not absolutely necessary for arm to do so. You pay him a small wage and congratulate yourself upon obtaining help at so reasonable a figure. His nightly diversions must soon deplete his purse; whence come his revenues? Look again at the pawnshops; search again for the articles mortgaged at home. There is doubtless much petty thieving among the coolie domestics. There are, of course, exceptions to the rule, but, as a class, the house-laborers cannot be trusted with innuities. They are shameless, these Mongolians; they feed the hungry and clothe the naked at your expense. They have their friends, out of work, among the masses that swarm in the heart of the Chinese quarter. Small as the room may be, crowded as it is, every cubic inch of it must be paid for. When a Chinaman purchases real estate he does not dream of improving it; he honeycombs the dwelling and multiplies its inmates by ten. In a four-story eight foot square, without light or air, a dozen men will sleep with a resignation that has every appearance of being bred in the bone. The Globe Hotel, corner of Jackson and Dupont streets, which was built to accommodate 200 guests, is now occupied by 1,500 Chinese. Another building, but a little larger, shelters a round 1,800, but it would be no satire were the proprietors of those establishments to hang out the placard which is the pride of all managers: "Standing room only!" But for his opium dream what a life would the coolie lead! Let us peer into the charmed circle of smokers and watch them as they smoke poetry and poison from their flute-like pipes.—C. W. Stoddard, in San Francisco Chronicle.

—Facts About Fishes.

Thomas J. Bowditch writes in the Troy Times:

The life of all fishes is one of perpetual collision. If these fishes sea exceeds that which is allowed to perplex our reasons on dry land, the nerving satisfies many stomachs (a broiled herring is a luxury), and it is an unfortunate fish without. An old whaler has known of a herring in the belly of a whale; and fifteen good sized herrings have been found in the stomach of a cod. Proceeding into mathematics for a moment, if we allow a codfish only two herrings per day for his existence, and suppose him to feed on herrings for one year, we have 730 herrings as his allowance for twelve months, and fifty codfish equal one fisherman in destruction. Compared with the enormous consumption of fish by each other the draughts made upon the population of the sea by man seems to dwindle into insignificance. The Solander goose can swallow and digest six fulvous herring per day. It has been calculated that in the island of St. Kilda, assuming it to be inhabited by 2,000 of these birds, feeding for seven months in the year and with the allowance of five herrings each per day, the number of fish for the summer season, once of a single species of bird cannot be less than 2,000,000.

The herring was unknown to the ancients, being rarely, if ever, found in the Mediterranean. The Dutch, as said to have engaged in the fishery in 1164. The invention of pickling or salting herring is ascribed to one Benkens or Benkelson, of Biervliet, near Sluys, who died in 1397. The Emperor Charles V. visited his grave and ordered a magnificent tomb to be erected to his memory. Since this early period the Dutch have uniformly maintained their ascendancy in the herring fishery. The fish is highly appreciated by the Hollanders themselves, and the first barrel of the season is sent to the King, carried in procession, with banners and music. A few of the first catch are also presented to the nobles. The mode of fishing for herring is by drift-nets; the fishing is carried on only in the night, the most favorable time being when it is quite dark, and the surface of the water is ruffled by a breeze.

The opinion once entertained that the proper home of the herring is within the Arctic circle, and that its vast shoals issue there at certain seasons, migrating southward and spreading themselves along the coast of Europe, Asia and America, is now discarded as utterly without foundation; and the herring is believed to be an inhabitant of deep water, from which at certain seasons, it approaches the shores probably never migrating to any great distance. The immense multitudes of herring annually taken causes no apparent diminution of their abundance, the destruction being compensated for by prodigious fecundity; more than 68,000 eggs have been counted in the roe of a single female.

The herring fisheries are extensively carried on by the Norwegians, English, French, Scotch, Danes, Irish, Germans, Russians, Swedes and Americans. The fisheries of Norway employ between 20,000 and 30,000 men, and from 5,000 to 6,000 vessels—those of Great Britain about 100,000 men and 3,000 vessels. It is stated the fishermen of one town, Lowestoft, caught 22,000,000 in two days. This was more than could be cured before they would spoil, and tons of them were sold for compost. The value of the herring catch of Canada in 1876 was over $3,000,000. But herring, without any apparent cause, often disappears from the coast where for a time they have been remarkably abundant, not returning in similar numbers till after the lapse of a number of years. Such seems to be the case on our eastern coasts. Until the last thirty years they frequented the harbors of Cape Cod in myriads from March till June. Since that time they have become comparatively rare.

Many years ago the fishermen on the coast of Sussex and the opposite coast of France often had occasion to exchange civilities. But how could they do so, not knowing the language? They got over the difficulty by an exceedingly simple process. They exchanged children. A Sussex man took the son of a Frenchman to board for a time in his family and let the Frenchman have his son in return. In this accommodating way French fisher boys learned English and English fisher boys learned French. It was a beautiful arrangement, for besides any advantage derived from lingual intercommunication, feelings of good will grew up between the two nations.

The shad is a delicious edible. It is a rival of salmon. The first shad in our market in the season comes from the Savannah River, and it commands a fabulous price. In March this fish makes its appearance in the Hudson, and the fishermen make unusual efforts to secure it. There are qualities in shad, as there are in almost everything else. The best are caught in the Connecticut River, Hudson River and come next, after which the North Carolina shad are the best. Savannah shad are the poorest, on the principle that the earliest fruit is the poorest. Shad run from the St. Lawrence to Charleston.

The codfish is a sort of a national fish. It is known throughout the civilized world. All the year round the catch is good about Newfoundland and New Brunswick. Immense quantities are also caught near the Dofeder Islands, Norway. Codfish are caught with a hook and line, baiting with clams or herring, at a depth of eighteen to fifty fathoms of water. Cod has no connection with the commercial C. O. D., although cod is a commercial article. Large quantities are sent to the Mediterranean countries and to Brazil. It is relished by Spaniards, Italians, Portuguese, Scandinavians and Greeks. To the natives of the West Indies the cod is a toothsome addition to their vegetable diet. The cod fishery has been carried on for more than four centuries without any interruption; yet the supply at the present day is something stupendous. The fecundity of this fish is wonderful. By those who have taken the trouble to satisfy themselves, it has been calculated that when one devours a codfish he consumes no less than about 180,000,000 pounds of food, supposing it were allowed to arrive at maturity. One's brain reels at the bare idea of reckoning what might be the condition of codfish if these fishes were left alone for a few years. There are more than 2,000 vessels, with a tonnage of over 100,000 tons, and employing upward of 10,000 men and boys, engaged in the bank or cod fisheries of the United States.

The halibut is one of the largest fishes of the flounder family, attaining the length of six or seven feet and weighing from 300 to 500 pounds. The habits of the halibut and cod are nearly alike, only the former live on the latter when men do not live on them, and they are always to be found where cod most do congregate. The halibut is a good eating fish. The meat is nice and white and solid.

There is no fish more highly prized for food than the salmon, and there is no finer salmon than that found in the rivers of Oregon. This luxurious fish visits the rivers of both continents. It is caught by sturgeon wire seines across the streams, into which the foolish fish runs its head and remains caught—impaled, as it were, looking "pale around the gills." Large numbers are also caught by hook, while in some sections harpooning is practiced. The salmon is from twenty-four to thirty-six inches long, and attains a weight of thirty pounds or more. During the fishing season of 1877 eighteen establishments on the Columbia River shipped up 428,750 cases, each case containing four dozen one-pound cans. The salmon fishing in the Gulf of St. Lawrence is estimated at worth $500,000 a year.

The waters of Massachusetts Bay are full of this fish, and are beautiful when alive, but no sooner is it caught than its luster begins to disappear. It is a voracious feeder, and its growth is rapid. Mackerel run in "schools" from the 10th of May through the summer, and when a vessel has the luck to meet one of these, lines with bait are lowered, and the fish may be drawn in as fast as the arm can move. The first half hour of mackerel fishing is fun (as you've vent mackerel fishing, and forgot the world and its cares), especially to persons who fish for the fun of the thing. There is no chance for the use of unbalanced interjections in mackerel fishing; no profane exclamations, no ministering spirits to report to heaven's chancery, as in the case of angling when fish are scarce, for the recording angel to put into the same category with Uncle Tom's Cabin, and the like, a fisherman sympathizing tear. A "salting" trip takes some two months; a "fresh" trip about three days. From 8,000 to 10,000 barrels are sold fresh every year in Boston, and 200,000 to 300,000 of worth about $150,000 are exported, the poorest quality to the West and East Indies and the better qualities to New York, Philadelphia and other towns of the Union. In some years the number of vessels from Massachusetts alone has been 1,000, employing in the various processes of catching, salting and packing more than 5,000 persons.

Bluefish belong to the mackerel family and are found in almost all seas. They are found in shoals and are caught by purse-seines, in the following manner: A small boat sets out from the vessel with one end of the net and quickly rows around the shoal, weights are attached to the net and also long floats, which drop to the bottom, one end being retained. When this is accomplished and the boat gets back to the vessel, the net is slowly drawn from the bottom, and thus the fish find themselves unexpectedly caught—if they think anything about it at the time, and provided they can think at all. Bluefish are prized as food and often considered quite a delicacy.

A stong prejudice sometimes exists against the eel. In Scotland an Argyleshire or a Lanark plowman would as soon cook a veritable viper as the "foul sarapent creature" which in England would be reckoned a plump silver eel, worth four shillings in the market. The Neapolitan has his winter dish of sliced melen goes out of season. The eel is to the lazzaroni what solid beef is to the Englishman. Great quantities of eels caught at Comacchio, in Corsica, are sent across to the Naples market. Frederick Mather has examined an eel's roe under the microscope and has computed that the number of eggs in this particular roe was fully 9,000,000.

Then there are the bass, porgies, pilke, blackfish, whittish, mullet, flounders, flatfish, roach, bullheads, shiners, herring, pillock, cusk, trout, bladders, haddies, smelts, perch, swordfish, etc., all of which have their particular merits and peculiarities—which would occupy too much space in the columns of the Times to describe.

One of the oldest customs in regard to fish was in the time of Henry I., (who was born in Yorkshire in 1068, and died at Rouen, from the effects of gluttony, Dec. 1, 1135) the right to what are now termed "royal" fish, namely, the whale and sturgeon. "Of sturgeon," says the royal anecdote, "caught on our lands (and) we will that it shall be ours, saving to the finder his costs and expenses. Of whales so found we will that the head shall be ours and the tail our consort's." Fishermen would offer as their costliest gift to the church a whale's tongue, and it was no doubt highly relished by the ecclesiastics, for William the Conqueror (father of Henry I.) gave a yearly grant of one to the monks of Marmoutier.

—Terrible Ravages of the Plague Among the Chinese.

At the last meeting of the French Geographical Society, M. de Sonzay, formerly an officer in the French navy but now in the service of the Chinese Government, read a very interesting paper on this terrible epidemic. He mentioned a number of facts which seem to prove that the disease is originated by certain emanations from the earth to which the rats are the first victims. The Chinese medical men, whose pharmacopoeia is generally so complicated, does not appear to possess any remedy against this scourge, rendered more terrible by the superstitious practices of the people. The credulous population of this remote province imagines that the unfortunate victims who succumb to this frightful affection are possessed by an evil spirit, and they leave the bodies exposed to the sun in order that the infernal occupant may be obliged to leave it. That custom produces a horribly pestiferous state of the atmosphere, sufficient alone to cause an epidemic in the plague-stricken villages, and to render the prevailing disease a hundred times more deadly than it might otherwise be if proper sanitary measures were adopted. The first symptoms of infection are manifested by a violent fever accompanied by an inextinguishable thirst; then follows the appearance of reddish tumors on all parts of the body, but particularly under the armpits, and they rapidly attain the size of a hen's egg, while the pain they cause is so intense that the patient speedily loses consciousness. By the time he recovers his senses the development of the swelling is complete. If the patient remains hard and firm the sufferer has some chance of surviving, but, if the contrary is the case, death is inevitable. The progress of the disease from village to village has been traced over a distance of more than a thousand miles, so that the fact of the material communication or the contagious principle is incontestable. From Yunnan the epidemic was transmitted to Mesopotamia, and thence to the regions in which it is now raging, but in all cases the infection was unquestionably communicated by means of contact.

—Cattle, Sheep and Hogs.

The Cincinnati Enquirer deserves the belt for the champion war map. It is a map of the United States, and on every State are three animals, a cow, a hog and a sheep, and on each animal is an array of figures denoting the number that there is in the State. In some of the smaller States there is a difficulty in telling which is which, but, as a general thing, the curl on the tail denotes the pig, the horns the cow, and of course it stands to reason that the other must be the sheep. In Arizona, New Mexico, Indian Territory, Utah, Wyoming, Montana, Idaho and Dakota, the three animals are all figures of sheep, and so it may be inferred that only one of each class inhabits those sections of the country. Texas seems to take the lead in cattle, having 4,003,000; New York comes next, 2,100,400; Illinois next with 1,862,700; Iowa, 1,696,600; Missouri, 1,581,100; Pennsylvania, 1,530,700; Ohio, 1,471,200; California, 1,300,300; Indiana, 1,196,000; Wisconsin, 963,700; Kansas, 800,500; Michigan, 765,300; California leads off on sheep, with 6,600,000; Ohio next, with 3,783,600; Texas, 3,674,700; Minnesota, 3,000,000; Michigan, 1,750,000; New York, 1,518,100; Wisconsin, 1,324,000; Pennsylvania, 1,207,000; Illinois, 1,258,500; and so on. California is the most sheepish State; Iowa the most hoggish. It had 2,950,000 hogs; Illinois, 2,900,000; Missouri, 2,585,600; Indiana, 2,422,500; and Ohio 2,350,000. Michigan has only 556,700 hogs; Kentucky, 490,000; Tennessee, 1,800,000; Georgia, 1,586,000; Minnesota, 1,284,100; Arkansas, 1,010,300. —Detroit Free Press.

—Wooden Shoes.

Wooden shoes in France are produced to the extent of about 4,000,000 pairs yearly. They are made in Alsace and Barriers by machinery, and in Lozere by hand. In the last-named province 1,700 persons are engaged in this manufacture, and the yearly product is 660,000 pairs. The best of them made every lady possesses a pair of the finer sabots for wearing out in damp weather. These have monograms and other designs carved on the tops, and they are kept on the foot by ornamented leather pieces over the instep. The manufacture of these pieces of leather is a regular business in France.

By a recent order of Prince Bismarck all public works in Germany are to be executed exclusively by Germans, and with German material, except in the case of articles not produced in that country. Foreign architects are excluded from all competition.

An Albany clergyman told his congregation that "notwithstanding the hard times the wages of sin had not been cut down one iota." That is all very true, but there's a heap more work for the money than there used to be.—Kingston Freeman.

DAIRYMEN may be interested to know that there are 10,705,000 cows in the United States, which represent a value of $299,609,000.

DIAMONDS and pearls are precious stones, but kind words are the most precious tones.—Whitcomb Times.

THE REPUBLICAN.

OAKLAND, MARYLAND.

JAS. A. HAYDEN,
Editor and Proprietor.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.
One copy, one year, $1.00
Six months, .60
Three months, .35
Invariably in advance.

TERMS OF ADVERTISING.
First insertion, $1 per square of 8 lines
Second insertion, 50 cents per square
Third insertion, 35 cents per square
Longer contracts for advertising longer than three months.

Correspondents must enclose full name and address, not necessarily for publication, but as a private guarantee of good faith. Rejected communications will not be returned.

SATURDAY, MAY 3, 1879.

Hon. Rush Clark, Republican, of Iowa, died suddenly Monday. He was a member of the last Congress and re-elected to the present one.

Full returns from Michigan show that in sixty-nine counties there is a net Republican gain of 35,672, and a net Democratic gain in six counties of 352, making the net Republican gain in the State of 35,320.

The Vicksburg (Miss.) Commercial (Dem.) says that "if Mr. Davis wants to go to the United States Senate, and will only say so, it will not be necessary for him to make any canvass for the office. He is the strongest man in Mississippi to day for that or any other position, and if he ever comes before the people this fact will be demonstrated by his almost unanimous election."

Pennsylvania follows Connecticut, Massachusetts and Vermont in the enactment of a strict law to punish truants. The Legislature ordered a year's imprisonment for begging, and three years for entering a dwelling against the will of the occupant, for fighting fires upon the highway, or for carrying firearms. A law fully as stringent is before the New York Legislature.

The Boston Herald (Independent Democrat) puts the thing in this wise: "The use of troops at the polls is undeniably bad; but while it cannot be shown that a single citizen has ever been deprived of his vote thereby, it is notorious that a good many citizens have been kept from voting by intimidation and violence. This is what makes the Democratic cause weak before the country."

We call the attention of our readers to-day, to the local notice of Dr. Fundenberg, who will visit Oakland on Tuesday, May 20th, to remain a short while. The doctor has acquired a great reputation in the successful treatment of diseases of the eye, ear, nose and throat; and those afflicted will do well to avail themselves of the opportunity to consult him while here.

It is a time of repentance and contrition of heart in Mississippi, the negro exodus having brought the people to a realizing sense of their misdoings. The Vicksburg Herald frankly says: "Politics has a great deal to do with it, and it is folly for us to attempt to deny it. The colored man prizes his political rights as much as we do ours, and many of us know he has not always had them in this State and Louisiana. Now, we are in favor of giving them all to him in the spirit and letter of the amendments to the Constitution. We are sure this will have a good effect."

A combination has been effected between the Pennsylvania railroad in Maryland and the George's Creek and Cumberland railroad south of the built, which will have a vast beneficial effect upon the people of Cumberland and that section of the country. The coalition gives Henry Loyeridge, Esq., of New York, president of the Maryland Coal Company largely increased powers. He agrees to take as a consideration therefor $31,000 of the first mortgage bonds of the new road, at a valuation of not less than 85 cents on the dollar, and the continuous line thus formed, will distribute the coal product through from Cumberland coal region much more extensively and advantageously than at present. It is stated that there are now on hand sufficient funds to meet all present requirements and probable contingencies, which includes, of course, prompt payment of laborers. The iron for the road has already been ordered, and the cross-ties have been cut and hewn, so that nothing now stands in the way of the rapid completion of the road. A large force of men will at once be put to work, a reorganization of the directors is about to occur, and Mr. Healey, present incumbent, will remain as president.

Our ticket for 1880—for President, Parole; for Vice President, Pierre Lorillard.—Phila. Chron.

TELEGRAPHIC.

CONKLING'S SPEECH.

WASHINGTON, April 21.—This day is one that will ever be memorable in the parliamentary history of this country, and will take rank with those historical occasions in the old Senate when Webster, Clay and Calhoun were there. Of Mr. Conkling's speech to-day, it is conceded by friend and foe, Democrats and Republicans alike, that it is beyond all question "the greatest effort of his life." But to an orator so accomplished and refined, brilliant as his speeches may read, yet they must be heard to be fully appreciated. Mr. Conkling, when he took the floor, found himself surrounded by an audience composed of leading public men of the nation. Mr. Everts was in the front row of the diplomatic gallery, Secretary Sherman and Attorney General Devens occupied seats on the outer row of the Republican side, while to his left, among the Democrats, were Secretary Thompson, who sat next to Voorhees, and Secretary Schurz, who modestly stood a few feet behind the latter. Mr. Rogers, the President's private secretary, was also present.

The five members of the administration, it is safe to say, were among the most attentive listeners. Every senator was in his seat; they read no newspapers or books, nor wrote letters, but they turned their faces towards the speaker the moment he addressed the Chair, and for the three hours that he spoke, with the exceptions were Beck, of Kentucky, who, after Mr. Conkling had been speaking for some time, apprehending from the tenor of his remarks that he was about to quote his famous speech, and not desiring a controversy against such an antagonist, quietly retreated to the rear.

In the rear of the chamber swarmed members of the House of Representatives. Every sofa from the cloak room was brought into requisition, then chairs from the committee rooms, until at last ex-Secretary Robeson, General Garfield, and other prominent members of the House were compelled to take seats in the area in front of the desk. The galleries were packed so closely that it would have been impossible to squeeze another human being into them. In the Senators' gallery the ladies filled the aisle, and even the door was opened, so that those who could not enter might catch the words of the orator in the corridor beyond. The balls and lobbies themselves were thronged by the disappointed hundreds who had exhausted all means of obtaining admission. An incident that attracted general attention was the entrance of General Sherman into the chamber while Mr. Conkling was referring to the rebellion. General Sherman at first stood in the centre aisle but a few paces from Conkling, but was shortly afterwards escorted by Senator Davis, of Illinois, to his own seat in the front row, while the Judge himself sat in one of the chairs of the Associated Press reporters facing the audience.

It was perhaps unfortunate that the Judge should have placed himself in this conspicuous position, for he subsequently was the object of Conkling's keenest thrusts. The presence of General Sherman, too, became more marked by Mr. Conkling's allusion to him by name in connection with the famous march from "Atlanta to the sea." Mr. Conkling, as he always does, spoke extemporaneously. He had before him on his desk about ten pages of foolscap containing notes, and he tore up each page as the matter of which it treated had been disposed of. The first half-hour of his speech was not especially interesting, and there were many who thought that the antipathies that had been formed would not be realized, but after he got away from his introduction and had warmed up in his subject, it became manifest that the speech was to be all that his most ardent admirers could desire. From this time onward he kept up a rattling fire upon the Democratic side which never ceased until he concluded. His reply to the points raised by Mr. Bayard respecting the course of the administration in sending troops to New York to keep the peace during the election of 1870, was one of the most dramatic and effective parts of his speech. He vividly described the riots of 1863, when unfeeling colored men were hanged to the lamp posts and the Colored Orphan Asylum was burnt to the ground by the Democratic mob. In this connection he dwelt at length on the shameful election frauds of Tweed, and the deplorable condition of the New York judiciary, when, among other crimes, they issued naturalization papers by the wholesale, some of which were used by German subjects who had never seen this country, to escape the draft, in the Franco-Prussian war. The friends of the Democratic party, he argued, had fully justified the supervisors' law, and when Gen. Grant initiated the measures that he did to ensure a fair election to the people of the city of New York, he rendered them a service which they record their judgment upon him.

This nomination of Grant for the presidency in 1869 was greeted with applause in the galleries, and some marks of approbation on the Republican side of the House. Mr. Cockrell, of Missouri, who was in the chair, excitedly rapped for order and stated that the next time the galleries applauded he would order them to be immediately cleared. Mr. Thurman, however, soon after relieved him, and the galleries thereafter applauded whenever a good point was made. But the most affecting part of the speech was the conclusion, when he frankly informed the Democrats that in his opinion the object of their present proceeding was to be enabled to

CARRY NEW YORK STATE

at the next presidential election, and that they knew they could only do it by resorting to the same frauds which were perpetrated under the old Tammany ring, when in the city of New York and the adjoining county of Kings they swelled the Democratic majority to a figure which nullified the Republican vote in the rest of the State. This was, therefore, a struggle for power, and a fight for empire and a contrivance to catch this government. "We mean to resist you at every step," cried Mr. Conkling, with an emphasis and a dramatic power which made a great impression, and again elicited an outburst of applause. But the grand climax was reached when he accused the ex-Confederates with being the instigators of

THE TREASONABLE MOVEMENT.

and showed by the Record that the Democratic caucus of both Houses, and which controlled the action of the majority of Congress, was under the absolute sway of the Confederates. No part of Conkling's speech seemed to annoy and worry the Democrats, especially the Southern Senators, more than this. It was just 4 o'clock when the speech terminated, and Conkling appeared as fresh and strong as when he began. For five minutes after he ceased speaking he held a levee, senators and representatives pecking around him and shaking hands with him. The Democrats remained in their seats as if spell bound. No one rose to reply. To-night the great speech is the uppermost topic of conversation everywhere. Hamlin, of Maine, who first became senator in 1848, declares that it is the best ever delivered in the Capitol. The Democrats are demoralized, and their leading men have not the slightest idea of what their course will be after the President vetoes the Army bill, which he will certainly do. It is impossible to do justice to this speech in a brief summary. The regular report presents the main points.

It was plain to the vast audience that the Democratic leaders were deeply disturbed by the argument. The closing of the debate to-morrow will be a partial relief, though they know that the discussion of the Legislative bill will give them even more trouble. Senator Withers had announced the purpose to force a vote by a continuous session, but feeling that time should be given to prepare for an answer to Conkling, brought about adjournment. The Republicans felt satisfied with resting their case on the Army bill.

VETO OF THE ARMY BILL.

WASHINGTON, April 20.—The President's message vetoing the army appropriation bill was sent in to the House yesterday, but was not read, owing to the fact that an adjournment was had on account of the death of Representative Clark, of Iowa. The message is a very lengthy document and reviews at length the various provisions of the bill and gives in detail the President's reasons for not approving it.

He says that the effect of the adoption of the proposed amendment to the present statute regulating the use of military at the polls would be: First, Upon the right of the United States government to use military force to keep the peace at the elections for members of Congress; and second, Upon the right of the government, by civil authority, to protect these elections from violence and fraud.

The President thinks that it sufficiently appears that under existing laws there can be no military interference with elections. He goes on to say there is one part of section six of the veto bill which is significant and vitally important is the clause which, if adopted, will deprive the civil authorities of the United States of all power to keep the peace at the Congressional elections. The Congressional elections in every district, in a very important sense, are justly a matter of political interest and concern throughout the whole country. It is the right of every citizen, possessing the qualifications prescribed by law, to cast one unobstructed ballot, and to have his ballot honestly counted. So long as the exercise of this power and the enjoyment of this right are common and equal, practically as well as formally, submission to the results of the suffrage will be accorded loyally and cheerfully, and all the departments of government will feel the true vigor of the popular will thus expressed.

The message says that the measure attached to the bill will make a vital change in the election laws, a matter entirely foreign to the purpose of an appropriation bill; the tacking of general legislation to appropriation bills has become a common practice, but the public opinion of the country is against it. Moreover, the enactment of this bill into a law will establish a precedent which will lead to destroy the equal independence of the several branches of the government. Its principle places not merely the Senate and the Executive, but the judiciary also, under the coercive dictation of the House. The House alone will be the judge of what constitutes a grievance, and also the means and measures of redress.

The President concludes the message as follows: "Believing that this bill is a dangerous violation of the spirit and meaning of the Constitution, I am compelled to return it to the House in which it originated without my approval. The qualified negative with which the Constitution invests the President is a trust that involves a duty that he cannot decline to perform. With a firm and conscientious purpose to do what I can to preserve, unimpaired, the constitutional powers and equal independence, not merely of the Executive, but of every branch of the government, which will be imperilled by the adoption of the principle of this bill, I desire earnestly to urge upon the House of Representatives a return to the wise and wholesome usage of the earlier days of the Republic, which extended from appropriation bills all irrelevant legislation. By this course you will inaugurate an important reform in the method of Congressional legislation; your action will be in harmony with the fundamental principles of the Constitution and the patriotic sentiment of nationality which is their firm support; and you will restore to the country that feeling of confidence and security and the respect which are so essential to the prosperity of all of our fellow-citizens."

WASHINGTON, April 20.—The Democrats will have to assume the responsibility for the course of future legislation or non-legislation. The unity of the Republicans is in striking contrast to the disagreements in the Democratic caucus. The early evening session in the face of the present situation is that the Democrats are hopelessly divided. The more prudent and conservative members do not insist upon a different course. Said one of these gentlemen, who is an ex-Confederate, and who has always been opposed to the movement: "We have been united in two things—we have united the Republican party and scorned our own defeat. Our party has made a terrible mistake. The extra session was the first blunder. The compromise that was offered by the Republicans last session through Foster and Garfield was much more even than the Democrats' next ask. But they refused it; forced the extra session, and the result is that we shall not only obtain what was offered in that compromise, but we shall be ignominiously beaten. The party discipline will be broken, and the Republican party will be united in solid phalanx against us in 1880. We have even succeeded in reconciling the stalwart Republicans to the President. The Democrats, as a party, are signing their death warrant."

DEATH OF BISHOP AMES.

BAITIMORE, April 25.—Rev. Bishop Edward R. Ames, D. D., of the Methodist Episcopal church, died at his residence, in this city, at 3:25 o'clock this morning, in his 71th year, after a protracted illness from diabetes and pulmonary troubles. His last official act was to preside over the East German conference, held in Baltimore, the first week of April, which he did contrary to medical advice.

THE BURIED MINERS RESCUED.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., April 28.—A special from Wilkesbarre this morning says: The effort to rescue the men imprisoned in the mine at No. 19 slope have proved successful. At 9 o'clock this morning the relief gang succeeded in rescuing all the men, who were taken out of the mine alive and well, but suffering very much from exhaustion and want of food. The men were imprisoned over four days, and their escape from the awful death threatened them was miraculous. Reliefs of laborers have been constantly at work, night and day, and finally these succeeded in making a channel through a fifty foot block of coal. The imprisoned men had built a fire and sustained themselves on the meat of a mule which was enough with them in the fall. A stream of water running through the mine quenched their thirst.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

This Column is Reserved for

J. R. BISHOP & CO.

who are just now receiving one of the largest stocks of

New Goods

ever brought to Oakland.

These goods were bought for CASH, at the proper time, and of course cost less than any other stock in town.

There is not an old or second-hand piece in the house.

The assortment is complete, consisting in part of

Dry Goods,
Groceries,
Queensware,
Ready-Made Clothing,
Boots and Shoes,
Wooden ware,
Gents' and Ladies' Furnishing Goods,
Hardware, &c., &c.,

BOTTOM PRICES.

for Cash or country produce.

Call and examine our stock before purchasing elsewhere.

Remember the old stand recently occupied by N. B. Wayman & Co.

J. R. BISHOP & CO.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Advertisements under this heading will be inserted at the following rates: For members of the Legislature, Clerk of the Circuit Court and Sheriff, $100. For State Attorneys, Surveyors and County Commissioners, $50, and for Register of Wills and Judges of the Circuit Court, $25 each. Advertisements to run till the meeting of the Nominating Convention. The space allowed will be six lines or less, and 20 cents per line will be charged for each line in excess of that number. No name will be announced until the fee is paid.

FOR CLERK CIRCUIT COURT.

To the Republicans of Garrett County:

Receiving so many voluntary assurances from all parts of the county, to the effect that the people, and especially those having cause to go to court, do not desire a change in the Clerk's office the succeeding term, I have every reason to suppose that my name will be brought before the Convention. Therefore, I take this method of announcing to the public that I am a candidate for the office of Clerk of the Circuit Court for Garrett county, subject to the decision of the Republican county nominating convention.

If I am again nominated, I shall appreciate the honor and thankfully accept. And if elected, shall perform the duties thereof with care and attention, to the best of my ability, as in the past.

April 26. W. H. TOWER.

ROAD NOTICE.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, That the undersigned will make application to the County Commissioners of Garrett county at their next meeting after thirty days from the first publication of this notice, for permission of voters to examine and ascertain whether the public convenience requires that the road heretofore located, leading from the Ford of Savage river to John Warrick's farm, and known as the Savage and Bear Run road, should be changed and altered so as to run from its present point of beginning along its present bed, thence along the line of land owned by J. W. Warrick, thence up Savage river through the land of George O. Broadwaters to the mouth of Bear Run road, then running through the lands of Joseph E. Anderson to the line of John Warrick, then through said Warrick's lands to its farm, a distance of about four miles.

MURAM DUCKWORTH,
DANIEL L. NESTLER,
JOHN W. CHAPMAN.

Sheriff's Sale.

By virtue of an execution issued by Alex. L. Schorr, and to me directed, at the suit of Adam J. Schorr, against the goods and chattels, lands and tenements of W. M. Conkling, I have seized and taken in execution all the right, title, interest and claim, both in law and in equity, of the said W. M. Conkling, in and to all that tract, parcel, or part of the ground situated, lying and being in the Park county of Garrett, and state of Maryland, described as follows: To-wit: Lot No. 28, East 60 feet from the second corner of a lot south of Paul P. Dege and wife to the river, and running thence along Church street North 28 60 feet, thence North 62° West 100 feet, to the highest ridge, thence with said ridge South 15° West 100 feet, thence South 62° East 100 feet to the second corner of the lot of said Paul P. Dege and wife to the river, and running thence along Church street North 28 60 feet, thence North 62° West 100 feet, to the highest ridge, thence with said ridge South 15° West 100 feet, thence South 62° East 100 feet to the second corner of the lot of said Paul P. Dege and wife to the river, and running thence along Church street North 28 60 feet, thence North 62° West 100 feet, to the highest ridge, thence with said ridge South 15° West 100 feet, thence South 62° East 100 feet to the second corner of the lot of said Paul P. Dege and wife to the river, and running thence along Church street North 28 60 feet, thence North 62° West 100 feet, to the highest ridge, thence with said ridge South 15° West 100 feet, thence South 62° East 100 feet to the second corner of the lot of said Paul P. Dege and wife to the river, and running thence along Church street North 28 60 feet, thence North 62° West 100 feet, to the highest ridge, thence with said ridge South 15° West 100 feet, thence South 62° East 100 feet to the second corner of the lot of said Paul P. Dege and wife to the river, and running thence along Church street North 28 60 feet, thence North 62° West 100 feet, to the highest ridge, thence with said ridge South 15° West 100 feet, thence South 62° East 100 feet to the second corner of the lot of said Paul P. Dege and wife to the river, and running thence along Church street North 28 60 feet, thence North 62° West 100 feet, to the highest ridge, thence with said ridge South 15° West 100 feet, thence South 62° East 100 feet to the second corner of the lot of said Paul P. Dege and wife to the river, and running thence along Church street North 28 60 feet, thence North 62° West 100 feet, to the highest ridge, thence with said ridge South 15° West 100 feet, thence South 62° East 100 feet to the second corner of the lot of said Paul P. Dege and wife to the river, and running thence along Church street North 28 60 feet, thence North 62° West 100 feet, to the highest ridge, thence with said ridge South 15° West 100 feet, thence South 62° East 100 feet to the second corner of the lot of said Paul P. Dege and wife to the river, and running thence along Church street North 28 60 feet, thence North 62° West 100 feet, to the highest ridge, thence with said ridge South 15° West 100 feet, thence South 62° East 100 feet to the second corner of the lot of said Paul P. Dege and wife to the river, and running thence along Church street North 28 60 feet, thence North 62° West 100 feet, to the highest ridge, thence with said ridge South 15° West 100 feet, thence South 62° East 100 feet to the second corner of the lot of said Paul P. Dege and wife to the river, and running thence along Church street North 28 60 feet, thence North 62° West 100 feet, to the highest ridge, thence with said ridge South 15° West 100 feet, thence South 62° East 100 feet to the second corner of the lot of said Paul P. Dege and wife to the river, and running thence along Church street North 28 60 feet, thence North 62° West 100 feet, to the highest ridge, thence with said ridge South 15° West 100 feet, thence South 62° East 100 feet to the second corner of the lot of said Paul P. Dege and wife to the river, and running thence along Church street North 28 60 feet, thence North 62° West 100 feet, to the highest ridge, thence with said ridge South 15° West 100 feet, thence South 62° East 100 feet to the second corner of the lot of said Paul P. Dege and wife to the river, and running thence along Church street North 28 60 feet, thence North 62° West 100 feet, to the highest ridge, thence with said ridge South 15° West 100 feet, thence South 62° East 100 feet to the second corner of the lot of said Paul P. Dege and wife to the river, and running thence along Church street North 28 60 feet, thence North 62° West 100 feet, to the highest ridge, thence with said ridge South 15° West 100 feet, thence South 62° East 100 feet to the second corner of the lot of said Paul P. Dege and wife to the river, and running thence along Church street North 28 60 feet, thence North 62° West 100 feet, to the highest ridge, thence with said ridge South 15° West 100 feet, thence South 62° East 100 feet to the second corner of the lot of said Paul P. Dege and wife to the river, and running thence along Church street North 28 60 feet, thence North 62° West 100 feet, to the highest ridge, thence with said ridge South 15° West 100 feet, thence South 62° East 100 feet to the second corner of the lot of said Paul P. Dege and wife to the river, and running thence along Church street North 28 60 feet, thence North 62° West 100 feet, to the highest ridge, thence with said ridge South 15° West 100 feet, thence South 62° East 100 feet to the second corner of the lot of said Paul P. Dege and wife to the river, and running thence along Church street North 28 60 feet, thence North 62° West 100 feet, to the highest ridge, thence with said ridge South 15° West 100 feet, thence South 62° East 100 feet to the second corner of the lot of said Paul P. Dege and wife to the river, and running thence along Church street North 28 60 feet, thence North 62° West 100 feet, to the highest ridge, thence with said ridge South 15° West 100 feet, thence South 62° East 100 feet to the second corner of the lot of said Paul P. Dege and wife to the river, and running thence along Church street North 28 60 feet, thence North 62° West 100 feet, to the highest ridge, thence with said ridge South 15° West 100 feet, thence South 62° East 100 feet to the second corner of the lot of said Paul P. Dege and wife to the river, and running thence along Church street North 28 60 feet, thence North 62° West 100 feet, to the highest ridge, thence with said ridge South 15° West 100 feet, thence South 62° East 100 feet to the second corner of the lot of said Paul P. Dege and wife to the river, and running thence along Church street North 28 60 feet, thence North 62° West 100 feet, to the highest ridge, thence with said ridge South 15° West 100 feet, thence South 62° East 100 feet to the second corner of the lot of said Paul P. Dege and wife to the river, and running thence along Church street North 28 60 feet, thence North 62° West 100 feet, to the highest ridge, thence with said ridge South 15° West 100 feet, thence South 62° East 100 feet to the second corner of the lot of said Paul P. Dege and wife to the river, and running thence along Church street North 28 60 feet, thence North 62° West 100 feet, to the highest ridge, thence with said ridge South 15° West 100 feet, thence South 62° East 100 feet to the second corner of the lot of said Paul P. Dege and wife to the river, and running thence along Church street North 28 60 feet, thence North 62° West 100 feet, to the highest ridge, thence with said ridge South 15° West 100 feet, thence South 62° East 100 feet to the second corner of the lot of said Paul P. Dege and wife to the river, and running thence along Church street North 28 60 feet, thence North 62° West 100 feet, to the highest ridge, thence with said ridge South 15° West 100 feet, thence South 62° East 100 feet to the second corner of the lot of said Paul P. Dege and wife to the river, and running thence along Church street North 28 60 feet, thence North 62° West 100 feet, to the highest ridge, thence with said ridge South 15° West 100 feet, thence South 62° East 100 feet to the second corner of the lot of said Paul P. Dege and wife to the river, and running thence along Church street North 28 60 feet, thence North 62° West 100 feet, to the highest ridge, thence with said ridge South 15° West 100 feet, thence South 62° East 100 feet to the second corner of the lot of said Paul P. Dege and wife to the river, and running thence along Church street North 28 60 feet, thence North 62° West 100 feet, to the highest ridge, thence with said ridge South 15° West 100 feet, thence South 62° East 100 feet to the second corner of the lot of said Paul P. Dege and wife to the river, and running thence along Church street North 28 60 feet, thence North 62° West 100 feet, to the highest ridge, thence with said ridge South 15° West 100 feet, thence South 62° East 100 feet to the second corner of the lot of said Paul P. Dege and wife to the river, and running thence along Church street North 28 60 feet, thence North 62° West 100 feet, to the highest ridge, thence with said ridge South 15° West 100 feet, thence South 62° East 100 feet to the second corner of the lot of said Paul P. Dege and wife to the river, and running thence along Church street North 28 60 feet, thence North 62° West 100 feet, to the highest ridge, thence with said ridge South 15° West 100 feet, thence South 62° East 100 feet to the second corner of the lot of said Paul P. Dege and wife to the river, and running thence along Church street North 28 60 feet, thence North 62° West 100 feet, to the highest ridge, thence with said ridge South 15° West 100 feet, thence South 62° East 100 feet to the second corner of the lot of said Paul P. Dege and wife to the river, and running thence along Church street North 28 60 feet, thence North 62° West 100 feet, to the highest ridge, thence with said ridge South 15° West 100 feet, thence South 62° East 100 feet to the second corner of the lot of said Paul P. Dege and wife to the river, and running thence along Church street North 28 60 feet, thence North 62° West 100 feet, to the highest ridge, thence with said ridge South 15° West 100 feet, thence South 62° East 100 feet to the second corner of the lot of said Paul P. Dege and wife to the river, and running thence along Church street North 28 60 feet, thence North 62° West 100 feet, to the highest ridge, thence with said ridge South 15° West 100 feet, thence South 62° East 100 feet to the second corner of the lot of said Paul P. Dege and wife to the river, and running thence along Church street North 28 60 feet, thence North 62° West 100 feet, to the highest ridge, thence with said ridge South 15° West 100 feet, thence South 62° East 100 feet to the second corner of the lot of said Paul P. Dege and wife to the river, and running thence along Church street North 28 60 feet, thence North 62° West 100 feet, to the highest ridge, thence with said ridge South 15° West 100 feet, thence South 62° East 100 feet to the second corner of the lot of said Paul P. Dege and wife to the river, and running thence along Church street North 28 60 feet, thence North 62° West 100 feet, to the highest ridge, thence with said ridge South 15° West 100 feet, thence South 62° East 100 feet to the second corner of the lot of said Paul P. Dege and wife to the river, and running thence along Church street North 28 60 feet, thence North 62° West 100 feet, to the highest ridge, thence with said ridge South 15° West 100 feet, thence South 62° East 100 feet to the second corner of the lot of said Paul P. Dege and wife to the river, and running thence along Church street North 28 60 feet, thence North 62° West 100 feet, to the highest ridge, thence with said ridge South 15° West 100 feet, thence South 62° East 100 feet to the second corner of the lot of said Paul P. Dege and wife to the river, and running thence along Church street North 28 60 feet, thence North 62° West 100 feet, to the highest ridge, thence with said ridge South 15° West 100 feet, thence South 62° East 100 feet to the second corner of the lot of said Paul P. Dege and wife to the river, and running thence along Church street North 28 60 feet, thence North 62° West 100 feet, to the highest ridge, thence with said ridge South 15° West 100 feet, thence South 62° East 100 feet to the second corner of the lot of said Paul P. Dege and wife to the river, and running thence along Church street North 28 60 feet, thence North 62° West 100 feet, to the highest ridge, thence with said ridge South 15° West 100 feet, thence South 62° East 100 feet to the second corner of the lot of said Paul P. Dege and wife to the river, and running thence along Church street North 28 60 feet, thence North 62° West 100 feet, to the highest ridge, thence with said ridge South 15° West 100 feet, thence South 62° East 100 feet to the second corner of the lot of said Paul P. Dege and wife to the river, and running thence along Church street North 28 60 feet, thence North 62° West 100 feet, to the highest ridge, thence with said ridge South 15° West 100 feet, thence South 62° East 100 feet to the second corner of the lot of said Paul P. Dege and wife to the river, and running thence along Church street North 28 60 feet, thence North 62° West 100 feet, to the highest ridge, thence with said ridge South 15° West 100 feet, thence South 62° East 100 feet to the second corner of the lot of said Paul P. Dege and wife to the river, and running thence along Church street North 28 60 feet, thence North 62° West 100 feet, to the highest ridge, thence with said ridge South 15° West 100 feet, thence South 62° East 100 feet to the second corner of the lot of said Paul P. Dege and wife to the river, and running thence along Church street North 28 60 feet, thence North 62° West 100 feet, to the highest ridge, thence with said ridge South 15° West 100 feet, thence South 62° East 100 feet to the second corner of the lot of said Paul P. Dege and wife to the river, and running thence along Church street North 28 60 feet, thence North 62° West 100 feet, to the highest ridge, thence with said ridge South 15° West 100 feet, thence South 62° East 100 feet to the second corner of the lot of said Paul P. Dege and wife to the river, and running thence along Church street North 28 60 feet, thence North 62° West 100 feet, to the highest ridge, thence with said ridge South 15° West 100 feet, thence South 62° East 100 feet to the second corner of the lot of said Paul P. Dege and wife to the river, and running thence along Church street North 28 60 feet, thence North 62° West 100 feet, to the highest ridge, thence with said ridge South 15° West 100 feet, thence South 62° East 100 feet to the second corner of the lot of said Paul P. Dege and wife to the river, and running thence along Church street North 28 60 feet, thence North 62° West 100 feet, to the highest ridge, thence with said ridge South 15° West 100 feet, thence South 62° East 100 feet to the second corner of the lot of said Paul P. Dege and wife to the river, and running thence along Church street North 28 60 feet, thence North 62° West 100 feet, to the highest ridge, thence with said ridge South 15° West 100 feet, thence South 62° East 100 feet to the second corner of the lot of said Paul P. Dege and wife to the river, and running thence along Church street North 28 60 feet, thence North 62° West 100 feet, to the highest ridge, thence with said ridge South 15° West 100 feet, thence South 62° East 100 feet to the second corner of the lot of said Paul P. Dege and wife to the river, and running thence along Church street North 28 60 feet, thence North 62° West 100 feet, to the highest ridge, thence with said ridge South 15° West 100 feet, thence South 62° East 100 feet to the second corner of the lot of said Paul P. Dege and wife to the river, and running thence along Church street North 28 60 feet, thence North 62° West 100 feet, to the highest ridge, thence with said ridge South 15° West 100 feet, thence South 62° East 100 feet to the second corner of the lot of said Paul P. Dege and wife to the river, and running thence along Church street North 28 60 feet, thence North 62° West 100 feet, to the highest ridge, thence with said ridge South 15° West 100 feet, thence South 62° East 100 feet to the second corner

LOCAL NEWS.

—The weather is delightful.
—Fresh beef at Wolfe's Saturday and every day next week.
—Dr. E. H. Parsons paid a brief visit to Cumberland this week.
—We understand that the Governor has pardoned John Swaffler.

—Please drop in and pay "that little bill" when you come to court.
—Mr. Jas. Enlow is building an addition to his residence, in West End.

—Two small street musicians were in town on Monday.
—The County Commissioners will meet on Monday.

—The season for borrowing a garden spade has opened.
—Read the communication from "J. M." in this issue.

—Another emigrant train passed west Friday afternoon of last week.
—Mr. Bush is putting up a fence between his houses on Fourth street.

—Mrs. Chrystal is building an addition to her residence on Third street.
—Mr. W. D. Burton is improving the grounds about his residence, erecting fences, &c.

—H. Wheeler Combs, Esq., was in attendance at the Ritchie circuit court this week.

—The May term of the Circuit Court for this county will convene on Monday.

—Miss Lizzie Johnson has returned from an extended stay at Bloomington, this county.

—200 sacks G. A. Salt for sale at Wm. P. Totten's Cheap Cash Store, Oakland, Md.

—Mr. I. W. Stahaker shipped two car loads of potatoes east this week.

—Rev. B. Ison left for Baltimore on Tuesday night to attend the State Temperance Alliance.

—Mr. Geo. A. Spalden is building an addition to Mr. Rawlings' residence on Pennington street.

—Hon. John Ritchie was in town this week, looking after his landed interests in this county.

—Mr. W. P. Totten has laid a new sidewalk in front of his store. This was a much needed improvement.

—Send in your announcements to THE REPUBLICAN. The bill has been opened. This will be a lively campaign.

—Mr. George Turney, mail carrier from Oakland to Addison, made his first trip from this place Thursday morning.

—A general fever of cleaning up has seized our citizens, and our town presents a neat and attractive appearance. This is as it should be. Let the work still go on.

—The recent rains have had a fine effect on the grass, which is coming on nicely. The trees are also beginning to leave, and everything indicates that spring is here.

—Mr. Lloyd Chambers has completed the stone work, and a part of Mr. Jarboe's force of carpenters are now engaged on Mr. Leventine's new building on Alder street.

—Forest fires, which have been raging in the mountains for several days, were subdued by the rain of Monday last. Considerable damage was done to fencing and timber.

—Dr. W. F. Funderberg, Oculist and Aurist from Cumberland, Md., will be in Oakland about May 20th, to remain a short while for the treatment of all diseases of the eye, ear, nose and throat.

—Mr. Solomon Turney's spring house was broken open, in February last, and several articles of value taken therefrom. Mr. Turney will give ten dollars reward for the arrest and conviction of the thieves.

—Garden making is in full blast. Lots are being plowed, and the industrious man labors early and late that he may reap a good harvest. It is supposed that the potato bug is preparing for the summer campaign.

—At the meeting of the Young Men's Christian Association held last evening the committee appointed for the purpose of considering means to secure Mr. Moody's presence here to conduct a series of meetings reported that there was an almost unanimous voice on the part of the churches in desiring Mr. Moody to come to Cumberland. It was resolved to appoint a committee consisting of one member of the association and one of the pastors to visit Baltimore and endeavor to prevail upon Mr. Moody to come.—Cumberland News, Tuesday.

Real Estate Transfers.

The following is a list of real estate transfers filed for record in the office of W. H. Tower, Clerk of the Circuit Court for Garrett county, for the week ending April 30:

Julia A. S. Wonderly to Eliza Gibson, 18 acres of lot No. 484; $250.
Geo. J. Walter to Margaret A. Walter, part of a tract of land called "Triumph," containing 230 acres; $1, &c.

John Steyer to Henry Russell, and Susanna Russell, Military Lot No. 2519; $250.

Sunday School Convention.

Rev. John M. Davis, Vice President of the Maryland Sunday School Union, has been informed that a Sunday School Convention will be held in Garrett county this summer if her citizens desire it. If the citizens of Grantsville or Accident wish to hold such Convention, they should inform Mr. Davis at once.

Large Stock of New Goods.

Special attention is called to Bishop & Co's. new stock of goods, and claim that they can sell very low for cash or country produce. They invite persons attending court to call and examine their goods and prices, at the stand recently occupied by N. B. Wayman & Co.

Sheep Killed.

The dogs made another raid on Mr. Nathan Gasteel's sheep on Saturday morning last, killing about a dozen and wounding several. Mr. Gasteel informs us that he has lost about five hundred dollars by sheep killing dogs since he has been in the States. There are a great many worthless curs about Oakland that should be disposed of.

Now, ye the trumpet, blow,
The gladsome welcome sound;
Let all the people know,
To Garrett's utmost bounds.

That Richardson, near the depot, is ready to furnish hungry mortals with cakes, pies, bread, cheese and crackers, all fresh from the oven. Also tobacco, cigars, and, in fact, everything necessary to make you happy.

To the Ladies.

We are now prepared to exhibit our spring and summer styles in Bonnets and Hats. We have selected our stock in person, and we are prepared to offer many bargains. Our assortment of millinery and fancy goods is complete, and will be sold at the very lowest cash prices. Special attention given to bridal outfits.

M. L. Scarr,

Baltimore Store.

Notice.

Having rented the shop near J. O. Michaels' store, in the Broom building, on and after the 31 day of May we will have constantly on hand fresh beef, mutton, &c., and having secured the services of an experienced butcher, we hope to please the public who may favor us with their patronage. Thankful for past patronage,

We are, respectfully,

Osbourn Bros.

Sailed for Europe.

Mr. Daniel Willink and family left Oakland Saturday evening for London, England. Mr. W. has resided in this county for about seven years, and was highly respected for his straight-forward business dealings and genial disposition. On the evening previous to his departure he was serenaded at his hotel by the Oakland cornet band, and Saturday night about fifty of our best citizens were collected at the depot to bid him and his family good bye. We wish them a pleasant trip and safe arrival at their destination. Mr. T. E. Hoigh, formerly of Liverpool, England, has leased Mr. Willink's "Mountain Stock Farm" for a term of ten years.

Literary.

Those of our citizens who attended the Literary Society on Saturday evening were well repaid. Though the exercises were not as lengthy as usual, yet they were good. The regular paper failed to appear, owing to the failure of those appointed to contribute performing their duty. E. Z. Tower read a selection entitled "The Briefless Barrister." E. H. Sincel delivered a declaration, and A. B. Woodcock read an essay on "Our science." There was no business of general interest transacted. Among the features of tonight's programme was a debate on the question, Resolved, That wealth brings more harm than intellect.

Officers Elected.

Lodge No. 111, I. O. G. T., elected the following officers on Tuesday night last:

W. C. T. S. Lawton, Jr., W. V. P.—Miss Lou A. Thayer, W. R. S.—E. H. Sincel, W. A. S.—H. S. White, W. C.—W. H. Tower, W. T.—David Little, W. F. S.—T. J. Poddleord, E. G.—Sarah Lawton, O. G.—E. Z. Tower, M.—Geo. Little, D. M.—Miss Ella Poddleord, R. H. S.—Miss Maggie Poddleord, L. H. S.—E. P. Arnold.

Marriage Licenses.

Marriage Licenses were granted to the following parties during the month of April:

Nathaniel N. Rounds and Martha O. Witt, D. A. Turney and Eliza M. Frazer, Jacob Blubaugh and Sarah Bear, Abraham G. Wotring and Christena Eckard, Stephen Ravenscraft and Lydia Reitz, John Higgins and Emma Hart, H. J. Kohl and Caroline Gorrick, Wm. L. Boughner and Jane N. Delawder, John E. Feels and Amanda Kelly, John Bishop and Bridgette Kennedy, Isaac A. Eryin and Sarah J. Kitzmiller.

Select School at Johnstown.

Mr. A. W. DeWitt will open a select school at Johnstown, Monday, May 12th. Boarding can be obtained at from $2.00 to $2.50 per week. Mr. DeWitt holds a First Grade Certificate from the Allegany county Examiner, and is fully competent to prepare young gentlemen and ladies for teaching. Instructions will be given in all the branches taught in the county.

List of Letters.

List of letters remaining unclaimed in the Post Office at Oakland, April 30th, 1879.

Persons calling for them will please say they are advertised.

J. L. Bennett, B. Della Boon, M. Edgherson, Luther G. King, Edw. Keeney, L. Meier, Joseph Orens, H. B. Randolph, Wm. Rockell, Jno. P. Uphold, John Wood, A. J. Webster.

R. Thayer, P. M.

The Bell Case—Verdict of "Not Guilty."

The third day's session of the trial of Herbert Bell for the murder of Samuel Cooper was held in the circuit court yesterday. Judges Pearce and Motter presiding. The Court announced that they had decided to allow each side three hours for argument, the time to be divided equally among counsel.

Mr. Boyd opened for the State, saying that if he used harsh language during his speech it must not be taken as an evidence of animosity toward the prisoner; on the contrary, the present prosecution was one of the most dispassionate he had engaged in during his term of office, as he had familiarly known the prisoner from boyhood and had the kindest feelings toward him. He claimed that the evidence offered by the defence as to Bell's character should not enter into the case, as the question was simply, was the prisoner justified in killing Cooper; whether a man is justified in using a deadly weapon to return for blows of the fist; if this were so, the case would be at an end. The precedent of justifying the act would be a very dangerous one and would entail no end of such affairs. The free and frequent use of pistols in our city must be stopped. Mr. Boyd quoted various authorities to show that a man is never justified in using more than a certain amount of force in repelling an assault, and in the present instance the prisoner had gone too far in repelling the assault. The speaker claimed that Bell had not availed himself of the obvious means of retreat offered him, and he warned the jury that if they justified this homicide they would in effect assist in the next killing of the kind that occurred in our midst; he said the frequent use of deadly weapons must be put a stop to, or society would be overturned. Mr. Boyd was suffering from indisposition, and he was obliged to shorten his remarks somewhat, but his was nevertheless a very able effort.

Hon. John Ritchie followed for the defence in a very fine speech of three quarters of an hour. He paid several deserved compliments to the counsel for the State, who he said had certainly made every effort to make their case as strong as possible; he would make no appeal for pity in the case, but only for justice; one of the counsel (Mr. Hoffman) had been before been arrayed in behalf of liberty, but in this case he was striving to inflict undeserved punishment. Bell had testified that he fired the fatal shot because he feared he would be shot or cut; this evidence was undisputed and should decide the case in the prisoner's favor. Mr. Ritchie went on to argue that Cooper had borne malice toward Bell and made threatening remarks, but that the latter pursued the even tenor of his way and made no threats. The speaker admitted the unfavorable reputation for shooting affairs that Cumberland possessed, and agreed with Mr. Boyd that means should be taken to cure the evil, but he did not consider this a proper case upon which to inaugurate the reform. If Cooper could now speak, elevated above all earthly resentments, his voice would be for Bell's forgiveness. Mr. Ritchie brought out the salient points of his argument very clearly and forcibly, and his remarks were listened to very attentively.

Mr. Cox followed for the defence, laying considerable stress on the evidence as to Bell's good character, that had been produced. He gave a description of how Bell must have felt when Cooper was striking him, and claimed that the prisoner had at the time a reasonable and honest conviction that his life was in danger.

Mr. Cox read a number of authorities to show how much a man should endure before he made resistance. He also referred to Bell's evidence in his own behalf, which he said the jury could not, in view of his previous good character, help believing.

Mr. Pries, for the defence, next took the floor and spoke for nearly an hour. He alleged that Cooper met Bell with the intention of assailing him, and that there was evidently no malicious motive in Bell's action, without which he could not be convicted of a felony. Bell could not know but that he was to receive great bodily harm, and his resistance was a natural and proper one, for which he should not be punished. He may have been mistaken as to Cooper's intentions, but that was not his fault. Bell's conviction could do nothing to lessen the sorrow of Cooper's widow and children.

Mr. Thomas, of the counsel for the defence, did not address the jury.

Mr. Hoffman closed for the State in a masterly speech of something over an hour, during which the jury, Court and spectators listened with wrap attention. He began by saying that he had been Cooper's friend and was assisting in the prosecution at the request of the latter's family and friends; but although his friend had not been his attorney, and had not been engaged to defend him in view of the anticipated trouble; if he had been, no compensation would have been sufficient to induce him to appear in defence of his slayer.

The speaker only asked the jury to regard their oaths and calmly decide according to the law and evidence. Cooper evidently believed that Bell had been circulating reports concerning him, and decided to call on him for an explanation; the very fact of his speaking of the matter showed that his intentions could not have been very serious, as Cooper was not the man to boast of what he meant to do.

Mr. Hoffman referred briefly, but emphatically, to the fact that there was on the jury a man who, rumor said, had been heard to remark before the trial that in Bell's place he would have done as the latter did. Leaving Holtzman's testimony out of the case altogether, there remained sufficient proof to convict of murder in the second degree. Mr. Hoffman very impressively asked the jury if they intended to allow to go unpunished a man who killed another because of a blow with the fist, and warned them that if they did so there would be an end to convictions for murder in Allegany county. Mr. Hoffman closed with a beautiful figure, saying the jury should be as true to their trust as electricity to a conductor.

Mr. Hoffman closed at 1:32 p. M., and after a brief charge by Judge Pearce, as to the manner of bringing in their verdict, the jury retired.

They remained out until 9:30 p. M., when they came in with a verdict of "not guilty," and were discharged. Bell at once left the court house and went to his home.—Cumberland News, 29th.

WESTMINSTER, April 29th, 1879.

MR. EDITOR:—Please allow me to say that I have missed for perhaps three weeks your "Pines" correspondence. I hope she is not sick, or indisposed. If she is under the doctor's care, or preparing for the happy day, or if this is among the past, and other duties stop her pen for awhile, my excuses are hereby respectfully tendered; or is she like the Welsh divine, who took another man because they were in the "midst of a wicked, crooked and perverse generation, and it took two of them at 'em?" or that J. M. must do half the work, or that two shall be one, a little scriptural, you know. It is not impossible that one has been made out of worse material. I was so much pleased with her productions, especially that part which so abounded with respect for gray hairs, that I must distrust her solitude once more. It reminded me how much better off I was in having respect than some that could be named. Here is one. When Judge Jeffers, of infamous memory, whose bloody circuit will be remembered as long as the English language lives, (and Lord Macaulay and Gen. Grant, two noble fellows, in my estimation, say that it is destined to become universal, when this unjust Judge, who was troubled with widows, two) together with his master, James H. fell from power, and for fear of a justly enraged populace was flung into prison for safety, and when after the storm of execration has been stilled by ten feet of shame and mortar, he spent some time in inflated reflection, searching the whole kingdom over for a friend that respected him; and in despair, like the arch American traitor, Arnold, concluded that not one breathed his native air. His cell was watered; he heard a footstep; he looked for daggers; he was half dead; who could want him but devils. "In that dread moment" a keg is laid at his feet, labeled oxygen. His breath came back, his voice also, and with an inspiration strange in his heart he thanked the God that there was one, just one friend left. With eagerness he broke open his gift and found it full of rubbish, with a rope on top to hang the wretch. He did not survive it.

This man was not much respected. In this country, highly breverent like Cartwright's piety, in spots, one sometimes hears a lad in his teens

call his father "the old governor," whilst another, not disposed to waste time over trifles, and in too much of a hurry for long words and ceremony calls his father "the old gent;" another, perhaps, intending to be a little Biblical, and imitating the murderous (in motive) sons of Jacob, calls his father "the old man." A part of this slang, let us hope, is from custom; but a part, it must be confessed, is from want of proper respect, for the lower down in civilization you move the more of this sort of talk you hear. There is one kind of respect that puzzles me. But it may be love, one says. This clouds me in greater mystery still. But, says another, it may be sympathy. My difficulty is not solved. I can see how Little Nell, in Dickens' "Old Curiosity Shop" could love the old man, but I cannot see how a young woman of twenty can marry an old man, unless, indeed, it be upon the principle embodied in that tremendous question asked by his Satanic Majesty, "Does Job serve God for naught?" "Respect unto the recompense of reward" is sublimely language in the mouth of the greatest of men; but the respect of twenty, for seventy years, that leads to the consummation of one, puzzles a stupid man. But American theology is overburdened with the doctrine of disinterested benevolence which, like Russell's Seven Sermons on the Unpardonable Sin, the more you read the less you know, and as per meation is a law of nature, disinterested benevolence may have sought and found a lower level, and got mixed up in wonderful disparity of age. Nevertheless, like the characters upon a tea chest, resembling nothing in the heavens above, the earth below, nor the waters under the earth, it is beautiful to look upon; and like the bloody foot prints of Valley Forge soldiers, sublime to talk about, which has inspired the patriotism of one hundred Fourth's, and still, like the respect for grey hairs and the martyr's glove of twenty for seventy years, is as good as ever. If once in a while some brightly youth of twenty should, in story-like parlance, pop the question to the school mate of his dear old grandmother, my faith in disinterested benevolence might undergo a change; but like the thief who was in doubt whether he stole the horse or not until he heard the lawyers plead, I shall wait for a voice from the Pines.

J. M.

Eyes Relieved.

Mr. Ferd. Lewis, of Grant county, went to Cumberland one day last week to have his eyes operated upon. The disease and weakness in his eyes created a kind of continual weeping that caused him much annoyance, and frequently suffering. Doctor W. F. Funderberg, to whom Mr. Lewis applied, found it necessary to insert a silver tube from the corner of each eye, running into the nose, through which drippings from the ball and diseased matter could escape. These glands had become clogged and the natural course so obstructed as to render an artificial drain necessary. The operation was delicately and skillfully performed, and Mr. Lewis returned, highly pleased with the relief afforded. A little spirit to strengthen his nerve while the doctor operated, was all the subject took.—Kaiser (W. Va.) Tribune.

The Hagerstown Globe of Saturday says: Yesterday afternoon, while George W. Cain and George Walters were engaged in extending the depth of a well on the farm of Solomon Hoover, about one mile south of Pinkstown, they were placed for a short time in a very unpleasant situation. They sunk the bottom of the well about two feet through the solid rock, and the heavy blasts loosening the wall twenty feet above them, a perfect shower of large stones was the result.

The entire wall sunk about two feet; and the two men at the bottom were saved from being crushed to death by taking refuge in a natural cave which extends from the bottom of the well underground a distance of twenty-five feet. After the stones ceased falling they came forth unharmed but pretty badly scared, and very thankful for their almost providential escape.

The Nihilists have won the first point in their desperate game with the Czar. General Ghouroko, who was selected to crush them out in St. Petersburg, has been forced to retire because his measures were found to be "impracticable," or to state the case more exactly, agents could not be found to execute his orders owing to the terror inspired by Nihilist threats. The policy of "crushing out," therefore, has, apparently, failed in its inception. It now remains to be seen whether the Czar will yield, for he must either advance or retreat from his present dangerous position.

The rapid sales of the new $100 refunding certificates indicate that this will be a success as great as the 4-per cent. loan. The idea of "bonds for the poor man" is a very taking one. The class of people who have hitherto been investing in savings banks are said to be the chief applicants for the certificates and they are taken up in sums from $10 to $100. Several good results may come from this measure. By giving to the working classes a safe kind of investment for small savings it will encourage habits of thrift and by spreading the national debt over a large number of holders it will give a greater stability and protection against financial delusions. Moreover, it will lessen the outflow of gold in foreign countries in payment of interest. The greater the amount of the national debt held at home the better; the larger the number of holders the better.

DIED.

Suddenly, of pneumonia, Saturday, April 26th, near Winchester, Frederick county, Va., Mrs. Martha M. Sollers, eldest daughter of Wm. W. and Helen Thayer Ashby.

On Monday 21st of April, 1879, after a short and distressing illness, Mary Virginia, daughter of Marine and Mary Ann Drane, aged 23 years, 5 weeks and 15 days.

The deceased was an interesting young lady, greatly beloved by all who knew her, on account of her kind and gentle disposition, her sympathies being easily aroused, either by seeing or hearing of another's distress. Her sudden death cast a gloom over the entire neighborhood, particularly the young who had been her schoolmates, and had enjoyed many happy hours in her company. She was in the full enjoyment of perfect health up to within a few hours of her death, having been ill only from Saturday morning until 5 o'clock on Monday morning, at which time her worn spirit took its flight. The deceased was a member of the United Brethren Church, having embraced religion some years ago. The many and solid inquiries were striking proofs of the high regard in which she was held by her acquaintances. When the startling announcement was made, "Jennifer is dead," the many heartfelt and tearful exclamations were another proof of the estimable qualities which were lost to us by her untimely end. Though forced to endure unexpressed suffering, her last moments were peaceful and calm. To the author of her terrible and untimely end, we simply say that "the mills of the gods grind slowly, but they grind exceeding fine." The Christian mother and sisters can find consolation in the thought that their wrongs are in the hands of One who suffers not the wicked to go unpunished.

ALAN.

On Monday, April 21st, 1879, Edward, son of Christian and Susan Kimmel.

The deceased was a young man much respected in the community in which he lived. He was of a jovial, lively turn of mind, always disposed to take the world as it came, his good natured smile always winning friends. Although not a professor of religion previous to his illness, he was generally to be found in attendance at all places of worship. His illness though short was very severe being, it is supposed, erysipelas of a very virulent type. During all of his intense suffering he never murmured but bore it with the patience of a martyr. The deceased was born April 21st, 1857, died April 21st, 1879, being his birthday and within a few moments of the hour of his birth. His sorely bereaved friends have great consolation in the fact that he fixed his thoughts on brighter things in the future, where there is no sickness or sorrow, and where partings are no more. The Christian mother finds solace in the thought that her bright example was not lost, but had brought back the erring one to the fold of the Shepherd, who rejoices more over one who was lost and is found than over the ninety and nine who went not astray. Just before his death he sang in sweet, soft tones that beautiful hymn "There's a light in the valley." To these near him in his last moments he gave abundant evidence that the smile of the Saviour was indeed lighting up the dark valley of the shadow of death, and angels with their soft wings were waiting to waft him over.

The friends have the sympathy of all their many friends, who showed the kindly regard they felt for the departed and friends, by their anxious inquiries while alive, and by the exceedingly large concourse which was in attendance at the last sad rites—that of depositing the body in its narrow home, where it sleeps until the great arch angel shall summon him to receive his crown.

Weep not, dear mother for your boy,
For the thought must surely give you joy;
That I'm sweeping through the gates of the new Jerusalem, Washed in the blood of the Lamb.

ALAN.

Telegraphic Competition.
A case of importance to the public, railway companies and to telegraph interests was recently before the District court at Columbus, Ohio. Suit was brought by the Western Union telegraph company to restrain the Atlantic and Pacific telegraph company from exercising telegraph rights on the Central Ohio railroad and to prevent the Baltimore and Ohio railroad company from transferring its own wires to the poles of the Atlantic and Pacific telegraph company under an agreement and operating the same in connection with that company. The Western Union claims under an agreement made in 1858 the perpetual exclusive right to operate a line on the right of way of the Central Ohio railroad company between Wheeling, W. Va., and Columbus, Ohio, now leased and operated by the Baltimore and Ohio railroad company. Judge Greer, of the court of Common Pleas, decided the contract was void as being against public policy. The Western Union appealed and the case was recently argued before the District court at Columbus. It is understood that a majority of the District court was in favor of dismissing the appeal but on motion of the Western Union the case was reserved for decision in the Supreme court. This disposition of the matter leaves the Baltimore and Ohio railroad company free to continue the operation of its lines as now placed and to control its telegraph interests on the line of its Central Ohio division. In the regular course of business before the Supreme court it will probably be between two and three years before the case will be reached. It is well known that within the past two weeks the Baltimore and Ohio railroad company has completed the construction of first-class telegraph line of two wires between Baltimore and Washington. This, taken in connection with the favorable result in the Ohio courts, plainly indicates the policy of that company and clears the way for the use of its own extensive system of telegraphs as a competitor with the Western Union company for the telegraphic business of the public.

There is no doubt about it, Mr. Tilden must set that barrel rolling through the South at once, or there'll be trouble. The opposition to him in the Southern journals becomes more outspoken each day. They go so far as to say that it would be a great boon to the party to have him out of the field, since his nomination will take all the energy and spirit out of the campaign so far as the Southern Democrats are concerned. Why not start Smith West South at once? He knows the ground, and how to irrigate it.

Ulcerated Sores.
The healing and purifying qualities of KELLER'S LINIMENT render it the best article for the speedy and safe cure of ulcerated sores.

A Stitch in the Back
Is caused by a sudden wrenching of the spine, and produces violent and acute pains, making it very difficult for the person to move. It should not be neglected, as the curvature of the spine is often brought on by neglect of this common complaint.

Sore Throat and Quinsy.
The causes which usually induce Sore Throat are those which give a sudden check to perspiration, and thus obstruct Nature's regular work, quickly producing, in consequence, an inflammatory condition which, involving the tonsils, and rapidly spreading over the whole mucous membrane of the fauces will cause Quinsy.

Inflammation of the Breast.
This distressing complaint may be cured, or entirely prevented by the timely use of this remedy. It has never failed, when applied at the commencement, or before the gathering takes place.

Weakness of the Ankles and Joints.
Strains and chronic pains, cold and external injuries, are the chief causes of this complaint. The muscles are relaxed, in many cases making it difficult to move. By a free use of this Liniment a certain cure will be effected. As a

Horse and Cattle Lotion
it is invaluable to Farmers, Express Companies, Stage Proprietors, well appointed Livery Establishments, and all who own or use Horses and other Stock, immediately relieving and curing Sprains, Ring Bone, Bruises, Cracked Heels, Sprains, Scatches or Grease, Sore, Colic, Lameness, Foot Rot in Sheep, Foundered Feet, Corns, Fungus Wounds, Galls of all kinds, Poll Evil, Splint, Fistula, Bittast, And many other Diseases.

KELLER'S Roman Liniment
Never fails to give satisfaction, and, as a domestic remedy for man and beast, it is incomparably superior to any of the so-called family liniments, salves, etc., as a single trial will convince all.

FOR SALE EVERYWHERE.
Price, Fifty Cents a Bottle.

NEW ADVERTISEMENT.
SHATZER & AULT
have recently removed to their new Furniture and Undertaking Rooms,
MAIN STREET, OAKLAND,
Where they keep constantly on hand and manufacture to order anything in the line of
HOUSEHOLD FURNITURE
All of which is offered at the
LOWEST LIVING PRICES.
Give us a call, examine our Furniture and prices, whether you wish to purchase or not. We take pleasure in showing our work.

All kinds of COFFINS and CASKETS on hand or furnished to order on short notice.
266m SHATZER & AULT.

H. WHEELER COMBS, REAL ESTATE AGENT,
OAKLAND, MD.
Will negotiate sales of real estate of every description.
No charge for advertising property placed in my hands.

H. WHEELER COMBS.
The following properties have been placed in my hands
FOR SALE.

NO. 3.
One of the best little farms in Garrett county, 2 1/2 miles west of Oakland, the county seat. This farm contains 50 ACRES, 70 acres in cultivation, and all susceptible of easy and profitable cultivation. Improved by a

New 2 Story House,
containing 8 rooms and good cellar, GOOD BARN and stable. There is a good young orchard of 70 trees. The whole farm is under good crops. This farm will be offered for a short time at a very low price and on easy terms. Title perfect. Limestone and coal within two miles.

NO. 4.
Fichtner's Mill Property.
This property, containing 250 acres, situated on Muddy Creek, in same town district, Garrett county, Md., will be sold at a very low price and upon the easiest of terms. It has 2000 acres north-west of Oakland, 8 miles from Hutton's switch and 7 miles from Chambers Summit. Is one of the best mill sites in the county and is surrounded by the best timbered land of the section. It is improved by an excellent containing 10 rooms; good stable attached. The wheels and iron for a Saw Mill are upon the property, and will be sold with the property at a low price for the whole tract the land is assessed for.

FRAME HOUSE.

NO. 5.
A Desirable Property in Oakland FOR SALE.
Lot 100x100, improved by an

Excellent Frame Dwelling House,
containing 7 rooms; with good cellar. This is one of the most pleasant places in Oakland, is almost immediately opposite the Oakland Hotel, and in front of Bailey's new hotel and commands one of the finest views of the town. The buildings are all new and well-constructed. There is an excellent well of water on the lot. For any one desiring a pleasant home and opportunity is here offered to secure it at a price less than the cost of the buildings. Terms.—One-third down, balance in three equal annual payments.
Apply to
H. WHEELER COMBS,
Real Estate Agent, Oakland, Md.

OAKLAND WOOLEN FACTORY
The subscriber is prepared to do all kinds of CUSTOM WORK,
such as
Roll Carding, Spinning and Weaving, at short notice.
Wool taken in exchange for goods or worked up on the shares into Blankets, Cassimere, Flannels and stocking yarn.

SAMUEL LAWTON.
PATENTS.
To Inventors and Manufacturers.
ESTABLISHED 1865.
GILMORE SMITH & CO.
Solicitors of Patents & Attorneys at Law.
American & Foreign Patents.
No fees in advance, nor until a Patent is allowed. No fees for making preliminary examinations.

Special attention given to Interference Cases before the Patent Office, Infringement Suits in the different States, and all litigation pertaining to Patents or Inventions.
Send Stamp for Pamphlet of Sixty Pages.
GILMORE & CO.,
629 F. Street, N. W.,
Washington, D. C.

MISCELLANEOUS.
Buy only the NEW AMERICAN
It is the Only Sewing Machine which has a Self-Threading Shuttle
It has Self Setting Needle. Never Breaks the Thread. Never Skips Stitches. Is the Lightest Running.
The Simplest, the Most Durable, and in Every Respect

The Best Family Sewing Machine!
The "NEW AMERICAN" is easily learned, does not get out of order, and will do more work with less labor than any other machine. Illustrated Circular furnished on application.
AGENTS WANTED.
J. S. DOVEY, Manager, 64 N. Charles Street, Baltimore, Md.

INSOLVENT'S NOTICE.
IN THE CIRCUIT COURT FOR GARRETT COUNTY, NO. 36—INSOLVENTS—SAMUEL S. FICHTNER, Debtor.
Ordered, this 23rd day of January, 1879, that Samuel S. Fichtner give notice to his creditors, by the first Monday of JULY, 1879, before the said court, to answer such interrogatories or allegations as his creditors, creditors and sureties may propose or allege against him; and that a copy of this order be published in some newspaper printed in the town of Oakland for three months prior to the said first Monday of July next, as such notice.
W. H. TOWER,
Clerk Circuit Court for Garrett County.
True copy—test—
W. H. TOWER, Clerk.

How to Cure Sickness
Nature's method of purification and consequent cure is founded on the rational principle of judicious purgation; and when it is considered that the best physicians pursue the practice of attention to the stomach and bowels as preliminary (and often the only) treatment of disease, it is not difficult to perceive that a remedy possessing all the requisites of a purgative and alterative, in addition to other and valuable remedial influence, must obtain much more than ordinary consideration and favor. Our remedy combines every quality required for the treatment of disease on the above-mentioned rational principle. It is a pleasant Cathartic, active or gentle, according to the dose; it is a Blood purifier, toning and enriching this fluid by its alterative property; its action on the Liver is soothing and certain, promoting the Biliary secretions; it is a safe and reliable Emmenagogue, acting specifically upon the uterine system; it affords the greatest satisfaction in Dyspepsia, and cures whenever used as directed, and in conjunction with hygienic means is the best preventive of Constipation that can be suggested.
From the above it would then appear that the simplest method to cure sickness is that one which combines judicious purgation with physical systematics, and the observance of hygienic measures; the head should be kept cool, the feet warm, and the bowels open; and when treating diseases on the principles exhibited in the manual referred to below (which every one should read) the strength should be sustained by nourishing (not stimulating) food of the kind adapted to the complaint while the remedy is running its course.

To Prevent Sickness.
The pronounced opinions of the highest Therapists indicate that most diseases are the direct result of vitiated Blood; and as the successful treatment of disease is founded on the principle and practice of eliminating this blood poison by judicious purgation, so this same principle, by reasonable adaptation to any case, is the surest means to prevent disease.
Keller's Vegetable Life Drops are an absolute preventive of diseases caused by impurity of the Blood, of Liver diseases, of diseases of the Stomach, Intestines, etc. Its corrective influence will prevent short attacks of Dyspepsia, Jaundice, Nervous Debility, Uterine disorders, Fever and Ague, and all the other classes of diseases induced by malarial poison. To prevent disease, then, purify the blood if need be, by using a reliable alterative and purgative; if the complaint is the consequence of malarial poison, will establish a condition of body in which health will be the rule and disease the exception. A careful perusal of the Manual of Purgative and Depurative Medicine, will fully illustrate the subject of which the above is a mere outline, and will clearly indicate the method of using Keller's Vegetable Life Drops. To be had at Drug Stores sent to any address on receipt of 3 cent stamp, by
W. L. KELLER, Chemist, Baltimore

B. & O. R. R. Time-Table.
The following time table of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad went into effect on the 17th of November:
GOING WEST
No. 2..... 5:01 A. M.
No. 6..... 9:51 A. M.
No. 8..... 3:00 P. M.
No. 10..... 1:01 P. M.
Way..... 10:11 A. M.
GOING EAST
No. 1..... 12:18 A. M.
No. 3..... 10:06 P. M.
No. 5..... 12:21 P. M.
No. 7..... 5:29 P. M.
Way..... 7:38 A. M.

The fast trains, with the exception of those mentioned, make stoppages only at the First Class Stations. Tickets should always be procured before taking the cars, passengers saving thereby from 10 to 25 cents.
WM. M. CLEMENTS,
Master of Transportation.
L. M. COLE,
General Ticket Agent

MISCELLANEOUS.
SUBSCRIBE FOR
"THE REPUBLICAN,"
AND AID IN THE CIRCULATION
—OF—
The Cheapest Newspaper
IN WESTERN MARYLAND.
ONLY $1.50
PER YEAR
IN ADVANCE.

EVERY VARIETY
OF
JOB WORK
PROMPTLY EXECUTED.

We desire to call the attention of Merchants, Mechanics, and Business Men generally, to our extensive facilities for the prompt, speedy and accurate execution of
FIRST-CLASS

JOB PRESSES
now in use, and the
ONLY ONE IN OAKLAND.
We have also a complete stock of
New Plain and Fancy Type, &c.,
of the latest styles, for all the different kinds of Job Work and can now fill all orders for

Show Cards, Business Cards, Circulars, Letter Heads, Bill Heads, Legal Blanks, Certificates, Envelopes, Tags, Statements, &c., Posters, Handbills, Programmes, Pamphlets, Catalogues, Dodgers, &c., &c.
and every description of
Plain and Fancy Printing
At the Lowest Rates.

Drop in and take a look at a
—(COMPLETE)—
Printing Office,
YOU WILL BE
WELCOME AT ALL TIMES.
We are determined to be up to the times in everything connected with the printing business.
Address
"THE REPUBLICAN,"
Oakland, Garrett Co., Md.

DR. J. DAILY, RESIDENT DENTIST
WESTERN PORT, MARYLAND.
From one to a full set of teeth inserted in the most beautiful and substantial manner. Particular attention paid to cleaning and filling the natural teeth. All work warranted to give satisfaction, or money refunded.

MEAT MARKET.
H. B. WOLFE,
Formerly of Cumberland, Md.
Takes this mode of announcing to the citizens of Oakland and vicinity that he has permanently located in Oakland for the purpose of carrying on the
BUTCHERING BUSINESS
in a first-class manner.
FRESH BEEF, (stall-fed), MUTTON, PORK, BLOOMING SAUSAGE, PORK SAUSAGE, &c., at all times.
Shop near the Post Office.
Customers can get what they want without delay and at any hour of the day.
Your patronage is respectfully solicited.
H. B. WOLFE.

DR. J. DAILY, RESIDENT DENTIST
WESTERN PORT, MARYLAND.
From one to a full set of teeth inserted in the most beautiful and substantial manner. Particular attention paid to cleaning and filling the natural teeth. All work warranted to give satisfaction, or money refunded.

THE REPUBLICAN,
OAKLAND, GARRETT CO., MD.
Jury Terms—Second Monday of September and the First Monday of May.
Non-Jury Terms—First Monday of July and Third Monday of December.
Chief Judge—Hon. R. H. Alvey.
Associates—Hons. Wm. Motter and Geo. A. Pearre.
Clerk—W. H. Tower.
Sheriff—Thomas Coddington.
State's Attorney—Jno. W. Velch.
Court Auditor—W. P. Townshend.
Standing Commissioners—Gilmore S. Hamill and A. B. Gonder.
Crier—Wm. Smouse.
Messenger—Jas. M. Bell.
Bailiffs—Wm. Waltz and T. Bosley.
Return days of Equity process—Third Monday in January, third Monday in March, third Monday in May, third Monday in July, second Monday in September, second Monday in November.

CIRCUIT COURT.
Jury Terms—Second Monday of September and the First Monday of May.
Non-Jury Terms—First Monday of July and Third Monday of December.
Chief Judge—Hon. R. H. Alvey.
Associates—Hons. Wm. Motter and Geo. A. Pearre.
Clerk—W. H. Tower.
Sheriff—Thomas Coddington.
State's Attorney—Jno. W. Velch.
Court Auditor—W. P. Townshend.
Standing Commissioners—Gilmore S. Hamill and A. B. Gonder.
Crier—Wm. Smouse.
Messenger—Jas. M. Bell.
Bailiffs—Wm. Waltz and T. Bosley.
Return days of Equity process—Third Monday in January, third Monday in March, third Monday in May, third Monday in July, second Monday in September, second Monday in November.

ORPHANS' COURT.
Meets every second and fourth Tuesday of each month.
Chief Judge—Joseph DeWitt.
Associates—A. J. Michaels and Wm. Harvey.
Register of Wills—W. L. Rawlings.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS.
The regular sessions of the County Commissioners commence on the first Monday in January; the first Monday in April, being the appeal and transfer term; the first Monday in June, being the levy term; the first Monday in July, the term for appointing judges of election, and the first Monday in October.

President, E. C. Tilton; Commissioners, John Riley and Jeremiah Guard.
Clerk—Wm. H. Hagans, who will be in the office on Tuesdays and Saturdays of each week.
County Surveyor—John Harned.

SCHOOL COMMISSIONERS.
President—Wm. A. Brydon.
Commissioners—G. W. Delawder, Secretary and Treasurer—Dr. E. H. Bartlett.

JUSTICES OF THE PEACE.
District No. 1—J. H. Wilson and Henry Rasche.
2—Benj. Griffith.
3—John T. Patterson & Sylvanus Butler.
4—A. J. Warnick.
5—R. B. Jamison and A. L. Osbourne.
6—Perry Weimer.

REGISTRARS OF VOTERS.
District No. 1 H. O. Hamill.
2 James H. Bush.
3 John T. Patterson.
4 W. H. Bernard.
5 Daniel Hinebaugh.
6 Thomas Browning.
7 R. T. Browning.
8 W. F. Denkins.
9 J. Facentaker.

TOWN OF OAKLAND.
Burgess—D. E. O'Hatt.
Commissioners—J. M. Davis, Geo. L. Bosley, Geo. W. Legge, G. W. Merrill.
Clerk—A. C. Good.
Bailiff—James W. White.
Postmaster—Ralph Thayer.

LODGES.
A. F. & A. M.—Meet every first and third Thursday night.
I. O. O. F. No. 12—Meet every Monday night.
Alta Lod. e. No. 571, K. of H.—Meets in McComas Hall 2d and 4th Thursday evenings of each month.
I. O. G. T. No. 111—Meet every Tuesday night.

A Rare Chance
FOR A
GOOD BARGAIN
IN THE PURCHASE OF A LITTLE FARM, now offered for sale, very low, lying within FOUR miles of Oakland, in a good, warm locality. Well suited for fruit growing or grain raising. GOOD FENCE OUTLET. One hundred acres of good land, newly improved, with

New House and Barn
Twenty acres cleared and in cultivation. 75 choice young apple trees; also Pears, Plums and cherries.
This land is partly underlaid with blue stone, is well timbered, and is abundantly supplied with good water. Title good.
NELSON ERYN.

THE REPUBLICAN.

OAKLAND, MARYLAND.

JAS. A. HAYDEN,
Editor and Proprietor.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.
One copy, one year, $1.50
Six months, $1.00
Three months, $0.50
INvariably in advance.

TERMS OF ADVERTISING.
First insertion, $1 per square of 8 lines;
50 cents per square for each additional insertion. Special contracts for advertising longer than three months.

Correspondents must enclose full name and address, not necessarily for publication, but as a private guarantee of good faith. Rejected communications will not be returned.

SATURDAY, MAY 10, 1879.

Congress is mainly occupied in caucusing just now, but the cost to the country of the session is not diminished—$12,000 per day.

Twenty-one years ago the present senator Pendleton made a speech in the House of Representatives defending the use of the troops to keep the peace at the polls in Kansas.

The Southern statesmen of 1861 who were so anxious to convert Kansas into slave territory did not think they were pointing out a suitable locality for the emigration of their freed laborers.

The quietest men in Congress just now are Beck and Blackburn, and yet merely a short span of days has elapsed since they were bent on starving out and otherwise destroying the government.

Making calculations upon the basis of the votes for supervisors cast this spring in the rural districts of New York, the Tribune finds that the Republicans are gaining throughout the State, and that they ought certainly to carry it this fall.

Capt. C. H. Morgan has been given the appointment of Clerk of the Senate Committee on Transportation Routes.

Since it has been determined to fill these positions by Democrats, we are glad that our friend and fellow-townsmen has been so fortunate.

The Republican Congressional campaign committee, composed of one Senator or member of the House from each State having a representative in Congress, completed its organization Saturday by unanimously electing William E. Chandler, of New Hampshire, to be its secretary.

The Okolona howler has broken loose again. His issue of April 30 contains many gems, of which this will do for a specimen: "The Yankees forced us back into the Union, and we propose to give them enough of that Union before the curtain rolls down. We have got them just where we want them."

The Pennsylvania Railroad Company has informed each of its tenants as engaged in liquor business in Jersey City that after the first of May their leases will not be renewed for barrooms. The time is not far distant when the company will employ no man who indulges in drink, even moderately. This is a temperance movement that will be gratifying to the traveling public.

During the severe castigation that Senator Blaine gave our own little Hereford, the other day, our senator said that he had seen troops at the polls for purpose of intimidation, in West Virginia, in 1870. As Governor Stevenson ably shows in the last issue of the State Journal, Hereford is guilty of a shameful slander against his own State. The only troops that have been in this State since the war, were the ones sent here upon the twice-repeated requisition of our Democratic Governor Mathews.—Kingwood (W. Va.) Journal.

It is said upon reliable authority that the Democrats have not even discussed at any of their caucuses the question of what their course will be in the event of a veto by the President of the new bill, but no apprehension is felt that they will fail to pass both appropriation bills. It may be remembered that both at the close of the last and the beginning of the present session the position assumed by the Democrats was that if the President vetoed the appropriation bills containing the political riders, that they would "withhold the supplies" and stop the wheels of government. Now that they have surrendered this position, and are about to pass a separate bill, which is a great improvement upon the objectionable proposition in the Army bill, they are very anxious to have it understood that it is no abandonment of their ground, but that it is simply accomplishing the same thing in a different way.

Our Reform Economists.

Government is very expensive; at least ours is, as figures gathered at Washington attest. The late Secretary of the United States Senate, who has made out the accounts of that body, shows that its costs for eight months ending March 4 last, was $632,836, equal to about $1,000,000 annually. Senatorial stationery amounted to $1,000 a month, and repairing and new furniture nearly $9,000. The Teller committee, appointed under Blaine's resolution, absorbed $15,000, and the committee to reorganize the army, who formed a bill which never had the slightest chance of passing, required from $5,000 to $6,000. Salaries of officers of the Senate and committee clerks reached $150,000, which would give a $2,000 clerk to each senator, and leave a surplus. The extravagance of the Republicans, so much complained of by the opposition, has been exceeded by the Democrats since they got into power. These have made the legislative bill of this year some $14,000 heavier for Congressional expenses than it had been before; and yet economy has been their continual rallying cry. For some reason or other, the average politician seems to imagine himself privileged to get everything he can out of the government, and to think filching indirectly from the public Treasury rather creditable than otherwise. He fancies Uncle Sam so rich that he will not miss a million or so at any time. Uncle Sam has vast resources, it is true; but if politicians were allowed to manage his future, it would not be very long before he would become hopelessly bankrupt.

It is said that children and fools always speak the truth. To this select duet we may add an occasional Democratic caucus committee chairman. General Chambers, who had charge of the draft for a bill to replace the one knocked into smithereens by the President's veto, affords an illustration in point. He gravely submitted his measure and solemnly read out its title, viz: "A bill to prevent the military from keeping the peace at the polls." General Ewing shouted out: "Hold on!" But he was too late. The country enjoys a laugh, and the Democrats can have the discomfiture of incubating and promulgating a measure which had for its purpose the encouragement of disorder at the polls. The truth slipped out through the inadvertence of an indiscreet committee man.

Several efforts were made not to change the bill but simply its title, and the same measure goes before Congress under the title of "a bill to prevent interference by the army with elections."

This is an effort to gull the public. The army is not used in elections, and Senator Blaine showed in his late speech in the Senate how futile an attempt to effectively use it would be, as there are not soldiers enough to go around, by a large majority. Nevertheless, it suits the plans of the Democracy to go before the country on any issue (however false) which may promise them the possession of place and power. They are trying by an ingenious distortion of circumstances, and a slippery play on words, to impose upon the country in a matter now agitated solely for selfish, base political ends.—Cumt. News.

And now the Okolona Southern States is heard from again, in the following strain:

"Yankeeedom is beginning to understand that our people are still unsubdued—that we are still in favor of State Rights and the rule of white men. That is why she threatens to fall back on Grant, and give him a third term of power. Well, we have this to say: If Grant is elected and attempts to inaugurate the reign of damnation and deviltry that characterized his previous administration, he will find himself checkmated after the first move. The South has recovered the right of home-rule, and she proposes to keep it henceforth and forever—Grant or no Grant—and the sooner the hell beasts of Puritanism learn this little lesson by heart the better it will be for their temporary welfare. The South was helpless and hopeless at the close of our magnificent struggle for liberty, and the heaven ordained system of human labor, but the hour of our proscription is past, and Grant, with all his misdeeds, has no terrors for us. Let him try his old role of Dictator again, and see how it will work. He will find his mandates as powerless as those of King Canute, who tried to command the motions of the multitudinous waves."

The Cincinnati Commercial, looking to the future, remarks: "It seems doubtful whether the Democrats can commit an additional blunder. They have crowned a long career of mistakes with the immense stupidity of the extra session, which is making sure the next presidency and House of Representatives for the Republicans. After that, we shall have the new apportionment, and the census tables will show the South dwindling to insignificance, never to be restored save by the abandonment of its trade in caste, prejudice and sectional politics."

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

Special Correspondence to The Republican.

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 6, 1879.

The fall of the Bourbons is a fearful one. After a week of caucusing and wrangling and in certainty they have finally discovered that the country will not endorse their revolutionary designs. So instead of starving the Government to death they will attempt, under a plausible cover, to entice the President into an endorsement of their scheme to strike down the civil power of the Federal Government over elections. In other words, the Bourbons have been outwitted in the Democratic caucus itself, so far as we can learn, and will have to remain satisfied with the best they can do in the way of compromise, which will be very little. They have agreed after much swearing to support a bill declaring that the presence of troops at the polls is contrary to the spirit of our institutions, and "That it shall not be lawful to bring to, or employ at any place where a general or special election is being held in a State, any part of the Army or Navy of the United States, unless such force be necessary to repel the armed enemies of the United States, or to enforce section 4, article 4, of the Constitution of the United States, and the laws made in pursuance thereof, on application of the Legislature or Executive of the State where such force is to be used."

Now this appears to be a very harmless law, but in reality, under the appearance of fairness, it is as dangerous as anything could be. It would effectually destroy the power of civil officers to call upon the troops as a posse comitatus for any purpose. It means that the Democratic mobs in the South are not to be subject to the control of U. S. officers. This is the view taken of it by the Republican leaders, who in caucuses last night decided to defeat the new bill if possible. Messrs. Conkling, Edmunds, Hawley and Robeson made strong speeches in denunciation of the Democratic tricks to cheat the country into the adoption of a policy that is distasteful to a large majority. It looks now as though another long discussion would ensue. The Republicans will present a bill as a substitute. Messrs. Edmunds, Robeson and Frye have been selected to draft one for that purpose, which will be effectual in disposing of the Democratic objection to troops at the polls, but will stand for maintaining the civil power of the Government.

A large meeting was held here last night to take measures to help the destitute colored people who are fleeing from oppression in the South. The information from all quarters is to the effect that the migration movement is under way and threatening to break out more largely than ever in all the Southern States. Senator Windom made a speech to the meeting in which he declared he was not in favor of asking the negroes to fly, for their action should be from choice and voluntary, and the danger was that they would go too readily. When it became fixed, he said in the minds of the white people of these sections that this exodus was to become general they met the negroes upon the river banks, with rifles in hand, and said, "you shall not leave the State; you shall not cross the Mississippi." He read quotations from a newspaper giving accounts of the encampments of negroes on the Mississippi River, detailing their terrible condition and the cruelty of the white inhabitants. Thousands of people who were fleeing to a land where they can breathe the free air of heaven were met upon the bank, and with rifle and shot gun, prevented from taking the steamer. "And you call this the land of freedom!" exclaimed Senator Windom. "There is a day of retribution awaiting this nation if these people can be treated in this way and no indignation response come from the hearts of the American people." He characterized as a farcical upon freedom the picture of American citizens fleeing because the American law cannot protect him, his life and property, and concluded with a strong appeal in their behalf. Hon. George C. Gorham also made an eloquent appeal, some spirited resolutions were adopted after which a liberal sum was subscribed for the refugees.

Hon. Wm. E. Chandler has been chosen Secretary of the Republican Congressional Committee and will begin a vigorous campaign for victory at once.

LOGAN.

Miss Townsend, of Nyack, who married her coachman, had four ladies in her confidence, and proposed to keep the marriage a secret for some time to come; but somehow the news got out. It must have been the officiating priest.—Buff. Exp.

Large sales indicate the merits of all good articles. Druggists sell more of Dr. Bull's Baby Syrup than of all other remedies for the cure of Baby Disorders.

The following extract from a speech delivered by Hon. Mark H. Dannel, of Minnesota, in the House of Representatives, during the debate on the appropriation bill, is worthy of a careful perusal:

In our Government the President constitutes a distinct branch of the Government, and is under obligations to obey the laws and to regard his oath with precisely the same carefulness and conscientiousness as an individual member of this House. I made the statement a little while ago that President Hayes was elected by a large aggregate vote than the present majority of this House. The aggregate vote cast for the Democratic members of this House was 1,775,333. The aggregate vote cast for Hayes in 1876, was 1,033,950. Less than one half as many voters voted for and elected the majority of the House than voted for President Hayes.

It occurred to me to examine the vote cast in 1876 in a few States of the Union and then look at the votes of those States in 1878. I take in the first instance the State of Virginia. She has upon this floor eight Democratic Representatives, and yet, what was the vote in that State in 1876 and 1878? Virginia gave for President Hayes 95,428 votes, yet she is represented on this floor by eight Democratic members with an aggregate vote of 53,085.

The State of Kentucky, which has ten Democratic Representatives, gave for Mr. Hayes 37,156, and yet those ten Representatives have come into this House by an aggregate vote of 86,163.

Take the State of Mississippi, your own State, Mr. Chairman, [Mr. Hooker in the chair,] which you so ably represent. The State of Mississippi gave for President Hayes 22,665 votes, yet the six Democratic Representatives from that State in this House hold their seats here by an aggregate vote of but 37,128.

The State of Arkansas gave for President Hayes 28,629 votes. For the four Representatives from that State who have their seats upon this floor it gave but 31,298 votes.

Take the State of Alabama: she has here upon this floor six Democratic Representatives. In that State President Hayes had an aggregate vote of 50,618, while these six Democratic Representatives had an aggregate vote of but 40,295. Florida and other States could be included in this list.

Now, take these five States, with an aggregate representation of thirty-four members, which number being taken from the majority of this House would leave it largely in the minority, and those thirty-four Democratic Representatives on this floor received an aggregate vote of 297,758 while in those very congressional districts President Hayes received an aggregate vote of 342,218. Where is the popular will? Shall these thirty-four men stand up here and say that they more represent the popular will in those States? By no means. The President also represents those States, even if those members were elected by as large a majority as he received.

Mr. Stephens Opposes the Plan of Starving Out the Government.

Hon. Alexander H. Stephens, of Georgia, who may truthfully be said to represent the opinions of the moderate element of the Democratic congressmen, was interviewed last week on the political situation. He cheerfully responded to all the questions put to him by a representative of the Baltimore American, and the following are his utterances verbatim et literatim:

I think there is no cause for excitement. I think the houses of Congress have a perfect right to pass the Army bill in the shape in which it passed. I disapprove of the policy of putting the repeal clauses or political matters as riders upon appropriation bills. Still, as the majority of Congress thought proper so to do, they had the right to do it. It was a question of policy rather than of power and right. Congress in appropriating money for the support of the army had a right to designate the purposes for which it shall be applied. The President has an equal constitutional right to withhold his approval of any act of this character, or any other that should be passed by Congress. I think the views expressed by the President in his message, that the effect of the proposed legislation would trammel the civil authority in the execution of legal process were strained. I do not think myself that such is the legitimate effect of the language used; nor do I think that any such objection is intended by those who voted for the measure. Still, I recognize the constitutional right of the President to veto the measure if he saw fit as fully as I recognize the right of Congress to pass it. The great question is, shall appropriations for the support of the Army now be withheld because of the interposition of the Executive veto? I think not. I think the disagreement between the Executive and Congress can easily be accommodated, if dispassionate patriotism shall control the actions of both departments of the government, as I hope it will. The motto of my own state, Georgia, is eminently applicable at this time. That motto is: "Wisdom, Justice and Moderation."

It is unnecessary to designate how this end can be obtained. There are several ways. One would be a distinct declaration that no such construction should be put upon the language used as that which the President seems in his message to think it bears; or it can be done by simply striking out the words "civil officers;" or it could be done by simply attaching a proviso that none of the money appropriated by the bill should be used in having troops at the polls, or in transporting them or ordering them to the polls for the purpose of interfering with the elections. Or it might be done by passing the Appropriation bill simply and introducing and passing the other measures in a distinct and separate bill. This, as is well known, was my judgment in the beginning. In the Democratic caucus I gave the same views and opposed the introduction of these repeal clauses as riders upon appropriation bills. If now Congress should pass the Army Appropriation bill just as it was passed, leaving out the repeal clauses, and in a separate bill incorporate the same proposition substantially as that now contained in the clause of the bill which caused its veto, and if the President should still withhold his sanction from that separate measure, then the question would be legitimately before the people at the next election. A sure issue would thus be presented between Congress and the Executive as to whether United States troops or military force should be used in controlling elections. But in case he should thus veto a separate measure I am for leaving the question for the country to decide at the polls. I am, and ever have been, and ever shall be, a law and order man, and for maintaining the constitutional functions of the government in its every department. I do not think it would be wise or politic in Congress to withhold the necessary supplies because the President sees fit for any reason to exercise his constitutional right of interposing a veto.

My opinion is, also, that there should be no fictitious opposition to the presidential veto, but that these differences should be accommodated, if possible, and that Congress should go to work without further agitation of sectional questions upon those great measures of relief, both financial and otherwise, on which the country is hopefully looking. Speaker Randall is understood to concur in the views above expressed by Mr. Stephens.

The Political Situation.

The revolution is undoubtedly over; the great contest between the Commons and royal prerogative is at end; the right to withhold supplies until grievances are redressed is abandoned. It is very clear that in spite of frenzied persons still heated by the passions stirred up by inflammatory speeches, Congress intends to do its duty and pass the appropriation bills whatever may be the action of the Executive on the legislation of the majority in the two Houses. The leaders of the Democratic party are at last aware of the fact that under our constitutional system Congress is not the government, and that Congress has no way of securing the enactment of any law of which the President disapproves, except by a two-thirds majority or by the action of the people in electing another President who will approve of the proposed legislation. It is right enough that a majority in Congress shall enact whatever measures it may think expedient or necessary, but in the event of a veto, which can not be overruled in the constitutional way, the only course to pursue is to leave the issue to be passed upon by the people. If it were possible for a majority in Congress to coerce the Executive in submission to its behests, the constitutional distribution of the powers of government would be destroyed and the conservatism of our institutions would be shattered. The readiness with which the Democratic party was led into the wild radicalism which the returning good sense has caused it to abandon, is only another proof of the hollowness of its pretence of attachment to conservative principles. Just as in the days of slavery, that party did not hesitate to assert extreme views of national authority in the protection of fugitive slaves and in the protection of the peculiar institution in the territories, so now we have heard their leaders furiously proclaiming their intention to assimilate our constitutional system to that of the English, and substitute for the admirable checks and balances devised by the founders of the republic, a government by parliamentary majorities. And while they were with one breath advancing these absurd and extravagant ideas, with the next they were denouncing the exercise of a national authority, expressly provided for by the Constitution, and which has for its object the protection of the purity of Congressional elections.

The Democratic party is now adopting a sensible course. It is true that it is hard to see what folly still remains open to it. The folly of the extra session, with its expense of several millions to the taxpayers, cannot be undone, nor can the effect of the silly threats to coerce the Executive. If they should attempt to adjourn without making the appropriations the President could reconvene them the next day, and keep reconvening them as often as they adjourned. Still, it is none the less the case that their present course is a sensible one. To back out of an untenable position is always a mark of good sense. The Democrats as they retreat may console themselves with the thought that they are only imitating a famous movement of the great hero of their "salwart" adversaries—General Grant. After the fight in the Wilderness Gen. Grant tried to get past Lee and move on to Richmond. When he came to the North Anna river he succeeded in getting across Hancock's corps and Warren's corps at points several miles apart. General Lee, instead of retreating, slammed his army up to the river bank between the two so that he could fall upon either alone. Gen. Grant saw that he was in a fix, and without further ado immediately marched Hancock and Warren back across the river again, and abandoned the movement in that particular direction. Now when a man of Grant's bull-dog tenacity of grip can make a square back down when the occasion requires, the Democratic light weights ought to have no difficulty.

There is no doubt that by proceeding in the regular manner the Democratic party can secure the passage of the Army bill amendment and the repeal of the T-st oath law. They could have accomplished last session, and the holding of the extra session will not enable them to accomplish any more. The objection of the President to the legislation just vetoed was that it was unnecessary, and that it also abridged the civil authority of the government. Now, if the amendment be so modified as to remove the latter objection, the former would not be sufficient to cause it to be vetoed, and we have no doubt it would receive the President's signature.—Baltimore American.

Secretary Sherman's Speech on Prosperity and Election Laws.

MANSFIELD, O., May 5.—Secretary Sherman this evening was serenaded at his hotel, when he appeared and made the following speech:

I found when I arrived in my old home the papers said I came West seeking the nomination for governor. I came purely on private business, to repair ruined fences and impaired property. As you have serenaded me to-night I shall seize the opportunity of speaking fully on two of the great questions now discussed throughout the land. They are questions of vital importance to all the people—Republicans, Democrats and Nationalists. Two years ago, when I had the pleasure of speaking to you about resumption of specie payments, stating if we could go back to gold then would be the beginning of prosperity. Then loss followed loss, and failure followed failure, and gloom generally prevailed. I believed then if we would go back to the ways of our fathers, and start afresh on a gold basis, supported by greenbacks and national bank notes, prosperity would again return. It became my duty as an executive officer to carry out this policy. One year ago I had to present to you the desirability of the result of resumption. On the 1st day of January, 1873, this important measure was accomplished. Every dollar you had in your pockets became worth a dollar in gold. Since that has been a accomplished. I come here to ask you the question, are you not satisfied with the result? Do you not think resumption has been beneficial to you all? To day a man travels where he pleases. The green-back dollar is as good as any nation's on the globe. What has been the result of the policy of resumption? Many thought, as the day of resumption approached, that desecration and bankruptcy would follow; whereas, there has been advancing prosperity throughout our entire land. I am told that your shops in Mansfield are again in operation, and it is so everywhere. The result is, labor plentiful; capital finds secure and safe investment. Why, in New York city just the other day I heard of all manner of schemes being originated by capitalists for the investment of capital that has been idle since the panic. The public credit is now better than in any time in the history of the country.

Strange to say, since the first of January there has been sold $750,000,000 of 4 per cent. bonds. Now, the rich are not the only bondholders. The man of modest means can purchase bonds of any denomination that he may choose at any money-order postoffice in the country.

The great question that is now agitating the public mind is the attempt of your representatives in Congress to repeal what is known as the election laws. These members of Congress are seeking to repeal the only laws that in many cities and some States gave the people a fair and full voice. One of the most sacred duties of Congress is the preservation of the purity of elections. The Secretary then arraigned the Democrats in Congress for endeavoring to repeal the election laws by means of an appropriation bill and to coerce the President. He did not apprehend any serious trouble in regard to the bill.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

SHATZER & AULT
have recently removed to their new Furniture and Undertaking Rooms.
MAIN STREET, OAKLAND,
Where they keep constantly on hand and manufacture to order anything in the line of
HOUSEHOLD FURNITURE
All of which is offered at the
LOWEST LIVING PRICES.
Give us a call, examine our Furniture and prices, whether you wish to purchase or not. We take pleasure in showing our work.
All kinds of COFFINS and CASKETS on hand or furnished to order on short notice.
426 6m SHATZER & AULT.

H. WHEELER COMBS,
REAL ESTATE AGENT,
OAKLAND, MD.
Will negotiate sales of real estate of every description.
No charge for advertising property placed in my hands.
H. WHEELER COMBS.

The following properties have been placed in my hands FOR SALE.

No. 3.
One of the best little farms in Garrett county, 2 1/2 miles west of Oakland, the county seat. This farm contains 36 ACRES, 70 acres in cultivation, and all surrounded by easy and profitable cultivation. Improved by a

New 2 Story House,
containing 8 rooms and 2nd story, 6000 BARN and stable. There is a good young orchard of 70 trees. The whole farm is under good fence. This farm will be offered for a short time at a very low price and on easy terms. Title perfect. Limestone and coal within two miles.

No. 4.
Fichtner's Mill Property.
This property, containing 250 acres, situated on Muddy Creek, in Sang Run district, Garrett county, Md., will be sold at a very low price and upon the easiest of terms. It has 9 miles north-west of Oakland, 8 miles from Hutton's Switch and 7 miles from Cranberry Summit. Is one of the best mill sites in the county, and is surrounded by the best timbered land of the section. It is improved by an excellent containing 10 rooms; good stable attached. The whole and land for a saw mill are upon the property, and will be sold with the property at a low price and the whole tract the land is assessed for.

FRAME HOUSE,
This is an opportunity for a bargain seldom offered.

No. 5.
A Desirable Property in Oakland FOR SALE.

Lot 100x100, improved by an
Excellent Frame Dwelling House,
containing 7 rooms; with good cellar. This is one of the most pleasant homes in Oakland. It is almost immediately opposite the Oakland Hotel, and in front of the city hall. The house commands one of the finest views of the town. The buildings are all new and well-constructed. There is an excellent well of water on the lot. For any one desiring a PLEASANT HOME, an opportunity is here offered to secure it at a price less than the cost of the building. Price—One third down, balance in three equal annual payments.
Apply to
H. WHEELER COMBS,
Real Estate Agent, Oakland, Md.

OAKLAND WOOLEN FACTORY.

The subscriber is prepared to do all kinds of CUSTOM WORK,
such as Roll Carding, Spinning and Weaving,
at short notice.

Wool taken in exchange for goods or worked up on the shares into Blankets, Cassinets, Cassinieres, Flannels and stocking yarn.
SAMUEL LAWTON.

PATENTS.

To Inventors and Manufacturers.
ESTABLISHED 1865.
GILMORE SMITH & CO.
Solicitors of Patents & Attorneys at Law.
American & Foreign Patents.

No fees in advance, nor until a Patent is allowed. No fees for making preliminary examinations.

Special attention given to interference cases before the Patent Office, Infringement Suits in the different States, and all litigation appertaining to Patents or Inventions.
Send Stamp for Pamphlet of Sixty Pages.

GILMORE & CO.,
629 F. Street, N. W.,
Washington, D. C.

NEW ADVERTISEMENT.

This Column is Reserved for

J. R. BISHOP & CO.

who are just now receiving one of the largest stocks of

New Goods

ever brought to Oakland.

These goods were bought for CASH, at the proper time, and of course cost less than any other stock in town.

There is not an old or second-hand piece in the house.

The assortment is complete, consisting in part of

Dry Goods, Groceries, Queensware, Ready-Made Clothing, Boots and Shoes, Wooden ware, Gents' and Ladies' Furnishing Goods, Hardware, &c., &c., all of Which will be sold at

BOTTOM PRICES.

for Cash or country produce.

Call and examine our stock before purchasing elsewhere.

Remember the old stand recently occupied by N. B. Wayman & Co.

J. R. BISHOP & CO.

Buy only the
NEW AMERICAN
It is the Only Sewing Machine
which has a Self-Threading Shuttle
It has Self Setting Needle.
Never Breaks the Thread.
Never Slips Stitches.
Is the Lightest Running.
The Simplest, the Most Durable, and in Every Respect

The Best Family Sewing Machine!
The "NEW AMERICAN" is easily learned, does not get out of order, and will do more work with less labor than any other machine. Illustrated Circular furnished on application.

AGENTS WANTED.
J. S. DOVEY, Manager, 64 N. Charles Street, Baltimore, Md.

A. LOEWENSTEIN,
MERCHANT TAILOR.
OAKLAND, MD.

Respectfully promises to the citizens of Oakland and vicinity, that he has had in his usual large stock of which he is prepared to make to order upon the shortest notice and in the most

Spring and Summer Cloths,

Cassimeres, Vestings, etc,

Neat and Fashionable Manner.

He invites all to call and examine his goods, and leave their measure for a suit. He has reduced the price for making clothes, but

Guarantees a Perfect Fit.

For all work WARRANTED to give entire satisfaction.

350 ACRES

—OF—

Good Land

For Sale Cheap.

This Land lies on the Hoopole Road, about six miles north east from Oakland, B. & O. R. R., and is generally covered with good timber.

Would make several good farms.

Will be sold in bulk or in small lots. Title good.

For particulars and terms apply to this office or to the postoffice, Oakland, Garrett Co., Md.

Sheriff's Sale.

By virtue of an execution issued by Alex. L. Osborn, a Justice of the Peace of the State of Maryland, in and for Garrett county, and to me, the undersigned, by and by Adam Heile, against the goods and chattels, lands and tenements of W. M. Coddington, I have seized and taken in execution at the right, title, interest and estate, both in law and in equity, of the said W. M. Coddington, in and to all that tract, parcel, or part of ground situated, lying and being in Poor Park, county of Garrett, and State of Maryland, described as follows: Beginning South 8° East of and from the second corner of a lot sold by Paul F. Dwyer and wife to Geo. Marley, and running thence along Church Street North 28° 02' East, thence North 42° West 10 feet, to line of H. G. Davis, thence with said line South E. West 43 feet, thence South 62° East 100 feet to the beginning, containing one-seventh part of an acre, more or less, and being the same 1/4 obtained by Peter Court from Paul F. Dwyer and wife by deed bearing date the 15th day of September in the year 1873 and recorded in Liber W. H. T., No. 1 folio 286, one of the land records of Garrett county Md.

And I hereby give notice, that on

SATURDAY, May 24th 1879,

at 2 o'clock, p. m., in front of Coddington's Hotel, in the town of Oakland, I will offer for sale the said property, so seized and taken in execution, to the highest bidder, for cash, to satisfy said judgments and costs.

THOS. CODDINGTON, Sheriff.

B. & O. R. R. Time-Table.

The following time table of the

Baltimore and Ohio Railroad went into effect on the 17th of November:

GOING WEST

No. 2..... 5:01 A. M.

No. 6..... 9:51 A. M.

No. 8..... 5:30 A. M.

No. 10..... 12:11 A. M.

Way..... 10:11 A. M.

GOING EAST.

No. 1..... 12:18 A. M.

No. 3..... 10:06 P. M.

No. 5..... 12:21 P. M.

No. 7..... 5:20 P. M.

Way..... 7:36 A. M.

The fast trains, with the exception of those mentioned, make stoppages only at the First Class Stations. Tickets should always be procured before taking the cars, passengers saving thereby from 10 to 25 cents.

WM. M. CLEMENTS,

Master of Transportation,

L. M. COLE,

General Ticket Agent

HEADACHE NEURALGIA PILLS

CELERY "The C. W. Benson, a physician, residing at No. 101 N. Charles St., Baltimore, Md., who has sold much medicine in various diseases, has discovered that CELERY, combined with other ingredients, is a certain remedy for various diseases, such as neuralgia, dyspepsia, nervous prostration, headache, migraines, and various other ailments. This is a most valuable medicine, and is sold in bottles of 25 cents, 50 cents, and $1.00. The bottles are labeled "CELERY PILLS" and "HEADACHE NEURALGIA PILLS".

CELERY, in pills, at 25 cents, per box.

CELERY, The Doctor is largely known and highly respected

in Baltimore, Md.

CELERY, Baltimore, July 27, 1874.

CELERY, Dr. C. W. Benson's

CELERY, and Rheumatic Pills

CELERY, have cured my wife of

CELERY, sick and nervous headache

CELERY, several ten years standing

CELERY, (age) and had it every

CELERY, week or two, and now

CELERY, feel almost everything

CELERY, but death with it. We

CELERY, thank these pills with

CELERY, their weight in gold.

CELERY, Dr. H. S. HARRISON,

CELERY, Pastor South Mission.

CELERY, For sale by all Druggists

CELERY, in this town.

CELERY, Price 25 cents, per box.

CELERY, of each address. Office

CELERY, Dr. N. E. Shaw St., Baltimore, Md.

CELERY, more, Md.

CELERY, more, Md.

CELERY, more, Md.

CELERY, more, Md.

CELERY, more, Md.

CELERY, more, Md.

CELERY, more, Md.

CELERY, more, Md.

CELERY, more, Md.

CELERY, more, Md.

CELERY, more, Md.

CELERY, more, Md.

CELERY, more, Md.

CELERY, more, Md.

CELERY, more, Md.

CELERY, more, Md.

CELERY, more, Md.

CELERY, more, Md.

CELERY, more, Md.

CELERY, more, Md.

CELERY, more, Md.

CELERY, more, Md.

CELERY, more, Md.

CELERY, more, Md.

CELERY, more, Md.

CELERY, more, Md.

CELERY, more, Md.

MISCELLANEOUS.

SUBSCRIBE FOR

"THE REPUBLICAN,"
AND AID IN THE CIRCULATION
—OF—
The Cheapest Newspaper
IN WESTERN MARYLAND.
ONLY
$1.50
PER YEAR
IN ADVANCE.

EVERY VARIETY
OF
JOB WORK
PROMPTLY EXECUTED.

We desire to call the attention of Merchants, Mechanics, and Business Men generally, to our extensive facilities for the prompt, speedy and accurate execution of

FIRST-CLASS

JOB PRINTING.

We keep on hand, for printing purposes, an assortment of the best

Paper, Envelopes, Cards, &c., and have one of best

JOB PRESSES

now in use, and the

ONLY ONE IN OAKLAND.

We have also a complete stock of

New Plain and Fancy Type, &c.,

of the latest styles, for all the different kinds of Job work and can now

fill all orders for

Show Cards, Business Cards, Circulars, Letter-Heads, Bill-Heads, Legal Blanks, Certificates, Envelopes, Tags, Statements, &c.,

and every description of

Plain and Fancy Printing

At the Lowest Rates.

Drop in and take a look at a

—COMPLETE—

Printing Office,

YOU WILL BE

WELCOME AT ALL TIMES.

We are determined to be up to the times in everything connected with the printing business.

Address

"THE REPUBLICAN,"

Oakland, Garrett Co., Md.

DR. J. DAILY,

RESIDENT DENTIST

WESTERNPORT,

MARYLAND.

From one to a full set of teeth inserted in the most beautiful and substantial manner. Particular attention paid to cleaning and filling the natural teeth. All work warranted to give satisfaction, or money refunded.

July 17

COUNTY DIRECTORY.

CIRCUIT COURT.

Jury Terms—Second Monday of September and the First Monday of May.

Non-Jury Terms—First Monday of July and Third Monday of December.

Chief Judge—Hon. R. H. Alvey.

Associates—Hons. Wm. Motter and Geo. A. Pearre.

Clerk—W. H. Tower.

Sheriff—Thomas Coddington.

State's Attorney—Ans. W. Veitch.

Court Auditor—W. P. Townshend.

Standing Commissioners—Gilmore S. Hamill and A. B. Gonder.

Crier—Wm. Smouse.

Messenger—Jas. M. Bell.

Bailiffs—Wm. Waltz and T. Bosby.

Return days of Equity process—Third Monday in January, third Monday in March, third Monday in May, third Monday in July, second Monday in September, second Monday in November.

ORPHANS' COURT.

Meets every second and fourth Tuesday of each month.

Chief Judge—Joseph DeWitt.

Associates—A. J. Michaels and Wm. Harvey.

Register of Wills—W. L. Rawlings.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS.

The regular sessions of the County Commissioners commence on the first Monday in January; the first Monday in April, being the appeal and transfer term; the first Monday in June, being the levy term; the first Monday in July, the term for appointing judges of election, and the first Monday in October.

President, E. C. Tilson; Commissioners, John Riley and Jeremiah Gurd.

Clerk—Wm. H. Hagans, who will be in the office on Tuesdays and Saturdays of each week.

County Surveyor—John Harned.

SCHOOL COMMISSIONERS.

President—Wm. A. Brydon.

Commissioners—G. W. Delawdige

Secretary and Treasurer—Dr. E. H. Bartlett.

JUSTICES OF THE PEACE.

District No. 1—J. H. Wilson and Henry Rasche.

2—Benj. Griffith.

3—John T. Patterson & Sylvanus Butler.

4—A. J. Warnick.

7—R. B. Jamison and A. L. Osborn.

9—Perry Weiner.

REGISTRARS OF VOTERS.

District No. 1 H. O. Hamill.

2 James H. Bush.

3 Isiah Fuller.

4 W. H. Bernard.

5 Daniel Hirschbaugh.

6 Thomas Brumby.

7 R. T. Browning.

8 W. F. Deakins.

9 J. Facebaker.

TOWN OF OAKLAND.

Burgess—D. E. Offutt.

Commissioners—J. M. Davis, Geo. L. Bosley, Geo. W. Legge, G. W. Merrill.

Clerk—A. C. Good.

Bailiff—James W. White.

Postmaster—Ralph Thayer.

LODGES.

A. F. & A. M.—Meet every first and third Thursday night.

I. O. O. F. No. 12—Meet every Monday night.

Alta Loc. No. 574, K. of H.—Meets in McConus Hall 2d and 4th Thursday evenings of each month.

I. O. G. T. No. 111—Meet every Tuesday night.

ROAD NOTICE.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, That the undersigned will make application to the County Commissioners of Garrett county at their next meeting after thirty days from the first publication of this notice, for the appointment of stewards to examine and assess whether the public convenience requires that the road heretofore located, leading from the Ford of Savage river to John Wardick's barn, and known as the Savage and Bear Pen road, should be changed and altered so as to run from its present point of beginning near its present end, running through a tract of land owned by — Morrison, thence by Savage river through the land of George O. Broadwater to the mouth of Bear Pen run, then running through the land of Geo. Joseph R. Anderson to the line of John Wardick, then through said Wardick's lands to its barn, a distance of about four miles.

THOMAS BUCKWORTH,
DANIEL L. SESTER,
JOHN W. GROVES.

531

The Republican.

JAS. A. HARRIS, Publisher.
OAKLAND, GARRETT CO., MD.

A MORNING DREAM.

I, far removed from maddening green,
From transient shade of woodland lawns,
Lie in my attic, all alone,
And dream the while the morning dawns.
About my brain there fit, like birds,
Thoughts of past and future pass;
I hear old forgotten words,
I remember footsteps on the stair.

Old words, old songs, perhaps—Sleep seems to melt them into one—
Come back, and all the long days gone,
Of true love back to days long gone.
I know I'm dreaming; if I wake
I shall descend to narrow days
And petty cares, which grudge me time
The time I spend in other ways.

Me daily labor, hard and stern,
Gives me no little, takes no more;
But still my life with its own dream,
There's nothing left. Vainly I think
To duty down to find my way,
Each day's day, which grudge me time
From life, from which the soul seems rent.

This is my morning dream, this time,
Brief moment of my morning dream,
Before I hear the morning chime,
Sounding far more in than dream.
To then I shall find my way,
Whose tall stalks wave in that still place,
Half green, half gold, and all the while Where last I saw you face to face.

I see you as you stood, I hear
Your voice that mingled with the birds',
And all the sounds of life and love,
Making a melody to your words.
I look around, across the world,
To where the windmill stood and whirled,
Its giant arms, that turned and whirled,
In dizzy motion, quickly whirled.

I see the pigeons wheeling high,
Above our heads, the golden bees,
Trembling with honey-laden wings,
Like winged insect armies.
I see it all, it fades and dies,
Into the gray of waking hours,
As rainbows fade in summer skies,
Whose brilliant colors smother the flowers.

O' woe, what comes to me to-day,
A hundred hearts, no smile you bring
To me, whose heart, though now so sad,
Was once as full as a bird's wing.
O' woe, where never more my feet
Will tread the grass of your garden,
And I shall find your fragrance sweet,
And see the corn flowers wave and blow.

Win, Alfred, win in this world,
Win, Alfred, win in this world.

THE CONVICT'S SISTER.

"I have told you there is a secret in my life I can share with you, and you, for we could never be happy with a cloud of mystery between us."

"In other words you refuse me?"
There was a quick resentment in Alfred Graves' face as he looked at the woman he loved to be his wife with a blow at once to his heart and his vanity. He was not a conceited man, but when he offered his hand to his sister's governess he certainly did expect a refusal. There had been many meetings before he spoke, and in some of them he had thought Hester Stretton's face betrayed her love for him in spite of the cold manner that was habitual to her.

Scarcely a man to measure his own merits by the length of his purse, Alfred Graves could not quite forget that he was the owner of a fine estate in the country, several houses in town and five thousand a year, while Hester Stretton was his sister's governess. She had come to Mrs. Evans from a female seminary, with letters of introduction; had proved herself trustworthy with children; and no one had any desire to try to turn her private affairs during the whole of the first two years.

Mrs. Evans considered her a treasure, and the children were much attached to her and played with her rapidly. Then Alfred came back from abroad, and his sister, offering him the hospitality of her house at Guilford, suddenly made several discoveries. First, she found out that although the family had thought and spoken of her brother as an old bachelor, after all at forty he looked younger than some men under thirty. Next, that Hester Stretton, though she was reserved, was wonderfully fair, and could converse with Alfred long after the topics were quite beyond the elder lady's comprehension.

The old, old story progressed day after day, and she could find no good reason for sending Hester away, and surely Alfred would not be turned from her house. Mrs. Evans was constantly devising schemes for shutting Hester in the school-room, for sending her long errands and employing her time in needlework. But if Alfred would lounge into the school-room and insist on hearing his nephews and nieces recite long poems while he made pencil sketches of Hester's profile; if he would join her just as she started on the long to read in the room where the needlework was in progress, what could a prudent sister do more?

It was some comfort that the "infatuation," as Mrs. Evans mentally termed it, was not one-sided; that the pale face never flushed at his coming, or the soft, dark eyes wooed him to her side. But Mrs. Evans could not believe it possible for Alfred to offer his hand and fortune to any woman and be rejected. So she fretted secretly, while Alfred would patiently, till on the summer morning when he found Hester in the garden, for a wonder, free from the attendance of a juvenile Evans, and made his declaration in explicit terms. And without one flush on her white cheeks—possible, even paler than usual, Miss Stretton had told him there was a secret in her life that kept her outside the ranks of happy married women. Still he pleaded, still she owned it was no crime or fault of her own that separated them; and again he urged his suit only to meet the repetition of her declaration.

"In other words, you refuse me," he said, with angry emphasis. The color flushed then over Hester's face, for there was keen pain as well as resentment in Alfred's tone. For the first time she touched his arm, lifting her soft, dark eyes to his own. Then, steadily, but in low tones: "Because I love you, Alfred. If I had no affection for you I would put my hand in yours and share your wealth, for my life of drudgery is a weary burden to me. I love you, and so I bid you go from me and seek to forget me in a happier smile."

Something in her tone and face awed her lover from any demonstration of pleasure at her frank confession. He prisoned the little white hand she had placed upon his arm and said: "Confound me in me then. Tell me your secret, or, if you will, keep it, and rest assured I will never try to surprise it."

"I cannot. Nothing but death can free me and your life is too useful, too noble, to be spent in waiting for me. Forget me, Alfred."

She was gone before he could say more, and he knew her decision was final. Mrs. Evans' delight at her brother's escape was certainly tempered by indignation that Hester had dared refuse him.

"Whom on earth did she expect to marry," the matron thought.

But Hester, pondering over it all, accepted the pain as one more sorrow in her shadowed life, and made no moan, looked for no sympathy.

It was hard to see the face that had been ever full of sympathy and tenderness turned coldly away; hard to hear the children wonder why Uncle Alfred never came to see them any more; but the routine of duty filled each day and there was a certainty soon of release from the monotony of teaching.

October was midway on her golden-tinted journey across the earth when Mrs. Evans was called upon to find in new governance. In vain she scolded and even wept. Hester gave no reason, but she must go.

It was not to spy upon her movements that Alfred, finding the governess leaving the house, followed her in the train that took her to London. It was only in his deep, unshaken affection, the fear for her future, the anxiety to be sure all was to be well with her in her new life.

She did not dream she was watched as she took a cab, and followed still, drove to a small house on the outskirts of Kentish Town, where an elderly woman met her at the door and led her in, weeping bitterly.

That was all Alfred saw; but the face of the weeping woman was Hester's face, should years of sorrow and tears set their seal upon it.

Restless and curious, in spite of himself, Alfred lounged into a restaurant place near the little house and called for something to eat. Close beside him two officers of police (inspectors they seemed) were discussing some provisions, and Alfred heard one say, "So Stretton's time is up!" He came out of the penitentiary yesterday."

"According to my idea," was the reply, "he ought not to have been there at all. He never did it—never!"

"Yes; got on a spree too often, and was in bad company, but never had any more hand in that bank robbery than your or I."

Got five years for it," said the other, "and he's come out to die. He's over at his mother's there," jerking his thumb in the direction of the little house, "and won't last a week—consumption."

This was the secret, then! A brother in Pentonville model prison, innocent or guilty, a convicted felon! Alfred shuddered as he thought of the fair, stately woman he loved, with her proud nature, daily tortured by the secret of her crime. He had a vague recollection of reading the trial of some bank robbers where the name of Stretton occurred, but it was only a hazy memory at best.

Hester was with her mother in a home, even if a poor one, with crime for its inmate, and he had no right to intrude upon her grief. So he ate the food before him, paid his bill and went out into the street again. It was quite dark, and he gave up any idea of returning to Guilford that night, finding his way to the West End and a hotel.

Three days passed before he heard again of Hester's brother, and then the public journals told the story. Only twenty-six, the papers said; but there had come comfort at the last hour. Two of the gang who had been engaged in the bank robbery had made a sworn statement exonerating him from any guilty part in it. So far as he was under the influence of liquor, was in bad company and was led by them, he was guilty.

But he was innocent because he was purposely kept ignorant of their intentions, and had no knowledge that he was in a bank until the hands of the officers of justice were upon him there.

Five weary prison years, disease, finally died, had paid the price of redemption, and the stain of actual crime was lifted from his memory, and the journals that had chronicled his trial and sentence gave publicity to his innocence and his release.

It was no shame to Alfred's manhood that his eyes were misty as he read the obituary of the wasted life, touched keenly by the closing words, "A widowed mother and sister were with Stretton when he died."

Alfred could easily picture the fair, pale face bending over the sufferer's pillow, and the low, tender voice comforting him, though his hand had brought desolation into her own life.

"He is the chamber of death, where the still face upon the pillow was peaceful in his last sleep, Hester and her mother kept watch together."

They had suffered most in the five years that their lives had been separated. For the widow had been matron in a large hospital, while Hester worked as governess in Mrs. Evans' family. Before her father's death there had been a home, happy and united; but afterwards poverty drove them from the world.

"Mother," Hester said, softly, "I have saved something in these long years, and we will settle ourselves here and try to earn a living together."

"Yes, dear," he took the house furnished, for a month, thinking if Oliver came home willing to work for an honest living, we should get on somehow. I had saved a little, too, Hester, for him, and he would need it."

"Hush! You must not weep now. Remember how happily he died, mother, the stain lifted from his memory, his heart at peace. He was ready to go, mother. My poor brother!"

Before she could speak he entered, closing the door behind him and addressing the widow, who stood inside the little parlor.

"Mrs. Stretton," he said, lifting his hat. "I have just heard of your sorrow, and I have come to ask you to let me aid you in any way where a gentleman's services may be required. I am the brother of Mrs. Evans."

"You are very kind," the widow faltered. "We—as you say—our trouble—"

And here the tears stifled utterance, and she could only turn from him and weep.

Hester lifted her eyes appealingly, to meet Alfred's fixed upon her face.

"There is no longer a secret between us, Hester," he said in a low tone. "Will you not give me the right of a loving son to know your mother?"

"You know all," she said, surprised, "and you are here?"

To the world Hester's secret is a secret still. Society does not connect the tall, stately bride of Alfred Graves with the obscure convict who came from prison only to die; and even Mrs. Evans, the question I asked one summer morning not long ago. Even as I loved you then, I love you now. Hester, will you be my wife?"

And she, loving him tenderly, with the secret of her life revealed, the crime wiped out by death, put her hand in his and let his lips press the seal of betrothal upon her own.

To the world Hester's secret is a secret still. Society does not connect the tall, stately bride of Alfred Graves with the obscure convict who came from prison only to die; and even Mrs. Evans, the question I asked one summer morning not long ago. Even as I loved you then, I love you now. Hester, will you be my wife?"

And she, loving him tenderly, with the secret of her life revealed, the crime wiped out by death, put her hand in his and let his lips press the seal of betrothal upon her own.

To the world Hester's secret is a secret still. Society does not connect the tall, stately bride of Alfred Graves with the obscure convict who came from prison only to die; and even Mrs. Evans, the question I asked one summer morning not long ago. Even as I loved you then, I love you now. Hester, will you be my wife?"

And she, loving him tenderly, with the secret of her life revealed, the crime wiped out by death, put her hand in his and let his lips press the seal of betrothal upon her own.

To the world Hester's secret is a secret still. Society does not connect the tall, stately bride of Alfred Graves with the obscure convict who came from prison only to die; and even Mrs. Evans, the question I asked one summer morning not long ago. Even as I loved you then, I love you now. Hester, will you be my wife?"

And she, loving him tenderly, with the secret of her life revealed, the crime wiped out by death, put her hand in his and let his lips press the seal of betrothal upon her own.

To the world Hester's secret is a secret still. Society does not connect the tall, stately bride of Alfred Graves with the obscure convict who came from prison only to die; and even Mrs. Evans, the question I asked one summer morning not long ago. Even as I loved you then, I love you now. Hester, will you be my wife?"

And she, loving him tenderly, with the secret of her life revealed, the crime wiped out by death, put her hand in his and let his lips press the seal of betrothal upon her own.

To the world Hester's secret is a secret still. Society does not connect the tall, stately bride of Alfred Graves with the obscure convict who came from prison only to die; and even Mrs. Evans, the question I asked one summer morning not long ago. Even as I loved you then, I love you now. Hester, will you be my wife?"

And she, loving him tenderly, with the secret of her life revealed, the crime wiped out by death, put her hand in his and let his lips press the seal of betrothal upon her own.

To the world Hester's secret is a secret still. Society does not connect the tall, stately bride of Alfred Graves with the obscure convict who came from prison only to die; and even Mrs. Evans, the question I asked one summer morning not long ago. Even as I loved you then, I love you now. Hester, will you be my wife?"

And she, loving him tenderly, with the secret of her life revealed, the crime wiped out by death, put her hand in his and let his lips press the seal of betrothal upon her own.

To the world Hester's secret is a secret still. Society does not connect the tall, stately bride of Alfred Graves with the obscure convict who came from prison only to die; and even Mrs. Evans, the question I asked one summer morning not long ago. Even as I loved you then, I love you now. Hester, will you be my wife?"

And she, loving him tenderly, with the secret of her life revealed, the crime wiped out by death, put her hand in his and let his lips press the seal of betrothal upon her own.

To the world Hester's secret is a secret still. Society does not connect the tall, stately bride of Alfred Graves with the obscure convict who came from prison only to die; and even Mrs. Evans, the question I asked one summer morning not long ago. Even as I loved you then, I love you now. Hester, will you be my wife?"

And she, loving him tenderly, with the secret of her life revealed, the crime wiped out by death, put her hand in his and let his lips press the seal of betrothal upon her own.

To the world Hester's secret is a secret still. Society does not connect the tall, stately bride of Alfred Graves with the obscure convict who came from prison only to die; and even Mrs. Evans, the question I asked one summer morning not long ago. Even as I loved you then, I love you now. Hester, will you be my wife?"

And she, loving him tenderly, with the secret of her life revealed, the crime wiped out by death, put her hand in his and let his lips press the seal of betrothal upon her own.

To the world Hester's secret is a secret still. Society does not connect the tall, stately bride of Alfred Graves with the obscure convict who came from prison only to die; and even Mrs. Evans, the question I asked one summer morning not long ago. Even as I loved you then, I love you now. Hester, will you be my wife?"

And she, loving him tenderly, with the secret of her life revealed, the crime wiped out by death, put her hand in his and let his lips press the seal of betrothal upon her own.

miracle that it was not a far larger one, when the wreck is looked upon. The frail cabins of the colored people, and many of the out-houses are not only blown down, but blown away, and their fragments scattered for hundreds of yards. It is an actual fact that sites where some of them stood can only be discovered with difficulty. Some of the larger houses seem to have been beaten down after being on the ground, the debris being flattened out. Others appear as if they had simply fallen to pieces like structures of cards, the sides falling some in and some outside and the roof going clear of them all, and smashing itself against the ground some distance away.

As already stated, the scene was simply indescribable. For half a mile on the right of the town, as you enter, there was a wilderness of prostrate trees, and pieces of planks, rafters, laths, and shingles, fragments of dressed wood of all sizes were scattered thickly upon the ground, the ends all pointing from southwest to northeast, except when in their flight through the air they encountered obstacles and rebounded, falling in all directions. Detached pieces of fencing were everywhere, and among the other remnants lay articles of household furniture.

Here and there amid the confused mass lay a few articles of household furniture, and among the other remnants lay articles of household furniture.

Here and there amid the confused mass lay a few articles of household furniture, and among the other remnants lay articles of household furniture.

Here and there amid the confused mass lay a few articles of household furniture, and among the other remnants lay articles of household furniture.

Here and there amid the confused mass lay a few articles of household furniture, and among the other remnants lay articles of household furniture.

Here and there amid the confused mass lay a few articles of household furniture, and among the other remnants lay articles of household furniture.

Here and there amid the confused mass lay a few articles of household furniture, and among the other remnants lay articles of household furniture.

Here and there amid the confused mass lay a few articles of household furniture, and among the other remnants lay articles of household furniture.

Here and there amid the confused mass lay a few articles of household furniture, and among the other remnants lay articles of household furniture.

Here and there amid the confused mass lay a few articles of household furniture, and among the other remnants lay articles of household furniture.

Here and there amid the confused mass lay a few articles of household furniture, and among the other remnants lay articles of household furniture.

Here and there amid the confused mass lay a few articles of household furniture, and among the other remnants lay articles of household furniture.

Here and there amid the confused mass lay a few articles of household furniture, and among the other remnants lay articles of household furniture.

Here and there amid the confused mass lay a few articles of household furniture, and among the other remnants lay articles of household furniture.

Here and there amid the confused mass lay a few articles of household furniture, and among the other remnants lay articles of household furniture.

Here and there amid the confused mass lay a few articles of household furniture, and among the other remnants lay articles of household furniture.

Here and there amid the confused mass lay a few articles of household furniture, and among the other remnants lay articles of household furniture.

Here and there amid the confused mass lay a few articles of household furniture, and among the other remnants lay articles of household furniture.

Here and there amid the confused mass lay a few articles of household furniture, and among the other remnants lay articles of household furniture.

Here and there amid the confused mass lay a few articles of household furniture, and among the other remnants lay articles of household furniture.

Here and there amid the confused mass lay a few articles of household furniture, and among the other remnants lay articles of household furniture.

Here and there amid the confused mass lay a few articles of household furniture, and among the other remnants lay articles of household furniture.

Here and there amid the confused mass lay a few articles of household furniture, and among the other remnants lay articles of household furniture.

Here and there amid the confused mass lay a few articles of household furniture, and among the other remnants lay articles of household furniture.

Here and there amid the confused mass lay a few articles of household furniture, and among the other remnants lay articles of household furniture.

Here and there amid the confused mass lay a few articles of household furniture, and among the other remnants lay articles of household furniture.

Our Young Folks.

MY LITTLE LOVE.

My little love has eyes of blue,
A wild rose mouth all sweet with dew;
And her heart is as tender a little thing
As the first anemone of the spring.

From the wilding spring to winter gray,
She is looking ever for her own sweet way.
My little love has a trumpet, too,
And her eyes are made out of Heaven's own dew.

How glad I am she's a child of earth,
That I have no doubt of her mortal birth!
I never think, when she croons and sings,
That I must look for her budding wings.

What should I do in earth's rain and snow
With a stray little angel, I'd like to know.
My little love has a trumpet, too,
And her eyes are made out of Heaven's own dew.

With her eyes of love and her anxious brow,
Who is her little care-taker, now?
Who comes tugging her brother's coat,
As he shyly calls her painted boat?

Who feeds the birds from the window-sill?
Who cries over kitty, kitten and bill?
Who leads her "doodles," with mother-hand,
Far out into realms of wonder-land?

Who weeps, with such a tender thrill,
For a "dead live baby" to tend and still—
A baby-brother to hug and "wook"?
Who, when the children rush in pairs,
Comes heavy laden down the stairs,
Who carries after them, when they are done,
All of the other children's load?

Who, but my little love, hear,
With her heart of care and her laugh of cheer,
With her wild rose mouth, and eyes of blue:
The brave little woman, fond and true!

I'm happier, far, for my little love;
For her arms over my head and my nose,
The weary cares of my working-day,
Into a heaven of mirth and play.

And dear, when the twilight is at its best,
To gather her in my arms to rest,
To think, when her baby days are done,
How it will be with the little one.

Into these liquid eyes of blue,
Dear little love, I read the true;
Will they find—these burden-bearing arms—
A pair as quick to shield them from harm?

Ah, my little love! She who fits the load,
Who carries after them, when they are done,
Who will lift and carry it to the end,
Who will lift and carry it to the end.

Dear little love, I read the true;
Will they find—these burden-bearing arms—
A pair as quick to shield them from harm?
Who will lift and carry it to the end.

Dear little love, I read the true;
Will they find—these burden-bearing arms—
A pair as quick to shield them from harm?
Who will lift and carry it to the end.

Dear little love, I read the true;
Will they find—these burden-bearing arms—
A pair as quick to shield them from harm?
Who will lift and carry it to the end.

Dear little love, I read the true;
Will they find—these burden-bearing arms—
A pair as quick to shield them from harm?
Who will lift and carry it to the end.

Dear little love, I read the true;
Will they find—these burden-bearing arms—
A pair as quick to shield them from harm?
Who will lift and carry it to the end.

Dear little love, I read the true;
Will they find—these burden-bearing arms—
A pair as quick to shield them from harm?
Who will lift and carry it to the end.

Dear little love, I read the true;
Will they find—these burden-bearing arms—
A pair as quick to shield them from harm?
Who will lift and carry it to the end.

Dear little love, I read the true;
Will they find—these burden-bearing arms—
A pair as quick to shield them from harm?
Who will lift and carry it to the end.

Dear little love, I read the true;
Will they find—these burden-bearing arms—
A pair as quick to shield them from harm?
Who will lift and carry it to the end.

Dear little love, I read the true;
Will they find—these burden-bearing arms—
A pair as quick to shield them from harm?
Who will lift and carry it to the end.

Dear little love, I read the true;
Will they find—these burden-bearing arms—
A pair as quick to shield them from harm?
Who will lift and carry it to the end.

Dear little love, I read the true;
Will they find—these burden-bearing arms—
A pair as quick to shield them from harm?
Who will lift and carry it to the end.

Dear little love, I read the true;
Will they find—these burden-bearing arms—
A pair as quick to shield them from harm?
Who will lift and carry it to the end.

Dear little love, I read the true;
Will they find—these burden-bearing arms—
A pair as quick to shield them from harm?
Who will lift and carry it to the end.

Dear little love, I read the true;
Will they find—these burden-bearing arms—
A pair as quick to shield them from harm?
Who will lift and carry it to the end.

Dear little love, I read the true;
Will they find—these burden-bearing arms—
A pair as quick to shield them from harm?
Who will lift and carry it to the end.

two-thirds of a cup of hot water. Well, now! If those hateful fractions are right here in this gingerbread! Christine, O, Christine!" cried Katy in despair. "Come, and tell me how much is two times two-thirds of a cup?" But Christine, alas! had already gone upstairs, with her basket of white, freshly ironed clothes piled on her head.

"Two times two-thirds of a cup, and yet it says 'of a cup.' If it wasn't for that, I'd go and get two cups and fill them each two-thirds full; but it can't be only two times two-thirds of a cup—that's one cup." And the poor little girl found herself in worse "deeps," even, than ever she had fathomed in the "Rudiments."

Ned came into the kitchen at that moment, his books flung over his shoulder, and Katy's face lighted up. She could appeal to him. But when she asked him how much two times two-thirds of a cup could be, Ned, with all a boy's wisdom, gave answer like this: "Two times two-thirds—that's multiplying a fraction by a whole number. Rule? Multiply the numerator of the fraction by the whole number and place the result over the denominator."

"Two times two-thirds are four-thirds. Improper fraction. Reduce to a whole or mixed number. Rule: Divide the numerator by the denominator. Three is in four once and one-third over. One cup and one third of a cup."

"But it says 'of a cup,' Ned. Who'd ever think that 'of a cup' meant part of two cups?" argued Katy, in a despairing tone.

"Well, I didn't write the receipt-book, Kit, and besides, that's grammar not arithmetic, and I'm not up in grammar." And Ned, wisely refraining from venturing beyond his attainments, went upstairs to put away his books.

"Who'd ever a' thought of such a thing," whispered Katy to herself, "that Rudiments would come handy in making ginger-cakes?"

The family ate them up for supper that night, despite Doctor Dio Lewis and all the laws of health, and pronounced them very fine cakes indeed. What they lacked in ginger (you see Katy, in her perplexity over the hot water, forgot to double the ginger) was made up in praise, and, as mamma's headache was gone, they all were happy.

Katy was early at school the next morning, and, shying up to the teacher's desk, she said: "Miss Johnson, you looked as if you thought I was either crazy or stupid the other day, when I said I didn't believe Rudiments were 'in anything in the world.' You see, I meant, for ginger was de o melle. But I've come to tell you that I've changed my mind. Last night I had to make gingerbread for tea, and the first thing I knew, I got right into fractions—two-thirds of things—and all the rules."—Mary B. Willard, in St. Nicholas for May.

Out of the Jaws of Death.

The Boston Globe says: Among the cars lighted up one used by the Eastern Express Company, and owned by the Eastern Railroad. The night train from Bangor last Wednesday night contained this car, and in it, just before the car reached Portland, were the conductor, messenger and baggage-master. Suddenly one of the gentlemen felt a jolt, as if the car was dropping from under him, and sprang to his feet and caught hold of some thing in the hope to save himself in the expected crash. The conductor, seeing the movement, seized the bell-rope, but as he felt nothing strange did not ring, and the train passed on to Portland. The car was formerly the universal custom, and the train proceeded toward Boston. It had hardly left the depot before the night watchman found on the track between the rails a blood-laden spring, and thinking it could come from no other place but from under this train, he hurried to the telegraph office and sent a dispatch to Greenland, the nearest station, five miles away, to stop the train and examine it. The green light was accordingly displayed and the train brought to a standstill, when it was found that the spring had come from under one corner of the express car. It was the falling of this spring upon the track which caused the jar, already spoken of, and which awakened the gentleman from his doze beyond Portland. If it had fallen upon a rail a wreck would have been inevitable. Had the car been loaded heavily upon the bridge at Kittery the signal tower there would have been struck and disaster would have resulted. Had the spring dropped elsewhere than within the range of the watchman's vision the train would have sped on until it had reached some curve at speed, when the cars would probably have been torn from the road-bed into ruin. Thus the benefit of running a road by telegraph is exemplified, and the saved life and limb, and also the averting of a heavy financial loss upon the road. But Providence ruled that there should be prompt discovery of the danger, and not only the passengers, but the whole community should have feelings of profound thanksgiving.

The Keys of the Bastille.

John C. Hamilton, a St. Louis locksmith, has in his possession the keys of the old French Bastille. When the mob of blowers tore De Launay, the Governor, to pieces, one of the revolutionists, Leclerc, by name, secured the keys. They were kept in the Leclerc family until 1852, when Antoine Leclerc emigrated to this country. Hamilton secured them from Leclerc, the latter being in need of money. There are five keys in the bunch. The largest one looks as though it were used by Hugh d'Amboise himself, when, in 1789, he looked in the first prisoner of the most famous prison. It is rusty, though the marks of the armor plainly can be seen. The smallest, eight inches long, is made of fine steel. Its wards are so small that a piece of paper passes through them with difficulty, while a trefoil-shaped hole runs over five

THE REPUBLICAN.

OAKLAND, MARYLAND.

JAS. A. HAYDEN,
Editor and Proprietor.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.
One copy, one year, $1 50
Six months, 75
TWO DOLLARS IN ADVANCE.

TERMS OF ADVERTISING.
First insertion, 25 cents per square of 10 lines;
50 cents per square for each additional insertion.
Special contracts for advertising longer
than three months.

Correspondents must enclose full name and
address, not necessarily for publication, but
as a private guarantee of good faith. Rejected
communications will not be returned.

SATURDAY, MAY 17, 1879.

The louder the Democracy groans,
the broader the country grins.

The Democrats of the Senate hang on to the extravagant appropriations for their officers, which the House has been endeavoring to cut down.
They want over $187,000 for them
this year, which is about $25,000 more than the Republicans ever asked.

Canada is suffering severely from the hard times, and emigration into the United States is going on at an unprecedented rate. Most of the emigrants are farming people bound for Illinois or other Western States.
They are just the class of population that the Dominion cannot afford to lose.

Waterson, of the Louisville Courier-Journal, in a double-leaved editorial two-column article, advises the Democrats in Congress that it would be "not only revolutionary, but ruinous"
to interrupt the operation of the various public departments by withholding taxes levied upon and collected of the people for their support.

As was anticipated, Talmage has been acquitted by the Brooklyn Presbytery. The trial was ill-advised, whatever the true state of the case
may have been as to the peccadilloes
with which Talmage was charged,
the result of his arraignment has been the exposure to the public of all the foibles of accusers and accused which passion could develop or which the ingenuity of enemies could discover,
with no benefits that are evident,
unless Talmage considers the increased notoriety which he has gained valuable as an advertisement.

The style of Democratic anti-Tilden literature current in the South is shown in this extract from a Jackson (Miss.) exchange: "If you want to die an easy death get Sam Tilden to kiss you. He stooped down and kissed the old Confederate hero, and the veteran's spirit was torn within the dark mountains. When he presses his lips—the lips that no maiden has ever sanctified—upon the Democratic party in 1880, we shall confidently expect that it, too, will seek the solitude of shadows."

Alexander Stephens observes that the veto power is one of the pillars of the constitutional temple, and he is eminently right. Mr. Stephens's party is just now howling with rage
because the President has declined to be bullied into allowing it to pull down that pillar, under threat of starving the Government if he didn't.
The importance of the Government is demonstrated by the powerful influence which the President's act has exercised. He has thrown the Democratic party into a panic, from which it will quiet down to a brief season
of decent behavior, and he has thoroughly consolidated the Republican party.

After a little unimportant business
the Senate Monday resumed the consideration of the Legislative bill.
Mr. Windom made an aggressive speech, showing that Mr. Hill, of Georgia, was not a Union man before or shortly after the war. He said the North was indignant and alarmed because eleven Southern states, with a population more than half of which was composed of Republican negroes, sent seventy-three Democratic representatives to Congress, who controlled the caucuses of both houses, and hence all legislation. "Thus 5,000,000 control 45,000,000." He showed that the South imported only four per cent. of the foreign goods, and also statistics of internal commerce showing that these states have only 2,800
freight cars, and the other states over 30,000 cars, from which he argued that these states conduct but 8 per cent. of internal commerce. He claimed that these figures go far to corroborate the facts stated by Mr.
Conkling, that they pay but about 6 per cent. of the taxes for the support of the government. Hence five and a half millions of people who pay only about 6 per cent. of taxes, who import only 4 per cent. of foreign goods, and who conduct only 8 per cent. of internal commerce, control the legislation for the thirty-eight millions who pay 94 per cent.
of taxes, import 96 per cent. of foreign goods, and conduct 92 per cent. of internal commerce.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

Special Correspondence to The Republican.

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 13, 1879.

Senator Windom made one of the best speeches of the session yesterday on the political legislation in the general appropriation bill, which is now plaguing the poor disheartened Democrats since the Presidential votes are so stalwart. Mr. Windom told the two questions of most interest to the country involved in this discussion were first, who are responsible for the extra session; and,
second, what are the objects and
purposes of the party that forced it.
To the first he answered that this session was not rendered necessary by any public emergency. There was nothing in the condition of the country that required it. We had peace with all the world, resumption had become an assured success, and under restored confidence, business began to show signs of success. Our trade was rapidly increasing, our manufactures and agricultural pursuits were improving, and all were inspired with hope and confidence.
The object of the Democrats in forcing the extra session was indefensible.
It was to secure party ends by in-constitutional means. First, by the subversion of the Constitutional right of the Senate; and, second, to subvert the constitutional equality and independence of the Executive branch of the Government. Senator Windom denounced in severe terms
the trick of the Democrats to rob the federal authority of all power for the purpose of elevating the dogma of state rights. He said that towards the close of the last session one of the prominent conferees of the House said: "If we pass these bills the Government would have money till July 1880, and would then manage to get along until the elections in November; but if we let the bill fail,
the Government would have money
only until June 30, 1879. The Government might get along for four months but could not for sixteen months."

Mr. Windom said the Democrats were afraid four months would not be long enough to bring the President to terms, and therefore they agreed on sixteen months of strife for that purpose.
This created some excitement on the Democratic side, and several demanded to know who was the member who had made the declaration. Mr.
Windom said the gentleman was the Chairman of the House Committee on Appropriations, Mr. Atkins. This was not comforting to the Democrats; in fact, it was discouraging to find that one of their number had thus exposed their conspiracy. In concluding Mr. Windom declared that "the same spirit that brought on the rebellion was here manifested to destroy the nationality of the Government and substitute State sovereignty, but the Democrats could not decline the people, who would,
as in the past, overwhelm them in their impatience designs." The unanimous verdict is that Senator Windom's speech was one of the ablest ever heard in the Senate Chamber, and it ought to be read in every household in the country. It exposed the Democratic position to ridicule and placed the Republican party in the front as the defender of Constitutional liberty.

Senator Windom's speech and the President's second veto message,
both forcible and admirable, were a litter application to the Democrats in one day, and it was not wonderful that they voted solidly against a Republican move in the House to pass
the appropriation bills without the political riders. They are to go through the caucus form once more in the endeavor to invent some means of escape from the disagreeable dilemma in which they are placed. The Greenbackers have abandoned them, however, and some of their own number are against the starving out policy. So the result will probably be that they must pass
the appropriations and adjourn without having accomplished anything in their extra session. The Republicans are in high glee over this condition
of affairs no less than over the news
from all parts of the North that there is a grand reaction under way against the new Confederate rebellion, and the prospect is that at the fall elections our victories will be overwhelming.

LOGAN.

The Democratic Bourbons in Congress have been very much subversed by the attitude of the country. They have no backing in the North whatever among respectable Democrats or ever among respectable Republicans.
Their principal organ, the New York Herald, advises "Under no temptation, under no provocation let Congress now adjourn without making all the appropriations necessary to carry on the Government." A prominent man from Central New York in Washington the other day said: "Why, sir, if they undertake to carry out the Beck programme they are gone as a party in New York State, look, fine and sinker. If they hold on a month
there won't be enough of them left for seed."

AMONG THE PINES.

May 6th, 1879.

ED. REPUBLICAN:—Your last issue has just arrived after some little delay, attributable to our poor mail accommodations. Of course my first glance was at the fifth page, and my first discovery J. M.'s communication, and as he declares himself to be unable to settle some knotty points

to the perfect satisfaction of a "stupid man" until his waiting for "a voice
from the pines" has been rewarded,
I again take up my pen, hoping to get my communication in time for your next issue, but of course this must depend upon an opportunity to send it to post. I am sure I am very grateful to J. M. for writing and thus giving me an opportunity to say something, for my long silence has only been attributable to the fact that I could find nothing to write about.

Of course I want to answer J. M., but I hardly know where to begin.
Why does he bring up that most blood stained and despicable of all historical characters—Judge Jeffreys?
Because he had gray hairs and was not respected? If so, I must again take up the cudgel in defence of the "silvering touch of time," though I do not pretend to say it has never been dishonored. Although we must all turn from Judge Jeffreys' dishonored and blood-stained record with a shudder, recognizing it as the darkest that history affords, yet I cannot think that gray hair is any more permanently disgraced and degraded
because he wore it, than is the English church because Catherine Sedley stood by his side as one of its pillars
during the despotic reign of James II, nor the name of woman because she bore it, nor then the terms king and crown because their fostering and supporting monarch bore, were
and dishonored both, dragging them
in the slum of obloquy and hate
before the eyes of his oppressed and indignant subjects. There is nothing so highly sacred in this world as to be entirely out of the reach of the desecrating influence and contaminating touch of religious bigotry, avarice and unholy and unscrupulous ambition; but should we consider that to which all the best impulses of our nature dictate respect and reverence, any the less worthy of it because desecrated and degraded by those who were slaves to the worst passions that rule mankind? No, I think not; and gray hair is no less gray hair, and holds no less a claim to the respect and reverence of youth because Judge Jeffreys wore it, than is the Church of England less a church because he
with his degraded associate, has once been termed its altar, nor God less a God because martyrs have been burned in his name. It is a lamentable fact that one of the marked characteristics of our young American fast young men is a swaggering disrespect for old age; but I think with J. M. its most flagrant phase is always an indication of a lack of civilization which it is quite possible to find and recognize even in this highly enlightened country. That "one kind of respect," which some say
"may be love," has nuzzled many people beside J. M., I think. This mystery of attraction without reason or without understanding is one to which I see no solution, though the illustration which he gives, is not so remarkable to me as the union which is quite as common; that of a hopeless and almost repulsive deformity to a perfect physique and brain. It is easy to fall back upon "respect"
for the recompense of reward, where it is possible, but in many cases such a solution is out of the question, inasmuch as there is no reward to be hoped for.

That such unions do occur and frequently result in the utmost earthly happiness, I know, and yet it is a mystery to me. I find it much more easy to understand, (putting out of the question all considerations of recompense or reward,) a woman
meeting a man who had passed thro'
the battle of life, grappling and conquering its temptations, gathering up a store of the best lessons that time and experience can teach, who had come out of the ordeal with a brain thus stored and a heart that has caught no flavor of cynicism from the trials and disappointments he has been called upon to endure, might find more peace and happiness in trusting to the keeping of a man
thus tried, her one heart's treasure, than in laying it down at the feet of one who had yet to be proved.

Still I claim to be no apostle in my attempt to cast light upon the question which it seems is puzzling older heads than my own. I guess
we shall have to be content to let the matter remain a mystery and conclude with Whittier, that
"Love has taught to do With meanness or immorality."

Just now a copy of the Herald
catches my eye, which some friend has been so kind as to hand me, after carefully marking for my notice an essay on "Woman," "read," the editor states, "at the Garrett Literary Society several weeks ago, and handed to us by the author (?) for publication." The italics are my own. I have read the article very carefully, and still live. I do not know who the author may have been, but am convinced that, whatever his name,

it must be a youth who has just reached the unfortunate age at which boys of not very strong minds are apt to be endowed with the idea that to show deference and respect to woman is childish. Of course this fallacy only severely affects those whom, owing to the fact that their ambition outstrips their intellect, are unable to become men and gentlemen as soon as they desire, and so endeavor to find some balm for their wounded self-love by simulating the brag and swagger of the street corner rough. I have heard many of the sentiments so sentimentally set down in this essay, thrown from the lips of boys of this unfortunate age
and always feel tempted to ask, what can that boy's mother have been;
but have learned from observation that the mothers of these youths are often the best and wisest of women,
and not unfrequently made the objects of the utmost devotion, respect and affection by their sons who, inconsistent as it may seem, clothing
them in the one enduring word—
mother—set them aside from all other human beings, and entirely forget that in their blustering and disrespectful attack upon woman,
they are desecrating the only shrine
at which they have as yet learned to worship.

When such is the case the youth is apt to over-live and out-grow the fallacies of this unfortunate age, and learning in time to emulate the higher and truer type of manhood,
with whom, as with nations, the most defining and noticeable evidence of education and civilization is respect and reverence for woman, become a man, giving satisfactory evidence of a mother's never-fading love and care.

There may be some such fate as this in store for the youth who has unquestionably given evidence of some little original wit and talent
by collecting and linking together, even so palpably as he has done, the worn out jokes that have been going the rounds of the papers for years past,
at the expense of the weaker sex.
Truly his grammar is questionable and his jokes such as would be more apt to be accepted as legal tender on the street corner than in a literary society; but as the man who gathers
his fund of knowledge and wit
among such associates is the only type of manhood whom the youth of present flimsy himself capable of emulating, this is not remarkable.

Give him time and good home influence and I should not wonder at his amounting to something yet. As I said, I do not know who wrote the article and have simply taken it for granted that it is the production of a youth or uncertain age because it seems the only thing probable I do not, of course, suppose that any full grown man would indulge upon a refined and cultivated audience of ladies and gentlemen an article that has not in its whole length a single thought that could not be gathered from the wit and humor columns of our most common publications. As for its being the production of a lady it is too noticeably vulgar for that to be possible; therefore I think my surmise must be correct. I fear I have been ungrateful to say so much before thanking the writer, whoever he may be, for so signally commenting and elevating my ranted an-cestress above all of her degenerate descendants; and after a re-perusal of this portion of his essay, feel myself justified in signing myself no longer a meek, or humble, but

A VERY PROUD
DAUGHTER OF EVE.

The Veto Message.

As was anticipated, President
Hayes yesterday returned the Democratic caucus bill to "prohibit military interference at elections" to the House of Representatives, with his objections to its approval. In giving these objections the President shows how since the beginning of our government Congress, with the hearty support of the people, has considered it not only within its power, but its duty, to enact laws to secure the preservation of peace at all times within its domain and the fair and honest election of members of its branch. This has, of course, been accompanied with regulations and restrictions which should prevent an undue influence on the part of the government in the elections of states,
as well as all danger that any other privileges of states should be jeopardized by the military arm of the government. This protection of state rights reached a point beyond which the government, with due regard for its own safety, cannot go in the net of June 18, 1878, prohibiting the use of the army as a posse comi-tatus. Every legitimate demand of the people for protection against the possible misuse of the United States

army was answered by the passage
of that measure, and since that time, although elections have been held in every state in the Union, there has not been a single instance of complaint of the presence of troops at the polls. The Democratic caucus bill itself follows that there are cases when the interference of troops at elections is justifiable, thus clearly recognizing the ground principle, which they have sought to avoid, of federal supervision. Aside from this fact, it is not denied that there is not any general demand, as there is no occasion for it, of further restrictions of the federal government in the supervision of elections, and that the present war upon the powers of the executive is but a political move preparatory to the elections of 1880.

For these reasons the President
very properly finds the present measure wholly unnecessary and a dangerous precedent, at variance with the constitutional principles which have satisfactorily stood the test of nearly a century, and seriously hampering the Executive in the employment of force in case of necessity, in the execution of that Constitution and the laws of the United States. All that the government has claimed, and all that President Hayes claims in his veto message, is that the federal government has the same right of self-protection in all its functions as any of the individual states have. By the action of the caucus bill many important statutes,
or provisions of them, would be liable to be superseded or annulled besides those which refer to the presence of troops to preserve peace at the polls.
The fact that it would make it lawful for federal troops to be present at an election to uphold the authority of the state in which the election is held,
but not to uphold federal authority,
is alone sufficient to warrant a veto.
No president desires to secure a reputation of too freely using the veto power vested in him by the Constitution, but President Hayes in thus,
for a second time, adopting the schemes of the radical State's Rights Democrats has shown that he has the backbone which certain sections of his party have sometimes claimed was wanting, and earned, as he deserved, the gratitude of the vast majority of the people.

What the Democrats will do about it is not yet fully developed, but the course of the House yesterday certainly points very strongly to the probability that they were not sincere in their contrite utterances of a week ago that they would make every legitimate effort to pass their measures during the present session, but even if they failed the appropriation bills should be passed without trouble. The passage of a resolution to adjourn sine die, and the defeat
by a strict party vote of the Army
bill with the political sections striken out, look very much as if the Democratic stalwarts intended to adjourn without providing for the army
after the expiration of the present fiscal year. Evidently the idea of starving the government is not wholly absent yet from the brains of the congressional majority.—Baltimore American, 13th.

TELEGRAPHIC.

HELP FOR MIGRATORY NEGROES.

ST. LOUIS, May 11.—Gen. Conway of New Jersey, who has long been identified with the work of improving the condition of the colored people of the South, has been here several days in behalf of charitable and philanthropic people of Philadelphia, to ascertain the condition and needs of the refugees from the South and report to the people of the East how they may be wisely helped. In an interview, which will be published in the Globe Democrat tomorrow, he says the exodus is only in its inception, and if it were not for terrorism exercised over the negroes by planters and merchants along the Mississippi river to keep them from leaving, there would be 20,000 refugees here now. He thinks,
however, this terror will wear out
after a short time, and the colored people will then begin to leave again.
He also says many more would have left but for the fact that steamboat
men have refused their transportation, under threats of merchants, planters and others that they would withdraw their patronage, if they continued to take emigrants away.
He thinks the negroes in the South
ought to come out, but advises them not to leave until provision can be made for them in the North and West. He says he has already received offers of employment on farms
in Illinois, Indiana, Ohio and Western Pennsylvania for thousands;
and in Indiana alone he says homes
and good wages can be found for 5,000 in twenty days.

VEToes AND PLANS.

WASHINGTON, May 11.—The President will undoubtedly veto
what is known as the Military Interference bill, but what should be more properly called a bill to bind the arm of the Executive. The President, of course, does not care to be directly interviewed on the subject of his probable action with respect to the measure, but since the bill passed the House he has conversed with such freedom with various senators and representatives who have called upon him, that his views now are well known within the circle at least of those who have his confidence. To one gentleman, who called upon him to-day, the President said,

in substance, that he did not think "the time had come when it was necessary to repeat the laws for the protection of the citizens and the preservation of the life of the republic signed by Washington and passed by the fathers." To another gentleman the President said, within a day or two, in substance this: "If they had sent to me the political sections of the Army Appropriation bill, which it was said they would do, I might have signed it. That presented the square issue of the use of troops at the polls; but they will not send such a bill. The bill reported from the Democratic caucus is a very different one. It is a much broader proposition. That measure ties the hand of the Executive. It paralyzes the arm of Executive power. It would prevent the execution of the laws." This gentleman stated that he had no doubt that the President would veto the bill.

Secretary Evans said to-day, in conversation with a Republican senator, he was convinced that it would not do for the President to sign the bill. Mr. Evans was a close listener to the arguments of Senator Elkins, which doubtless created a great impression upon his mind. Mr.
Evans was earnest, perhaps regretful,
in his statement that it would
not do for the President to sign the bill. A gentleman with whom the President conversed to-day, in high esteem by many Southern men, said,
speaking of the President's position
and of the South: "The Southern people do not know the President.
They do not understand him. They have thought that he was all peace
and reconciliation, and would surrender on every point. They are mistaken in him. They do not know that on all issues growing out of the war he is as radical and stalwart as any Republican in Congress, and that he will surrender nothing of the results of that contest, so far as it is possible for him to prevent it. I tell you the Southern men do not understand the President, and to-day his back is full of porcupine quills. He will not be coerced."

The Democrats are much concerned
at the political situation. The sentiments of the managing men among them were pretty well expressed at a breakfast party here this morning,
which was attended by a number of Republican and Democratic leaders.
The Democrats expressed the opinion that Congress would hasten and finish the business before it certainly before the 1st of June. They believed that the extra session had done the party no good, and that it was a bad piece of business. The Democrats are making nothing by it,
if the Military Interference bill is vetoed they will immediately pass
the Army bill without the political amendments, and the political amendments may possibly be stricken out from the Legislative bill, and the contest be abandoned, and an appeal be taken, as was suggested in the Democratic caucus, to the people. One of the propositions then was that no attempt should be made to withhold the supplies; that an appeal should be taken to the people in the elections to be held this fall in Ohio and New York, and if the elections in these states favored the Republicans the Democrats would consider that the views of the people were against them.

To what extent the Democrats are becoming convinced that they are losing ground in the North may be learned from an interesting colloquy
between a Northern Democratic Congressman, who has just returned from a protracted absence, and a Southern Congressman. The Northern Congressman was disposed to be conservative in his views. Upon being asked by his southern colleague what the prospects of the Democratic party were in the North, the Northern Congressman replied:

"Take the State of Massachusetts.
The Republicans will carry that state
by an increased and overwhelming majority this year. By fifty thousand, yes, by a hundred thousand, and nothing can stop them."

"I suppose," said the Southern Democrat, "that the possibilities of federal legislation have disturbed
the people there?"

"Finance legislation; no sir,"
thundered the Northern man. "It is your damned Southern performance here in Congress."

It is perhaps on account of mutter-ings all around the sky like this that Atkins, chairman of the Appropriations Committee, said to-night that if the President should veto the Military Interference bill Congress should be adjourned in two weeks.

VARIETIES.

—Thunder is sheet lightning music.
—Who ever saw a tooth-pick on the banjo?
—Plain sewing—Planting on the prairies.
—Out on a fowl—Feathers.—N. Y. Mail.
—Per-ten-niel comes the egg.—Boston Transcript.
—Are shopping ladies liable to be called price-lighters?
—The early burr catcheth the small boy's hair.—Boston Transcript.
—This is the walking year; the next will be leap year.—N. Y. Telegram.
—The man with a nightmare must dream that he is in a sleepy hollow.
—A good many cashiers are weighed in a balance sheet and found wanting.
—The chandelier is adopted to the chromatic scale.—New Orleans Picayune.

—Instead of calling your silver-haired friend an old dog, why not call him a gray-hound?
—When you offer a tramp bread and he makes a rye face, you can conclude he prefers whisky.—Grip.
—Even if all flesh is grass, you cannot get a burned hoof to smell like new mown hay.—Philadelphia Chronicle.

—An old sea captain says that when he's aboard ship he is never governed by his mate, but when he is at home he always is.
—The New York Mail weekly remarks that every man has two roads to happiness open to him. One is matrimony and the other isn't.
—A young lady's prayer-book is so heavy now that it takes a young man to carry it home from church.—New Orleans Picayune.

—A church sexton in Cincinnati fell heir to seven million dollars just long enough to marry a "sister" who had a house of her own.
—The mumps is (are) raging in Congress this spring. As though anything were needed to increase a Congressman's cheek.—Buck-Eye.

—Somebody once called disappointment "medicine for the soul." It's a good deal like castor oil—it may be wholesome; it certainly is disagreeable.

—The season for garden making is at hand, and the druggist always smiles when a foolish woman inquires for a strengthening plaster for her back.—Philadelphia Chronicle.

—One of the most beautiful bits of Biblical poetry is this from Nahum 1, 3: "The Lord hath his way in the whirlwind and in the storm, and the clouds are the dust of his feet."

—Jefferson said: "We seldom repent of having eaten too little." He never went out to fish all day without taking breakfast before starting.—New Orleans Picayune.

—While little five-year-old Flora was earnestly watching the stars, she suddenly exclaimed: "Maama, we could not find our way to heaven if the stars didn't twinkle so."—Middleton Press.

—The New York Commercial Advertiser has heard from the war. It says: "A terrific engagement took place on the 5th ult., between the Chilians and Bolivians. One Brigadier-General lost his hat."

—Among the names of the many base ballers who have secured fame by their achievements, we never have yet seen the name of the Prodigal Son, the first man to make a home run.—Waterloo Observer.

—Four schooners lost in the gale," said the telegraph editor, as he came in from his midnight lunch. "Anybody drowned?" said the proof-reader, somewhat interestedly. "Well no," was the calm reply: "it would take more than four schooners to drown Bill Gale."

—That was a clever Oakland boy who, when he was given two dollars to dig up his aunt's garden, hid a two-bit piece in it, and then told all the boys in the neighborhood. The next morning the ground was pulverized two feet deep.—San Francisco Post.

—A schoolmaster, while taking down the names and ages of her pupils and the names of their parents at the beginning of the term, asked one little fellow: "What's your father's name?" "O, you needn't take down his name; he's too old to go to school to a woman," was the reply.

—Smith, who had always been a "tough one," has just died. The physician, who came from the house by Brown, who asks: "Doctor, how is Smith?" Is he out of danger?" Physician: "No; he is dead, poor fellow, but he is far from being out of danger I fear."—Boston Transcript.

—On April 1st, a sugar in the counter took some salt and other stuff and put a sign on it. "Best sugar, twenty pounds for one dollar." Every man and woman that came in took a handful of it to taste, and then winked and said nothing. It is in the country that they have all the fun.—Milwaukee Sun.

—The Newark Advertiser really alarms us by heading an article, "The Western Appetite for Small Boys." We knew that the West was largely addicted to pork and profruity, but never, did we suppose that it had begun to devour the festive small boy. This is truly terrible.—New York Commercial.

—A little fellow in Holyoke, six years old, astonished his mother one day by abruptly exclaiming: "Mother, I wish I was an angel!" Wondering what holy thought was filling his youthful mind, the mother patiently waited for the reason, which came soon. "Then I could see all the circles at one time!"

—The weary winter months have gone. For everything seems gay. And February needs must March, So that we April May.

And don't you know that soon will come The jolly, festive May, And sweet and low the bees will hum, While somewhat forth they dart.

Then soon will bloom the August gins, Whose roar you'll long remember, While, scolding hot, the sun will burn, All wooden things, 'cept embers.

—"Suffereer" writes us from Onawaka, "Is it wrong to kill a man who plays in a brass band, and lives next door to you?" Well, that depends, a great deal. If he plays the E flat, and has been playing seven or eight years, it would be very wrong. But if he plays the tuba, and has only been practicing about three weeks—kill him; kill him at once; go into his house and shoot him; we send you the loan of a gun by this mail.—Buck-Eye.

Animal Achievements.

A weasel stole into a farm-yard at Tockingham, near Bristol, a day or two since, and, seizing one of the brood of ducklings, proceeded to carry it off and demolish it at his leisure in the stable straw. Unluckily for him, however, his movements were watched by a cat from the farm house, and his meal was scarcely begun before pussy disturbed him. A fight ensued and in a very short time the weasel had departed this life, and I hear that pussy repeated her exploit once since. Is it not very unusual for a cat to tackle a weasel?

It is not often we have any thing remarkable to report respecting our domestic felina quadrupes, but on the present occasion I may mention a trait of character manifested by an ancient tabby that is quite out of the common. I have heard that old maids and cats like birds of a feather that associate together, neither of whom possess any affection but there is, in the little village of Thirstone, South Devon, a cat that is remarkable for its affectionate nature and attachment to friends. Dogs, hitherto, have monopolized the good name that arises from strong affection, but the cat I refer to is able and ready to defend its mistress, and has done so on several occasions. A few days ago, while a lady friend was romping with the mistress in the garden, Tabby certainly thought she was making more free than welcome, and at once interrupted her authority by attacking the strange lady in a most determined manner. I found the cat had served many other visitors in a similar way.

On going round the garden, this morning, I perceived what seemed a small piece of cheese apparently floating in the air. I visited the web two or three hours after the spider had finished it, and found that his ingenuity had been rewarded, as the web contained, besides a large fly, off which he was dining, more small stuff than I have ever before seen in a web. Neither myself, nor those of my friends to whom I showed the web, have ever seen anything of the kind before. Perhaps your readers will be interested in such an example of high instinct in a spider, and those who are more versed in natural history than myself may be able to remember other examples of the same kind. That the stability of the web depended upon the weight of the stone is a fact which I put to my hand under the latter. The result was that as I raised my hand the lower part of the web gradually collapsed, but when the stone was suffered again to fall gently the web resumed its former shape. The web was about five feet from the ground.

Spider engineering is a most interesting subject, and one that I have spent hours in studying. I have worked out most of the problems of the spider, and both built and repaired a spider web, but the weight of the web has not yet been able to explain. Some spiders will use ties; but others, of exactly the same species, will use a weight, although the circumstances under which both built apparently are similar. But how does the spider raise the weight? This I could never explain to my satisfaction, as some of the weights are so large that it is scarcely possible they could lift them. I have seen a spider, they will put on one, two or more weights in a few hours before wind, to fix their structures. The industry and ingenuity of the spider passes belief to all those who have seen them at work, but most profitable day can be spent by a young engineer than a day after a storm in a path through the gorse watching a spider reconstructing its web. This is the legitimate way of seeing the work done, and the other does not seem such as breaking down the webs, and watching the poor devils reconstruct them.

I received the enclosed from Mr. John Oldham, of Maresfield. It seems worthy of recording as an example of perseverance under difficulties: "I have been this summer on a visit to a dear friend (the Rev. J. D. Bell), at Totteridge Park, Herts. He has a large school of over one hundred boys, consequently a very large establishment, and the daily receipts of letters very large; he had to send about a mile for his letters, so he obtained permission to have a letter-box fixed in his park-paling, at the nearest point to the house (about 150 yards), as the postman passed this point, and it is on the side of a large shrubbery of many years' growth. The slip outside the rails was about six feet high, and, of course, the box for the letters was a large square one, about eighteen inches by twelve. During the first week of its being put up (this spring), twice each day the letters were fetched, and each time a double handful of small sticks and straws was thrown out of the box, which was attributed to mischievous boys on their way to school. After two or three days a messenger was sent round to the house with two letters found on the road, next day several more, and this rubbish continued to be put in the box, although twice a day thrown out. The letters being found on the road, caused Mr. Bell to set a watch for the boys, but none were seen to go near. Next morning the rubbish had been put in the box in large quantities, a nest put in one corner, and a blue egg. Now, of course, Mrs. Starling was found out; she continued daily to add to the number until five, then commenced sitting, and for several days a large number of letters were thrown upon her, as she sat, the box door opened and the letters taken away, but she never left her nest as they took the letters off her back. The passer-by on the road must have discovered her, for a morning a stone was found to have fallen and broken the eggs (no doubt a mischievous boy), the stone was thrown out, and when they went to clear the box they found she was covering the broken eggs with flowers, dog-daisies and primroses. In a few days she formed a nest in another corner and laid four eggs. These were likewise broken and covered with flowers. Then another corner, and three eggs. These were broken with stones dropped in, and one corner was covered up with flowers. Then the fourth corner, she laid two eggs, and to save her from the outside enemy we cut her a piece out of the door. Here she was for a time safe. She sat, and he heard a great screaming, as from the letter-box; he ran to it, and caught a boy "jobbing" with a stick extending the outside slip, the mother young one killed and the other slightly injured; the old bird much brained; she flew into a large cedar tree just over her head while he took the young one into his hand and stroked the feathers into shape after some minutes it flew into the tree to its mother, when the noise of a great quantity of starlings assembled in the tree was astounding, quite deafening. "Here was the rejoicing," said a subject for an address on perseverance! I know you to take a great interest in these matters. I can not help but forward you a description of such an event. To me it is now, to sit without fear when covered with letters; the same when the hand took them off; to cover the broken eggs with flowers, and persistently to use the four corners of the letter box as her nest was, and lay, respectively five, four, three and two—as she was no doubt weakened by these natural efforts. Excuse my imperfect description, for I must have been taken off twenty times while writing it, but I could not refrain from sending it to you. I hope your readers, one and all, will do their best to bring the young to a better way than that described above, which is so common, leading to the ruin of the young, and the ruin of the English, as you say: "It is a fine day; let us go out and kill something!"—Land and Water.

A Brave Girl.

A desperate struggle, which makes of Miss Carrie Roberts a heroine, took place at the residence of G. H. Kitchen, a farmer living one mile this side of Monroe, this county, at an early hour this morning. Mr. Kitchen is a well-to-do farmer, having no family but his wife, and the girl, Carrie Roberts, is employed as a domestic in his household. This morning Mr. and Mrs. Kitchen went to Hamilton to see a doctor, leaving the house in charge of the girl Roberts. Some hired men were working in the fields some distance away from the house, but the girl was the only person at home. When Mr. Kitchen and his wife returned, they found the girl engaged in attempting to some duties up stairs, she thought she heard a noise in a room below and coming to the top of the stairway and looking down, she saw a strange, ill-looking man, of the gens tramp, engaged in ransacking a bureau drawer in the sitting room. The girl knew that there was a large amount of money stowed away in a tin box, which she had hidden in a bureau drawer. Besides the money, there was also a lot of jewelry, belonging to the family in the same place. The brave girl's resolve was instantly taken, and while the robber was engaged in ransacking the bureau drawer, she slipped into his pockets, he was astounded by the child suddenly springing upon him like a tigress, fastening her hands in his hair, and endeavoring to wrench the money from him. For a moment he was almost dumbfounded, but he finally recovered himself, and began to try and release himself from the girl's hold. But this he was unable to do, his hands were fastened to the girl's, and he was unable to get free. He endeavored to strike her, but she was unable to release herself from his grasp. Finally, in collecting information respecting the ancient course of the Oxus, to decide whether it can be diverted afresh into the Caspian without detriment to the Khivan oasis. It seems possible, however, that in case of certain Eastern complications the expedition may develop into a military one against Merv.

Horse-Flesh in Sausages.

Health-Inspector Cronan, of Jersey City, while engaged in his daily examination of the cow-stables and cattle-yards in that city and vicinity a few days ago, was, by accident, placed in possession of facts which, when fully investigated, he expects will disclose a business which is carried on in that city in violation of all law and decency. After making a tour of inspection among the cattle in a yard on Tonelle Avenue, on the Heights, he was about to drive off when he discovered the leg of a horse. He asked the stableman where that came from, and for an answer the man took him to another portion of the yard, where the three remaining legs were. He told the Inspector that a few days previous a horse died at that place, and a man came there who skinned the carcass and cut off the legs. "What became of the carcass after that?" asked the Inspector, and the man replied that it had been cut up into a half dozen pieces and taken away with the hide. Inspector Cronan pressed his questions, and the man told him that the person who took away the hide and carcass kept a place just outside of the city limits, and that the carcasses of all dead animals he got were disposed of to sausage makers. The man grew then reluctant and denied that he knew the man's name or the exact location of his place of business. He said he did not charge him anything for the carcass, but he had seen him the first time he had ever visited his stable. Information of a matter of this kind was brought to the attention of District Attorney McGill some time ago, but for the want of a complainant was allowed to drop. Health-Inspector Cronan will place the Grand Jury now in session in possession of the facts he has learned after working the case up thoroughly, and until the body has taken action in the matter he feels to furnish any further result of his labors in the matter.—N. Y. Herald.

A Baby in a Panther's Jaws.

Last Thursday evening, about dark, Mr. and Mrs. George Campbell and Dick Mannon were sitting on the porch of the Soda Springs Hotel, at Soda Springs, Idaho. Mannon is a boy aged about three years, was across the road about fifty or sixty feet distance, amusing himself by cutting bushes with a little hatchet. Those on the porch were talking and laughing, and Mannon was springing upon the child, and at the time supposed he was dangerously injured, which would have been the case no doubt, had not the child screamed, and those on the porch shouted, excitedly, which prevented the panther making a deadly spring, as he was evidently watching and fearing the parties on the porch. As it was, the panther seized the child by the chin, one of the legs of the lower jaw cutting his neck, while the paw of the beast struck and scratched him in the breast. The shouting and rushing toward the child by those on the porch caused the panther to let go, and the child escaped, and after picking up the child and examining the wounds inflicted, Mannon returned to the house for a gun, and following it up the mountain, he killed the panther, and a hungry lean looking customer measuring five feet from tip to tip.—Tribune (Cal.) Journal.

The Russian Asiatic Expedition.

The Russian Government is about to send an expedition to Central Asia under the command of the Grand Duke Nicholas. The aim of the expedition is to select the route of the Central Asian railway, to examine the navigability of the Oxus, and to decide the possibility of diverting it into the Caspian. The route will be from the River Ural to Karasagun, on the Syr Daria, thence via Tashkent and Samarkand to Oxus at Kunduz (Afghanistan); afterwards along the river to Khiva, and across the Kara Kum to Krasnovodsk. The work of the expedition will be: 1. To collect information as to the cost of the railway, and the ability to obtain materials for its construction, whether fuel exists on the route, and the amount of labor obtainable. 2. To investigate the speed of the Oxus, the height of its banks, the population of the marshy islands and settlements, and the existing commerce on the river. 3. To examine the Khiva oasis, the floods of the Karakum, and the ancient bed of the Oxus, commonly known as the Uzboi. 4. To carry out astronomical observations all the way along the route, to make military plans, to sketch the features of the country, to collect objects of mineralogical, zoological, geological and archeological interest, and to keep a diary of daily events. Finally, in collecting information respecting the ancient course of the Oxus, to decide whether it can be diverted afresh into the Caspian without detriment to the Khivan oasis. It seems possible, however, that in case of certain Eastern complications the expedition may develop into a military one against Merv.

Cost of Public Buildings.

The massive and imposing post-office building in New York City, now substantially completed has cost the United States Government from first to last a little over $2,000,000. The appropriations began as long ago as 1856, but it was not till 1870 that there was sufficient money appropriated to justify beginning operations. Over $500,000 were paid to the city for the site in City Hall Square. Nearly all the large cities, following the example of New York, have obtained from the General Government appropriations for the construction of large and expensive buildings, for the accommodation of their post-offices and United States Courts. The Chicago post-office heads the list. Its total appropriations are $5,675,000. The site alone cost $1,250,000. There was appropriated in March last $255,000 to complete the building, which sum is included in the above total. St. Louis follows close after Chicago, having obtained appropriations for its post-office to the amount of $4,650,000. This will not complete the building, however, and as the site cost but one-third of the amount paid in Chicago, it would appear that St. Louis intended to surpass its rival in the matter of a post-office building. Boston has received $1,854,000 for its new post-office, and Philadelphia $1,550,000. In each case, additional appropriations will be needed to complete the building. The site in Boston cost $1,329,000; that in Philadelphia, $1,491,200. The new Cincinnati post-office has had appropriations amounting to $1,100,000, and will need more for its completion. There have been appropriations for the new post-office in New Orleans, $1,117,000; for the one in Charleston, S. C., $698,000; for the one in Hartford, Conn., $675,000; for the one in Trenton, N. J., $404,000; for the United States Appraisers' building in San Francisco, $805,000; for the site for the proposed new post-office in Pittsburgh, Pa., $300,000; for the post-office in Albany, N. Y., $145,000; in Fall River, Mass., $140,000; in Utica, N. Y., $325,000; in Raleigh, N. C., $335,000; in Evansville, Ind., $315,000; in Covington, Ky., $305,000; in Nashville, Tenn., $328,000 and for the site and building for the new post-office of Engineering and Printing, in Washington, D. C., $327,500. This latter amount was not a new appropriation, but was transferred to this purpose from an unexpended balance of the appropriation for the last fiscal year, the sum having been a saving of $653,000 out of the $800,000 appropriated for printing "legal tenders" for that year.

The Fox Costs a Million of Pounds in England.

There are no less than 168 separate packs of fox-hounds maintained at present in the United Kingdom, numbering between them an aggregate of 5,600 couples of hounds. It is difficult to assess the cost of keeping these packs. A writer in Baily's Magazine, so far back as 1866, puts the total expense for the season of hunting a country three days a week at £1,348 14s. The Earl of Winton, nearer the present time, increases the estimate to £1,625. Another writer in Baily's Magazine has kept. The Cotswold Hunt has of late been costing £2,500 per annum, and there is no doubt that the former figures must be largely raised to meet the enhanced cost of wages and horse-flesh. Let the average cost of each of the above packs be put at £300 per annum, which is certainly below the truth, even then their annual cost is £151,400. But the money spent on the pack is nothing compared to that which is put in circulation by those who join in the sport, in hotel and railway expenses, wages and other subsidiary charges. Giving 150 horsemen to each chase, and reckoning that 110 packs in England chase all the time four days per week, Mr. Pitt calculates that the fox costs a million a year to be spent in England.

Agricultural Exhibits at the Paris Exposition.

The report of Hon. J. J. Woodman, of Michigan, Assistant Commissioner to the Paris Exposition, shows the part which the United States took in the exhibition. The report contains many interesting facts respecting the agricultural interests in the principal countries of Europe. France has 3,977,781 farms, the average size being sixteen and a half acres of arable or thirty-three and a half acres of productive land. Seventy-one per cent. of these farms are cultivated by the owners, twenty-one per cent. are rented and eight per cent. worked on shares. In the English exhibit samples of wheat were shown which it was claimed, would produce 105 grains from a single stalk, and 12 bushels from a single acre. The average production of wheat per acre is greater in England than in any other country in Europe if not in the world. Ninety-two and one-half per cent. of the whole territory in Asia and Hungary is productive. The average annual production of cereals in Europe amounts to 5,147,796,000, or about seventeen bushels per capita. The production in the United States is about forty bushels per capita. Of the countries of Europe Romania, Denmark, Russia, Prussia, France, Hungary, Bavaria and Sweden alone raise sufficient cereals for home consumption.

Horrible Death.

A singularly painful and sad experience has been that of a burglar who has been emulating the exploits of Mr. Peace, at Sheffield. The plunder-seeker determined to enter a pawn-broker's shop by the chimney. Descending to within six feet of the fire-place, he stuck fast, however, and despite all his efforts, failed to get free. For four long hours he struggled in vain, and then the servant of the pawnbroker came and lighted the fire below. Then the burglar, who had been in the place heard that the proprietor had been taken down, and a builder, did the best he could to extricate the thief. This proved, however, to be no easy matter, for before the entrapped rascal could be rescued the burglar had been taken down. When found the miserable man was imbedded firmly, "crying fearfully." His mouth and eyes were filled with soot, and he was "dreadfully scorched," and he died immediately after he was taken out.

'Experience a Good Teacher.

Before this meets the eye of the public Samuel Shin may be no more. He was passing a blacksmith shop the other day when the smith desired his assistance for a moment to help crowd a mule into a corner where he could be chained and shod. Samuel crowded the wrong end of the mule for his share. It was a mule which couldn't be crowded with impunity, and when they took Mr. Shin home in a hack his wife gave him one look and called out: "Didn't I tell ye to keep away from that City Hall! Didn't I know dat it would fall on ye?"

Samuel Shin is a very sick man. He may recover, and he may not. If he does he will push a mule's head after this. "Gem'len," said Brother Gardner, as he gradually reached his feet, "experience n'm a good teacher. If Misser Shin hadn't pushed dat mule this week, he'd hev pushed him some older week. He's got da experience now, an' his work millions to him. Dar was a time when I'd jump over a high board fence an' land in somebody's back yard at midnight, widout lookin' to see if dar was a dog dar, but I got all ober dat arter my legs had bin chewed up a few times. I believe wid Dan'l Boone: 'Be suah dar hain't enny mules aroun', an' den push wid all your might.' De relief committee needn't report on Misser Shin's case. A member of dis club who don't know a mule's head from a mule's heels can't draw no fo' dollars a week outen us."—Free Press.

Too Much in a Nance.

Gentlemen who go about the world burdened with names of great length and unwieldiness should take courage. A young man in Chicago has set them a valuable example. His name was Charles Oliver Brewster. These names were thought sufficient by the Court, and at the petitioner's instance he was permitted to lop off the Brewster, there being too many of that name already. It has been suggested that the young man should have gone a step farther, suppressed the "Oliver," and stood before an admiring world as plain Charles Brewster, with license to condense the Charles in cases of urgency. The tendency to overname children is very great, and it is a nuisance against which civilization should protest. There is nothing so simple and effective as simple Christian names. Men who double names are always tempted to divide them in the middle, and this is an abomination against which civilization should protest. A foppish title, such as J. Braithwaite Bogardus, or Joyce H. Burjoeve St. Arnaud, when compared with such a simple and unadorned name as John Smith, is as the bearded and bedizened Napoleon major to the mustachioed Napoleon in gray overcoat.—Baltimore Gazette.

Spanish Dwellings.

The massive stone basements of many of the houses date back 500 years, and are still grimly solid, though somewhat sunken by their weight on the uneven ground. The upper portions have in most instances been patched and repatched; yet still, by the side of what is there considered a modern improvement—probably a casement and balcony 150 years old—may be seen a small, dark, and grimy, carved aperture, pierced in a wall from two to three feet in thickness. These are unglazed, and are closed by a shutter, which in turn has a small grated opening. The facade of these decrepit buildings are wonderfully rich in quaint detail, with their rusty iron and worn eaten wood on balconies, oddly perched here and there. From these usually float in the sun-glass multi-colored garments and rainbow-hued draperies, protected from a passing shower by the deeply-projecting roofs of moss-grown, fluted tiling. The streets, which are narrow and roughly paved with shapeless stones, are so unpaved that the mud, indeed, so arrogant are the brutes that the question as to who is to take the wall or the gutter is only settled by a stout stick. It may be guessed what is the ordinary condition of the streets, when such scavengers make them their favorite foraging-ground. There is usually but one common entrance to each house for cattle and humanity, and this is through a deeply set stone archway which is usually the only stable, and consequently one is continually stepping over foul litter. If the proprietor be a tradesman, there is an opening to the tienda or shop, either to the left or right, beneath this gloomy, sunken, infected porch and on the opposite side is the dark staircase which leads to the upper portion of the straggling building, where perhaps many families have their dwelling. Now, as in most instances, even the middle-class houses, are not so clean as they are filthy, and it is not uncommon to find a patch of mud in the neighborhood of the town, it may be imagined what is the condition of the common stable at night, and what savory odors pervade the evening streets and corridors. Indeed, it has often happened to me, when paying a visit, to stumble over a sow and her young on a dark landing, or, while groping my way up the time-worn, uncertain stairs, to find roosting fowls; and yet possibly the person to whom my visit was to be paid boasted of blue blood, was as proud as the proudest of hidalgos, and bore a shield with quarters that dated from the heroic period of San Ferdinand or the Cid Campeador. With regard to the furniture of a suite of rooms occupied by such a person of quality, the less said the better. One seldom meets with any attempt at luxury, and most frequently even comfort is ignored.—All the Year Round.

When the now famous Zulu, Cetshwayo, was Prince Imperial, he gave his father great trouble, for, instead of looking after the royal cattle, his special duty, he passed nearly all his time at Greytown, the nearest English town. There he amused himself after his manner, drinking heavily, which he could not get at home, and smoking pipes, which his dignity prevented his doing among his own people. He paid court to the ladies, and had the reputation of going the pace.

Duck hunting is said to be good around Stillwater. Those who hunt Sunday evenings in parlors with a dim religious light, seem to have the most luck.—Stillwater Lumberman.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

SHATZER & AULT

Have recently removed to their new

Furniture and

Undertaking Rooms.

MAIN STREET, OAKLAND.

Where they keep constantly on hand and manufacture to order anything in the line of

HOUSEHOLD FURNITURE

All of which is offered at the

LOWEST LIVING PRICES.

Give us a call, examine our Furniture and prices, whether you wish to purchase or not. We take pleasure in showing our work.

— All kinds of COFFINS and CASKETS on hand or furnished to order on short notice.

126 Gm. SHATZER & AULT.

H. WHEELER COMBS,

REAL ESTATE AGENT,

OAKLAND, MD.

Will negotiate sales of real estate of every description.

— No charge for advertising property placed in my hands.

H. WHEELER COMBS.

The following properties have been placed in my hands

FOR SALE.

NO. 3.

One of the best little farms in Garrett county, 2 1/2 miles west of Oakland, the county seat. This farm contains 26 ACRES, 75 acres in cultivation, and all susceptible of easy and profitable cultivation. Improved by a

New 2 Story House,

containing 8 rooms and good cellar. GOOD BAKES and stabling. There is a good young orchard of 20 trees. The whole farm is under good fence. This farm will be offered for a small price and on easy terms. Title perfect. Limestone and coal within two miles.

NO. 4.

Fichtner's Mill Property.

This property, containing 220 acres, situated on Middle Creek, in Sang Run district, Garrett county, Md., will be sold at a very low price and upon the easiest of terms. It has 9 miles north west of Oakland, 8 miles from Hutton's Station and 7 miles from Garretts Summit. Is one of the best mill sites in the county, and is surrounded by the best timber land of the section. It is improved by an excellent containing 10 rooms; good stabling attached. The wheels and mill are in good order. The property, and will be sold with the property at a low price for the whole, and the land is assessed for.

FRAME HOUSE,

This is an opportunity for a bargain seldom offered.

NO. 5.

A Desirable Property in Oakland

FOR SALE.

Lot 100x100, improved by an

Excellent Frame Dwelling House,

containing 7 rooms; with good cellar. This is one of the most pleasant homes in Oakland. It is almost immediately opposite the Oakland Hotel, and in front of Bailey's new hotel and commands one of the finest views of the town. The buildings are all new and well constructed. There is an excellent well of water on the lot. For any one desiring a pleasant home an opportunity is here offered to secure it at a price less than the cost of the buildings. Terms—One third down, balance in three equal annual payments.

Apply to

H. WHEELER COMBS,

Real Estate Agent, Oakland, Md.

ORDER NISI.

IN THE MATTER OF THE DEED OF TRUST FROM HANNAH S. SUMMAN AND EDWARDS & HANNAH, her husband. In the Circuit Court for Garrett county, in Equity. No. 18.

ORDERED, this 20th day of April, 1879, that the sale made and reported by Thomas J. Paddock, Trustee, for the sale of the property in the proceedings of this cause mentioned, be ratified and confirmed, unless cause to the contrary thereof be shown on or before the 20th day of May next. Provided a copy of this order be inserted in some newspaper published in the town of Oakland once a week for three weeks prior to the said 20th day of May next.

The report states the amount of sales to be $280.

W. H. TOWER,

Clerk Circuit Court for Garrett county.

True Copy—Test—

W. H. TOWER, Clerk.

PATENTS.

To Inventors and Manufacturers.

ESTABLISHED 1865.

GILMORE SMITH & CO.

Solicitors of Patents & Attorneys at Law.

American & Foreign Patents.

No fees in advance, nor until a Patent is allowed. No fee for making preliminary examinations.

Special attention given to Interference Cases before the Patent Office. Infringement Suits in the different States, and all litigation appertaining to Patents or Inventions.

Sent Stamp for Pamphlet of Sixty Pages.

GILMORE & CO.,

629 F. Street, N. W.,

Washington, D. C.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

This Column is Reserved for

J. R. BISHOP & CO.,

who are just now receiving one of the largest stocks of

New Goods

ever brought to Oakland.

These goods were bought for CASH, at the proper time, and of course cost less than any other stock in town.

There is not an old or second-hand piece in the house.

The assortment is complete, consisting in part of

Dry Goods,

Groceries,

Queensware,

Ready-Made Clothing,

Boots and Shoes,

Wooden ware,

Gents' and Ladies' Furnishing Goods,

Hardware, &c., &c.,

all of which will be sold at

BOTTOM PRICES.

for Cash or country produce.

Call and examine our stock before purchasing elsewhere.

Remember the old stand recently occupied by N. B. Wayman & Co.

J. R. BISHOP & CO.

THE BEST FAMILY SEWING MACHINE!

The "NEW AMERICAN" is easily learned, does not get out of order, and will do more work with less labor than any other machine. Illustrated Circular furnished on application.

AGENTS WANTED.

J. S. DOWEY, Manager, 64 N. Charles Street, Baltimore, Md.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Buy only the NEW AMERICAN

It is the Only Sewing Machine which has a Self-Threading Shuttle

It has Self Setting Needle. Never Breaks the Thread. Never Slips Stitches. Is the Lightest Running.

The Simplest, the Most Durable, and in Every Respect

The Best Family Sewing Machine!

The "NEW AMERICAN" is easily learned, does not get out of order, and will do more work with less labor than any other machine. Illustrated Circular furnished on application.

AGENTS WANTED.

J. S. DOWEY, Manager, 64 N. Charles Street, Baltimore, Md.

A. LOEWENSTEIN,

MERCHANT TAILOR,

OAKLAND, MD.

Respectfully announces to the citizens of Oakland and vicinity, that he has laid in his usual large stock of

Spring and Summer Cloths,

Cassimeres, Vestings, etc., which he is prepared to make, to order upon the shortest notice and in the most

Neat and Fashionable Manner.

He invites all to call and examine his goods, and leave their orders for a suit. He has reduced the price for making clothes, but

Guarantees a Perfect Fit.

— All work WARRANTED to give entire satisfaction.

350 ACRES

—OF—

Good Land

For Sale Cheap.

This Land lies on the Hoopole Road, about six miles north east from Oakland, B. & O. R. R., and is generally covered with good timber. Would make several good farms. Will be sold in bulk or in small lots. Title good.

For particulars and terms apply to this office or to the postoffice, Oakland, Garrett Co., Md.

Sheriff's Sale.

By virtue of an execution issued by Alex. H. Coddington, a Justice of the Peace of the State of Maryland, in and for Garrett county, and to me directed, at the suit of Adam Fichte, against the goods and chattels, lands and tenements of W. M. Coddington, I have seized and taken in execution all the right, title, interest and estate, both at law and in equity, of the said W. M. Coddington, in and to 2 1/2 lots, tract, parcel, or part of ground situated, lying and being in Deer Park, county of Garrett, and State of Maryland, described as follows: Beginning North 25° East 60 feet from the second corner of a lot sold by David P. Dwyer and wife to John Marley and running thence along (third street) North 25° 40 feet to the line of the West 100 feet, to the line of H. G. Davis, thence with said line South 15° West 60 feet, thence South 22° East 100 feet to the beginning, containing one-seventh part of an acre, more or less, and being the same 1-4 obtained by Peter Grant from Emily F. Dwyer and wife, her in the year 1853 and recorded in Liber W. H. L., No. 1 folio 23; one of the land records of Garrett county Md.

And I hereby give notice, that on

SATURDAY, May 24th 1879,

at 2 o'clock, p. m., in front of Coddington's Store, in the town of Oakland, I will offer for sale the said premises, so seized and taken in execution, to the highest bidder, for cash, to satisfy said judgments and costs.

534

THOS. CODDINGTON,

Sheriff.

J. C. BROOKE,

GENERAL UNDERTAKER

OAKLAND, MD.

Having a full line of

COFFINS, CASKETS & TRIMMINGS

always on hand, direct from the factory, I can furnish, at short notice, anything in this line.

VERY LOW PRICES FOR 1879:

Very Small Coffins,..... $ 2.50

Children's Coffins,..... 4.00 to 8.00

ADULT SIZES:

Plain Flat Top Coffin, with Glass,..... 8.00 to 12.00

Rosewood Finish,..... 10.00 to 14.00

O. G. Top, Rosewood Finish,..... 10.00 to 14.00

CASKETS:

Black Walnut, Hinged and Lined,..... 12.00 to 16.00

Fancy Trimmed,..... 16.00 to 20.00

Other styles at corresponding low prices.

Hearse in all cases furnished in town,..... $2.00

I will not be undersold.

— All work guaranteed to give satisfaction, and prices as reasonable as can be had anywhere.

— All orders by mail promptly attended to.

CHAS. H. WHETZELL,

Manufacturer of

WHITE PINE, HEMLOCK AND Cherry Lumber.

Also

HEMLOCK, WHITE AND YELLOW PINE SHINGLES.

Changes reasonable and satisfaction guaranteed to all customers.

The mill is situated on Muddy Creek, one mile from the City Mill.

CHAS. H. WHETZELL,

May 11, 1879.

OAKLAND WOOLEN FACTORY.

The subscriber is prepared to do all kinds of

CUSTOM WORK,

such as

Roll Carding, Spinning and Weaving, at short notice.

Wool taken in exchange for goods or worked up on the shares into Blankets, Cassimeres, Flannels and stocking yarn.

SAMUEL LAWTON,

my 11th

MISCELLANEOUS.

SUBSCRIBE FOR

"THE REPUBLICAN,"

AND AID IN THE

CIRCULATION

— OF —

The Cheapest Newspaper

IN WESTERN MARYLAND.

ONLY

$1.50

PER YEAR

IN ADVANCE.

EVERY VARIETY

OF

JOB WORK

PROMPTLY EXECUTED.

We desire to call the attention of Merchants, Mechanics, and Business Men generally, to our extensive facilities for the prompt, speedy and accurate execution of

FIRST-CLASS

GOOD QUALITY

— OF —

JOB PRESSES

now in use, and the

ONLY ONE IN OAKLAND.

We have also a complete stock of

New Plain and Fancy Type, &c.,

of the latest styles, for all the different kinds of Job Work and can now fill all orders for

Show Cards, Business Cards, Circulars, Letter-Heads, Bill-Heads, Legal Blanks, Certificates, Envelopes, Tags, Statements, &c.,

Pamphlets, Programmes, Catalogues, Dodgers, &c., &c.

and every description of

Plain and Fancy Printing

At the Lowest Rates.

Drop in and take a look at a

— COMPLETE —

Printing Office,

YOU WILL BE

WELCOME AT ALL TIMES.

We are determined to be up to the times in everything connected with the printing business.

Address

"THE REPUBLICAN,"

Oakland, Garrett Co., Md.

DR. J. DAILY,

RESIDENT DENTIST

WESTERNPORT,

MARYLAND.

From one to a full set of teeth inserted in the most beautiful and substantial manner. Particular attention paid to cleaning and filling the natural teeth. All work warranted to give satisfaction, or money refunded.

534

COUNTY DIRECTORY.

CIRCUIT COURT.

Jury Terms—Second Monday of September and the First Monday of May.

Non-Jury Terms—First Monday of July and Third Monday of December.

Chief Judge—Hon. R. H. Alvey.

Associates—Hons. Wm. Motter and Geo. A. Pearre.

Clerk—W. H. Tower.

Sheriff—Thomas Coddington.

State's Attorney—Jno. W. Veitch.

Court Auditor—W. P. Townshend.

Standing Commissioners—Gilmor S. Hamill and A. B. Gonder.

Crier—Wm. Smouse.

Messenger—Jas. M. Bell.

Bailiffs—Wm. Waltz and T. Bosley.

Return days of Equity process—Third Monday in January, third Monday in March, third Monday in May, third Monday in July, second Monday in September, second Monday in November.

ORPHANS' COURT.

Meets every second and fourth Tuesday of each month.

Chief Judge—Joseph DeWitt.

Associates—A. J. Michaels and Wm. Harvey.

Register of Wills—W. L. Rawlings.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS.

The regular sessions of the County Commissioners commence on the first Monday in January; the first Monday in April, being the appeal and transfer term; the first Monday in June, being the levy term; the first Monday in July, the term for appointing judges of election, and the first Monday in October.

President, E. C. Tilton; Commissioners, John Riley and Jeremiah Guard.

Clerk—Wm. H. Hagans, who will be in the office on Tuesdays and Saturdays of each week.

County Surveyor—John Harned.

SCHOOL COMMISSIONERS.

President—Wm. A. Brydon.

Commissioners—G. W. Delawder, Secretary and Treasurer—Dr. E. H. Bartlett.

JUSTICES OF THE PEACE.

District No. 1—J. H. Wilson and Henry Rasche.

2—Benj. Griffith.

3—John T. Patterson and Sylvanus Butler.

4—A. J. Wannick.

5—R. B. Jamison and A. L. Osbourn.

6—Perry Weiner.

REGISTRARS OF VOTERS.

District No. 1 H. O. Hamill.

2 James H. Rush.

3 Lehigh Fuller.

4 W. H. Bernard.

5 David Hindelbaugh.

6 Thomas Browning.

7 R. T. Browning.

8 W. F. Perkins.

9 J. Faenbacher.

TOWN OF OAKLAND.

Buyers—D. E. Offutt.

Commissioners—J. M. Davis, Geo. L. Rosley, Geo. W. Legge, G. W. Merrill.

Clerk—A. C. Good.

Postmaster—Ralph Thayer.

LODGES.

A. F. & A. M.—Meet every first and third Thursday night.

I. O. O. F. No. 12—Meet every Monday night.

Alpha Lod. e. No. 571, K. of H.—Meets in McComas Hall 2d and 4th Thursdays evenings of each month.

I. O. G. T. No. 114—Meet every Tuesday night.

ROAD NOTICE.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, That the undersigned will make application to the County Commissioners of Garrett county at their next meeting, after thirty days from the first publication of this notice, for the appointment of viewers to examine and assess whether the public convenience requires that the road heretofore located, leading from the Ford of Savage river to John Warrick's farm, and known as The Savage and Bear Pen Run road, should be changed and altered so as to run from its present point of beginning along its present bed, running through a tract of land owned by — Morrison, thence up Savage river through the land of George R. Broadwater to the mouth of Bear Pen Run, then running through the lands of Geo. Joseph R. Anderson to the line of John Warrick, then through said Warrick's lands to his barn, a distance of about four miles.

JOHN W. GLOVES,

534

THE REPUBLICAN.

VOLUME 3.

OAKLAND, MD., SATURDAY, MAY 24, 1879.

NUMBER 13.

OAKLAND BUSINESS GUIDE.

DRY GOODS, GROCERIES, etc.

D. E. OFFUTT,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Agricultural Machines, Musical Instruments,
Guns, Pistols, etc.

W. LEGGIE,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Cor. Second & Oak Sts.

D. H. LOAR,
ORIGINAL NEW YORK STORE,
General Merchandise, Watches, Clocks, Jewelry, etc.

L. W. STALNAKER,
Grocery and Provision Store,
Corner Third and Oak Streets.

L. BUSH & SON,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Cor. Third and Oak Sts.

J. A. GRANT,
Dry Goods, Notions & Groceries,
SPECIAL LINE OF TOBACCO.

DAVID & TOWNSEND,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Agents Agricultural Machines,
Opposite Bailey's Park.

C. C. MICHAEL,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Notions, Clocks, Confectionery, etc., Next to Collington's Hotel.

RICHARDSON BROS.,
GROCERIES, CONFECTIONERIES,
Canned Goods, Fruit, etc.

HOTELS.

CODDINGTON'S HOTEL,
W. M. CODDINGTON, Prop'r,
Main St., Opposite Hamilton's Billiard Saloon.

LIVERY STABLE.

THOMAS MARTIN,
Opposite Postoffice.

STOVES AND TINWARE.

G. A. SHURER,
Oak Street, near Second.
A general line of Stoves and Tinware.

PHYSICIANS.

DR. J. LEE McCOMAS,
Office on Main Street.

DR. E. H. PARSONS,
offers his professional services
to the people of Oakland and vicinity. Office in the old Ollatt building, 3 S 3m.

PLASTERER.

JAMES ARNOLD,
Residence on Fourth Street.

BOOT AND SHOE MAKER.

W. M. M. WAGNER,
Shop Cor. First & Oak Sts.

ED. F. LOUGHRIDGE,
Leaves orders at Express office.

SURVEYORS.

J. B. BRANT,
Surveyor, Auctioneer and
Conveyancer,
Oakland, Garrett county, Md.

JOHN HARNED,
Address, Post Office.

JEWELER.

A. B. WOODCOCK,
In Wm. Simons's Building,
Watches and Clocks Cleaned and Repaired.

MILLINERY AND FANCY GOODS.

MRS. M. E. DAVIS,
Cor. Oak & Second Sts.

M. L. SCOTT'S Baltimore Store,
Millinery, Gents' Furnishing Goods, etc.,
Main Street, Opposite Dr. McComas's.

DRUGS AND MEDICINES.

GEO. C. STURGEISS,
Drugs, Medicines,
Perfumery, Toilet articles, Stationery,
Tobacco and Cigars.

G. W. MERRILL,
Near Depot,
Pure Drugs, Medicines, Toilet Goods, Station-
ery, Cigars and Tobacco, French Candy, Pulver, Fishing Tackle, etc. Physician's prescriptions accurately compounded.

PAINTING & PAPER HANG- ING.

E. J. FRINGER,
House and Sign Painter,
And Paper Hanger.

V. B. WARD,
S. HOUSE and SIGN PAINTER
Shop near Davis House.

BLACKSMITHS.

CHAS. SINCELL,
Liberty Street.

CONTRACTORS & BUILDERS.

JOHN M. JARBOE,
Carpenter, Contractor & Builder,
Residence on Liberty St. nearly oppo. Depot.

P. A. CHISHOLM,
Carpenter, Contractor,
Residence on Centre street.

GEO. A. SPEDDEN,
Residence oppo. School house.

JOSEPH M. CRIM,
Residence on Alder Street.

A. C. BROOKE,
Res. near Republican office.

CABINETMAKERS AND UN- DERTAKERS.

A. C. BROOKE,
Res. adjoining Gazette office.

JOHN SHATZER,
Shop on Second Street.

MEDICAL.

H. T.

HELMBOLD'S

COMPOUND

Fluid Extract

BUCHU.

PHARMACEUTICAL

A SPECIFIC REMEDY FOR ALL

DISEASES

OF THE

BLADDER & KIDNEYS.

For Debility, Loss of Memory, Indisposi-
tion to Exertion or Business, Shortness of Breath, Troubled with Thoughts of Disease,
Impurity of Vision, Pain in the Back, Chest,
and Head, Disordered Sleep, to the Head, Pale Countenance, and Dry Skin.

If these symptoms are allowed to go on,
very frequently Eruptive Eruptions and Consumption follow. When the Constitution becomes affected it requires the aid of an invigorating
medicine to strengthen and tone up the system—such

as Helmbold's Buchu

DOES IN EVERY CASE.

HELMBOLD'S BUCHU

IS UNEQUALED

By any remedy known. It is prescribed by the most eminent physicians all over the world.

Rheumatism,
Spermatorrhea,
Neuralgia,
Nervousness,
Dyspepsia,
Indigestion,
Constipation,
Aches and Pains,
General Debility,
Kidney Diseases,
Liver Complaint,
Nervous Debility,
Epilepsy,
Head Troubles,
Paralysis,
General Ill Health,

Spinal Diseases,
Sciatica,
Deafness,
Decline,
Lameness,
Catarrh,
Nervous Complaints,
Female Complaints, &c.

Headache, Pain in the Shoulders, Cough,
Dizziness, Sour Stomach, Eruptions, Bad
Taste in the Mouth, Impurity of the Blood,
Pain in the region of the Kidneys, and a
thousand other painful symptoms, are the
offspring of Dyspepsia.

HELMBOLD'S BUCHU

Invigorates the Stomach.

And stimulates the torpid Liver, Bowels, and
Kidneys to healthy action, in cleansing the
blood of all impurities, and imparting new
life and vigor to the whole system.

A single trial will be quite sufficient to
convince the most hesitating of its valuable
remedial qualities.

Price $1 Per Bottle,

Or Six Bottles for $5.

H. T. HELMBOLD,

DRUGGIST AND CHEMIST,

Philadelphia, Pa.

CAUTION!

See that the private Pro-
prietary Stamp is on
each bottle.

SOLD EVERYWHERE.

my 10-1yr.

INTERNATIONAL BIBLE LESSONS.

SUNDAY, MAY 25, 1879.

THE HOLY SPIRIT PROMISED.

GENERAL STATEMENT.

Among the earliest of the prophets whose written messages have descended to us, stands Joel, who lived either in the beginning of Uzziah's reign, B. C. 800 or perhaps half a century earlier, in the days of Joash,
while Jeroboam yet stood beside his throne.

Though Joel was outwardly saying God,
the prophet's keen eye detects the hearts of the people backsliding from his ways. He warns of the inevitable results of sin, in plagues upon the land, subjection to their foes, and a final destruction. He summons priests and people to an earnest repentance,
and then (Joel 2:25) begins a glowing picture of the blessings which would follow in the path of obedience. Suddenly his gaze is extended far down into the future, and he be-holds the glories of the gospel dispensation, and the outpouring of the Holy Ghost, which was destined to begin on the day of Pentecost (Acts 2:1-4) with the rushing wind, the cloven tongues, and the mighty testimonies. Again his glance penetrates deeper still into the shadows of the future, even down to the awful scenes of the last day, when the sun shall turn dark, the moon become blood, and the earth be destroyed, while God's people shall be forever delivered.

Joel 2. 28-32.
Memory Verses, 28-32.

28 And it shall come to pass afterward, that I will pour out my Spirit upon all flesh; and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy,
your old men shall dream dreams, your young men shall see visions.

29 And also upon the servants and upon the handmaids in those days will I pour out my Spirit.

30 And I will show wonders in the heavens,
and in the earth, blood, and fire, and pillars of smoke.

31 The sun shall be turned into darkness,
and the moon into blood, before that great and terrible day of the Lord come.

32 And it shall come to pass, that whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord shall be delivered; for in Mount Zion and in Jerusalem shall be deliverance, as the Lord hath said, and in the remnant whom the Lord shall call.

HOME READINGS.

M. The Holy Spirit promised. Joel 2. 28-32.
Th. His personality. John 14. 18-26.
Fr. His activity. John 14. 1-17.

Th. His office. John 16. 1-14.
F. Promised by Jesus. Acts 1. 1-4.
S. His coming. Acts 2. 1-13.
S. His power. Acts 2. 37-47.

GOLDEN TEXT.

But ye shall receive power, after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you. Acts 1. 8.

LESSON HYMN. C. M.

Referring to the Holy Spirit;
I humbly pray;
Send forth thy Spirit, O Lord,
And sanctify the whole.

O that I knew from heaven might fall,
And all my sin consume;
Come, Holy Ghost, for thee I call;
Spirit of burning, come!

QUESTIONS ON THE OUTLINE.

1. REVEALING POWER, v. 28, 29; Mark 1. 8.
What promise is here given?

2. To what does this refer? John 7. 39.
Is this promise limited to any one people?

What various classes of people are here
named as sharing its blessings?

May we enjoy it?

When was this promise fulfilled? Acts 2.
1-4.

Does the Spirit still remain with the Church? Rom. 8. 14.

How will the Spirit help us? Rom. 8. 26.
2. WATKINS-WORKING POWER, v. 29, 30; 31;
Acts 2. 19, 20.

What wonders are here foretold?

What is said of the sun and moon?

How was this promise repeated by Christ? Matt. 24. 29.

When was it partly fulfilled? Matt. 27. 45.
What day is spoken of in v. 31?

To whom is the day of judgment foretold?
How may we be safe on that day?

3. SAVING POWER, v. 32; Rom. 8. 13.
What promise is here made? v. 32. How does it include you?

Where is deliverance promised?

To whom does this refer? (ASS.) To the people of Christ.

To whom does God call?

What are the terms of salvation in Acts
16. 31?

TEACHINGS OF THE LESSON.

Where in this lesson do we find—

1. A promise of God's Spirit?

2. A prophecy of future events?

3. A pledge of salvation to men?

WORDS WITH LITTLE FOLKS.

1. Remember that the Spirit is promised to the young as well as to the old.

2. Try to live and speak under the Spirit's direction.

3. Call upon God for deliverance from sin.
Have ye received the Holy Ghost?

Acts 19. 2.

DOCTRINAL SUGGESTION: The baptism of the Holy Ghost.

ADDITIONAL PRACTICAL LESSONS.

1. The gift of the Holy Ghost is the richest and best of God's bestowments upon men.
v. 28.

2. While in the previous dispensations this gift was bestowed measurably and upon a few, now it is poured forth abundantly upon
all. v. 28.

3. Under the Gospel every disciple has the privilege of direct communion with God, and the indwelling presence of the Holy Spirit.
v. 28.

4. The least in the gospel kingdom enjoy higher privileges than the greatest in the old dispensation. v. 28. (Mark 11. 11.)

5. Those whose society accounts the lowest may enjoy the highest station in the possession of the Spirit. v. 28.

6. Those who have God's Spirit dwelling within them need not fear though the earth itself be destroyed. v. 30, 31.

An ounce of prevention is better than a pound of cure. A dose of Dr.
Bull's Baby Syrup will assist your baby in teething, and prevent it from being attacked by Cholera Infantum, Colic or other diseases with which Babies suffer.

The Issue Frankly Stated.

The great merit of Senator Ben Hill's speech in the Senate on Saturday was its exceeding frankness. He is a gentleman who has been put forward ever since the close of the war
as the representative of the South.

His public utterances in favor of a restored Union and in behalf of reconciliation and peace have been widely quoted at the North as showing that the South had abandoned its old secession and State Sovereignty notions and was willing and anxious to recognize the new order of things and accept fully the results of the war.

There are thousands of voters
at the North who were Republicans
before and during the war, who sincerely desired to believe that this was so, and were willing to cut loose
from their party if necessary, to help establish a permanent Union and lasting peace. They have more than met the South half way. They have accepted the vague generalities and gushing sentimentalities of Mr. Hill and two or three other emotional statesmen of the South as the expression of a genuine desire for reconciliation—not with the Democratic party, with which they had had no falling out or difference,—but with the loyal North, through whose efforts the Union was maintained and the Rebellion crushed. The North more than met them half way
when this seemed to be their purpose. They brought them back not only to equal enjoyment of the rights
they had forfeited, but to places of power in the Government. And it is by their utterances since they have been so trusted that we judge them.

Senator Hill, the most conservative of them, does not hesitate to say that the crime—let us call it a crime—of secession is a crime, and it is a question of responsibility for it—of rebellion is traceable directly to Northern interference. "The South succeeded," he says, "because there was a war made upon what she believed to be her constitutional rights
by the extreme men of the North.
Those extreme men of the North
were gaining absolute power in the Federal Government as the mechanism by which to destroy Southern property." That seems sufficiently explicit, and certainly is candid enough. Is there any question as to what this most moderate and conservative and best reconciled statesman thinks as to the responsibility for rebellion? It was not the South that was to blame for firing on Sumner and opening the war; not at all;
but the North that had made war upon the "constitutional rights of the South" in voting for Abraham Lincoln. Very well; it is good to understand precisely what the most thoroughly placated Southern statesman thinks about this buried but not forgotten issue. Not only that, but he tells us something entirely new as to who put down the rebellion and saved
the Union. It was not the Republican, but the Democratic party that did it. "No, my good Northern Democratic brethren," says Mr. Hill,
"you saved the country at last; you saved the Union in the hour of its peril, not the Republican party." This is, indeed, news; news to the Democrats who opposed every step in the "coercion of the South," and persistently obstructed all the war
measures of the Government, as well as to the Republicans who throughout that fiery struggle had to contend with a feigning Democracy in the rear
while putting forth all their energies to crush the rebellious Democracy in the field.

But Mr. Hill goes even further.
He lays anew upon the Northern Democracy the old duty of weakening and destroying the opposition to a Solid South. "It is for you," he says, "to go before your people and tell them that the Solid North must never become a fact against the Solid South." With this, too, goes the old, old threat; for he adds: "If so, disunion will be accomplished. It is you that we look to." And so ends the hope cherished by hundreds of thousands of Northern voters who love peace and do not desire contention, that the men who entered upon secession and rebellion, and were fairly beaten in their appeal upon ground of their own choosing, had come back, having learned something settled by the war. Mr. Hill has enlightened all who lingered in that delusion. The case has now been fully and very frankly stated on the floor of the United States Senate, and it is this: The Republican party are now, as they always have been, "the only enemy of either the States or the Union." The crime of Rebellion was theirs. The South was entirely justified in secession. The Democratic party saved the Union.

That party must save it again by preventing a solid North from combining against a solid South. It is right for the South to consolidate against the Republicans, but if the North combines "disunion will be accomplished." This is the summing up of the points in Senator Hill's great speech. We believe he has done
his party greater damage, if possible,
than any one who has preceded him
in this debate. But he has been un-derly frank and sincere, and we thank him for it. The issues he presents are quite ready to meet and go to the country on.

Meantime, the North has leisure to chew upon these three propositions.
First, that the election of Abraham Lincoln justified secession. Second, that the Democratic party saved the Union. Third, that while it is the right and the duty of the South to be solid, the consolidation of the North will bring disunion. According to Senator Hill, nothing was settled by the war. Let us have that question put to the people.—N. Y.
Tribune.

Next to total prohibition, about as stringent an anti liquor measure as has ever been enacted is the civil damages law which was passed by the Massachusetts legislature at its last session, and went into effect a few days ago. Statutes holding the liquor seller responsible in damages, that may be recovered in court, for injuries done in consequence of excessive indulgence by persons to whom he has sold intoxicating drink are not new. They have been tried in several of the Western commonwealths, notably in Ohio; but the trouble in enforcing them has proven mainly due to the fact that so many keepers of bar-rooms had no property which could be levied upon to satisfy the judgments found, or else had managed to convey it beyond the reach of the sheriff's officers. The Massachusetts law goes beyond the seller, and transfers the accountability for damages to the owner of the building in which the liquor business is located, and it was drawn with the intention of leaving him no loop-hole of escape. Hotel proprietors are even made liable to the full value of their property for whatever results may follow drinking in their houses, and it is also provided that the damages may be exemplary. There is a local complaint heard from Boston and the large towns that the law was railroaded through the legislature without its wide scope being fully understood, and as the body which passed it was strongly Republican,
the Democrats are endeavoring to make of it a party question for partisan advantages. In the future landlords will be compelled to take the best of care that when they let their premises for liquor saloons their tenants are men who will not permit immoderate drinking in them. The law ought certainly to operate against the lower classes of grog-shops, which are usually the places wherein men drink themselves into a condition that fits them for crime and violence.

The Vice of Intemperance.

The following is extracted from the annual message of Hon. Jos. V. Vansant, ex-Mayor, to the City Council of Baltimore, bearing date the 20th day of January, 1873:

"The gross number of persons
committed to the Baltimore city jail during the year 1872 was 10,122. Of that number 8,386 were committed for drunkenness, vagrancy and on peace warrants. In addition thereto 402 were committed for assault and battery, which offence, in the majority of cases, was doubtless consequent upon drunkenness. This is a sad catalogue of human degradation.
How many homes have been desola-ted, how many hearts broken, how many families have been made breadless and homeless, how many children have been rendered fatherless beggars on the highway and exposed to all the evil temptations of the vicious and the reckless, how many daughters have been driven from homes rendered miserable to take up their abodes in dens of prostitution,
by even this list of inmates of a single prison house, where incarceration is attributable to intemperance? If the measure—if measure there could be—of human misery and agony consequent upon this vice, could in one body put on a form the eye could behold, and assume a voice audible to the human ear, the coldest heart would be crushed to murtherable anguish. And yet the poor wretches that constitute the dwellers of this prison department, are but as drops
in the great ocean which is supplied from the innumerable fountains of drunkenness."

The feud between Cox and Alston that resulted in the killing of the latter and the conviction of the former for murder, originally grew out of their interests in the convict labor
contracts of Georgia, and the affair
drew public attention to the system.
Investigation has shown it to be so inhumanly managed as to be a stain
upon the fame of the community which sanctions it. We should scarcely have believed it to be as shocking as reports made it if the Georgia papers had not admitted the worst that has been charged against
it. The convicts are leased out to various parties for different lengths of time and in various parts of the state, and the authorities do not pretend to maintain any supervision over them after the contracts have been made. They are in fact sold as slaves, and the lessees have as much control of them as the slave owners ever had over their chattels. The results are frightful. The mortality among the prisoners, who are usually able-bodied men and women, reaches five per cent. annually, and in some of the camps they are worked every day from dawn in the morning until dusk at night. Men and women are chained together, and there is no
pretence of morality or decency.
Stories are told of the most revolting cruelty inflicted by brutal keepers in punishment of the convict. They are kept in subjection by the lash,
and terrible floggings are the least penalty for insubordination or attempts to escape. Utter demoralization prevails, and it is said that disgust at the infamous proceedings
caused the withdrawal of Senator Gordon from the contract in which he was interested. But the plan is profitable. It relieves the state of the burden of taxation that would be necessary if it had to feed and keep its convicts, and it brings in something of a revenue. Therefore, it has continued for some twelve years, and the legislature recently resolved not to abandon it. It was commenced under the administration of Governor Bullock, when the Republicans were in power in Georgia, and as it is economical, the taxpayers close their eyes to its enormities.

The market is nearly all the staples are booming. Cotton is up fifty per cent. above the prices of three months ago and still buoyant.
Wheat has advanced fifteen cents per bushel since Keene laid in his four million bushels and it is still on the rise. Flour is higher. Corn is higher.
Rice, pork middling and lard are higher. Oats are higher. All these facts fulfill the predictions of four months ago, that resumption of specie payments and stability of finance would bring a rapid business prosperity. The staples noted above as having advanced are the great sources of business and wealth in this country. It will be remembered that the convention of the Iron trade at Pittsburgh the other day announced great buoyancy and prosperity in that branch of industry. During the years of stagnation and depression
our people learned habits of economy. They grew richer than they thought. A vast balance of trade in our favor poured money into the country and stopped the exportation
of the products of our mines of gold and silver. We were well off and needed nothing but confidence to revive trade. That confidence was delayed unaccountably by the uncer-tainities attending our financial condition,
but as soon as resumption took place
the change began to be felt. It was not rapid at first, but steady and unmistakable. Now it is coming in full tide, and there is a feeling that it is destined to rise considerably higher.—Baltimore Gazette.

Judge Abbott, the respected leader
of the ten thousand "respectable Democrats" of Massachusetts, declares that he thinks the extra session had been an unfortunate thing for the country. If it had not been called,
a number of disturbing questions
would have settled themselves upon the natural operations of the laws of trade, so that by December nobody would have thought of discussing them again. The extra session, he explains to a reporter of the Boston Tribune, has created doubt in the minds of business men, and has an injurious effect upon the business revival which was clearly coming upon us. This is a frank admission of the very thing which is most troubling the Judge's party at this moment. The extra session has been a disaster to the country, and the country will not be slow to rebuke
the party which needlessly and stupid

The Republican.

JAN. A. HAYDEN, Publisher.
OAKLAND, GARRETT CO., MD.

THE TRYST.

At twilight, a grey-haired man strolling down a leafy lane.

Le. Forty years of sun and showers
On the young, half-eroded brow—
Forty years of mist and rain,
Curling down the vine-breathed lane,
Since the days you smiled at me
With your blue eyes, Jessamy?
While the faint, first, informed note
From the weedy warbler's throat,
Flashed just now, with the first
Perfumes that from closed buds burst;
Forty years have backward rolled,
To an April sunset, cold.
When I kept a parting tryst
With my sweet maid in the mist,
Will she now keep tryst with me,
My Jessamy?

(Will she wear her bright curls, tied
Back with blue, my little bride,
My Jessamy?)

Le. The old worn, wooden seat,
With the grass that for our feet—
And the hush between the sun,
And the glad kiss I had won—
While the clustered vines hang down
Shadowed buttes on your coat,
Forty years, and still your eyes
Shine toward me and my son,
Blue and white like violets; see,
Through the bent hedges of the tree
Flicker rays of shifting gold;
Is it but a ribbon's fold,
Or a tree of blossoming gold?
Little sweetheart, are you there?
Has she come at length to me,
My Jessamy?

Will she wear a kerchief, white,
On her white throat, crossed to-night,
My Jessamy?

Homeward, lonely, through the lane,
Vain to recall, to love again,
The old things shall be new:
Forty years have changed the dew
On the flowers to bitter frost,
In the child beds we have crossed,
Hush!

What is this mistletoe, while,
Gleaming in the mist, and light,
Part the grass! O, tears be still!
In this hush below the hill
Lies the maid I loved—see, love!
While the sunset still calms above
Lies and glows the tree of gold,
So at last she keeps her tryst—
So at length she comes to me,
My Jessamy!

(Hush! two wan shapes cross the lane;
Tis my youth's love, and my son,
And Jessamy.)
—MILIE W. CURRIE, in Christian Union.

UNCLE BENJAMIN'S STORY.

With the earlier events of the story I was personally connected, and the rest was afterwards told me by one of the chief actors in it. So spoke our dear old Uncle Benjamin, when on a visit to us last Christmas, and we, his nephews and nieces, who had been teasing him to tell us some of his adventures, delightedly composed ourselves to listen.

"I might," he continued, "call it a tale of circumstantial evidence, but for reasons which you will no doubt afterwards perceive, I prefer to style it 'Cast Down, But Not Destroyed.' The homeward-bound troop ship Stirling Castle, Captain Bowly, was becalmed in the tropics. For three days there had hardly been a breath of wind, and the sea lay around her smooth as glass. But although all was so calm and peaceful outside, yet on board the ship a painful and intense excitement prevailed. General Page, one of the chief-cabin passengers, had been robbed and nearly killed the night before; and the person accused of the crime was Walter Stevenson, a young Lieutenant and a general favorite of all on board. But to explain, I must go back a little. The Stirling Castle belonged to the old East India Company, and General Page, having retired from the service, was returning to Old England. He was accompanied by his daughter Rose, a young lady about twenty-two years of age, who without being exactly beautiful, possessed a vivacity and charm of manner which captivated all who approached her.

"There were several other officers on board, but only two enter into the story, the first being Colonel Morton, a very old friend of the General's, and the other the Lieutenant Stevenson above mentioned. Colonel Morton and the General had known each other in youth, their respective families owning neighboring estates; they had gone out to India together, and were now returning home in company. And still another tie bound the two old friends together. Colonel Morton had a son, and they had agreed that this son should marry the General's daughter, partly because of their long-standing friendship, and partly because the two estates united would make a very fine property. Now, the General even went so far as to make his will leaving all his property to Rose, it is true, but appointed Colonel Morton sole executor and authorizing him to use the influence the position gave him to bring about a match between the two young people.

"Now, although all this was known to Rose, yet it affected her very little; she was a true daughter and would only follow the dictates of her own heart; and who shall govern the caprices of the God of love? Soon after leaving Calcutta, it was noticed that Lieutenant Stevenson was often seen in her company. Whether it was his handsome person, his bold, frank bearing, his general intelligence and affability that first attracted her I know not, but certain it is their friendship quickly ripened into mutual love. Ere the Cape was reached they had confessed to each other and the father was made acquainted with the feelings and wishes. But alas! did the course of true love ever run smooth? As before mentioned, the General had his own ideas with regard to Rose, and so he sternly refused his sanction to her engagement with Stevenson.

"I now come to the dreadful circumstances mentioned in the opening of my story. There had been a good deal of merriment in the saloon the night before; but because of his anomalous position with regard to Rose, Stevenson took very little part in it and retired early. The General, too, not feeling very well, had passed into his cabin somewhat before his usual time; and soon after eleven o'clock entire silence reigned throughout the whole of the after-cabin. So things remained until about five o'clock in the morning, when all were aroused by loud cries for help, proceeding from the General's room. Hurriedly throwing on a few clothes, several of the passengers hastened to the cabin indicated; and what a sight met their horrified eyes!

Supported in the arms of Lieutenant Stevenson lay the General, his head bathed in blood. He lost a eye and pallid lips seemed to betoken death, except that his labored breathing and deep groans showed that he still lived. In another part of the cabin lay the body of the General's servant, and examination showed that he had been unable to withstand the heavy blow dealt him. The ship's doctor, Captain Bowly, Colonel Morton and many others were now collected in the cabin, after the doctor had taken the wounded man in hand, the question was anxiously asked: How did it occur? As Stevenson was the one who had given the alarm, all looked to him for an explanation; but what he had to say was in a very few words. He said he had been restless all the night, and had got up early to see the beauties of a tropical sunrise; that passing the General's door he heard groans, that he had knocked to see if he could be of any service; but receiving no reply, he had entered, and found things in the state they were in.

"There were many who shook their heads at this tale, as was well known, the General had not an enemy in the ship, unless it might be the Lieutenant himself; and most knew that the two were not on very good terms. Some one suggested suicide; but the doctor showed that the wound on the head had been caused by a blunt instrument, and was in such a position that it could not have been self-inflicted. And now suspicion grew stronger that Stevenson knew more than he had told. Men asked themselves: 'Who would be the gainer by the old man's death?' Stevenson, of course, as the only obstacle to his marriage with Rose would then be removed, especially as Lieutenant Morton, it is to be discovered by Colonel Morton to contain the will. So things remained for several days.

"Stevenson could not but notice the half-averted glances of his fellow-passengers, yet he treated them as if he were not suspected as preposterous. Rose was for the most part calmly engaged at the bedside of her father, who still hovered between life and death. He was for a great portion of the time unconscious, still there were intervals when he seemed to be aware of all that was passing. This being the case, it was arranged that he should be asked, in the presence of the principal passengers, to name his assailant. At this point the patient by the doctor as being a likely one to find the General fit to receive them, the cabin was filled by Captain Bowly, Colonel Morton and many others, among them being Lieutenant Stevenson. It was a scene of solemnity as striking, in that dimly lighted cabin. The patient, with his bandaged head, and his face scarcely less pale than the sheet on which he lay; the by-standers, with anxiety and curiosity strained into their faces, made up a picture not easily forgotten. The time seemed propitious, as the General recognized Rose and several others around him; but now a difficulty occurred; the General, who had stated in such a plain manner that the doctor would not allow him to speak. It was therefore arranged that paper and pen should be given him, and while one held him up, he should be simply asked to write the name of his assailant. And we must be quick, gentlemen," added the doctor, for the excitement of the scene may overcome him before you obtain what you want." Thus urged, and being ready, Captain Bowly solemnly asked the patient if he understood what was required of him. A momentary brightening of the eye was answer sufficient, and none doubted but that the author of the crime would soon be exposed. But alas! the will was stronger than the power; for when the General had partially traced a few letters, the pen fell from his hand, his eyelids closed, and he passed into a state of complete unconsciousness.

"And what were the letters written? The culprit's fate hangs upon them. Here they are, S T E. What a pity there were only three; and yet—when the Captain read the message, a gasp of surprise, and all eyes involuntarily turned on Stevenson, as though there could be no doubt that he was the man, and these three letters were as good as a whole name. And so it proved; for in reference to the missing letter, a passenger list, no other name was found (either Christian or surname) beginning with Ste. Nor was this all; for just at this moment a man entered the cabin, bringing the missing box, which he stated to contain the name of the assassin. Examination showed that the lock was broken and the will missing. So convinced was Captain Bowly by this evidence that he exclaimed sternly to Lieutenant Stevenson, retire to your cabin and consider yourself under arrest for the remainder of the voyage." It was done, and once again and still noble-looking Walter Stevenson was led away a suspected thief and murderer.

"But did every one believe him guilty? Not so. Need I say that the exception was the one whose opinion he prized more than all the rest—namely, his beloved Rose? Assured of her belief in his innocence and strong in his own consciousness, it mattered little to him what others thought; and so, when he passed from the cabin his eyes quailed not, nor did his tall form lose one inch of its height.

"I must now in very few words pass over more than a month. The good ship had steadily pursued her way, and was rapidly approaching the end of the voyage. No event of importance had occurred since the scene depicted above. The General, contrary to expectations, became stronger; but alas! as his bodily health improved, so did it become the more manifest that his mind was gone. The blow on the head had done much for him, and though his life was spared, and his strength, comparatively speaking, restored, yet it was only to be an imbecile simple and harmless, it is true, but none the less an imbecile. Stevenson, so tender to his cabin, as much as prudence and her duties to her father allowed—been cheered by visits from the noble girl. These visits were necessarily few and short, but still they were sufficient to assure him of her undying love and confidence. She could not but confess that appearances were very much against him; that a dark cloud overshadowed him; yet she could not for a moment believe that he was guilty of a crime. What tongue could tell the pleasure these sweet assurances gave to Stevenson. Supported by them and his own inner consciousness, he could defy the rest. The evidence against him might be clear, and his chances of refuting them apparently very small, yet his trust in God was never shaken; he knew there must be another explanation of the evidence, and he believed in due time the explanation would appear.

"Such was the position of affairs when the Stirling Castle arrived in the Thames. Stevenson was taken before the magistrates; and upon the evidence already narrated, was formally committed for trial, some of the principal passengers being bound over to appear when called upon. I will not attempt to describe the parting between the lovers; it was hard to bear; hard for Rose, although she was going to a comfortable home, surrounded by friends; but how doubly hard for Stevenson, who was not only parted from his heart's idol, but was going to a felon's cell with a stigma on his name. What wonder that he was overcome, that his courage failed him, that he fairly broke down. But over this I draw my veil; manhood's tears are terrible to see, and can only flow from a heart's agony.

"Rose, too, was fearfully prostrated and almost heart-broken; but like a brave little woman as she was, she collected herself, and knowing her lover's heart's idol, but was going to a felon's cell with a stigma on his name. What wonder that he was overcome, that his courage failed him, that he fairly broke down. But over this I draw my veil; manhood's tears are terrible to see, and can only flow from a heart's agony.

"Rose, too, was fearfully prostrated and almost heart-broken; but like a brave little woman as she was, she collected herself, and knowing her lover's heart's idol, but was going to a felon's cell with a stigma on his name. What wonder that he was overcome, that his courage failed him, that he fairly broke down. But over this I draw my veil; manhood's tears are terrible to see, and can only flow from a heart's agony.

"I will. In the dim light of the cabin he may have been mistaken in his man."

"Rose shook her head, and yet even this she may have sent a thrill through her heart. 'My father may have been mistaken,' she whispered to herself; but again her spirits sank when she remembered his condition.

"The next morning Dr. Bailey, true to his word, called upon Rose, and brought with him a Dr. Smyth, a man who had made all the phases of insanity his special study. After a time they were shown into the General's room, and found him sitting up, cheerfully playing with his skull cap. A very few minutes served to convince them that he was quite an imbecile, and had no rational idea of what was passing around him. But when Dr. Smyth was told that this resulted from a blow on the head, he evinced more interest in the matter, and asked to be allowed to examine the scar. This he did, and the examination was long and careful. At length, calling Dr. Bailey to one side, a whispered conversation took place between them.

"All this time Rose was very nervous and anxious for the result. At last her god-father, turning to her said: 'My good friend here thinks it just possible that your father's reason may be restored. The fact is the blow on the head has broken the skull, and owing to not very skillful treatment when the wound was healing, a small piece of bone is left pressing on the brain. If this were removed, it is probable reason would be restored. Of course,' he continued, 'your father will have to undergo an operation; this is not necessarily dangerous. I will send you some medicine, and you must nurse him very carefully for the next few days; and then if we think him strong enough, it shall be done.'

time she was happy; how happy only those can tell who have been suddenly raised from the depths of despair to the heights of hope.

"For the next few days she redoubled her attentions to her father, and surely no invalid was half so well cared for as he, for did not her whole future happiness depend on his restoration? Under such kind care and good Dr. Bailey's attention, he rapidly gained strength; but the days flew all too quickly, and it now wanted only a little more than a week to the trial. This was fixed for a Monday; and on the Monday previous the doctors thought the attempt might be made. It was done; and the patient bore it much better than was expected; but the result could not be known all at once, as he was, of course, greatly prostrated. During the whole of Tuesday and Wednesday he was in a very critical state; but on Thursday the danger was considered past, and on that evening, as Rose was sitting at his bedside, she heard his voice calling feebly: 'Rose, Rose!'

"How quiet the ship is! he murmured. I cannot feel her roll at all. I wish the breeze would come, so that we might get home."

"Rose hardly knew what to make of this or what to answer; at first she thought his mind was still affected, but the clear, intelligent look of his eyes convinced her that he was sane. As gently as possible she soothed him, and he soon fell off to sleep again. When Dr. Bailey, coming in soon after, was told of the success of the operation, he was much pleased; but he explained the patient's quietude, especially that all topics should be avoided likely to excite the patient's mind.

"From this time the General improved very rapidly, so much so as to be able to walk in the garden on Sunday. Following the instructions of the doctor, Rose conversed only of commonplace and present matters, although of course to some extent the past must have been alluded to. The plan of her father's change of position, that is from ship-board to London. At the same time she was burning to question him as to what he remembered of that terrible night.

"On Monday morning when he went into his bedroom he said: 'My dear child, you look very ill and careworn; and then, receiving no answer, he continued: 'I have been thinking about that Lieutenant Stevenson; what has become of him? This is the third day Rose could hear, so falling over her knees at his bedside she—with many a sob and tear—told him all.

"I pass on now to the trial of the prisoner. It happened that this was the first trial of the kind since the early when the trial commenced. I should like to describe to you the scene in court, did time permit, but I must ask you to imagine it. Captain Bowly proved the finding of Stevenson in the General's cabin, and described the state in which he appeared. Colonel Morton proved the fact of the will having been made and deposited in the box, and told how it was against Stevenson's interests, which fact was known to Rose, and therefore presumably to Stevenson also. Others proved the finding of the box, hidden away behind the prisoner's bed; and last of all the paper written by the General was brought forward, and the counsel for the defense did all that could be done, but was quite unable to dispute the facts or break down the evidence. Then came the judge's summation up. It pointed out that although the evidence was clear, yet it was in a measure what is termed circumstantial; on the other hand, it must necessarily be so, as many murders were committed with no actual evidence. Much more he said fairly and pointedly, and then the jury retired. You might have heard a pin drop when they returned, and although the foreman pronounced the word 'guilty' in a low tone, it seemed to reach and re-echo through the whole court.

"Prisoner at the bar," said the Judge, in a solemn voice, 'a jury of your fellow-countrymen have found you guilty of the death crime, and I am bound to say that I agree with the verdict. I am quite willing to believe that you did it under a sudden impulse, hardly knowing what you did; nay, I may believe that in the first instance you were not even conscious of the will; but finding yourself discovered either by the servant or the General, you committed the greater crime to conceal the less. It therefore only remains to me, he continued, assuming the black cap, while a visible shudder trembled through the room, 'to pass sentence upon you, which is—'

"But just at that moment there was a disturbance near the door, and a female voice was heard imploring, 'For mercy's sake, let us pass. It is General Paige. The prisoner is innocent! All eyes turned to the spot; and Rose, in a state of great excitement, was seen leading her father forward.

"The counsel for the defense immediately obtained permission to place the General in the witness-box, where, on account of his great feebleness, he was accommodated with a chair. After the usual preliminaries, the question was asked: 'Do you know the prisoner at the bar?'

"Yes; it is Lieutenant Stevenson."

"Did he enter your cabin the night your servant was murdered?'

"No; not that I am aware of."

"But you found a portion of his name on a piece of paper. See; here it is."

"Yes; but it appears I did not finish it. Give it me, and I will do so now." Handing back the paper, he continued, 'There; that is the man who attacked me.'

"The mystery was all explained now; the completed word was—STEWART; and all this misery had been caused by a man who had been in the room. The steward then was actually the man. No one had thought of him, and yet what more easy! He was always in and out of the cabins, and would be sure to notice the box; and evidently thinking of some valuable, had stolen it. Having done so, and finding suspicion already fallen upon Stevenson, nothing was more or less than the empty box where it was found. All this was ascertained to be substantially correct; for the man was arrested, and soon after confessed his dreadful crime. 'I have nothing more to add, except that Stevenson was discharged without a stain on his name, and that the old General, yielding to the solicitations of his daughter, and convinced of Stevenson's worth, consented to their engagement. In due season they were married, and, as the story-books say, 'were happy ever after.' And both will ever remember how, although 'cast down, they were not destroyed.'—Chambers' Journal.

Horror of Morocco.

The following extracts from a letter recently received in England from the Rev. J. B. Gushburg, missionary to the Jews at Mogador, Morocco, give an account of the dreadful famine still raging in that part of Africa:

"The MISERABLE, Mogador, Morocco, Feb. 26.—We have passed a season of indescribable difficulties, misery, sickness and trial ever since I returned to my station. Hundreds, I may well say thousands, pressed to the gates for relief; skeletons emaciated by hunger, almost naked, bearing traces of every possible disease and suffering—who, for a loaf of bread, would be trodden down by the crush, bruised, and not unfrequently seriously injured; sometimes a leg or arm broken in their eagerness to be the first to receive relief. When out of town on my daily walks I hardly ever return without picking up a dying man, woman, or child, sometimes two or three in a time, brought back to town a plate of soup and a cover were sufficient to bring life to the dying. More than once have I met a young man or woman coming from the country with no strength to finish the last painful duty of burying the remains of their loved ones. The effort to get up from the ground. The starvation was not confined to men; cattle, camels, horses, asses, sheep and poultry have all, or nearly all, perished. But the dogs have survived, and in their insatiable hunger, and no food in towns, and being abandoned by their masters, who either died or left their villages in search of food, fed on human flesh. Roaming over the country in bands of twenty, thirty, or fifty, they sometimes even attacked any human being they met and devoured him. Some twenty men, women and children were eaten up within a mile of the town. One day I was busy by the river side, giving assistance to a dying young woman, when our attention was drawn to an Arab who was being eaten by dogs. He was dead before we reached him, and we had only the painful duty of burying the remains decently in the sand. I must apologize for writing about such hideous misery to you. But, dreadful to read, what is it to witness? There are cases which have come before me that I cannot really put on paper. More than fifteen thousand have in this town perished from hunger. There were dead or dying lying in every street in and out of town. The dead were buried not more than one span deep, and the dogs soon uncovered the earth. The sight of so much misery to our fellow-creatures has naturally affected the Europeans, and among the victims we have to deplore our excellent schoolmistress. She was devoted to a school, and a truly sensible Christian lady. On Friday she left the school, and was so more among the living the Sunday following. Small-pox, measles, cholera and typhoid fever (the latter now raging) have succeeded each other. There is hardly a house where there is not one sick person. In the Mullah or Jewish quarter, every house has been turned into a hospital."

"I pass on now to the trial of the prisoner. It happened that this was the first trial of the kind since the early when the trial commenced. I should like to describe to you the scene in court, did time permit, but I must ask you to imagine it. Captain Bowly proved the finding of Stevenson in the General's cabin, and described the state in which he appeared. Colonel Morton proved the fact of the will having been made and deposited in the box, and told how it was against Stevenson's interests, which fact was known to Rose, and therefore presumably to Stevenson also. Others proved the finding of the box, hidden away behind the prisoner's bed; and last of all the paper written by the General was brought forward, and the counsel for the defense did all that could be done, but was quite unable to dispute the facts or break down the evidence. Then came the judge's summation up. It pointed out that although the evidence was clear, yet it was in a measure what is termed circumstantial; on the other hand, it must necessarily be so, as many murders were committed with no actual evidence. Much more he said fairly and pointedly, and then the jury retired. You might have heard a pin drop when they returned, and although the foreman pronounced the word 'guilty' in a low tone, it seemed to reach and re-echo through the whole court."

"Prisoner at the bar," said the Judge, in a solemn voice, 'a jury of your fellow-countrymen have found you guilty of the death crime, and I am bound to say that I agree with the verdict. I am quite willing to believe that you did it under a sudden impulse, hardly knowing what you did; nay, I may believe that in the first instance you were not even conscious of the will; but finding yourself discovered either by the servant or the General, you committed the greater crime to conceal the less. It therefore only remains to me, he continued, assuming the black cap, while a visible shudder trembled through the room, 'to pass sentence upon you, which is—'

"But just at that moment there was a disturbance near the door, and a female voice was heard imploring, 'For mercy's sake, let us pass. It is General Paige. The prisoner is innocent! All eyes turned to the spot; and Rose, in a state of great excitement, was seen leading her father forward."

"The counsel for the defense immediately obtained permission to place the General in the witness-box, where, on account of his great feebleness, he was accommodated with a chair. After the usual preliminaries, the question was asked: 'Do you know the prisoner at the bar?'

"Yes; it is Lieutenant Stevenson."

"Did he enter your cabin the night your servant was murdered?'

"No; not that I am aware of."

"But you found a portion of his name on a piece of paper. See; here it is."

"Yes; but it appears I did not finish it. Give it me, and I will do so now." Handing back the paper, he continued, 'There; that is the man who attacked me.'

"The mystery was all explained now; the completed word was—STEWART; and all this misery had been caused by a man who had been in the room. The steward then was actually the man. No one had thought of him, and yet what more easy! He was always in and out of the cabins, and would be sure to notice the box; and evidently thinking of some valuable, had stolen it. Having done so, and finding suspicion

already fallen upon Stevenson, nothing was more or less than the empty box where it was found. All this was ascertained to be substantially correct; for the man was arrested, and soon after confessed his dreadful crime. 'I have nothing more to add, except that Stevenson was discharged without a stain on his name, and that the old General, yielding to the solicitations of his daughter, and convinced of Stevenson's worth, consented to their engagement. In due season they were married, and, as the story-books say, 'were happy ever after.' And both will ever remember how, although 'cast down, they were not destroyed.'—Chambers' Journal.

"The MISERABLE, Mogador, Morocco, Feb. 26.—We have passed a season of indescribable difficulties, misery, sickness and trial ever since I returned to my station. Hundreds, I may well say thousands, pressed to the gates for relief; skeletons emaciated by hunger, almost naked, bearing traces of every possible disease and suffering—who, for a loaf of bread, would be trodden down by the crush, bruised, and not unfrequently seriously injured; sometimes a leg or arm broken in their eagerness to be the first to receive relief. When out of town on my daily walks I hardly ever return without picking up a dying man, woman, or child, sometimes two or three in a time, brought back to town a plate of soup and a cover were sufficient to bring life to the dying. More than once have I met a young man or woman coming from the country with no strength to finish the last painful duty of burying the remains of their loved ones. The effort to get up from the ground. The starvation was not confined to men; cattle, camels, horses, asses, sheep and poultry have all, or nearly all, perished. But the dogs have survived, and in their insatiable hunger, and no food in towns, and being abandoned by their masters, who either died or left their villages in search of food, fed on human flesh. Roaming over the country in bands of twenty, thirty, or fifty, they sometimes even attacked any human being they met and devoured him. Some twenty men, women and children were eaten up within a mile of the town. One day I was busy by the river side, giving assistance to a dying young woman, when our attention was drawn to an Arab who was being eaten by dogs. He was dead before we reached him, and we had only the painful duty of burying the remains decently in the sand. I must apologize for writing about such hideous misery to you. But, dreadful to read, what is it to witness? There are cases which have come before me that I cannot really put on paper. More than fifteen thousand have in this town perished from hunger. There were dead or dying lying in every street in and out of town. The dead were buried not more than one span deep, and the dogs soon uncovered the earth. The sight of so much misery to our fellow-creatures has naturally affected the Europeans, and among the victims we have to deplore our excellent schoolmistress. She was devoted to a school, and a truly sensible Christian lady. On Friday she left the school, and was so more among the living the Sunday following. Small-pox, measles, cholera and typhoid fever (the latter now raging) have succeeded each other. There is hardly a house where there is not one sick person. In the Mullah or Jewish quarter, every house has been turned into a hospital."

"I pass on now to the trial of the prisoner. It happened that this was the first trial of the kind since the early when the trial commenced. I should like to describe to you the scene in court, did time permit, but I must ask you to imagine it. Captain Bowly proved the finding of Stevenson in the General's cabin, and described the state in which he appeared. Colonel Morton proved the fact of the will having been made and deposited in the box, and told how it was against Stevenson's interests, which fact was known to Rose, and therefore presumably to Stevenson also. Others proved the finding of the box, hidden away behind the prisoner's bed; and last of all the paper written by the General was brought forward, and the counsel for the defense did all that could be done, but was quite unable to dispute the facts or break down the evidence. Then came the judge's summation up. It pointed out that although the evidence was clear, yet it was in a measure what is termed circumstantial; on the other hand, it must necessarily be so, as many murders were committed with no actual evidence. Much more he said fairly and pointedly, and then the jury retired. You might have heard a pin drop when they returned, and although the foreman pronounced the word 'guilty' in a low tone, it seemed to reach and re-echo through the whole court."

"Prisoner at the bar," said the Judge, in a solemn voice, 'a jury of your fellow-countrymen have found you guilty of the death crime, and I am bound to say that I agree with the verdict. I am quite willing to believe that you did it under a sudden impulse, hardly knowing what you did; nay, I may believe that in the first instance you were not even conscious of the will; but finding yourself discovered either by the servant or the General, you committed the greater crime to conceal the less. It therefore only remains to me, he continued, assuming the black cap, while a visible shudder trembled through the room, 'to pass sentence upon you, which is—'

"But just at that moment there was a disturbance near the door, and a female voice was heard imploring, 'For mercy's sake, let us pass. It is General Paige. The prisoner is innocent! All eyes turned to the spot; and Rose, in a state of great excitement, was seen leading her father forward."

"The counsel for the defense immediately obtained permission to place the General in the witness-box, where, on account of his great feebleness, he was accommodated with a chair. After the usual preliminaries, the question was asked: 'Do you know the prisoner at the bar?'

"Yes; it is Lieutenant Stevenson."

"Did he enter your cabin the night your servant was murdered?'

"No; not that I am aware of."

"But you found a portion of his name on a piece of paper. See; here it is."

"Yes; but it appears I did not finish it. Give it me, and I will do so now." Handing back the paper, he continued, 'There; that is the man who attacked me.'

"The mystery was all explained now; the completed word was—STEWART; and all this misery had been caused by a man who had been in the room. The steward then was actually the man. No one had thought of him, and yet what more easy! He was always in and out of the cabins, and would be sure to notice the box; and evidently thinking of some valuable, had stolen it. Having done so, and finding suspicion cards mailed by every morning train; in the latter, the father described his daughter as follows:

"My daughter is seventeen years old, tall and slim, dark hair and eyes, with laurels. None of clothes are missing, but an old dress and shoes she wore yesterday, and the night dress she had on last night."

Wood is a handsome young fellow, the beau ideal of the average stage-robbing dime-novel hero, and he doubtless smote the pretty, romantic little girl's heart at first sight. The Sheriff says his daughter was never known to have had any communication with him, but the result proves that Mr. Conklin has not kept as good watch of his daughter as he has of his prisoners. It now turns out that decidedly anonymous messages passed between Wood and the girl, the notes being hidden in the often specially-prepared food. Wood was a general favorite and was apparently assisted in his game by the other prisoners, who now assert that they have all along been cognizant of the progress of events—and it is hinted that the girl had made arrangements by which there should be a general jail delivery on the night, it being only frustrated by the Sheriff being awakened by the noise kicked up on the escape of Wood and his inamorata.

It seems that they left for the south along the Mobile and Portage railways; they were tracked along the road-bed for twelve miles, as far as the woods north of Arlington station, where the tracks left off and were lost among the trees. The excitement in the city, when the news first became public, was intense. There were talks of lynching, but there being no one who appeared to deserve such fate the notion was soon abandoned, though the popular cry was for blood on general principle. Gangs of men went out on volunteer skinning expeditions, and by noon at least fifty men had followed the tracks down the railroad and were beating the brush north of Arlington.

At three o'clock the eloping couple were surprised and captured. The Conklin girl was in boys' clothes, with her 'bangs' cut off. She was evidently much the worse for the tramp. The bawling and the girl were returned to the Portage jail, and the latter will doubtless be prosecuted for assisting her lover to escape.

The affair has throughout created great excitement and indignation in Portage, and the greater indignation at the insane romance of the silly girl's nature; her reputation is of course blasted for life.

Telegraph Wires.

There are over 5,000 miles of telegraph wire strung along and across this city, and yet the island is only thirteen miles long by two and a half broad at the widest part. They make the aggregate a mass of metal weighing over a million and a half of pounds, or 750 tons. Some of the lines require a heavier wire than others, but latterly there has been a desire to reduce the weight, and the lines of wire now in actual use, but there are many wires suspended over and from houseposts that are not now in use, on account of changes of routes and location, and have been allowed to remain because, for one reason, it would not pay to remove them, and, for another, the probability that they may be required at a subsequent period and thus come again into use. This is especially the case with what are known as utility wires, leading from houses to offices, or between a downtown office and an uptown headquarters or factory. Some wires extend from New York offices across the rivers by means of cables, etc., to the telegraph office, and in New Jersey; but as these are mostly of a private character, of which no record can be obtained, their extent in the city can only be estimated. If these and the wires not in use are taken into account, the weight of metal in this suspended overhead will aggregate at least 1,000 tons or 2,000,000 pounds, and the increase of distance traveled over by these wires may make the aggregate 7,500 miles.

To charge these wires with the proper amount of electricity necessary to make them the medium for the rapid conveyance of messages from one part of the city to another, over thirty thousand heavy cells are required, the aggregate electric force of which can hardly be estimated except by a person thoroughly conversant with the science of electricity. These batteries are formed of various sizes of cells, in the different companies' offices, and the amount of blue vitriol or sulphate of copper used annually amounts to hundreds of thousands of pounds; the force being produced mainly from the action of the blue vitriol on the copper and zinc suspended in the cells.—N. Y. Commercial-Advertiser.

The Shenandoah.

Everybody has heard of the Shenandoah, the notorious privateer of the Southerners, in the American civil war, but I do not suppose that many know what was the ultimate fate of the ship when the war ended. Of all places in the world she now lies 'fathoms deep' off the island of Socotra in the Arabian Gulf. Her story is a strange one. She was busy burning whalers in Behring Strait when Wadell, her commander, the mildest mannered man who ever sentled ship or cut a throat, heard of the collapse of the South. His occupation being gone, and being without home or harbor to which he durst with safety return, he ran the Shenandoah to Liverpool and immediately surrendered her to Her Majesty's ship Danegal, in the Mersey. She was handed over to the American Consul and afterwards bought at auction by Nicol, Fleming & Co.—a firm that has earned a notoriety in connection with the failure of the City of Glasgow Bank—for the Sultan of Zanzibar. After remaining idly at Zanzibar for some years she was sent to Bombay for repairs, but founded off Socotra, all hands being lost except one Englishman and a few lascars.—London World.

THE REPUBLICAN.

OAKLAND, MARYLAND.

JAS. A. HAYDEN,
Editor and Proprietor.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.
One copy, one year, $1 50
Six months, $1 00
Three months, $0 75
INvariably in advance.

TERMS OF ADVERTISING.
First insertion, $1 per square of 8 lines;
second insertion, 50 cents; third and subsequent insertions, 25 cents. Special contracts for advertising longer than three months.

Correspondents must enclose full name and
address, not necessarily for publication, but as a private guarantee of good faith. Hebet-er communications will not be returned.

SATURDAY, MAY 21, 1879.

As our readers will observe by his card, Dr. Fundenberg is in town.
All needing treatment in his line
should give him a call.

The Baltimore Sun vigorously denounces the way in which the "machine-boys" managed the primaries
in that city on Monday.

Montgomery Blair is said to be about to start a Democratic newspaper in Washington. Here's a calumity to the party which is outside the jurisdiction of the caucus.

One of the effects of the adoption of the new constitution in California is the driving of a number of mining corporations from that state to New York. Under the new regime the companies claim that their capital is imprisoned in California. New York is jubilant at the new move, and California is correspondingly depressed.

Several influential members of the Brooklyn Club have followed the example of the New York Moderate Drinkers' Association in regard to no treating. A circular issued by them states that this custom is probably responsible for more defalcations and breaches of trust than any other vice of the present day, besides being responsible for the typical American bummer.

"The issue is just what we want,"
has been the burden of the Democratic testimony from Washington.
How does it happen then, that the majority are "uzzling their brains to bring matters into a shape more agreeable to their feelings, and that some of them are suggesting further experiments avowedly with the view of making an issue favorable to the party's interests?"

If the Bourbon leaders in Congress
were to unanimously adopt a resolution to about this effect, "Resolved, that we are mostly fools," they would develop a capacity for absorbing wisdom that has not lately been conspicuous. There is a chance for the man who reaches the conclusion that he still has several things to learn.
Our Congressional Bourbons should begin at the A B C's.—Memphis Avalanche, (Demo.)

The Boston Herald says: "Secretary Sherman seems to be coming to the front as a candidate for President in 1880. Of course, he would have the moral support of the administration. Should he run for Governor in Ohio he would be fairly on the road, and the Republicans could not afford to set him aside. It would be a pretty opening of the campaign for Sherman and Thurman to have a wrestle in Ohio."

Governor Culom, of Illinois, has sent an enthusiastic letter to the President, commending his veto of the Army bill, and assuring him that the people of Illinois, and of the whole West, applaud his refusal to abdicate the powers conferred upon him by the Constitution, and believe they can rely upon him to still resist
the threatened encroachments upon his prerogatives, and upon the liberties of the people as represented and embodied in the Executive. The Governor speaks for the whole West,
but he might have said the same thing of the whole North without danger of erring.

The annual effect of Democratic economy is showing itself again in the exhaustion of many of the apportionalations about the departments.
One of the most important is that for printing for the United States courts, and some of these have been obliged to defer important business till appropriations for the next fiscal year are available. Unless the Legislative and Judicial bill becomes a law before July, the interference with the business of the courts will prove a serious inconvenience to the public. This annual crippling of the efficient working of the departments results entirely from the attempt to make a false showing of economy by cutting appropriations below the figures which every member of the committee knows to be necessary for promptly carrying on public work.

A Slate Smasher.

If his own "sate" has been smashed, Senator Whyte is bent on the smashing of other people's sates.
Also. As a "sate smasher," Mr.
Whyte may prove a success. He has had a good deal of experience in fixing them up, and he knows as thoroughly as anybody how to break up as well as how to form a combination. His personal retirement does not necessarily mean the retirement of his friends, and Mr. Whyte is working as actively as ever. He held another long conference this week with the same distinguished Democratic official, and when two such shrewd heads come together,
the opposition had better look to itself. All the signs point to a turbulent campaign, and if there be not war to the knife between the two factions of the Democratic party, it will be because there is a clear break down on one side or the other.—Baltimorean, Democratic.

Still Another Democratic Slate.

A few weeks since it looked as tho' Continental William would have his pathway, to the Democratic nomination for Governor, unobstructed by any other candidate within the party.
We hear now of a new combination which may seriously interfere with his success. The Eastern Shore and Southern Maryland are said to favor
the new division of "the leaves and fishes." The distribution is as follows:

"For Governor, Chas. B. Roberts,
of Carroll; for Attorney General, William M. Merrick, of Howard; for Comptroller, Gen. E. L. F. Hard-castle, of Talbot; for Clerk of the Court Appeals, Jas. S. Franklin, of Anne Arundel; for State Treasurer,
Andrew G. Chapman; for President of the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal, John Ritchie, of Frederick."

Should this combination find favor,
it will show the prevalence of a spirit antagonistic to the Ring, that has heretofore manipulated party nominations, but will not free the State from the Democratic incubus, that has been crushing it to the earth for these last twelve years.—Frederick Examiner.

The following "chips" from the Cumberland Civilian are to the point:

If anything would make the heart of the Baltimore ring managers sad
it would be to have some brutal U.
S. soldier, clad in despotic blue cloth, relentlessly prevent the gentle blackguards and ruffians who secure Democratic victories in that city,
from carrying out the usual programme and giving any required money.

The removal of a wounded Union soldier in the employ of the U. S.
Senate to make way for Harry Gilson, an ex-Confederate raider helps to harmonize the people, and obliterate the memory of the war. Won't they try to be consistent now, and haul down the stars and stripes to make room for the stars and bars
over the capitol.

The people must have known that the Democratic cry of economy was all a sham and a fraud. They may find incontrovertible evidence of this in the fact that the Senate has appropriated $25,000 more for its officers
this year than was ever paid them in any one year. This too, in the face of reductions elsewhere in every department of the government.

The "army interference bill," so-called, which the Democrats passed, aimed to wipe out not only the war legislation, but the legislation of our ancestors back to the days of Washington. It was a bare faced attempt on the part of the States Rights Secession party to put the United States government in such a position that it would not have power to use either
the army or navy to suppress a rebellion. The President's veto exposed the revolutionary project, and should be a lesson to the revolutionists in both branches of Congress.

Retrenchment in the Senate.

There was an illustration of the tendency of the Democratic majority in the Senate towards retrenchment in a debate of more than an hour's length last week over the amendment to the legislative bill, which contemplates making three more of the committee clerkships annual,
namely: Private Land Claims, Pensions and Military Affairs. This amendment was proposed by the Committee on Appropriations, and is advance in the line of extravagance
over anything in the record of Republican administration of the affairs of the Senate. The burden of the debate which was had on the proposition was not because it was extravagant, but because it did not include one or two other committees as well.
Mr. Maxey, the chairman of the Committee on Postoffices and Post-Roads, spoke eloquently in favor of the claims of his own clerk to a yearly salary. Even Mr. Beck was not frozen with horror at the suggestion of such extravagance. The only Democrats who lifted their voices in favor of severe, Spartan like economy were Saulsbury, of Delaware, and Houston, of Alabama. Saulsbury was opposed to it. He could bring from his own "little state" scores of farmers' sons who would undertake to tackle these clerkships at half the salary. He would like to cut down the President's salary to $25,000, and would not scruple to lay the axe at the root of Senatorial salaries as well.

Mr. Chandler was a little hard on the clerks, but said that of course it was none of his funeral. He thought they were already paid more than they earn. They got about $6 a day for seven days in the week, and at the end of a session are usually voted an "extra" of thirty or sixty days. The actual work they perform will average about two hours a day for the more active committees, and much less than that for the others. It is quite possible that all the committees
will succeed in getting annual clerks at this session or the next. The clerks are of course unanimous in favor of the increased salaries, and are exerting themselves to bring about a result so desirable.

As was anticipated, the Democratic primaries in this city yesterday resulted in the selection of a City Convention which will be virtually controlled by the ring of office holders
who are seeking to renunciate themselves. The respectable and disastitled elements of the party made a hard fight to overthrow the oligarchy
but the machinery of the party was against them. The gentlemen of the ring spent the money which they have accumulated in the arduous business of office holding with great liberality and they used influences which of themselves are enough to materially increase the discontent
which already disturbs the party.
The result yesterday means, we are afraid, a bad ticket. It means that the present incumbents of the best offices in the city are going to renunciate themselves—force themselves
upon the party—and demand a re-election next fall. We had hoped that these prosperous gentlemen, who have already overdrawn their account with the Democratic party, would have had the good taste, sense and discretion to refrain from forcing this fight. We hope that they will yet have sense enough to interpret the indignant protest which 3,500 Democrats entered at the polls yesterday.
We desire nothing so much as the success of the regular Democratic organization and it is because we desire peace and harmony next fall that we have urged the gentlemen known as "ring managers" to quietly step aside. We have believed, and we believe now, that the reckless arrogant, selfish course which they are pursuing will result in an independent movement. We have tried to prevent this thing and have tendered our advice by way of trying to check this growing revolt—at no time giving contenance to an Independent movement. We have simply warned the tyrannical clique of the Niagara which awaits them. With all the appliances in their hands they will not be likely to stop now. They will carry out their schemes. They will secure the organization to-day, and make their ticket according to programme. There is but one remedy for this sort of insolent disregard of the rights of other people and the interests of the Democratic party and the people will doubtless decide in due time whether to apply it or not.
—Balto. Gazette, (Demo.) Tuesday.

The Governor of Texas having vetted the appropriation bills passed by the legislature at the late session,
the legislators by dispersing have committed a blunder equal to that of Congress. There is consequently much excitement throughout the State, and the papers are discussing with acrimony the consequences following the failure to provide for paying the interest on the public debt,
or for the support of the public schools. The Texas Capital, published at Austin, a rabid greenback organ, is pouring hot shot into the Governor and the Democrats for bringing discredit upon the State by their management of the affairs. It points out that since the war, and especially since 1873, the Democrats have had unchecked control, yet their promises of an era of prosperity, resulting from economy and prudent legislation, have all been fulfilled. Instead of reducing the public debt, it has been doubled; instead of continuous free schools, they have been abolished altogether; the public officials have been paid with warrants, and positive repudiation is the result of the failure to pass the appropriation bills. Emigration has ceased, lands depreciated in value,
and justice is delayed to an extent that would not be tolerated in any other State of the Union. It is urged that the only cure for all these evils
is for the people to rise in their manhood, and sweep the Democrats out of the high places they have demonstrated themselves unable to fill. The motto of the Capital being—"Greenbacks for bondholders, greenbacks
for plowholders, greenbacks for gold gamblers, greenbacks for workmen, greenbacks for national bankers, greenbacks for the people,"— that journal is absurd enough to look to that crazy fantasy as the remedy
for all present evils.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

(Special Correspondence to The Republican.)

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 20, 1879.

Mr. Blaine yesterday made another assault upon the Democratic works, and many Confederate Senators who felt his steel have suffered from its keenness. The opportunity was a good one. As client Bourbons like Eaton, of Conn., Bayard and Saulsbury, of Delaware, and rebel chiefs like Hill, of Georgia, Butler
and Hampton, of South Carolina, and Morgan, of Alabama had made speeches in which they had magnified
their patriotism, until, as Mr.
Blaine remarked, it seemed as if the four mortuaries had all been forced into false positions by their compatriots, and were in mourning for what they had done unwittingly.
Then he read passages from the records of these patriots. He proved that Ben Hill, instead of having held back and mourned over secession and refused to fight his house and rejoice, as he claimed, had in reality voted for the Georgia secession organization. He showed that the Bayard and Saulsbury families, ruling
the little State of Delaware, had voted and spoken against the war
for the Union, and had in every possible way, short of open rebellion, encouraged the rebel states in their course. He showed that Butler, and Hampton and Morgan had uttered sentiments that did not comport with loyalty. All these men sprang forward to explain the record but they did not help themselves. They floundered and fell into worse sloughs than they climbed out of. Mr. Blaine came at them with new facts every time they denied and they had no place left to stand upon—a place as loyal men which they claim to be.
He reviewed the literature of the South, proving that it was filled with disloyal sentiment, placed there with unpatriotic intent. He showed that even the school books were inspired by a seditious spirit in order deliberately to mislead the young mind. In fact no speech so far in this controversy has contained such masses of facts to convict the ruling Southern Congress and out of a studied purpose to subvert the nation into a Confederacy and to destroy all respect for the Republic.

Of course the general appropriation bill with all its political legislation will pass in spite of the Republican protest, and the President will promptly veto it. What next?
It remains for the Democrats to say whether they will continue their re-
test which has cost them so dearly.
It is impossible to think that some will do it. But are the Bourbon leaves safe? That is a far question.
Mr. Lincoln has a good many disciples who hold his motto sacred,
and that it is always safe to rely upon the stability of the Democratic party for blundering at a crisis. It has blundered so fearfully already as to ensure the next President and the next Congress to loyal men. But it seems to me there is a chance that they even may see the hand-writing on the wall and hesitate to go further towards revolution. There is some hope that they will pass the appropriation bills clear of politics and soon go home.

The Democrats mean business in delaying action upon promotions in the Army; in fact they mean to prevent promotions so that, in case of an event of electing a President, he may provide for some rebel military heroes in the national Army.
Thus they mean to get possession of all the Government patronage. If the people will stand tamely by and see them snatch it. Fortunately the prospect is not so discouraging; there is no danger of that consummation,
and their present action can only work harm temporarily. Union soldiers who deserve promotion,
but can afford to await it at the hands of the Republican Senate of the future.

Commissioner Rann has made
two reports, which the President Ex-Confederates fearfully. The first was a report of the results of suppressing illicit distilling, from which it appears that nineteen revenue officers have been killed and thirty-four wounded in the Southern States, while trying to enforce the law, and that the cost has been a quarter of a million of dollars against a few hundred in the whole North. The other report relates to revenue raising. If the people of the Southern States, the amount from all being very large. This is rather a sorry picture for "honorable"
committees that deem it a reflection
to refer to losses in financial affairs.
LOGAN.

Gen. Chalmers, who distinguished himself by participating in the Fort Pillow massacre, and who is now a member of Congress, made a very honest attempt in the House, a few days since, to unload his share of that enormity. It was entirely voluntary on his part, and when he concluded his explanation the attendant remarks left him in a worse condition than he was before. The Democrats generally were very nervous over the discussion, and as soon as possible laid the matter on the table
thus cutting off the investigation Chalmers asked for. That an officer who participated in so infamous and cold blooded a massacre as that of Fort Pillow should sit in the Congress of the government where troops were thus assassinated is a shame to humanity.—Camb. Civilian.

Lightning hit itself out in Wilmington, Del., Saturday. It struck a number of houses and stunned a dozen persons, and then skipped out of Delaware into Maryland, where it got plenty of elbow room, and did no further damage.

"WHAT'S DAT DARK DE HOLE?"

—The familiar fable of the two dar-
keys who stumbled upon a cave, wherein they saw a family of young bruins, is pertinent to the straining situation in which Northern Democrats find themselves. One darkey went in to get the little bears, it will be recalled, while the other stood guard at the entrance. The latter fell asleep, and woke up just in time to see old Mrs. Bruin about half way inside the narrow mouth of the cave. Instantly he rushed forward, grabbed her tail, and hauled with all his might. The inside African called out: "What's dat dark de hole?"
The tail-holder rejoined: "Golly, chile, fly foh yo' life. If dis tail give way, you find what dark de hole."

The South is inside the cave of power at Washington, trying to rob
the nation of the results of the war.
Its Northern ally has been standing sentinel outside. The nation that gave birth to those results at such fearful cost has come to the mouth of the cave, determined on their rescue.
The tail holding of the Northern Democrat for the next twenty months
must be done on the aroused and alarmed sentiment of the rapidly solidifying North. "What's dat dark de hole?" inquires the Southern faction that thought itself safely in possession of the Capitol. It will find out what "darks de hole" if the fall of the Solid North should slip through the feeble fingers of its Northern ally. And slip it surely will by and by.—Boston Traveler.

An argument that is very frequently aired by the gentlemen of the Senate and House who have come back into the Union in order to "go in for the old flag and an appropriation" is that the Northwest has drawn largely upon the national treasury, while the South has gotten hardly anything in the way of cash
from the governmental strong box.
Leaving out altogether the question of deserts, and with a mere passing mention of the sums expended upon the Mississippi jetties and for the deepening of Southern harbors, a sufficient answer to the clamors of the reconstructed members may be found in the statement that the eleven seceding states, paid in internal revenue taxes $201,906,696.15 from June 30th, 1866, to June 30th, 1878,
while in the same time the receipts
from Ohio aggregated $215,010,620.51;
from Illinois, $211,187,312.35, and from New York, $281,406,766.25.
And to compare the returns of the last fiscal year (ending June 30th, 1878), the seceding states paid only $11,112,912.15, while Ohio alone returned over three and a half millions more; Illinois over eight and a half millions more, and New York three millions and three-quarters more than the aggregate amount paid by the whole eleven disloyal states.

Tuesday was an important day in Congress, after defeating Fort's amendment to Warner's silver bill, making the price at which silver should be brought for coinage its market price, securing the difference between the bullion and the coin values to the government, passed an amendment
making the cost of coinage this difference, which accomplishes the same purpose. As the passage of this amendment defeats one of the great objects of the bill, the House adjourned to avoid a final vote. The greater part of the day in the Senate was taken up in a desultory colloquy between Senator Whyte on the floor
and Senators Conkling, Windom, Edmonds and Hoar in their seats, on the states' rights question, followed by a discussion on Louisiana politics
between Senators Jones and Kellogg. A vote was finally reached on the Legislative bill, the measure,
with the Democratic political sections, passing by a vote of 27 to 37.
The bill will not reach the President before next week. The Senate adjourned till Thursday to attend the Pimlico race.

The cotton-milling interests of the South are rapidly growing in importance and to such an extent that the newspapers of New England are calling the attention of their readers to the great progress of the states
south of the Potomac in this branch of industry. North Carolina alone has 250 mills, and, since the close of the war, no less than one hundred and eighty-three have begun operations. From some the returns have been more than satisfactory, and a few have done reasonably well, and a few have not realized expectations. This is only natural, but there is certainly presented to the South, in the proper development of this interest, an enormous opportunity for the increase of the wealth of the cotton growing States.

The influence of whiskey is shown in the fact that the government has had three years of campaigning against the moonshiners in the South, during which time 51 persons have been killed or wounded, and nearly 5,500 arrests made; and yet the backcountry farmers continue to turn their corn into liquor without the permission of the revenue officers.

TELEGRAPHIC.

MR. BLAINE'S DAY.

WASHINGTON, May 19.—There are but few men in the Senate who attract large crowds upon the occasion of a set speech, and conspicuous
among the few stands Senator Blaine.
As, owing to a parliamentary manoeuvre, the House held no session today, and the Senate was naturally the centre of all attraction, the galleries were filled, and many were unable to obtain even standing room, while on the floor every foot of available space was occupied by Congressmen and other persons entitled to the privilege. Mr. Blaine spoke for over two hours. His speech was entirely extempore, and confined to no particular line of argument upon any particular subject. It was not strong in the sense in which speeches are usually considered, nor can it be compared to the powerful effort of Senator Conkling several weeks ago.
Mr. Blaine's principal object seemed to be to vindicate Daniel Webster, whom the Democrats, and notably
Mr. Eaton, have been trying to make out a state's rights man, and to establish the constitutional right of the executive to veto such bills as he might regard as obnoxious. But Mr. Blaine did not stop here. He covered a great deal of ground, and touched upon all the points that have been made recently by Democratic speakers. At the start he addressed his remarks almost exclusively to Senator Eaton, with whom he had a controversy the other day as to whether Mr. Webster had ever spoken of the Union as a "confederacy."
His allusions to Mr. Eaton were very severe. He ridiculed the latter's want of familiarity with Webster's writings, and intimated that he had obtained his information from most mischievous work, based upon wilful
misrepresentation and falsehood,
written by Alexander H. Stephens.
Mr. Blaine read from the works of Mr. Webster, and dealt summarily with the point at issue that he left not a single doubt as to Mr. Webster's theory of the Union. During the remarks of Mr. Blaine Mr. Eaton was manifestly restless, and he several times interrupted the speaker
with questions that showed ill-temper, and at one time he jumped to his feet and demanded to know if the Senator from Maine meant to make a personal attack upon him, but Mr.
Blaine had no such intention, and with pleasant courtesy replied to the irate Connecticut Senator that he was only handling him officially. The tilts at reporter between the two senators created a great deal of excitement at the expense of Mr. Eaton.
In the midst of the latter's excitement he repeated his assertion that so far as he was concerned, he would not appropriate one dollar to the army while the President held out in his policy. Mr. Blaine tried to get Mr. Eaton to acknowledge that this was the programme of the Democratic party, but failed. Mr.
Blaine's allusion to the shifting of the scenes by which Mr. Beck had gracefully retired from the leadership of the revolutionists, and the gene-man from Connecticut—a New England man—had taken his place, was telling in its sarcasm.

Mr. Blaine next took in hand Senator Hill, of Georgia, who happened not to be present, however. He exposed the latter's pretensions to royalty, and showed by the records of Georgia that while Mr. Hill had once said that he felt as badly as if he had lost his father when the secession resolutions were passed in his state, he was one of the large majority who voted for the resolution showing thereby that if 208 men wanted to murder his parent he was willing to join them for the sake of being with the majority. This was received with much laughter, and had Mr. Hill been present a stormy scene might have ensued.

Mr. Blaine touched upon several other Democrats, among whom was Senator Bayard, who felt himself called upon to make a vigorous defence of his state and his father, who was his predecessor in the Senate.
After Mr. Blaine concluded his speech, which was over two hours
long, Senator Vance of North Carolina, took the floor. He is famous for his wit, and in manners and tone resembles Mr. Hill. His speech today was his maiden effort in the Senate. It was not so much an argument in favor of the repeal of the Supervisors' law as it was an attempt to ridicule of the Republican argument. This is the Senator Vance who was elected a senator in 1870 and refused admission. His allusion to this fact to-day and a sort of humorous sally of the Republicans for inviting him to come back into the Union and then closing the door in his face was very amusing.

CROP PROSPECTS IN IOWA.

BURLINGTON, IOWA, May 19.—
The Hawkeye of this morning contains special crop reports from more than one hundred points in this State. They show an increased acreage of wheat and corn, and that both of these crops are in excellent condition. The season has been dry, which has enabled farmers to plow lands not tillable in a wet season. In a few localities the drought has done
some damage, but as a rule the recent rains came in time to leave the crops in good shape. Little will be needed in most of the sections within a week or ten days to keep the crops in good condition. Oats and hay will fall short of the yield of last year, owing to a decreased acreage sown and a dry season. Other crops promise a good yield.

LOCAL NEWS.

The pay car passed through Oakland Tuesday morning.

Mr. J. R. Bishop has erected an ice house on his lot on Second street.

A number of hands are engaged at work on the Oakland and Deer Park road.

"Bijah's Court" held a short session Wednesday evening. One case was disposed of.

The exercises at the Literary Society on Saturday evening were of the usual interesting character.

The B. & O. railroad changed time on Sunday. See new schedule in another column.

T. J. Peddicord and H. Wheeler Combs, Esqs., have been attending the Kingwood court this week.

The paint car has been at Oakland again, improving the appearance of things about the hotel.

200 sacks G. A. Salt for sale at Wm. P. Totten's Clean Cash Store, Oakland, Md. a26 tf.

The Sheriff's Sale in our last issue was dated wrong. The sale takes place on June 7th, instead of the 4th.

Saturday was a great day for our fishermen, quite a number being out. Some were very successful, and some not so much so.

Hon. B. F. M. Hartley, of Cumberland received the largest majority on the Council ticket, at the election in that city Monday.

The recent frequent rains have had a great effect upon the crops in all sections of the state, and the mountain fires have been extinguished.

Mr. Aden Everstine and family arrived in Oakland Tuesday, and intends to reside here permanently. They will keep summer boarders and transient customers.

The friends of Miss Gilpin, who made a successful debut in Baltimore, are endeavoring to arrange for her appearance at Cumberland, supported by a company from Ford's.

On Saturday, 17th inst., Claude Ambrose, a son of Capt. N. M. Ambrose, was run over by the car on the train road of the Lodi and Lumber Co., and had his right arm broken between the elbow and shoulder.

Dr. W. F. Funderburg, Oculist, and Aurist, from Cumberland, Md., is now stopping at the "Davis House," where all those suffering from diseases of the eye, ear, nose and throat can consult him every day in the week, excepting on Saturdays and Sundays. All consultations free. Hours, 9 A. M. to 1 P. M.

Ida, an interesting daughter of Jacob Brown, esq., and his youngest child, was taken ill a week ago with typhoid fever, and died Tuesday afternoon. She was ten years of age, and was of a loving and cheerful disposition, and a favorite among her playmates.—Cumt. Times.

On the 4th of June, at 10 o'clock A. M., the corner stone of the Trinity Reformed church will be laid. The services will be of a solemn character. The sermon will be preached by Rev. A. E. Truxel, of Somerset, Pa. A number of clergymen of the Reformed church will be present to assist.

The finances of Frostburg are in a healthy condition. During the year ending April 30th the receipts of the corporation were $3,557.32, and the disbursements, including some old debts, $3,510.29, leaving $47.03 in the treasury. The liabilities amount to $1,254.47; resources, $1,179.08; net indebtedness, $85.39.

Frostburg was kept in a tumult on Saturday by a dozen drunken men from Pompey Smash. The solitary night policeman was reinforced by a dozen specials, and numerous fights took place. Three of the ring-leaders were securely locked up, and the rest of the rioters attempted to release their comrades, but did not succeed.

More than twenty years ago a correspondent of the Scientific American communicated the following simple treatment for scarlet fever: When the first symptoms of the disease appear, anoint the victim from head to foot with the inside of a smoked ham, and renew the application as often as the flesh becomes dry. The writer had saved his own children, and after our publication we received a number of letters from persons who had tried the simple remedy in their own families with satisfactory success.

Church Services—Sunday.

M. E. Church.—Preaching by Rev. Mr. Smith, of Piedmont, of the M. E. Church South, at 7 o'clock, P. M.

Railroad Accident.

Sunday morning a freight train ran into the rear end of a stock train at Offutt's Switch, 2 1/2 miles west from Oakland, almost entirely demolishing the caboose and two cars, one loaded with sheep and the other with hogs. Several hogs and sheep were killed. The caboose was occupied by three persons, who fortunately escaped with but slight injuries.

Band of Hope.

The meeting of the Band of Hope on Thursday evening of last week was, as usual, well attended. The following programme was well rendered: Declamations, Charles Bowlers and Miss Stella Jarboe; selections, Misses Sarah Lawton and Ella Peddicord; essay, John A. Grant. Mr. Ison gave an interesting account of the proceedings of the State Temperance Alliance recently held in Baltimore.

Festival for the Band.

A strawberry and ice cream festival will be held by the young ladies of Oakland, on Thursday and Friday evenings, June 5th and 6th, at A. Loewenstein's new store room, on Alder street. Proceeds to be used in interest of the Oakland Cornet Band. All persons are cordially invited to be present.

COMMITTEE.

Real Estate Transfers.

The following is a list of real estate transfers filed for record in the office of W. H. Tower, Clerk of the Circuit Court for Garrett county, for the week ending May 21:

James Korns and wife to Frances Dond, Lot No. 8 in the town of Swanton; $100.

Henry Kiddle and wife to John S. Sigler, Military Lot No. 1228; $300.

Recovery of Sight.

Miss Catherine Murphy, aged 73, living in Jennor township, this county, had been blind in both eyes for a number of years, caused by cataracts. A short time ago Dr. W. F. Funderburg, the oculist, from Cumberland, Md., removed the cataract from her left eye. The operation was perfectly successful, the sight being entirely restored. The operation for the removal of a cataract is one of the most delicate in surgery, requiring the nicest manipulation and skill. Dr. F. may be congratulated on his universal success in these delicate operations.—Somerset Herald.

New Railroad Schedule.

The new schedule on the B. & O. R. R. went into effect on Sunday last. There are but few changes. The following is the new time table for the summer:

GOING WEST
No. 2.....	5:41 A. M.
No. 4.....	9:51 A. M.
No. 6.....	3:29 P. M.
No. 10.....	1:41 P. M.
Way.....	10:11 A. M.
GOING EAST.
No. 1.....	12:40 A. M.
No. 3.....	9:41 P. M.
No. 5.....	12:21 P. M.
No. 7.....	3:29 P. M.
Way.....	8:29 A. M.

Communion.

On last Sunday morning the children of St. Peter's church received their first holy communion. Father Trueschler, who for several weeks has been untiring in his efforts to instruct them, delivered a short address, which was attentively listened to by the vast audience in the church, consisting of Protestants as well as Catholics.

In the evening at Vespers, they re-assembled and renewed their baptismal vows. The reverend Father again delivered a few remarks, in which he said that all over the world it is the custom in the Catholic church for the first communicants to renew, on the day they receive their first holy communion, the vows that their sponsors made for them at baptism. He further told them that hereafter they would be left more to themselves and that they must make it the rule of their lives to preserve those vows and never to fall into temptation, and to devote every act of their lives to the glory of God.

The Cumberland Election.

Yesterday was a sort of "field day" in this city. We met the enemy and they are mostly ours. Out of six wards we carried five, two of which were lately represented by Democrats.

This is a substantial victory. The council for the ensuing year will stand ten Republicans (five holding over) to one Democrat. This with a Republican mayor also holding over, five Republicans (those elected yesterday) will hold over next year, and the election of one Republican next Spring will continue the control of the council in the hands of the Republicans. But this is some time off. We have more to do with the present.

This victory we regard as a hearty endorsement of the Republican administration under which we have lived for the past year, with its accompanying reforms and retrenchments. These were general, important and valuable. As a consequence we have the people expressing themselves at the polls, recording their verdict for good government. The new men they have sent into the council are instructed to assist in carrying out the policy of their predecessors, and are expected to see that there is no step backward in the excellent work inaugurated a year ago by the council, and so zealously maintained by our thoughtful, steady, cool and careful city's executive, Mayor Head.—Cumt. News, 20th.

Confirmation Services.

The most revered Archbishop Gibbons arrived in Oakland last Sunday evening. Fathers Brennan, of Cumberland, and O'Sullivan, of Washington, D. C., formerly stationed here, accompanied him. Monday morning after Mass, he administered the sacrament of Confirmation to about seventy persons, among whom were three converts.

Before and after administering the sacrament he delivered to the candidates an address, to which the most earnest attention was paid by persons of every denomination, who had assembled to witness the ceremony.

The address was plain, practical, and replete with good sense. He said to the candidates that, in receiving the Holy Ghost, the third person in the Blessed Trinity, they were made perfect Christians and soldiers of Christ, whom they must endeavor to follow, as He is the only perfect being, and to whom they owed all their graces and blessings. The sacrament of Confirmation, so called because it strengthens the Christian and confirms him in his faith, is administered in the following manner: The candidate, accompanied by his sponsor, advances and kneels before the bishop, who lays his hands upon him and invokes the sevenfold gifts of the Holy Ghost. The bishop then, with his thumb, anoints the candidate's forehead with chrism, in the sign of the cross, at the same time giving him a tap on the cheek, saying, pace tecum, (peace be with thee), and signifying that he may be called upon to defend his faith, in which he must never falter.

All who attended the services expressed themselves as being very much pleased with the Archbishop's remarks.

Nature's Triumph.

Nature, in her luxuriance, has clothed the hills and the dales with herb and shrub, whose earliest natures more require the earnest application of the scientific and inquiring mind to reveal their curative properties, for in the vegetable world a kindly providence has placed healing for all diseases yet discovered are vegetable in their nature, and while quinine has been accepted as the only remedy for one class, the extract of the buchu plant is rapidly taking its place as a sovereign remedy for other of those ills which afflict humanity. The type of diseases to which it is remedial is a broad one, and its manifestations are legion, but it may be stated in general terms that all diseases of the urinary organs, whether caused by climate, irregularity, or self-generated, submit at once to the operation of its power. Helmholtz's Buchu, for all such complaints, is the result of long research, and is acknowledged superior to all other preparations.

Wheat Prospects.

Two investigations of the growing crops were made by the Department of Agriculture in two series of circular inquiries to correspondents, one of which was returnable December 1, and the other April 1. A careful study of these returns indicates that the acreage of winter wheat now growing is about 11 per cent. greater than last year. In the Southwest, and especially in Texas, the area has been reduced since sowing. Unfavorable growing conditions, especially drought, have caused many wheat fields to be plowed up for cotton or other crops. The Atlantic coast states from Maine to Georgia, as a whole, show a declining area, though some of the smaller States have increased. Of the other Southern States only Mississippi reports a diminished area. Of the Northern and Western States, Michigan, Minnesota and Kansas fall off from last year; the other wheat-growing States increase. On the Pacific coast, Oregon shows a very great enlargement. California is not included in the estimates of winter wheat area.

In the West and Northwest it is evident that the increase in winter wheat area is largely due to the transfer of wheat-growing enterprise from spring to fall sowing. The crop of 1879, then, will show a still greater preponderance in winter sown grain. Unless spring sowing should manifest an unexpected increase, the total wheat area of 1879 promises to be smaller than its predecessor. But in this connection it should be remembered that the public domain is receiving settlement at a rate unprecedented in our history. The amount of wheat area inaccessible to statistics, already sufficiently puzzling, will be a larger element in the calculation than in any previous crop. The crop of the country, taken as a whole, presents a promise of at least 2 per cent. below average. The New England States reach a full average. In the Middle States conditions of growth were very unfavorable; fall drought prevented the seed from obtaining an early start. Very little or no injury from freezing is reported in this section where the crop was protected by snow. Here also the drill is in very extensive use, and drilled wheat is far less liable to winter injuries than the broadcast.

Further South, in the Atlantic coast States, injuries from freezing are more generally noted, and the lack of protecting snow. Several correspondents in this region report the coldest winter on record in their localities. South of Maryland the use of the drill is quite limited, and the broadcast fields were but ill prepared to resist the unusual strain of frost. In the more southern portions complaints of rust are heard. Some unsatisfactory experiments of wheat culture on tide lands and on sandy uplands of South Carolina near the sea are reported. In this State the Missouri yellow wheat, received from the Department, headed out in March, a thing unprecedented even in that southern climate. Georgia alone of this section reports a condition above average.

In all of the Gulf States and Southern inland States drought and cold were especially severe upon the broadcast fields of this region. Kentucky and West Virginia appear to have had more snow than usual, and hence their fields suffered less from the unusually low temperatures.

North of the Ohio there are more complaints of injuries from freezing in Michigan than in the other States of this region where the snow was more general. Wisconsin reports a very remarkable increase in her acreage and a high condition of the crop. This great wheat region now promises a very large and fine yield. Around La Crosse, Wis., the Odessa variety has shown great vitality in meeting the demand of the climate, and is showing up remarkably well.

West of the Mississippi the small crops of winter wheat in Minnesota and Nebraska are not remarkably promising. Kansas and Missouri are also below average; but Iowa, with a largely increased acreage, presents a very promising condition. Sanders, Nebraska, reports that no fields planted after August have stood the severity of the winter. In many counties the preservation of the crop is ascribed to snow, and in many others its loss or injury is ascribed to its absence. Kansas and Missouri complain of droughts. Reno County, Kansas, in the Arkansas Valley, had hundreds of acres destroyed by grasshoppers last fall, and was troubled over rumors of a new species of army worms.

The reports from the Pacific coast indicate a high condition of the growing crop generally.

Three or four counties in our entire wheat region note the presence of the Hessian fly, but damages so far are quite inconsiderable.

SELECTION OF CANDIDATES.—It is an old custom in the rural portions of this State for gentlemen to make the announcement, through the columns of the press, and by circulars addressed to the voters, that they are candidates for positions of public trust. Sometimes the announcement is made at the instance of friends, and sometimes the announcement is made without any special solicitation on the part of any one. It is much better for a gentleman to come forward in this way than it is for him to be thrust forward and almost compelled their nomination at the hands of the people. In the one case the persons rely upon their merits to secure popular favor; in the other they are selected because they are useful to the party, and are placed in position to serve partisan ends, regardless of capacity or honesty—the two cardinal qualities which should govern in the choice of all public servants.—Baltimore True Democrat.

Mr. Chisholm, the son of Judge Chisholm, who was murdered in Mississippi, is now a messenger in the Executive Department at Washington. He says the trial of the murderers will occur in September next, when he and his mother will testify, if her health will permit. He says he has been counseled by friends in Mississippi not to appear against the five persons accused of the murder of his father and other relatives, but says he is determined to testify, believing that he will not be molested during the short time his presence in Mississippi might be required. He would not, however, feel safe in remaining there any length of time with the other Chisholms when they were murdered, and have distinct recollections of the terrible scene, and those who participated in the assassination. Chisholm says the murder was committed for political reasons, the Gullies, who perpetrated the crime, being leading Democrats, and Judge Chisholm a prominent Republican, who possessed important information concerning violations of the Enforcement act by the Democrats.

If your tongue is coated or if you have a bad breath, take a dose of Dr. Bull's Baltimore Pills.

SUPPORTED BY KISSES.—Notwithstanding the fact that the ice cream and strawberry festival season will soon be ushered in, a New Jersey church congregation at Englewood has devised a new and very taking scheme for raising funds. It has many advantages over the old grab-bag and fair schemes, as it costs nothing to get it up, and is bound in time to wrench the last shakedown of every man in the community, if the sisters are endowed with proper Christian fortitude and have physical endurance to stand it. The plan is simply to charge so much for kissing and hugging the sisters. A rate of charges was fixed, which appears to be very reasonable and just. Until competition springs up the figures given and which were here charged, may be regarded as the ruling price of the market:

Ten cents for kissing a girl between 15 and 20; five cents extra for hugging.

Five cents for kissing a girl between 20 and 30; five cents extra for hugging.

Over 30, five cents, all round.

For kissing a young widow, twenty-five cents; hugging, ten cents extra.

For kissing a married lady, fifty cents; hugging, twenty-five cents extra.

The new plan worked like a charm. The revenues were large; the sisters made supremely happy, and the young men in the town over-exerted themselves and were desperately wild, yet they are satisfied.

[We call the attention of the Literary Society to the above pleasant and easy way of procuring money.]

A SINGULAR BREAK OF SUPERSTITION.—Simon Summers, who lived on South mountain near this place, died of consumption, at the age of near forty, and was buried on Tuesday a week. After his death it became necessary to put cotton in his ears, nostrils and mouth to prevent purging. After the funeral the widow of the deceased found out that the body had been buried without removing the cotton, and she would not rest until it was removed. The superstitious idea she had somehow imbibed was that if the dead man would swallow the cotton a great calamity would follow to the surviving family and friend, and they would all soon die and follow him.

So completely had this notion imbedded itself in her head that nothing would do until a deputation of friends came to town, and the body partly resurrected, and the cotton removed by the undertaker. We agree with the woman in this case. If the dead man had taken a foolish notion to swallow that cotton, death would have soon swallowed not only the widow, but the whole of South mountain. We feel glad the cotton was removed.

We are told that South mountain, from base to apex, all over and all along its sides and through its ravines, is chock full of such superstition.—Baltimore Old Fellow.

A calculation has been made by the New York Times to show the increasing strength of the Western Republican States. In 1872 Iowa, Kansas, Michigan, Minnesota, Nebraska, Nevada, Ohio, Wisconsin and Illinois cast 1,797,935 votes; in 1876 they cast 2,398,436. The Times remarks that "to measure the effect of this change upon representation, we may assume that the basis of apportionment will remain the same. In that case, the 'Solid South' may, at most, retain its 106 members of the House; the nine States we have named will add to their 73 members at least 48 more, and will elect 121, or 15 more than the section which now rules the Democracy, and through it controls Congress."

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

COMMISSIONERS' MEETING.

JUNE SESSION.

OFFICE OF THE GARRETT COUNTY COMMISSIONERS, OAKLAND, MD., May 15th, 1879.

Notice is hereby given that the County Commissioners of Garrett county will meet at their office in Oakland

On Monday, June 2nd, 1879, for the purpose of making the Annual Levy for said year.

All persons having claims against the county are requested to file the same on or before that date, otherwise they may be deprived of the benefit of said levy.

All bills against the county must be sworn to.

W. H. HAGANS, Clerk.

NOTICE TO SUPERVISORS.

OFFICE OF THE GARRETT COUNTY COMMISSIONERS, OAKLAND, MD., May 15th, 1879.

Notice is hereby given to all Road Supervisors.

To pay strict attention to the bridges under their supervision, keeping them in good repair, and particularly seeing that the flooring on said bridges be kept close together; also that supervisors on the East and West side of rivers take under their supervision one-half of said bridges, namely to the center thereof.

By order County Commissioners.

Test: W. H. HAGANS, Clerk.

5 17 3

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Advertisements under this heading will be inserted at the following rates: For Members of the Legislature, Clerk of the Circuit Court and Sheriff, $1.00. For State Attorneys, mayors and county commissioners, $5.00, and for Register of Wills and Judges of the District Court, $2.50 each. Advertisements to run till the meeting of the Nominating Convention. The space allowed will be six times or less, and 20 cents per line will be charged for each line in excess of that number. No name will be announced until the fee is paid.

FOR CLERK CIRCUIT COURT.

To the Republicans of Garrett County:

Freely and voluntarily assuming from all parts of the county, to the effect that the people, and especially those having names on the list of the Nominating Convention, I have every reason to suppose that my name will be brought before the Convention. I therefore, take this method of announcing to the public that I am a candidate for the office of Clerk of the Circuit Court for Garrett county, subject to the decision of the Republican county nominating convention.

If I am again nominated, I shall appreciate the honor and thankfully accept it. And if elected, shall perform the duties thereof with care and attention, to the best of my ability, with the past.

April 26. W. H. TOWER.

SHERIFFALTY.

EN. REPUBLICANS.—Please announce my name as a candidate for the Sheriffalty of Garrett county, subject to the decision of the Republican Nominating Convention.

MILTON LOWDERMILK.

EN. REPUBLICANS.—Please announce my name as a candidate for the Sheriffalty of Garrett county, subject to the decision of the Republican Nominating Convention.

D. ADOLPHUS FRIEND.

EN. REPUBLICANS.—Please announce my name as a candidate for the Sheriffalty of Garrett county, subject to the decision of the Republican Nominating Convention.

GEORGE D. WHITE.

EN. REPUBLICANS.—Please announce my name as a candidate for the Sheriffalty of Garrett county, subject to the decision of the Republican Nominating Convention.

W. SCOTT PEW.

SURVEYOR.

EN. REPUBLICANS.—Please announce my name as a candidate for the office of County Surveyor, subject to the decision of the Republican Nominating Convention.

JOHN HARNED.

LIVERY STABLE.

THOMAS MARTIN

at the old stand, opposite the Post Office, is prepared to furnish on short notice

BUGGIES,

CARRIAGES,

WAGONS and

SADDLE HORSES,

On Reasonable Terms.

For Fishing, Hunting and Pic-Nic parties supplied with transportation to any part desired. 5 24 4m.

TRUSTEE'S SALE

OF VALUABLE

REAL ESTATE.

Under and by virtue of a decree of the Orphans Court for Garrett county, in and to which said Court, in a cause in said Court, in which Andrew and Rachel, his wife, by deed bearing date the 25th day of December, 1852, the said lots are situated on what is known as "Baltimore Ridge," in Seaboard District of Garrett county aforesaid, and adjacent lands of North Hamilton, in Seaboard District, Eliza Myers and others, and about three miles from Seaboard and one mile from Seaboard Mill. The said property is improved by a good substantial log dwelling house, barn, and a good well, and a "sugar camp" in good repair on the place. There are forty acres of land clear and under cultivation, the same being in the hands of the purchaser.

Terms of sale, as prescribed by the decree, one-half of the purchase money, in cash on the ratification of the sale, and the balance in twelve months from the date of sale, the deferred payment to be secured by the date of sale, and to be secured with the single bill of the purchaser with each additional security as shall be approved by the Trustee.

ISAAC MYERS, Trustee.

J. W. Vetch, Attorney. 5 24 4m

Road Examiners' Notice.

Notice is hereby given:

That the undersigned, appointed by the County Commissioners of Garrett county, to examine and view the roads through which the road petitioned for by S. B. Yutz and others is to pass: The said road to lead from Piney Grove to Pompey Smash, and to pass through the lands of Thos. W. Frost, Israel Gullery and Wm. Enfield, and examine whether the said petitioned road should be located, to meet on the premises on Tuesday, the 10th day of June, 1879, for such purpose, and to determine whether the public convenience requires the said location at said petitioned road, and if so, to locate the same, and perform their duty in the premises.

SAMUEL DUFF, GEO. L. LAYMAN, ARTHUR D. WARRICK, Examiners.

5 10 1

JOHN RICHARDSON, Manufacturer of and Dealer in WAGONS and FARMING IMPLEMENTS, GRAIN CRACKERS, A SPECIALTY. 27 1/2 Adams Street, Baltimore, Md. July 5. Near the Depot, Oakland, Md.

Assignee's Notice of Appointment.

In the District Court of the United States for the District of Maryland.

In the matter of Elnore S. Bailey, Bankrupt.

No. 87, in Bankruptcy.

TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN:—The undersigned hereby gives notice of his appointment as Assignee of the estate of E. S. Bailey, of Oakland, in the county of Garrett, in said district, and who was, to-wit: on the 20th day of August, A. D. 1878, adjudged bankrupt upon the petition of himself.

Dated at Cumberland, the 23rd day of April, A. D. 1879.

A. B. GONDER, Assignee.

5 10 3

The Republican.

JAS. A. HAYDEN, Publisher.
OAKLAND, GARRETT CO., MD.

JOHN BEEDLE'S THOUGHTS.

There's a mist on the meadow below; the barring-frogs chirp and cry;
It's chill when the sun is down, and the mist is not yet dry.
The world is a lonely place, it seems, and I don't know why.

I see, as I lean on the fence, how wearily trembles
The
With the feel of the spring in his bones, like a sweat and elderly man.
I've had it a many a time, but we must work
when we can.

But day after day to toil, and ever from sun to set,
Though up to the season's front and nothing be left undone,
Is ending at twelve like a clock, and beginning again at one.

The frogs make a sorrowful noise, and yet it's the little they make.
There's something comes with the spring, a lightness of heart and weight.
There's something comes with the spring, and it seems to me it's fate:

It's the hankering after a life that you never have learned to know,
It's the discontent with a life that is always thus
and so,
It's the wondering what we are and where we are going to go.

My life is lucky enough, I fancy, to most men's eyes.
For the more a family grows, the oftener some one dies.
And I'm now run on so long, it couldn't be otherwise.

And sister Jane and myself, we have learned to chime and yell;
She rubs in the house at will, and I in the barn
and field;
So, right upon thirty years—as if written and signed and sealed.

I couldn't change if I would; I've lost the how
and the why.
One day my time will be up, and Jane be the mistress then.
For single women are tough and live down the single men.

She kept me so to herself, she was always the stronger hand.
And my lot showed well enough, when I looked down on the land.
But I'm tired and sore at heart, and I don't quite understand.

I wonder how it had been if I'd taken what others need.
The picture they say, of a wife, the care of a younger brood?
If Edith, Missus now were near me as Edith Beed!

Suppose that a son well grown were there in the place of Dan,
And I'd look upon him, as I was when my work
was done?
I should not care, sure, and certainly more
a man!

A daughter, besides, in the house; nay, let there be two or three.
We never ran over the luck that can never be,
And what has come to the most might also have come to me.

I've thought, when a neighbor's wife or his child
was carried off,
That to have no loss was a gain; but now—I can hardly say.
He seems to possess them still, under the ridges
of clay.

And share and share in a life is somehow, a different thing.
From property held by deed, and the riches that do take wing.
I feel so close to the breast—I think it must be the spring.

I'm drying up like a brook when the woods have been cleared away.
You're sure it must always run, you are used to the sight and sound.
But it shrinks till there's only left a stony rill in the ground.

There's nothing to do but to take the days as they come and
And not to worry with thoughts that nobody likes to show.
For people so seldom talk of the things they want to know.

There's times when the way is plain, and everything nearly right.
And then a sudden you stand like a man with a clouded sight.
A bird seems often a least in the dusk of a falling night.

I must move; my joints are stiff, the weather is breeding rain.
And then is hurrying on, with his plow-team up
the lane.
I'll go with Jane, village store; I'd rather not talk with Jane.

—Bayard Taylor.

MY COURTSHIP.

AT THE sleigh-ride last winter and the slippery trick I was served by Patty Beau, nobody would suspect me of hankering after the women in a hurry.
To hear me rail out against the whole feminine gender, you would have taken it for granted that I should never so much as look at one of them again to all eternity.

O, but I was mad.
"Darn and close their eyes," says I.
"Blame their ways, turn out their heads and—" but never mind.

Finally I took an oath and swore that if I ever meddled or had any dealings with them again (in the sparkling line, I mean) I wished I might be hung and choked. But swearing off from women and then going into a meeting house clock full of gals, all shinning and glistening in their Sunday clothes and pretty faces, is like swearing off from liquor and going into a grog-shop. It's all smoke. I held out and kept firm to my pledge for three whole Sunday forenoons, afternoons and intermissions complete. On the fourth there were strong symptoms of a change of weather. A chap about my size was seen on the way to the meeting-house with a new patent hat on; his head hung by the ears upon a shirt-collar; his cravat had a puddle in it and branched out in front into a double-bow neck. He carried a straight back and a stiff neck, as a man ought to when he has his best clothes on; and every time he expecto-rated he sprung his body forward like a jack-knife, in order to shoot clear of the ruffles. "Squire Jones' new is next but two to mine, and when I stand up to sing and take my coat tail under my arm and turn my back to the minister,
I naturally look right straight at Sally Jones. Now, Sally has got an uncon-mon pretty face. Indeed, as regards beauty, some folks think she can pull an even yoke with Patty Beau. For my part I think there is not much between them. Any how, they are so right matched that they have hated and despised each other like rank poison
ever since they were school girls.

"Squire Jones had got his evening
fire on, and set himself down to reading the great Bible, when he heard a rap at his door.

"Walk in. Well, John, how der do?
Git out, Pompey."

"Pretty well, I thank ye, 'Squire, and how do you do?"

"Why, so as to be crawling—ye ugly beast will ye hold yer yop—haul up a chair and sit down, John."

"How do you do, Mrs. Jones?"

"O, middling. How's yer marn?"

Don't forget the mat there, Mr.
Beedle."

This put me in mind that I had been off soundings several times in the long muddy lane, and my boots were in a sweet pickle.

It was our old Captain Jones' turn,
the grandfather. Being roused from a doze by the bustle and racket, he opened both his eyes, at first with wonder and astonishment. At last he came her hair in a flood like a mill dam
broke loose. One flig of Sally's elbow
and my blooming ruffles wilted down
to a dish cloth. But she had no time to boast. Soon her neck tacking began to shiver. It parted at the throat,
and hurrah! down came a whole school
of blue and white beads, scampering
and running races every which way
about the floor.

Consarn it, how a buss will crack of
a still, frosty night. Mrs. Jones was about half way between asleep and awake.

"There goes my yeast bottle," says
she to make, "clean into twenty hundred pieces, and my bread is all dough
again."

The upshot of the matter is, I fell in love with Sally Jones head over ears.
Every Sunday night, rain or shine finds
me rapping at 'Squire Jones' door, and
twenty times I have been within a
hair's breadth of popping the question.
And now I have made a final resolve,
and if I live till next Sunday night and
I don't get choked in the trial, Sally
Jones will hear thunder.—*Danbury
News.*

"No, no, father; bless your heart,
that was his grandfather, that's been dead and gone this twenty years."

"Ho! But where does he come from?"

"Eastford."

"Ho! And what does he follow for a living?"

And he did not stop asking questions
after this sort till all the particulars of the Beedle family were published and proclaimed in Mrs. Jones' best screed. He then sank back into his doze again.

The dog stretched himself before me
and roused the cat squat down before the other. Silence came by degrees like a calm snow storm, till nothing was heard but a cricket under the hearth,
keeping time with a sappy yellow birch forestick. Sally sat up, prim, as if she were pinned to the chair back; her hands crossed gently upon her lap, and her eyes looking straight in the fire.

Mammy Jones also tried to straighten herself, and laid her hands across her lap. But they would not lay still. It was full twenty-four hours since they had done work, and they were out of all patience with keeping Sunday. Do what she would to keep them quiet,
they would bounce up now and then,
and go through the motions in spite of the Third Commandment.

For my part I sat looking very much like a fool. The more I tried to say something the more my tongue stuck fast. I put my right leg over the left and said "Hem!"

Then I changed and put my left leg
over the right. It was no use; the silence kept coming on thicker and thicker. The drops of sweat began to crawl all over me. I got my eye upon my hat hanging on a peg on the road to the door, and then I eyed the door.

At this moment the old Captain all at once sang out, "Johnny Beedle!"

It sounded like a clap of thunder, and I started right on end.

"Johnny Beedle, you'll never handle such a drumstick as yer father did if you live to the age of Methuselah. He would toss up his drumstick and while it was whirling in the air take off a run,
and then ketch it as it come down with one losing a stroke in time. What d'ye think of that, ha? But scull yer chair round, close along side av'en, so yer can hear. Now, what have you come a'ter?"

"A'ter? O jest takin' a walk."

"Pleasant walkin' I guess."

"I mean jest ter see how ye all do."

"Ho! that's another lie—you've come courtin'." Johnny Beedle, you're a'ter our son! Say now, d'ye want to marry or only to court?"

This was what I called a choker.
Poor Sally made one jump and landed in the middle of the kitchen, and then she sulked in the dark corner till she was out of sight. I was laughing heartily into a whooping cough, was put to bed.

Then came apples and cider; and the ice being broke, plenty chat with Mammy Jones about the parson and the sarmen. I agreed with her to a nicey upon all the points of doctrine,
but I had forgot the text and all the heads of the discourse but six.

Then she teased and tormented me
to tell her I accounted the best singer
in the gallery that day. But, mum—
I was silent. "Squire gathered up his shoes and stockings and followed."

Sally and I were left sitting a good yard apart, honest measure. For fear of getting tongue-tied again, I set right in with a steady stream of talk. I told her all the particulars about the weather that was past, and also made some pretty cute guesses at what it was like to be in the future. At first, I gave a hitch up with my chair at every full stop. Then, growing saucy, I repeated it at every comma and semi-colon; and at last it was hitch, hitch, and I planted myself fast by the side of her.

"I swow, Sally, you looked so plaguy handsome to-day, that I wanted to eat you up."

"Pshaw, git along you," said she.
My hand crept along, somehow, upon its fingers and begin to scrape nequintance with hers. She sent it home again, with a desperate jerk.

"Try it again!"—no better luck.

"Why, Miss Jones, you're gettin' upstrep'nous; a little old maidish, I guess."

"Hands off is fair play, Mr. Beedle."

It is a good sign to find a girl salky.
I knew where the shoe pinched. It was that ar Patty Beau business. So I went to work to persuade her that I had never had any notion after Patty,
and to prove it I fell to running her down at a great rate. Sally could not help chiming in with me, and I rather glad Miss Patty suffered a few. I now not only got hold of her hand without opposition, but managed to slip an arm round her waist. But there was no satisfying me; so I must go to poking out my lips after a buss.

I guess I riled it. She fetched me a slap in the face that made me see stars,
and my ears rang like a brass kettle for a quarter of an hour. I was forced to laugh at the joke, though out of the wrong side of my mouth, which gave my face something the look of a grin-iron.

The battle now began in the regular
way.

"Ah, Sally, give me a kiss and have done with it."

"I won't, so there."

"I'll take it, whether or no."

"Do it, if you dare."

"And at it we went, rough and tumble.
An odd destruction of starch now commenced. The bow of my cravat was squint up in half a shake. At the next bout smash went my shirt collar,
and at the same time some of Sally's
head fastenings gave way, and down
came her hair in a flood like a mill dam
broke loose. One flig of Sally's elbow
and my blooming ruffles wilted down
to a dish cloth. But she had no time
to boast. Soon her neck tacking began to shiver. It parted at the throat,
and hurrah! down came a whole school
of blue and white beads, scampering
and running races every which way
about the floor.

Consarn it, how a buss will crack of
a still, frosty night. Mrs. Jones was
about half way between asleep and
awake.

"There goes my yeast bottle," says
she to make, "clean into twenty hundred pieces, and my bread is all dough
again."

The upshot of the matter is, I fell in love with Sally Jones head over ears.

Every Sunday night, rain or shine finds
me rapping at 'Squire Jones' door, and
twenty times I have been within a
hair's breadth of popping the question.
And now I have made a final resolve,
and if I live till next Sunday night and
I don't get choked in the trial, Sally
Jones will hear thunder.—*Danbury
News.*

The True Origin of Kissing.

One may know by your kiss that your gin is excellent.—Briggs's Opera.

Kisses, according to the Scripture,
were planned to do eight kinds of work—
viz: Adoration, I. Kings, xix. 18; Approbation, Proverbs, ii. 4; Reconciliation,
I. Sam. xiv. 33; Treachery, Matt., xxvi. 49; Salvation, Sam. xx. 41; Affection, Gen. xiv. 15; Subjection, Psalms,
ii. 12, and Vallediction, Ruth, ii.

9. Kissing is a very dangerous subject for an old bachelor to write upon,
inasmuch as the freedom of a fair
maiden's lips is often a provocation to the commission of matrimony. But, lest the reader be disappointed that we have no personal recollections to unfold, and therefore disinclined to read this article, we may as well remark
that it is intended more to collect other's opinions than to give our own crude ideas. We believe it will scarcely be disputed that the female sex is more fond of this harmless amusement
than their sterner brethren.

Men seem to kiss eight kinds of women and for eight different purposes. There is kiss to kiss a brother;
Women want to kiss a brother;
They snuff and kiss a brother;
They snuff and kiss a brother;
They snuff and kiss a brother;

Now is this entirely out of nature.
Were we inclined to be a kissist—
which by our snowy beard is impossible—
we think, may we feel positive, that we should prefer a youthful maiden to receive our salutes. The inclination that some young ladies are fond of mouthing is doubtless a contemptible slander. Their own smooth cheeks and rosy mouths are far preferable, and so they must feel. Sidney Smith says: "There is much virtue in a kiss when well delivered. We have had the memory of one we received in our youth, which has lasted us forty years,
and we believe it will be one of the last things we think of when we die."

This is no world, as Hotspur said,
For kissing lips and manumets made.
Yet how fond was Shakespeare of this "lip-business." You cannot read a single play of the great master without finding a world of talk about lips and kisses. There are an infinity of examples:

We kissed—the best of many doubted kisses.
We'll kiss but kiss Octavia, and we'll follow.
And scarce will kiss a brother;
Women want to kiss a brother;
They snuff and kiss a brother;
They snuff and kiss a brother;
They snuff and kiss a brother;

My bluest veins to kiss; a hand that kings
Have lip'd, and trembled kissing.
Give us some more of these kisses.
I shall return once more to kiss these lips.
This is a soldier's kiss.
Comment unto his lips thy favoring hand;
Kiss it, my warrior.
And take the last warmth of
my lips.

All this, and more, in one play—and that a very deep tragedy. It is said that the true origin of this gracious instinct is the play of the great master-wit of the East, and that it is symbolic of the sun's rays greeting the earth:

The kiss, snubbing kiss,
The dear old face of earth,
And hither she came to the bursting bud,
And bring the flower to birth.
Kiss, kiss, and kiss!
—San Francisco's Evening Post.

The Philosophy of Suicide.

Suicide has been made the subject of scientific analysis and investigation,
and certain points of its "philosophy"
may be considered to have been delintely settled. These are summed up by Dr. Gray as follows:

1. Suicide, both in health and disease, is a violation of nature's laws.

2. Suicide, though always an unnatural act, is, in a large proportion, if not the majority of cases, committed by persons who are entirely sane.

3. Education and custom being powerful influences in overcoming the instincts of nature, and in inducing suicide, the wide-spread publication of the names of suicides, the age, the sex, the mode and the reasons, promotes suicide by inducing imitation, and by lessening the horror of the act through familiarity with it.

4. The teachings of any so-called philosophy and sensationalism which tend to the disregard of the truths of religion lead to suicide, breaking down
the moral barrier, and compromising the wrong of suicide, by rendering it a mere question of choice and expediency with each individual whether he will live or die.

5. Suicide is in no true sense impulsive, but in the sane and the insane it is the result of deliberation of more or less duration, and it is an act determined upon in the mind of the individual, from causes accepted by his judgment as sufficient whether real or imaginary.

6. Suicide by the sane and insane is frequently the result of last and wrong interpretation of facts, both in their magnitude and consequences—merely detective reasoning from the premises.

7. The great and essential difference between suicide by the sane and insane is not the motive, method, time or place but in the mental state in which the act is committed. The insane man commits suicide under delusions, or a delusional state of mind, not for some purpose, but because he is insane.

8. The strongest safeguard against suicide is the sense of a man's responsibility to the Creator for all human conduct including the keeping of our lives. If the sense of accountability to the future be gone, no consideration of one's duty to family, to society or self can ever answer the arguments of the suicide. It is, indeed, conscience which "makes cowards of us all," but it is also the voice which rebuts us to the higher responsibility for all our acts,
and which, if we heed, makes strong to bear the ills of life.

Dr. Moret has recently published some interesting statistics concerning suicide in France. They cover a period of forty-five years, and show a steady increase in the successive five years' periods. The annual number which was 3,317 in 1831-35 rose to 6,107 in 1871-75. The numbers are more remarkable if the ratio per 100,000 inhabitants be taken. This was about six for the first five years' period, seven for the second, eight for the third, and so on, till in 1871-75 it reached at a bound 16.80, or nearly 17
suicides per 100,000 inhabitants.

This is explained by the terrible events of which France was the theater in that period. After political complications age is one of the influences which seems to have most influence (in France) on the suicide. The suicides increase regularly with the age, and the maximum is found between seventy and eighty. The result is contrary to an opinion expressed by Esquirol, that the old man, strongly attached to life commits suicide rarely. It is more difficult to comprehend the increase of suicides among children under sixteen.
Dr. Moret further shows that men kill themselves four times more frequently than women, and that, eliminating the two extreme seasons, winter and summer, which act in nearly the same way
on both sexes, the suicides of men are more frequent in spring, those of women in autumn. Married men commit suicide half as often as bachelors, and one-third as often as widowers.

Whether these proportions are the same in other countries we are unable to say. The statistics of the number of suicides in this country are not complete, but it is believed that the rate of increase is not everywhere
so rapid as in France.—Boston Journal of Chemistry.

How Edison Made a Bug.

A correspondent of the Indianapolis
Journal tells the following story of Edison: One of my letters spoke of the possibility of utilizing the present gas-pipes by running the electric wires
through them. "How is this wonderful Edison going to get his wires through the pipes, I should like to know," asked an unbeliever. Edison thought it over,
"Why, see here, Johnson," he exclaimed the next morning. "I'll make a bug that will drag a wire through all the pipes in New York!"

"Make a bug?" said Johnson.
"What in the world are you talking
about?"

"Well, I'll make a bug," said Edison. "I'll make a bug that will go where you send it and drag a wire after it."

His assistants drew around while he described his coming—or, rather, his going—bug. Next day he hatched a real specimen of that insect, large as a cat button. And it stood out on the table and crawled.

It was constructed thus: A minute
electro-magnet carried behind it a fine insulated wire-pawl. Now, observe—every time the current is turned on,
the magnet the armature is attracted,
the pawl catches the side of the gas-pipe
with its claws, and the magnet behind is drawn toward the armature about the sixteenth of an inch. When the current is on the armature reaches forward ready to take a second leap. This is every closing of the circuit, the little magnet advances one step and drags forward the insulated wire. This description will be perhaps unimpressive
side to non-experts, but more people know something about electricity than formerly did, and every telegraph operator will understand how this iron bug reaches out its armature claws and crawls and a gas-pipe.

"Now, don't misunderstand this,"
said Edison: "it isn't at all likely it will ever be used to thread gas-pipes;
I have made it merely for fun—just to show that I can make a first-rate bug
that will crawl around all by himself.
I shan't make a cockroach, for there is no necessity for any more, but—By the way, I may make a toy lightning-bug some time. He could be made to lighten easily enough. I wonder if he could be made to fly?"

He Agreed.

A lady who wanted a dozen of eggs
fresh from the country was among the farmer's wagons at the market yesterday, and the sight of a small bundle of grass in one of the vehicles at once aroused the sentiment in her nature.

Snuffing at a handful of it she said to the farmer:

"The country must be beautiful these spring mornings."

"Yes, so she is," he slowly replied,
"coming in this morning I saw two wagons stuck in a mud-hole, a dead
horse and more'n fifty cows."

"These surprises must be beautiful out there," she continued.

"Yes, they are. At sunrise this morning me'an Jim was gettin' a bug out from under the house-hoop. Further sunrise I ever saw, but that hog won't never do no more good in this
world."

"I suppose the grass looks very beautiful," she said as the last egg was counted.

"O, I s'pose so, but I've been so rushed gettin' that big ditch finished that I haven't hardly noticed. Do your folks want to buy any dried pumpkin?"
—Free Press.

The Cornishman narrates a singular take of birds. On a St. Ives fishing boat hauling in her nets Friday morning, in addition to about 100 mackerel, there were 400 gulls, kittiwakes, and "murns" in the meshes. One hundred were alive and were liberated; 300 were dead, and were taken to Penzance,
where they sold for 2s. 6d.

Living in England.

ENGLAND has long been considered
the country of low prices, and really not deserved that name, not for some decades past, at any rate. Certainly many things have been very low, and are so even now; but it is somewhat remarkable that amid all this supposed cheapness the very things that are most absolutely necessary, and of which men need the most, are invariably dear, and have been so these many years past.

What matters it that a man may get shaved for a penny and his hair cut for twopence, if he must at the same time pay $1.50 a bushel for potatoes as an average price for many years past, and $1.50 or $2 a bushel for the most ordinary qualities of apples? These are, in fact, minimum prices.

The heavier and finer kinds of clothing are also cheap. Merchant tailors in London seem able to make their goods at astonishingly low rates. Excellent trousseaus of Scotch tweed are made to measure at about $5, and entire suits of the same—also made to measure—for $10 or $12. Omnibuses and cab fares are also very low, and this is true of nearly all the large towns of England. If all these articles of cheapness be closely examined it will generally be found that the paltry wages paid to the workmen are the chief cause of such cheapness. The barber will shave you for two cents, for the reason that where he is an employee he rarely gets above $1 a day, and where he owns the shop the public is willing to allow him only about the same pay as an unskilled workman, for such he is considered here. The merchant tailor also sells his goods low, because the weaver and the journeyman tailor also get most paltry wages. A New York journeyman tailor would not look at the wages paid to such workmen in London.

But nearly all the substantial necessaries of life, except clothing, are very high here. The price of the best coal in London is now about twenty-six shillings, about $6.25 the ton of 2,240 pounds, and one or two shillings less for a medium quality. It is not at all equal to anthracite. For an American ton of 2,000 pounds the best coal here
would be at the rate of about $5.00.
This is the high price for coal, but it is about the average for some years past.
Two months ago the price was seventy-
five cents higher than at present.

House rent is probably not much different from rents in New York, and no one doubts about the same. A house renting for $150 a year will involve the occupier in about fifty dollars more as taxes, and this will include the water rate. The occupier always pays the taxes. This is the rate in London, and such a house is usually occupied by families whose incomes are from $500 to $800 a year.

Bread is now selling for twelve cents for the four pound loaf, that is, at three cents a pound. The present price is unusually low, however, and it has not been so low more than three or four times in the last forty years. The average price for the last ten years has been just about four cents a pound. The average wholesale price of wheat is now about $1.10
a bushel compared with $1.75 throughout the year 1877.

The price of meat is fully as low in London as in any other large town of either England or Scotland. The choicest cuts of beef-steak are never under thirty-five cents a pound, and good ordinary steaks average about thirty-cents. Joists of beef are now eighteen or twenty cents a pound against about twenty-five cents two years ago. Mutton is only a little lower than beef. American fresh beef and mutton have had the effect of lowering prices here very much, but American bacon and hams have lowered the prices of these articles much more than in the case of fresh beef and mutton.
The tremendous imports of bacon and hams in the past two years have forced prices at fully ten cents a pound.
Butcher is also mostly imported from France and Ireland, and there is the same uncertainty about getting it fresh,
or in fact in getting what is really butter at all, as in the case of eggs. Probably more than three-fourths of the so-called "butter" is not real butter.

This sells at all prices from twenty-five cents to thirty-five cents a pound.
None can be bought under forty cents
at any time in the year that is fit to be

THE REPUBLICAN.

OAKLAND, MARYLAND.

JAS. A. HAYDEN,
Editor and Proprietor.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.
One copy, one year, $1.50
Six months, .75
IN ADVANCE.

TERMS OF ADVERTISING.
First insertion, $1 per square of 10 lines;
50 cents per square for each additional insertion. Special contracts for advertising longer
than three months.

Correspondents must enclose full name and
address, not necessarily for publication, but
as a private guarantee of good faith. Rejected
communications will not be returned.

SATURDAY, MAY 31, 1879.

Mr. Tasker has associated with him S. A. Cox, Esq., in the editorial department of the Herald. Mr. Cox is said to be a forcible writer, and will doubtless make things lively during the coming campaign in this county.

Mr. Eaton says this is not a nation, but only a "confederacy of states." We suppose if Mr. Eaton has what other men would call a family, he considers it simply an aggregation of parents and children, in which any one child "has more power on one point in the compact than all the others combined, because it is an equal factor."

The election in the Millersburg (Ky.) district does not indicate a Democratic boom in that section. The district usually gives a Democratic majority of from 5,000 to 7,000. On Tuesday Hargis, Democratic candidate for Judge had a majority of only 800, while Holt, Republican, carried four counties usually Democratic. A Democratic Congress is doing the work.

The Chicago Tribune insists that the great trouble with the South is that her people are more industrious in politics than anything else. "The yellow fever may devastate their cities, the negro exodus may threaten the next cotton crop, war, pestilence and famine may invade their territory, States may default on the payment of the interest on their bonds, and cities may become bankrupt; no matter, so they are masters of the political situation at home and their state rights heresies are in the ascendency in Congress."

In a contest between the honest voters of Baltimore and the ballot-box stuffers and Convention backers of the Courthouse Ring the people would have the support and sympathy of the Sun, Herald, Gazette, Baltimorean and Standard. Two or three other weekly journals would join the side of the people if the revolt assumed a formidable shape. The Ring managers ought to think about this.—Balto. Gazette.

The Centreville Record (Demo.) is another disgusted one over the result of the recent Baltimore primaries. Of them it says:

"This system must be stopped, or the party will be crippled if not totally defeated by the honest men of the party leaving it, or nominating a ticket in opposition, and thus permitting the Republicans to win."

It has been suggested in Washington that Congress take a short recess presently, and go home to see how their constituents feel. They can find that out much easier by simply shutting off their own clamor, and listening for a few moments to the music in the air. The country has been speaking in an audible voice for some time, and it will presently raise its voice in a brief but fervent request to "clear out."

They are a funny lot, these Democrats. They keep on walking around the President's veto, trying to find a way to demolish it, and after every unsuccessful attempt they sit down in despair and observe in a loud voice: "He's a very weak man, the President is, very weak indeed!" Still days go by and they are so demoralized by the "weak man's" words that they dare not call a caucus, and dare not continue the fight.

There is no question of the ability of the members of the Courthouse Clique to nominate themselves again this fall. It is an easy matter for political jugglers, who can poll more votes at primary elections than there are voters in the wards, to pack Conventions and steal nominations but there will be no ballot-box stuffing and repackaging in November. We notify the Ring Schemers now that the decent Democrats, who are opposed to office-holding in perpetuity, shameless nepotism and corrupt use of party machinery, propose to take the field now and keep it until the votes are polled and the result announced. The Courthouse Clique has finally reached the limit, it would seem.—Balto. Gazette, Democratic.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

Special Correspondence to The Republican.

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 27, 1879.

The most important financial measure before Congress is Mr. Warner's silver coinage bill. It passed the House on Saturday but its most obnoxious feature was so changed as not to be recognizable. The following is a careful abstract of the bill as it passed the House.

It fixes the weight of the standard silver dollar at 412½ grains; authorizes the owners of silver bullion to deposit the same at any mint to be formed into bars or standard dollars; makes the charges for coining such bullion the difference between its market value in New York and the legal tender value of the coin; makes subsidiary silver coin exchangeable at the Treasury for legal tender money to the amount of $20; makes the standard silver dollar legal tender in all payments at their nominal value; requires the Treasury to pay out silver coin without discrimination the same as gold coin in liquidation of all coin obligations against the Government and authorizes the issue of certificates to depositors of gold or silver coin or bullion; also authorizes the issue of certificates (representing coin in the Treasury) in payment of interest on the public debt, both classes of certificates to be receivable in payment of duties on imports. The certificates for bullion deposited are to be for its average market value in coin of like metal during the preceding week in New York. The gold and silver bullion deposited is to be coined to the full capacity of the mints (in connection with other coinage); and if the bullion deposited for coinage does not amount $2,000,000 per month the Treasury is to purchase sufficient silver bullion to coin that amount.

There are influences at work among Democratic Senators which may cause the Senate to pass the bill as it came from the House, but it is most likely that the Senate will amend or kill it.

The general appropriation bill, with ex-confederate provisions to handicap the national Government in the enforcement of the laws, has gone to the President, and another veto is expected in a day or two. The Democrats feel that the evil day is close at hand. They have postponed it almost as long as possible, and they must shortly face the music. The great and troublesome question is, can the caucus hold them together in the work of "starving the Government." The general opinion is that it cannot, and that the Democrats are so doubtful on this point that they dare not caucus any more. They are afraid now to move in any direction for fear of committing more blunder. They have so far backed down as to admit that they must pass the general appropriation bill without qualification. But they are hoping that they can stick together in refusing supplies to the Army. At any rate an early adjournment looks probable now.

The singular letter of Secretary Sherman to a friend in New York is creating a good deal of disagreeable talk. Republicans think it a very injudicious thing to do. It is an open declaration of his candidacy for President and revives the charge that in Missouri and other southern States the Secretary is using the Treasury patronage to promote his nomination. The thing that is most objected to is his expression of dependence for support upon those who have not heretofore supported the Republican party. The universal verdict is that the Secretary has committed a damaging blunder.

Confident that the Democrats have furnished them plenty of political thunder for a whole campaign, the Republican Congressional Committee will immediately go to work sending it out to the people. Hon. Wm. E. Chandler, Secretary of the Committee has arrived and will push the work vigorously.

The sale of the $10 refunding certificates has taken an unfortunate turn. They were issued for the poor people, but the poor people do not get them to any great extent. The speculators are buying them up in immense quantities, and the rule that no one should have more than $100 worth is of no avail. Some speculators have bought as many as $20,000 in one day through other parties whom they furnish with money. The total amount of $40,000,000 will be exhausted, in a few days, and it will be found that the speculators have $35,000,000, or seven eighths of the whole of the poor man's bonds.

LOGAN.

One of the present staff of the Boston Transcript learned to set type twenty-five years ago under Wm. Lloyd Garrison, and says that after the great abolitionist had given his first instructions, he placed his hand on an old-fashioned Franklin hand-press, and in a serious tone said: "This my boy, is the most powerful weapon known. In the hands of bad men it is dangerous; in the hands of good men it can work miracles. We hope to abolish slavery with it."

More Starvation.

A Democratic member of the House Appropriations Committee said recently that Congress would make short work of the session after the President had vetoed the Legislative bill. "We will embody the repealing clauses into a separate bill," said he, "and let him veto that; then we will pass the Legislative Appropriation bill in such a shape that he will not object, and adjourn or take a recess until, say the middle of November next." "But what about the Army bill?" was asked. "In my opinion, it will never be reported from the committee again," was the answer. "My constituents will stand by me as endorsers of such action, and I believe a majority of the people are of opinion that there is no need of a standing army. Congress has a right at any time to abolish the army, and I think the time has come for doing it." "But will not the President at once reconvene Congress in the event of such an adjournment or recess?" "He might issue a call, but who would be obliged to respond? I think the majority of the present Congress would in that case stand firmly by what they consider to be their plain duty in the premises. No doubt there would be a good deal of funning on the part of the President and the Republican party, but what can they do? Nothing, absolutely nothing. For one—and I think I can speak the sentiments of my party—I can say that I will not veto a dollar for the support of the army unless the conditions affixed to the bill are accepted by the President. He has no power to coerce Congress or to dictate terms as to the manner in which the army shall be paid. It is, in short, none of his business whether there is an army or not. The farmers of the Constitution never contemplated the establishment of a standing army, and the provision which limits appropriations for its maintenance is the result of the jealousy for which they regarded an institution so little consonant with the central idea of a free republic. I assure you that the Democratic party will not hesitate to let the army die of starvation, and they believe that in so doing they are acting from the best and most patriotic motives."

What Say the People?

Is it not an outrage that a notorious gambler, whose violations of law have before now made him acquainted with the inside of our city jail, should control the politics of a city of three hundred and fifty thousand inhabitants? Have we descended so low in the political scale as to have become the property of a man of the character we have described? If we are to judge by this week's work, the city of Baltimore would seem to be carried around in the breeches pocket of a professional sport, like a set of dice, or a pack of cards.

How long will the people of Baltimore permit their politics to be "bossed" by characters like this? Shall gamblers and jail-birds reign supreme in the political affairs of this city? These are questions of serious import, and should be well pondered by every good citizen in Baltimore who has the well-being of his hearth and homestead at heart.

From this first week of the campaign it seems probable, (1), that the present Ring will succeed in renominating itself; (2) that there will be an independent movement; and (3) that the struggle will be one of the most exciting that the city has ever known. It is our deliberate opinion that the present City Convention has cooked its own goose, and has done it very brown indeed.—Baltimorean, Dem.

When ambition leads a public man to desert the rock of principle he generally gets into the quicksands. This has been Mr. Thurman's sad fate. After an able and gallant resistance to the inflation madness, he finally in despair abandoned himself to its current; but it has not borne him any nearer to the goal of his ambition, and will soon roll away and leave him abjectly floundering. Just now he is in a peck of trouble.

The next Ohio legislature elects his successor to the Senate. If the Republicans get the majority his case is, of course, hopeless; if, as is more likely, the Greenbackers will hold the balance of power, Gen. Ewing will be the man. Then, again, if Bishop is re-elected Governor, it is no secret that he will give Tilden Ohio's vote in the National Democratic Convention. Such are the considerations constraining him to run for the governorship; but, on the other hand, if he does run, it will give the Gramercy Park statesman a chance to get rid of a rival which the latter is not likely to let slip. The Bishop men will probably hold off and allow Thurman to be defeated. It is said that Thurman has concluded to run for Governor as being the best possible course under the circumstances, but the probability is that the result will be an extinguisher for him.

Lesson of the Primary Election.

The habit of wrong doing sometimes takes such a strong hold upon human beings that it becomes a part of their nature to do wrong, and they are unable to do right, even though it may imperil both life and liberty to do wrong. It is said that on the occasion of the earthquake which destroyed the city of Lisbon, whilst one portion of the city was a mass of ruins, and the walls of the small portion which was not swallowed up, were still quaking from the effects of the catastrophe, that thieves and robbers were busily engaged in plying their nefarious avocation of despoiling the people of their possessions, notwithstanding the fact that they were in danger of being consigned to instant death before they could realize the object of their ambition.

The false leaders and managers of the Democratic party have brought dishonor upon the party name and prestige by the manner in which they have conducted the affairs of the organization in this city.

The good and true men of the party have been aroused and are arising to its defence. They have remonstrated against the practices which have brought the party into disrepute and they have urged the managers to desist from a reiteration of the views of ballot-box stuffing, padding tickets and the employment of repeaters, and yet, notwithstanding all remonstrances and entreaties in relation to the perpetration of acts which are subversive of the rights of the people, the opening event of the campaign of the present year was characterized by a continuation of the same course of conduct which has rendered the practices of partisan leaders so odious in the past. The events which transpired in this city during the holding of the primary election on Monday were disgraceful in the extreme, and have justly excited the disapprobation and disgust of every true member of the party. The hope had been indulged in that we were approaching the dawn of a new era, and that those persons whose conduct has brought upon them the anathemas of an outraged people, would refrain from a renewal of those acts which they were given to understand would bring the party organization to disgrace, and themselves to political destruction. But they have not heeded the warning and there is a fearful day of wrath awaiting them in the future. By their actions they have shown the party of the strength which it had in other days. But the wrong does not end here. Realize that the positive vigor of the people—the Sampson of Democracy—is returning, and it will not be very long before the people will take hold of the decayed and rotten superstructure of sham Democracy and shake it to pieces, and utterly destroy the ring rulers and false leaders, and their cohort of ballot-box stuffers, padding ticket voters and repeaters. This being done a new temple of True Democracy will be established in which the rights of all the people will be duly respected, and political preferment will be conferred upon those only who are honest and capable, and who will be the choice of the people selected through the agency of an honest registration and a pure ballot box.

This is the lesson which the recent primary election. It will be well for the teachers to take heed how their pupils act upon the instruction which has been imparted to them.—Balto. True Democrat.

Maryland is supposed to have a hard money delegation in Congress, but the solid vote of the House members was cast on Saturday for the Warner Silver bill.—Balto. Gazette.

Not so fast, if you please, Mr. Urner, the member from the Sixth District, who was elected as a hard money man, did not desert his colors, but voted against the Warner bill. The "hard money" Democratic members from Maryland all went over to the "soft money" side. The question now is, were they honest when they were elected or are they dishonest now?—Cumtland News.

The Washington Herald (Democratic) of yesterday says it "is the opinion in Democratic circles, usually well informed, that Congress will adjourn early in June, after having passed a joint resolution extending the appropriations of the current year for the war, legislative, executive and judicial departments of the government over the first half of the next fiscal year in like proportion. This will carry the government over to January next, and as Congress will reassemble in December, provision can then be made for the further necessary expenses of the government."

Always keep them on hand, as delay increases suffering; and if you feel sickness coming upon you, take a dose of Dr. Bull's Baltimore Pills. They can do you no harm, and may save you from the sick room. Price only 25 cents.

Speech of Hon. M. G. Urner.

Our representative, on the 17th and 20th inst., opposed the repeal of certain sections of the Revised Statutes and the Statutes at large, which admit of the removal of cases, under certain circumstances, from the State Courts to the Circuit Court of the United States, in a speech of considerable force and ability. The object of the bill was to keep officers of the government, who were charged with all kinds of crimes and offenses by malicious persons in the States where they had been acting officially, from removing their cases to the United States tribunals in order to secure a more impartial trial. Mr. Urner closed with the following reference to the resurrection of the States rights doctrines:

Why, sir, is this question of States rights never to be settled? We had supposed that it was settled by the war. We know it was a vexed question that gave rise to bitter controversy in the past. But it was finally submitted to the arbitrament of the sword, and after four long years of sanguinary contest the verdict was rendered, we thought, in unmistakable terms. That verdict was, that the United States is a nation, sovereign and supreme, and that its powers exercised within its constitution, are the only powers that are sovereign and supreme in all this broad land of ours. We ask for judgment upon the verdict, and we ask that that judgment shall be irreversibly recorded not only in the legislation of the country but in the hearts and consciences of the people, so that all the people in all this land shall yield a willing obedience to the provisions of the Constitution and the laws that are passed in accordance therewith, and realizing, as they ought, and must, that in this land there is but one power that is sovereign and supreme and that is the power of the Government of the United States.

William Lloyd Garrison, the noted abolitionist, after a long illness, breathed his last at half-past eleven o'clock Saturday night at the Westmoreland Hotel, New York city, in the seventy-fourth year of his age. He was a remarkable man in many respects, and although many may have differed with him in his views on African slavery and in his efforts for its abolition, none will question his honesty of purpose. He was the most aggressive and uncompromising pioneer of the anti-slavery agitation, and this too, at a time when abolitionists were despised and out-neged even in Boston.

To the destruction of human slavery he devoted the best years of his life, attacking it at a time when its supporters were most powerful and defying persecution with a constancy that was storm-proof. In his own words, he stood "like the oak, like the Alps—unshaken. Opposition and abuse and slander and prejudice and judicial tyranny," said he, "add to the flame of my zeal. I am not discouraged; I am not dismayed; I am bolder and more confident than ever." It was so. He was a hotly tried example of the unyielding stuff that great agitators are made of.

Without mercenary motives; without hope of reward other than from his own conscience against the advice of his friends, and at a sacrifice of his own interests, he advocated a cause which was unpopular simply because he thought it right. Such singleness of purpose, such broad philanthropy, such staking of self for the good of a despised race, entitles him to the respect of every fair-minded man. He was neither orator nor scholar, but he had a rare force of character which made him a power among his associates. His name will live in history as that of one who devoted himself to an idea with self-sacrificing energy, and one who was the first and foremost in the work of emancipation.

There are several propositions as to their future course under consideration among the Democrats, which will be submitted to the caucus. The first is to pass the appropriation bills, pure and simple, issue an address to the country, and adjourn. The second is to pass a joint resolution continuing the appropriations on the basis of those last year until January 1st, renew the struggle at the next session, if the fall elections favor the Democrats, and abandon it if the Republicans are successful. The third plan is to pass the Legislative bill, divested of all extraneous legislation, excepting the jurors test oath, and let the Army bill fail. The fourth plan is similar to the foregoing except that instead of permitting the Army bill to fail outright, it is proposed to impose such conditions upon the use of the money appropriated as will restrict the transportation of troops and prevent the President from moving them at pleasure. Such a proviso, however, would surely jeopardize the bill, because the President would certainly veto any measure containing such a flagrant infringement upon his prerogative. The fifth proposition emanates from the irreconcilables, and is to pass neither bill and adjourn.

The House Ways and Means Committee have agreed to report a resolution fixing the date of adjournment June 10th.

TELEGRAPHIC.

THE NEGRO EXODUS.

WASHINGTON, May 25.—General Thomas W. Conway, of New Jersey, and Rev. John Turner, of St. Louis, have arrived here and laid facts in relation to the negro exodus before the President. They say that thousands of negroes are on the banks of the Mississippi waiting for transportation and that steamboat men refuse to take them because of the terrorism exercised by the planters. General Conway said he had taken the initiatory steps toward chartering Ohio river boats to go and deliver the emigrants who are refused transportation by the regular lines and that threats were freely made that if such boats went down the river on such an errand they would be fired into. The President said that he thought the exodus was destined to become general, especially from those portions of the South where the greatest amount of persecution was inflicted on the negroes; that there would be no need of funds to help the emigrants if the need of them were but properly made known to the good people of the country; that there could be no question of the right of the negro to emigrate whenever he saw fit to do so and that he had no doubt from very extensive information on the subject that all who came from the South would get good employment west of the Ohio. He said also that the exodus would do good and in fact had done good already.

General Conway desired to know definitely whether the President approved the proposition to go with chartered boats and deliver the thousands on the banks of the river. The President said he thought the step ought to be taken as one of justice and humanity. General Conway then asked: "Suppose the planters or their agents use violent means to prevent such boats from accomplishing their object, could the government be relied upon to give its protection?" With considerable respect and earnestness the President replied: "Such resistance to lawful business carried on on a national highway such as the Mississippi is would be rebellion and there would be no doubt but that the government would afford its protection."

"Then," said General Conway, "with that most satisfactory assurance we will undertake the work of delivering our poor fellow citizens who are in bondage on the river banks."

GEN. GRANT TO ARRIVE JULY 20. SHANGHAI, May 21.—Ex-President Grant and his party have left this city to continue their journey.

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 21.—General Grant will leave Yokohama by the next Pacific steamer about the last of June, and will reach San Francisco in the neighborhood of July 20. The arrangements for an excursion of citizens to meet him on his arrival have been completed with the leading trunk lines between the East and Omaha and from there over the roads of the Union and Central Pacific companies. The programme of arrangements is now preparing and will be made public shortly.

FIRES OF TERROR IN WEST VIRGINIA.

WHEELING, W. VA., May 26.—The Intelligencer will to-morrow publish an account of the recent doings of the so-called vigilants of Wetzel county, West Virginia, who style themselves "Red Men." They attacked the house of a man named Huzebaugh, breaking the windows with stones, and injuring his wife and children severely. They then served a notice to leave the county within a stated time on pain of hanging upon Huzebaugh, whose crime is not stated.

Ellen Kendall was notified to leave the county within three days, or she would be hung to the same tree from which John Wallace was suspended. Her offence was a refusal to keep company with a one of the gang. The town of Littleton has been served with a notice by the gang that a summary vengeance awaits it on account of the sympathy its people manifested to those aggrieved by the visits of the Red Men. A justice of the peace was warned to leave the State within three days, which order he hastily obeyed. Threats against him and warnings to other persons have been made and given, and general fear and lawlessness prevail throughout the county.

The Easton, Md., Star, of a recent date says: George Madden, a colored man 70 years old, was killed by lightning on Wednesday evening, on the Lemon J. Cattrap farm, while on his way home from Mr. Perry W. Stewart's, the tenant on the farm. He was found Thursday morning, and an inquest was held over his body by Justice Nicols. The lightning struck him on the cheek, burnt his whiskers, ran down his side and leg, and burnt the grass on the ground where he stood.

LOCAL NEWS.

—No transfers this week.

—The Grantsville Deer-Calf died last week.

—Theo. Bush is having his fourth street property painted.

—Mr. Rueben Browning is visiting friends in Garrett county.

—An emigrant train passed west Saturday evening.

—The Woollen factory is running on full time.

—Hon. P. Hamill is improving his residence.

—Every body should attend the band festival next week.

—The jail is empty of prisoners. This speaks well for our county.

—Deafness, the result of measles or scarlet fever, cured or relieved by Dr. Fundenberg.

—Several Oaklanders attended the church dedication at Kingwood last Sunday.

—The new town council met Tuesday evening, but transacted no business of importance.

—Mr. G. S. Hamill's new office is one of the handsomest and most substantial structures in Oakland.

—Dr. Fundenberg's practice is confined exclusively to all diseases of the eye, ear, nose and throat.

—The festival for the benefit of the Oakland cornet band, to be held next week, promises to be a success.

—Several car loads of ten rows for the use of the railroad hotel arrived during the last week.

—Michael Chrystal bought the Ang. King property, at Morgantown's sale, on Wednesday, for $255.

—The repair lands on the railroad have been working on the track in town lately.

—Dr. Fundenberg will be pleased to have those afflicted with any trouble of the eye, ear, nose or throat to call upon him.

—What the community would admire more than anything else is the man who has courage enough not to whistle "My Grandfather's Clock."

—Miss Katie Townsend left Oakland Monday evening, for a visit to relatives and friends in West Virginia.

—The time is now at hand when the average boy whose back is too weak to spade a flower bed for his mother, will dig over a half-acre lot for bait for 6-fishing.

—Fix up, brush up, sweep up, clean up, and never give up until the last bit of filth is carted away from your premises. Then you need have no fears of malarial diseases.

—The School Board met Monday, for the purpose of appointing trustees for the various schools in the county. The list will be published as soon as completed.

—Dr. E. H. Bartlett returned from Boston Thursday last week, where he had been attending the Supreme Lodge Knights of Honor, as a delegate from the Grand Lodge of Maryland.

—Monday last Mr. Peter Martin sold his mill property in Oakland to Mr. Dennis Ryan, for $5,000. We understand that Mr. Ryan will make extensive repairs and improvements to the property.

—Married—At the Carr House, Oakland, Md., May 28th, 1879, by Rev. John M. Davis, Mr. J. B. Bailey, of Taylor county, W. Va., and Miss Arandine A. Summers, of Lewis county, W. Va.

—The Governor has appointed C. H. Hamill, John Ryan, William H. Smith—the two first of Allegany and the last from Talbot county—commissioners to examine mines in Allegany and Garrett counties.

—Mr. James Sykes, long the keeper of Willard's hotel, Washington, and well known to many persons here as the conductor of the Deer Park hotel in 1874, has become insane, and been sent to an asylum.

—Dr. W. F. Fundenberg, Oculist, and Aurist, from Cumberland, Md., is now stopping at the "Davis House," where all those suffering from diseases of the eye, ear, nose and throat can consult him every day in the week, excepting on Saturdays and Sundays. All consultations free. Hours, 9 A. M. to 1 P. M.

—Mr. James M. Litzinger, a former employee of the Southern office, left on Monday last, for Oakland, Md., to take the formanship of the Garrett county Herald. "Jim" is a steady and reliable young man, and we commend him to the tender offices of the handsome young ladies of Oakland. —Grafton Sentinel.

—At Dickson's mill, nine miles from Cumberland, lives a youth by the name of Robm. Near the house stands a stripped tree nearly thirty-five feet high, and devoid of its branches. On a wicker of one dollar he ascended to the top of the tree, feet foremost, and came down gradually head foremost, in the presence of about twenty-five witnesses. The feat being done he claimed his money, and now the neighborhood proposes running an independent circus.

Church Services—Sunday.

M. E. Church.—Preaching in the morning, at 10 o'clock, by Rev. B. Ison.

Stone Church.—Preaching in the evening, at 8 o'clock, by Rev. J. A. Scott.

The Annual Levy.

The County Commissioners will meet next Monday for the purpose of making the annual levy for 1879. All persons having claims against the county should file them on or before that date, otherwise they may be deprived of the benefit of said levy.

Festival for the Band.

A strawberry and ice cream festival will be held by the young ladies of Oakland, on Thursday and Friday evenings, June 5th and 6th, at A. Loewenstein's new store room, on Alder street. Proceeds to be used in interest of the Oakland Cornet Band. All persons are cordially invited to be present.

COMMITTEE.

Literary Entertainment.

Prof. G. P. Blackburn, a practical teacher and elocutionist, will give an entertainment in the public school building, Oakland, Monday night, June 24, consisting of selections and recitations from leading authors, embracing patriotic effusions, thrilling sentiment, impassioned eloquence, tender pathos and sparkling humor. Prof. Blackburn comes well recommended. Our young folks should attend this entertainment in full force. See bills for further information.

Carless Shooting.

A short time since Mr. John B. Brant bought a cow at a sheriff's sale, the property of one of his tenants named Will, residing in Grantsville district, this county, and last week, accompanied by Thomas Pittard, he went to Will's and took the cow, after some opposition on the part of the late owner, who followed them for some distance, and fired two shots from a rifle at Mr. B., the balls barely missing him. The cow was brought to Oakland and placed in a stable, which was securely locked, but next morning the stable was found broken open and the cow had disappeared.

The Blind to See.

The other day Dr. W. F. Fundenberg, the oculist and aurist from Cumberland, Md., removed a cataract from the right eye of Mr. Geo. W. Orris, of Gettysburg, Cambria county, who had been blind in both eyes for five or six years. The left eye was operated upon by some surgeon from Philadelphia but was not a success. A few months ago he consulted Dr. Fundenberg in regard to the restoration of the sight of the remaining eye, and now we are glad to say that the sight has been entirely restored. Dr. F. may be congratulated upon the great reputation as a skillful oculist that he is rapidly acquiring. —Somerset Democrat.

The Literary.

The Literary Society met at the usual time and place last week. A large audience was present. The following programme was rendered: Paper read by Zealous Tower; selection, Miss Ella Ison; essay, Frank Arnold; debate, Resolved, That there should be a property qualification for suffrage. Affirmative, A. B. Woodcock, N. B. Wayman; negative, E. Z. Tower, G. W. Merrill. The President appointed A. J. Harne and Allen Ison associate judges who, by a majority vote, decided the question in the negative.

A resolution, authorizing the appointment of a committee to change the working of the Society to that of an embryo legislative body, was carried. A committee was also appointed to make arrangements for the holding of an ice cream festival.

Helmhold's Medicinal Preparations.

Helmhold's various medicinal preparations have for the last twenty or more years occupied a prominent place on the shelves of every respectable druggist and physician in the land. The skill displayed in their preparation, the invariable promptness and efficiency of their action, the absence of nauseous and disgusting taste or odor, and the attractive manner in which they are put up, have made them universal favorites. Especially is this the case with Helmhold's famous Buchu, a medicine which has become indispensable in the treatment of a large and troublesome class of diseases, particularly those which affect the digestive and urinary organs. As a diuretic, it is invaluable, and the great advantage it possesses over other preparations is the absolute purity of the ingredients, and the uniformity of strength. Parties purchasing should be careful to see that Helmhold's proprietary stamp is affixed to each bottle.

Report of the County Examiner.

OFFICE OF THE
HARRIS COUNTY SCHOOL BOARD,
DALLAS, TEX., MAY 26, 1879.

To the Board of County School Commissioners of Garrett County:

I have thought proper, at this close of the scholastic year, to lay before you my views of the present condition and future prospects of public schools in Garrett county.

We labor under many difficulties in this county. To accommodate our population estimated at 12,500, scattered over a territory of six hundred and seventy-five square miles, necessitates a great many schools. I shall report for the present scholastic year (first term), eighty-two schools, and eighty-nine teachers; (second term), eighty-five schools and ninety-three teachers. To meet this demand, we have less than $15,000. State and county appropriations included.

Our schools were kept open two terms during the present year, and while I regret that we cannot see Garrett county coming up in line in this respect with our sister counties, it might not be out of place to state here the reasons why we cannot continue our schools for three or more terms. The primary difficulty consists in the lack of means to carry out the end in view; again, it is to be remembered that our people as a class are poor, and require the labor of their elder children upon the farms, as soon as their labor can be advantageously applied. Thus many schools are reduced to a mere nominal attendance upon approach of spring. The Oakland, Grantsville, Accident, Deer Park and Bloomington schools, with great advantage, have been closed three, or even four terms, throwing them open during the extra terms to all pupils from the county. This, though, would give rise to very great dissatisfaction, as it would be regarded in the light of unequal distribution of the public funds.

In my tour of inspection through the county this winter I found school houses very irregularly distributed as to population, and would suggest the closing of least eight schools the coming year. This would give the schools in the neighborhood of those closed a full attendance, whereas at present they are dragging on a sickly existence, some falling even below this. Should my views meet with the approbation of the Board, it will be a saving of six hundred dollars a term. In my proposition to reduce the salaries of teachers, I have graded to $82.50 a term, made at the commencement of the year, and which the Board was pleased to adopt, there has resulted a saving of two thousand dollars. While it was with great regret that I made the suggestion, believing that the greater the salary the better will be the material offered in the way of teachers, I was moved notwithstanding to urge it, from the fact that most of our teachers as teachers had taught in years previously at $75 per term, and from the reduced cost of living the present salary was more than equal that of several years past.

While of the grade of my teachers (taken as a body), I cannot speak in terms of the highest praise, it must be taken into consideration that their facilities for imparting instruction are not of the best, many schools being entirely destitute of wall maps and inadequately furnished with convenient seats and desks, while the buildings in some instances are entirely unfit for the purposes for which they are used. If through normal training is very much needed and I would here present my views for the consideration of the Board. For reasons stated we cannot maintain our schools for a longer period than two terms. I would make the second term forty-eight days, and pay my teachers for this time, at the same rate as the first term, viz: $82.50 for fifty-three days; in other words, deduct the pay of five days from each teacher, which would aggregate upwards of five hundred dollars. With this amount, (perhaps increased by a hundred dollars) I would purchase the globes, maps, charts, etc., required and employ a teacher of the first class for a salary, to whom I could pay a liberal salary for two months and a half. This normal tuition to be free to all teachers in Garrett county who contributed by a reduced salary to their normal school. Two months salary and a half of such training as this would be worth all the teachers' institutes you could hold in Garrett county for years to come, and would so raise the grade of my teachers that would be of the most gratifying character to all concerned. A teachers' institute would cost the county just the amount I propose, would be but partially attended, and would be the occasion of a frolic by many of those who did attend. I do not wish to be understood as underrating the advantages of a teachers' institute, but I do insist, that to be profitable, the teachers should be capable of appreciating their advantages. I should hesitate to assemble my teachers for institute exercises before you or the State Board, untrained and uninitiated as they are. To expect my teachers to avail themselves of the advantages offered by the State Normal School, would be a fallacious hope; the expense to them precludes the possibility of such a thing. Here they can obtain board for two dollars a week, and would be saved the expense of a trip to Baltimore and back.

There is due teachers as follows:

Full time teachers for 1st term	$3,818.20
Do " " " 2d " "	$3,992.00
Do " " " 3d " "	$10,120.28
In Park at present	$20.55
Due from tax sale, for April	$1,100.00
Due from tax sale, for May	$1,250.00
State Free school tax paid	$2,100.00
Amount due	$12,000.00

This will enable me to take up the 1st term due bills now held by teachers, in July, and a portion of the 2d term. The balance I cannot meet before October and January.

Many of our school houses require repairs, some should be enlarged, and several should be removed in order to better accommodate the communities where they are located. Constant demands are being made for new school districts. Those fields, properly presented by the Board of School Commissioners to our County Commissioners, I have no doubt, will induce them to make an increased levy for the coming year. A division of the county into school districts of four miles square, as contemplated in the public school law, Chap. 4, sec. 6, would give Garrett county about forty-two schools; or, taking another view of the matter, the number of schools in the county might be continued as at present, keeping open in any one year, only sixty-five schools, the next year opening those not taught the year previous, and thus alternating from year to year, making these exceptions apply to the schools in the more sparsely settled districts, thus accommodating the masses. With this number of schools and taking our present appropriations, I could keep the schools open for two terms and still create a sinking fund to be devoted to the payment of the present indebtedness of the Board.

The lack of interest manifested by many of our citizens in school matters is also a serious drawback to their successful working. In making this assertion I am sustained by the fact that I advertised in our county papers that, on this date, Monday, the 23rd, the Board would meet to appoint new trustees for the ensuing year, and requested the citizens in the various school districts to confer with each other, and send in the names of such parties as they desired for trustees. I have received responses from only some ten school districts out of eighty-five, and yet complaints have been very frequently urged against many of the present trustees.

I think some of the text books now in use might with advantage be laid aside for others, and the study of certain branches more rigidly enforced. As to the mode of supplying books, as frequent complaints have been made, the Board might take under consideration this subject, and determine whether any other plan can be adopted less objectionable.

Finding the schools very irregularly numbered I have re-numbered them, and shall notify the trustees soon as appointed, of the new number given the school.

Believing that I have touched upon the more important points connected with our educational interests, I most respectfully submit the same for your consideration.

E. H. BARTLETT,
Secretary, &c.

Sunday School Convention.

Mr. Editor:—You will please give notice that a Sunday School Convention, under the auspices of the Maryland Sunday School Union, will be held at Accident, commencing on Friday, June 29th, and ending Sunday, June 30th. The Convention will be composed of the Pastors and Superintendents of all the Sunday Schools in the county, and one delegate to be elected from each school. (Except schools numbering one hundred or more, will be entitled to two delegates.) As soon as possible the schools should elect such persons as will promise to attend; those who cannot send delegates, will please send a report of their school by mail, giving name of school, location, number of teachers, scholars, &c. We will send blanks to Superintendents as far as we can, but hope to hear from every school in the county whether they receive a blank report or not. Reports sent by mail, may be addressed to J. M. Davis, Oakland, or Dr. E. H. Gloffety, Accident. Delegates expecting to attend will please drop a card to Dr. E. H. Gloffety, so that the committee of arrangements may be informed how many they will be expected to provide homes for.

J. M. DAVIS,
Vice President for Garrett Co.

Dr. E. H. GLOFFETY, Corresponding Secretary.

Orphans' Court.

The Orphans' Court for Garrett County was convened on Tuesday, 27th inst. Present, Hon. Jos. DeWitt, Chief Judge, and Hon. A. J. Michaels and Wm. Harvey, Associate Judges, and Wm. L. Rawlings, Register.

Among others were the following proceedings: The last will and testament of Wm. Harden, late of Garrett county, deceased, was filed for probate and record.

Mrs. Catharine McGraw, administratrix of John McGraw, dec'd, settled her first and final account.

The Court then adjourned until Tuesday, the 10th day of June.

Coal Mine Ventilation.

Governor Carroll has received the first annual report of Owen Rioridan, mine inspector for Allegany and Garrett counties. Mr. Rioridan states that he entered upon his duties on the 6th of May, 1878, but had previously delivered to the superintendents of the different mines a copy of the ventilation law of 1875, which law, he quotes entire. He believes that there should be 60 cubic feet of air in the mines per minute for each man in the mines, and feeling impressed with this "responsibility before God and man," to the men placed in his charge, he proceeded to discover if they each had that 60 cubic feet of air per minute. He was assisted in his work by an anemometer, or air meter, and then gives the executive the rule by which to work the machinery and to find the number of feet of air, and clinches the whole by giving an arithmetical example. The result of his examination showed that the Franklin Coal Company gave, at the time of examination, each man per minute 95 cubic feet of air; the Hampshire and Baltimore Coal Company, 223; the old mine of this company, 207; Potomac Coal Company, 62; Atlantic, 154; American, 23; Maryland, 128; New Central (Kornitz mine), 36; Big Vein, 73; Middleman mine, 60; Bluen Aron, 86; Consolidation (Ocean mine), 65; Pompey mine No. 2, 78; Borden, 31 and 67; Union, 121; National mine, 137; Gwanton mine, 97. Some were not at work, and there were no reports from two places. He says there is no reasonable excuse on the part of the companies for not having plenty of air circulating through their mines. He gives the Governor the Latin derivation of ventilation, and argues from it that there ought to be motion to ventilate. He thinks cross cut pillars in mines are beneficial to the miners' health, to the horses and also to the companies. He does not think too many men ought to be worked at one place, and admires the Consolidation's way of mining. The report is statistical, geological and voluminous.

—200 sacks G. A. Salt for sale at Wm. P. Totten's Cheap Cash Store, Oakland, Md. a29-4f.

At the city primaries which were held in Baltimore last Monday the ringdites (which are made up of gamblers, rumsellers, ballot-box stuffers, repeaters, bunners, &c.) carried everything before them, and to-day, as formerly, the Democratic policy of the city of Baltimore are in the hands of the Ring, composed of just such characters as we have named. What hope can we have for a reform? Can we expect that such taskmaster will give us for the legislature any other class of men than their own? With affairs in the hands of such men can the christian people and the temperance men of the State expect them to present a legislative ticket that will be in the interest of local option or any kind of temperance reform? We think not. We know as far as any one can know of the future they will not. They say, they will give us a good ticket, and with this promise they will keep us satisfied until it is too late to do anything. Are we so blind as not to see the plainest indications as expressed in the movements that have taken place? Can we not learn a lesson by the past? Let us take the warning notes given, and be up and doing. The only true policy is for the temperance people and the christian people (the first should cover both, for we cannot see how a christian can be anything but a temperance man) to organize a temperance party. Let all the different branches come together, from a grand party and put a full temperance ticket in the field. Be in earnest about it and demand that the christian people vote that ticket. You may not succeed the first time, but keep at it, make no compromises with any parties, and in time you will succeed. Our cause is just, and it will meet with success. In christianity we make no compromises with the devil. Temperance is christian work and in it we should make no compromises with the devil's emissaries. —Woolleny News.

Mr. Watterson has seen a light. He is no longer in favor of revolution, but advises the party to back down. In his most impressive manner he says: "The Republicans are perfectly right in saying that a refusal to vote the appropriations is revolutionary. It is more. It is revolution. It is more. It is ruin." Precisely; that is what the Republicans discovered at the opening of the light. He then proceeds to sit down without ceremony upon Kentucky's gifted son, Beck, by declaring that words spoken in the heat of debate are "trifles," which commit nobody to a policy, and tells the party its business is to pass all the bills and then appeal to the country. The appeal is to be made on the fact that "The Democratic party has planted itself upon the Constitution." So it lies with both feet, and it will get a "grand house" presently, which will teach it to keep its feet off that sacred document in future.

An old Louisiana dorky wanted to know the other day why it was that Kansas was such a poor place for the negroes to go to now, when it was necessary to go to war because they could not be taken to Kansas twenty years ago.

The House, while struggling with the Warner silver bill Friday, remained in continuous session 21 hours, 45 of which were absolutely wasted, the bill resting in exactly the same position when it adjourned at nine o'clock Saturday morning as it was Friday afternoon after the vote upon the last section. Such action, when all that is asked of Congress is for it to pass the appropriation bills and go home, does not tend to decrease the contempt which one member, Mr. McCook, was, such enough to say he, in common with a large portion of the people of the country, felt for Congress. The passage of the bill by the House was a surprise to no one, but it is hardly expected that it will pass the Senate, and if it should it will be vetoed by the President. It appears that Mr. Warner introduced the bill for the purpose of amalgamating the Democrats and Greenbackers of Ohio, but the amendments which have been added effectually defeat this object, so that the whole two weeks' discussion of the measure will have no effect either upon the financial or partisan purposes which it was expected to accomplish.

The Southern correspondents are letting out a good many family secrets in their letters from Washington. One of them writes to the Charleston News and Courier this confession about the unpopularity of the newly revived doctrine of State sovereignty: "Thirty-two millions out of forty millions of people swear that these United States is a nation, and that they are hell-bent on making the facts conform to their fancy. This is their evident intention, and I really do not see how we of the South are to prevent them or save ourselves and them from the consequences of their determined fanaticism." He is also careless enough to say that by his veto "Hayes has saved his party from defeat at the next election." These glimpses at sentiment inside the Democratic camp shows that the party realizes fully the size of the blunder it has made. Perhaps also they furnish an excuse for the continuation of the blundering, for it may be that feeling that defeat is inevitable the leaders wish to make it a big one.

The Roman Catholic Cathedral in New York was consecrated Sunday by a ceremonial more imposing than any ever held in this country. The cardinal, a half-dozen archbishops, more than a score of bishops, and over five hundred priests appeared in the procession and took part in the ceremonies. The procession marched around the block on which the cathedral stands, and thus made a street show which attracted an immense crowd to the neighborhood.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

[Advertisements under this heading will be inserted at the following rates: For Members of the Legislature, Clerk of the Court, Sheriff and Sheriff's Deputies, Attorneys, Surveys and County Commissioners, $200 each; for Recorder of Wills and Judges of the Orphans' Court $200 each. Advertisements to run all the meetings of the Southern Convention. The space allowed will be six columns per week, and at cost for each day beyond that. No name will be announced until the first of June.]

FOR CLERK CIRCUIT COURT.

To the Republicans of Garrett County: Resolving so many calamities and distress from all parts of the county, to the effect that the people, and especially those having causes in court, do not desire a change in the Clerk's office the succeeding term, I have very much reason to suppose that no name will be brought before the Convention. I therefore, take this method of announcing to the public that I am a candidate for the office of Clerk of the Circuit Court for Garrett county, subject to the decision of the Republican county nominating convention.

If I am again nominated, I shall appreciate the honor and thankfully accept. And if elected, shall perform the duties thereof with care and attention, to the best of my ability, in the past.

April 26. W. H. TOWER.

SHERIFFALTY.

ED. REPERGLIAN:—Please announce my name as a candidate for the Sheriffalty of Garrett county, subject to the decision of the Republican Nominating Convention.

MILTON LOWDERMILK.

ED. REPERGLIAN:—Please announce my name as a candidate for the Sheriffalty of Garrett county, subject to the decision of the Republican Nominating Convention.

D. ADOLPHUS FRIEND.

ED. REPERGLIAN:—Please announce my name as a candidate for the Sheriffalty of Garrett county, subject to the decision of the Republican Nominating Convention.

GEORGE D. WHITE.

ED. REPERGLIAN:—Please announce my name as a candidate for the Sheriffalty of Garrett county, subject to the decision of the Republican Nominating Convention.

W. SCOTT PEW.

SURVEYOR.

ED. REPERGLIAN:—Please announce my name as a candidate for the office of County Surveyor, subject to the decision of the Republican Nominating Convention.

JOHN HARNED.

Sheriff's Sale.

By virtue of a writ of fieri facias, issued out of the Circuit Court for Garrett county, and to me directed, at the suit of James Wiseman and Mary Wiseman, against the goods and chattels, tenements and household goods of Wm. T. Mullin and John G. Mullin, executors of Edward Mullin, deceased, I have seized and taken in execution all the right, title, interest, claim and demand, at law and in equity, of the said Wm. T. Mullin and John G. Mullin, executors as aforesaid, in and to the following property, to-wit:

LOT NO. 15,

in McCarty's Addition to the town of Oakland, in Garrett Co., and State of Maryland.

And I hereby give notice, that on

SATURDAY, June 21st 1879,

at 2 o'clock, p. m., in front of Cuthbert's Hotel, in the town of Oakland, will offer for sale the said property seized and taken in execution, to the highest bidder, for cash, to satisfy said judgment and costs.

THOS. CODDINGTON,

Sheriff.

THE REPUBLICAN.

OAKLAND, MARYLAND.

JAS. A. HAYDEN,
Editor and Proprietor.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.
One copy, one year, $1.00
Six months, .75
Three months, .50
INvariably in Advance.

TERMS OF ADVERTISING.
First insertion, $1.00 per square of 8 lines;
Second insertion, .75; third, .50; fourth, .35;
Longer space, special contract. All advertising longer
than three months.

Correspondents must enclose full name and
address, not necessarily for publication, but as a guarantee of good faith. Rejected
communications will not be returned.

SATURDAY, JUNE 7, 1879.

If an honest registry law would kill the Democratic party, it is time
for that party to die, for the people will have it at the next session of the Legislature. If it is true of parties as of men, nothing is lost by being honest.

The loss of life in Missouri by the late cyclone was terrible. Hundreds of people were either killed or injured, and houses were torn to splinters. The peculiarity about it is, that the dead bodies were burned
and covered with sulphurous mud,
leading to the belief that the storm
was an electrical and not a wind current.

There really must be some little corruption amongst Democratic politicians in Baltimore, after all, for the Gazette speaks thus portentously:

The Tammany Ring was a proud, powerful institution in New York in its day but the people smashed it to smithereens when the corrupt and insolent plunderers in the fat offices
had sufficiently taxed the public patience. The Court house Clique in this city is just as certainly downed this fall.

The Baltimore American states
that "an address to Senator Whyte is in circulation and is receiving the signatures of a large number of persons, including many prominent business men, bank presidents and others, requesting the Senator to reconsider his withdrawal from the contest for the United States Senatorship, and to again allow the use of his name for that position."

The Vicksburg Herald says that politics has much to do with the Negro Exodus from the South, and adds that, "if the Democratic party will not deal with the colored people
'in an honest, just and philanthropic'
manner, they will never give place to some party that will do so." The editor understands the situation surprisingly well.

The Democrat in its last issue attacks the County Commissioners for passing an order restricting county publications to two papers and for the large levies to the said papers. If no restriction had been placed upon county advertising, and the Democrat
had been allowed an equal share in this work, all would have been lovely, even though the expense had been increased $1,500 or more. As we have said before, "the office of County Commissioner is always thankless. Parties make claims that, subjected to fair scrutiny, are wholly rejected or largely reduced, and from that day forward the representatives of these claims become their blatant assailants. Without rhyme or reason they are expected to ignore the claims against the county, and cut down
the rate of taxation. But the clamor only lasts till people understand that they have been true to their interests
—have met the responsibilities of the position in a just spirit and levied enough to keep the county out of debt. Such, we believe, has been the course of the present Board."

The Democrat fails to tell the "burdened tax payers" of Garrett county that it received $500 for publishing
the General Laws passed at the last session of the Legislature, which sum comes as surely, if not as directly from their pockets as that for county printing; and then the publication of these General Laws is of no value to the public at all, and is only done in order to pension Democratic papers; but the "hard-earned duets"
of the tax payers are required to "pay
the mortgage thus placed on the sons of toil."

The True Ring.

The Cincinnati Commercial says:
Without the slightest reason in the public business—with the mere purpose of grasping offices and of harassing those departments of the Government not in possession of Confederates—the Democratic caucus decreed the extra session of Congress.
Now they ask the President as the commander-in-chief of the Army of the United States, to surrender his sword, and he refuses to do it. They threaten therefore to starve the army
—to take away the guards from the frontiers and abandon the National property. Let them try it.

The Last Ditch.

The consciousness of being ridiculous appears just now to be the master feeling with the Democratic party in Congress, and their aim is to do something or other which shall make it appear that the extra session
has not been wholly barren and absurd. The lurid light that filled the caucus chamber when the shouts of the coercionists first resounded on the air has faded into a sickly blue,
whose wan shades fall upon puzzled heads, whose advice is as feeble and distracted as their wits. The fact is clearly appreciated that another colossal blunder has been committed.
To use Gen. Grant's forcible metaphor, the Democracy has again kicked over the milk bucket just as it had filled it. The proverb that you cannot pick up spilt milk now applies to their case. They cannot undo the blunders of the extra session, but they have it in their power to add thereto, and this it seems is what they will be likely to do.

The latest product of their distraction is a plan for passing the appropriation bills with provisions inhibiting
the payment of money for certain purposes. The Army bill is to be passed with a clause providing that none of the money shall be used for transporting troops to polling places; and the Legislative, Executive and Judicial Appropriation bill will not contain any provision for the deputy marshals. A bill for the repeal of the test-oath will be passed
as a distinct and separate measure.
These measures cannot become laws against the President's approval any more than those which have already been vetoed, and the prospect of their success turns solely upon the probabilities of executive action. If the proviso of the Army Appropriation bill is limited to the prohibition of payment for the transportation of troops to the polls, the probability is that the bill will be approved. The President's message returning the last army appropriation bill concluded with the following declaration:

"Though I believe that the existing statutes are abundantly adequate to completely prevent military interference with the elections in the sense in which this phrase is used in the title of this bill and is employed by the people of this country, I shall find no difficulty in concurring in any additional legislation limited to that object which does not interfere with the indispensable exercise of the powers of the government under the Constitution and the laws."

In a previous message he pointed out that the proviso added to the Army Appropriation bill of 1878 prohibiting the employment of troops as a posse comitatus had the effect of preventing any use of the troops by United States supervisors or marshals to support their authority in case of disturbances at the polls. Therefore, if the proviso which the Democratic party in Congress propose to add to the Army bill is merely a superfluity and does not really restrict the government any more than existing legislation, it is not likely that the President will veto the bill. The mere superfluous-ness of a section of a bill would certainly not afford a good ground for a veto, but doubtless the phraseology of the section will be closely scrutinized with a view to discover whether its effect may not be to encroach upon the necessary authority of the government, and if it should do so the bill would doubtless be returned.

There can hardly be any room for doubt as to the fate of the Legislative, Executive and Judicial Appropriation bill if encumbered in the way proposed. It would amount to a command from Congress to the Executive not to enforce certain laws, and the disapproval of the President may be considered certain.
There is no doubt that the test oath,
at least so far as it applies to the civil war, will be repealed. There is practically no opposition to this measure.
The net result of the toil and trouble
of the extra session will therefore probably be the enactment of a superfluity and the passage of a repeal that could have been secured last session, and which is too unimportant to justify the expenditure of several millions which the session will cost the taxpayers. It has been suggested that the Democrats may escape further vetoes by passing the bills and adjourning forthwith, but this is a mistake. The President may reconvene them the day after adjournment, and that species of coercion would prove as effectual as that which has been already tried.

Baltimore American.

The militia of Georgia consists of 177 companies of Infantry, 69 companies of cavalry and five companies of artillery, all well armed and equipped. In addition to this force, consisting of white organizations, there are 20 colored Infantry companies, 1
cavalry company and 1 artillery company. The latter are in a degree unarmed, and especially are they so on election days, when they are divested of their arms by a State law
only enforced against the colored people.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

Special Correspondence to The Republican.
WASHINGTON, D. C., June 8, 1879.

The Democratic majority does not learn by experience. Failing to enjoy the President into the approval of the appropriation bills as they originally passed, or of the Lodd bill, which embraced all that was unpatriotic in the Army bill as first passed, they have decided to pass
the appropriation bills with specific instructions as to how each dollar shall be used. That is, in the Army bill they will forbid the President, made commander-in-chief of the Army by the Constitution, from paying any more to troops he may find it necessary, under existing law,
to use at the polls. Compared to such clearly unconstitutional legislation
as this, the original proposition to turn the elections over, by direct legislation, to violence and fraud, was commendable. Knowing well that the President will veto such measures, the Democratic caucus couples the announcement of this proposed legislation with a threat to adjourn on the day the bills are sent to him. Such a threat, certainly not not frighten the President. It will,
however, answer the purpose of completing and rounding out the infamous record so far made by the Democratic party at this and the last session.

I am not, on the whole, sorry that Foster was nominated in Ohio for Governor. He is an able man and did much for the reputation of his State when in Congress. He will deserve and will undoubtedly receive a large vote. It is believed here, at this time, that Senator Thurman will be the opposition candidate, not because he desires the nomination, but because the nomination is thought to be a party necessity. Democratic feeling on this subject has strengthened greatly in the past few days.
It may be better for the Republicans
to meet and conquer the Senator than at a later day or on a more important field.

Yesterday a bill passed the House,
providing for a commission to inquire into the condition of the Mississippi river, with a view to a general system of improvement. That the nation has a deep interest in the navigation of that great river is not questioned, but schemes so magnificent as this seems to be the beginning of will bear careful scrutiny.
Those vigilant Republicans who have saved the country from meas-ureless plunder at the hands of Democrats, during the last five years,
while the latter have been "economizing," by dropping here and there a messenger or a tide waiter, will be expected to keep a sharp eye on this Mississippi scheme.

I regret to announce the death,
here, which occurred last week, of Hon. Eben E. Ingersoll, for many years a very efficient radical Republican Representative from Illinois,
and a man loved by all who knew him.

LOGAN.

The Democrats in Congress are preparing another part of the machinery by which it is proposed to steal the Presidency in 1880. This branch of the scheme concerns itself with the counting of the electoral vote. The majority of the House Committee upon that subject have agreed upon a bill which declares that where there is a contest over the electoral vote of a State, the decision of the highest judicial authority of the State, if given, shall be accepted
as final unless both houses of Congress shall concur in reversing the decision. Where there is a contest,
and there is no such judicial decision,
the electoral vote of the State shall not be counted unless both houses
concur in ordering it to be counted.
Every one who remembers the insane attempts that were made to defeat the electoral count in the House in 1877 by trumped-up charges of illegitimacy against electors of States which had cast overwhelming Republican majorities, can easily imagine what we might expect in 1880 under such a law from the present Congress. The same curious relationship of the great parties to the question of genuine State Rights is presented now as was presented then. Senator Edmunds's bill, which was passed by the Senate in the last Congress but defeated in the House, declared that the decision of the highest judicial authority of a State
as to which is its true electoral vote should be final. This right of the State, and the State alone, to say what its electoral vote shall be, was upheld by the Republicans during the electoral controversy, and would be upheld by them in Congress today; while the Democrats, the professed champions of State Rights, who have just passed a bill to make the National Government subordinate to the State Governments, have upheld the theory—and have now embodied it in this bill—that the houses of Congress shall have the power to say for whom the electoral vote of a State shall be cast, even in opposition to the decision of its highest court.

Spirit of the New York Press.

Following is the pith of the editorial comments in the New York papers of Tuesday morning:

Herald: No political party was ever in quite so ludicrous a plight as the Democratic party is at present.
Since it has ceased to be dangerous
the country can afford to laugh at it and deride its follies.

In the early part of this called session there was some reason to fear that Democratic desperadoes would withhold the appropriations and dis-organize the government. They dare not venture on this treacherous experiment; their courage has "peezed out at the heels of their boots."

Sun: We believe, however, from the campaign being opened so early,
that the true view of public affairs,
whatever it may be, is all the more likely to prevail before we arrive at the voting time for President. If the Democrats deserve power, they are pretty likely to attain to it at the next Presidential election.

World: That the ship has ridden
over and not gone under the waves is due most of all to those who have represented the States which were hottest and boldest in the war of the secession. They most of all in and out of the House have stood calm and self-poised.

Tribune: The Democratic members of the House are to be congratulated.
A new member has just arrived from Texas, well supplied with native
common sense, which is reinforced by his recent contact with the people.

He tells his party frankly that what they need is not backbone but brains, and that they will be compelled to back down in the end.
They are to be congratulated, but poor Mr. Tyson is to be commiser-ated. He'll be in a fearful minority.

Times: On the principle that it is never too late to mend, we agree with the Democrats who urge that their party should not be deferred
by taunts and sneers from passing the appropriation bills without more
ado. After all that has happened,
"backing down" cannot be made a pleasant process, but being the right thing to do, and the inevitable thing
into the bargain, the party can better effort to endure the mortification it involves than to go on making wry faces with the knowledge that, after all, the government must be supplied with means of defraying current expenses.

The Bulldozing Must Stop.

The New Orleans Times, which is orthodox Democratic, and has the largest circulation of any newspaper
in the Southwest, recently published an editorial with the above caption, dwelling on the theme with a posi-tiveness that a northern radical paper could hardly surpass. The Times takes for its subject a meeting that was held in Lincoln county, Mississippi, last week, and was in itself an indication that a new era is beginning in the South. The people of that county, it says, "have done what the citizens of hundreds of other localities in the South ought to do and must do if they would avert the fate of barbarism and desolation." The topic is so interesting that we are tempted to add the following extracts from the article in the Times:

"Two years ago the Times warned
the people of Mississippi of the violence and lawlessness prevailing in the southwestern part of the State.
One or two of the local papers seconded our efforts and testified to the accuracy of our statements, but the majority of them, aided by public opinion and encouraged, either actively or passively, by the State authorities, pronounced against us, and so the carnival of savagery went on.
Now, however, the substantial citizens are beginning to realize that the State and the ugly demands of the self preservation are clamoring to be heard, and that they have to face
the alternative of acknowledging and suppressing the infamous ruffianism in their midst, or of allowing their neighborhoods to be depopulated and their property to be obliterated.
They have borne it long—too long, as they now realize—but they can bear it no further; and this issue between civilization and barbarism is made. We can only say that the good people of Lincoln county have our warmest sympathy and our heartfelt wishes for their success in the struggle upon which they are now entering and upon the result of which depends their prosperity or their ruin. One thing we know: if they can stand by the resolution they have so manfully and honestly announced,
the victory must be theirs, and the rewards of that victory will be visible in harmony and confidence between them and the colored people and in the swift which is the necessary product of those conditions.

We might ask our own fellow citizens
whether there are no localities in Louisiana which might with profit adopt the policy of the two hundred determined citizens of Beat Five?
We might ask them whether there are no fertile and favored districts
liable to be abandoned by the laboring classes because the solid and substantial citizens, whose interests are at stake, are too blind or too timid to do what the people of Lincoln county have just done? There are landless and penniless office seekers who have nothing to lose and who can afford to say of the negroes, 'let them go?' But we are addressing our suggestions to them. We have heard enough and far more than enough from them. It is our sorrow and our curse that such men have been doing the bulk of the talking for so these many years. What we desire is that the men who own the property, who represent the interests, and who bear the risks and consequences, shall consider whether there are not some neighborhoods where it behooves them to take pattern by 'Beat Five' and to take up arms against the ruffians and cutthroats who are ruining them and disgracing civilization."

TELEGRAPHIC.

OHIO NOMINATIONS.

COLUMBUS, June 4.—The Democratic convention met to-day and organized by the election of Gen. J. B.
Stedman, president.

The balloting for Governor resulted in the choice of Gen. Thos. Ewing on the second ballot, and Gen. A. V.
Rice was nominated for Lieutenant Governor. The other State officers were re-nominated.

The Greenback convention nominated Mr. Pratt for Governor and Mr. Preyor for Lieutenant Governor
by acclamation.

MR. MATTHEWS' CHANCES.

WASHINGTON, June 3.—In the executive session of the Senate this afternoon Mr. Bayard, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported adversely upon the nomination of R. Stockett Matthews for the Maryland United States judgeship. The case was then placed on the calendar, and will be considered in its order at some subsequent executive session.
As the matter now stands, Mr. Matthews may possibly be confirmed despite the adverse report of the committee.

ELECTION OF OFFICERS.

ANNAPOLIS, June 2.—Officers of the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal were chosen to-day as follows: President,
A. P. Gorman; directors, J. G. Barrett, M. Bannon, Patrick Hamill, H.
D. Farnandis, B. B. Crawford and John Humbird.

GEN. SHIELDS DIES IN HIS CHAIR.

OTTUMWA, Iowa, June 2.—Gen.
James Shields, late United States
Senator from Missouri, died suddenly in this city at half-past 10 o'clock last night. He had appeared in his usual health on the Sabbath day and ate a hearty supper at 6 o'clock, after which he wrote several letters, but just before retiring he complained of a pain in his chest, and shortly afterwards said to his niece that he was dying, and in thirty minutes expired sitting in his chair, remaining conscious to the last. He lectured in this city on Wednesday evening
last, and had remained here visiting relatives. His remains will leave here at 5 o'clock this evening for his late home in Carrollton, Missouri.

OHIO REPUBLICANS.

CINCINNATI, Ohio, May 28.—The Republican State Convention met in Music Hall at 11:10 A. M., to-day, and was called to order by G. W. C.
Cooper, chairman of the State Central Committee. After prayer by the Rev. Dr. Walden, Hon. Allen
T. Brinsmade, of Cleveland, was made temporary chairman, and S.
M. Fields, of Columbus, temporary secretary. After the election of members of the various committees,
the convention took a recess until two o'clock. On re-assembling, the committee on permanent reorganization selected Ex-Governor Wm.
Denison for permanent chairman.
The contest was close between him
and Gen. Garfield. Ex-Governor Denison, after taking the chair made a long speech, after which the usual order of business was reported, and the real work of the convention was then in order. The names of Taft,
Foster and Kiefer were presented.
But the latter was withdrawn. The vote was then taken with the following result:

Whole number voted, 554; necessary to a choice, 278. Judge Taft 271
5-6, Charles Foster 282 1-6, J. W.
Kiefer 2. At 3:30 o'clock, Mr. Foster was declared the unanimous nomi-
neer amid the greatest excitement.

The remainder of the ticket nominated is as follows:
For Lieutenant Governor, George
A. K. Hickenlooper, of Cincinnati;
Attorney General, George K. Nast,
of Columbus; Auditor of State, A.
Y. Turner, of Cleveland.

WASHINGTON, May 28.—All the talk in political circles to-night is about the Ohio nominations. There has been a feeling here for some time
that Ohio was a sort of a pivotal State and that the nomination made today would have a great bearing upon the next Presidential election. It was common to hear on the streets and about hotels that Grant interest and the Sherman interest, and that Foster represented the Sherman interest, and it was supposed that the line would be strictly drawn at that point.

OUTLAWRY IN WEST VIRGINIA.

MANNINGTON, W. Va., June 2.—
A prominent citizen of this place has been expecting for some time that his house would be attacked by the outlaws of Wetzel county, West Virginia, who are banded together and known as the Red Men. Late last night he was awakened by the tramping of horses, and springing from his bed, saw that there were at least fifty of them on horseback. He called up his sons, and being well provided with firearms, prepared to station his garrison where they would do the most good. His sons took positions at the windows, each one provided with two muskets loaded with an inch and a half of powder, to scatter a charge of mingled shot and nails. He took his own position in the hall, with six revolvers to empty, in case the assailants forced the doors. His wife was armed with a saber and his daughter

with an axe to defend themselves.
The Red Men, however, were informed what was awaiting them and concluded to abandon the attack.

Nine men prominent in the organization, have been arrested on warrants sworn out by Judge Hixenbaugh, and are now in jail at Littleton. All the justices of the peace say they will resign their offices before they will have anything to do in prosecuting these outlaws, as their lives are at stake.

THE REPUBLICANS IN CAUCUS.

WASHINGTON, June 2.—The Republican members of the Senate assembled in caucus this afternoon in response to a call which did not state its object but which proved to have been issued at the request of a few senators who desired caucus action concerning Mr. Bayard's bill to repeal sections 829 and 821 of the revised statutes. The first of these sections prescribes the jurors' test oath.
There was practical unanimity of opinion in the caucus that this section should be repealed. The other section authorizes the judges of United States courts to exercise their own discretion in regard to challenges of persons drawn as jurors who have participated in the rebellion. The opinion of the caucus was that this section has never been abused and is not likely to be and therefore should stand. No other question was brought before the caucus. The new Democratic program in regard to the appropriation bills was incidentally referred to by several senators, and although there was no discussion concerning it
the general sentiment expressed in conversation among those present favored a policy of resisting any and all attempts of the dominant party
in Congress to accomplish, or to appear to accomplish, by indirection anything that has heretofore been attempted without success openly. It was, however, considered advisable to defer caucus discussion of the political situation until the new bills shall have been presented in Congress and an opportunity afforded for their critical examination.

NEW BILLS TO BE INTRODUCED.

WASHINGTON, June 1.—The members of the sub-committee of the Democratic caucus managers have had consultations to-day, and are very busy in framing the two appropriation bills according to the suggestions made in the meeting of their full committee yesterday. They hope to have this ready for report
to-morrow night, and the present intention is, provided measures can be so framed as to secure a manifested vote in the joint caucus committee, to present them immediately to the two houses without the intervention of a caucus. The fact is that strenuous efforts are being made to counteract the influence at work to force a caucus upon the party, the fear being that if a general discussion upon the pending difficulties of the situation is precipitated that it will be impossible to reach any harmonious conclusion. The intimations given by the members of the caucus
committee to-day are to the effect that they will probably report two bills, which do not involve the repeal of any laws whatever, but which shall simply omit from the appropriation the pay of the marshals, and which will provide in the case of the Army bill that none of the money appropriated for transportation of troops shall be used to take them to any place where an election is being held for the specific purpose of employing them as a police force about the polls. Great care will be taken this time to draft bills, which they think the President will sign, and which they think he can sign without crossing the path marked out by former vetoes. The argument by which the Democrats are trying to convince each other that the plan they are now agreed upon is not a back-down, is at least curious.
It was claimed in its joint committee that this cannot be construed as in any sense a surrender or a backdown from the position of refusing supplies, since a committee of either House, or of either caucus, or of the joint caucus, had ever formally endorsed the idea of refusing supplies,
and further that no caucus had ever formally considered the subject, and the threats that such a course would be pursued had never been more than the expression of individual opinions. The Republicans meet this argument by recalling the fact that while there has never been any formal endorsement of this extreme position taken by individuals, that still its announcement of these views
was applauded with great vehemence
by the Democrats.

VARIETIES.

—Weather report—A clap of thunder.
—If your shoe's tore go to a shoe store and get it repaired.
—It is a curious fact that rain is only appreciated when it doesn't come.
—Hanging is too good for a fifteen-cent chronicle.—Stamford Advocate.
—Boston folks only ask to live, move and have their beans.—Utica Observer.
—Age does not always indicate ability; many a man of thirty can lie like sixty.
—The New Orleans Times says: "Perspiration is the cheapest luxury of the pore."
—There is no difficulty in weighing a man's credit when he has a big balance at the bank.

—"Good buy," as the overjoyed salesman said when the liberal customer turned to go.—Boston Transcript.
—Religious enthusiasts never sacrifice themselves; they always think that God tells them to kill somebody else.—N. Y. Herald.
—"Madam," said a tramp on Cottage Hill, "would you give me an old pair of pants, for I'm starving to death?"—Norristown Herald.
—The sign on a returning emigrant's wagon read: "Rough on Texas. Going back to my mother-in-law."—Cincinnati Commercial.

—A boarding-house mistress, like the rest of us, has her weak and strong points—the weak being her coffee, and her strong point the butter.
—When convicts are released from the Michigan State Prison they each receive $7.50, and they are just as anxious to get out as if they were to get $8.—New Orleans Picayune.

—A five-years-old girl, lost in Minnesota woods, had the good sense to grab bits of her dress on bushes as she wandered, and these led to her discovery, after she had lived four days on berries and wild onions.

—Little six-year old boy was obliged to take a dose of medicine that left an unpleasant taste in the month. When asked how he liked it, he said: "That's good enough, all but the end of it."—New Haven Register.

—A boy at Chelsea, Mass., habitually amused himself by hanging from the ties of a railroad bridge while trains rolled above him. One day he pulled himself up to see how near a slow train had approached, and his head was taken off by the cowcatcher.

—Now is the season of the year when the man who sees the sign, "Fresh paint," will walk up to the door, leave the marks of his dirty fingers on it, and go away muttering to himself, "That's so." This proves that he is just about as "fresh" as the paint is.

—Miss Virginia Hicks, a young lady of Wyandotte, Indian Territory, was thrown from her saddle by her horse the other day. She struck on her head, and a high white shell comb which was in her hair was driven into the brain, causing almost instant death.

—The Egyptian pea is a marvelous instance of resurrection, or rather resurrection. Preserved three thousand years, it is found in the clothes of a mummy, planted in the soil of another continent, they bloom and produce their kind.

—Much of the wood used for making briar root pipes is derived from Corsica. The roots are cut into the shape of rough forms of tobacco pipes by saws worked by the water power of the mountain streams, and are sent in sacks to France and thence to America.

—"When I was a boy," said a very prosy, long-winded orator to his friend, "I used to talk in my sleep." "And now," said his friend, "you sleep in your talk." But somehow, that didn't seem to be just exactly the point the orator was going to make.—Black-Eye.

—An African lion hunter contributes the following: How to catch lions. The desert is composed of sand and lions. Take a sieve and sift the desert. The lions will remain. These you place in a bag which you carry for the purpose.—N. Y. Commercial Advertiser. Out per sieve.—Philadelphia Bulletin.

—"Byron, my son," said a literary father to his athletic son, "Byron never played base ball." "No," said the boy, pulling on his orange colored shirt, "and George Washington never wrote poetry." Here the morning hour expired and the bill went over.—Black-Eye.

—A citizen went home from the circus one night and asked his wife, "Did you cannot an error or do anything out of character before we were married?" "Why, no! What makes you ask such a question?" "O, I didn't think you had," he was nominated for a town office to-night, and I knew if you had it would all be out to-morrow."

—"The picnic season is approaching, and the wise man, when he goes out in the morning and meets a decorative job wagon jammed full of happy, sweetening children, who are trying to sing in the intervals of having their liver jolted up against their palates, the wise man returns home and arms himself with an umbrella and over shoes, for he knows it will rain that afternoon."—Boston Commercial Bulletin.

—"Say John, did you see the circus?" yelled a little boy to another last evening. "No-o-o, I didn't see the circus!" sneeringly said John, who had been kept in the house for disobedience. "Humph! Ought to been there, biggest show you ever seed, elephant and camels and box cantwisters and—everything. If I couldn't go to a circus I'd run away." "Who wants to zer old circus?" yelled John. "I had a circus all to myself. Tied the milk pitcher to the cat's tail, and the cat knocked down two flower pots, and smashed the pitcher and broke a pane of glass. Giv away wid your old circus, been to more'n four hundred, and didn't have so much fun, and didn't get licked nuther," and the boy who had been to the circus felt as if he'd got hold of the castor oil bottle by mistake.—Old City Berwick.

—"The neighbor's cat had eluded the baby, and the man was going out to the woodpile with his ax over his shoulder and the cat under his arm. "Carom me back to the house," said the cat, who appeared to be chalk full of emotion, "that ought not to count, it was only a scratch." The man took his axe and looked thoughtful. "True," he said, "and this is only an accident." And he laid the feline across the block and held it down with his foot, and swinging the ax above his head, brought it down with a dreadful force. There was a moment of dreadful silence, and then, while the cat, from her high seat on the neighbor's shed sang, "O, waddy, waddy up the bank," the man scraped around in the clippings to find his three toes, and carried them to his wife, and asked her if she supposed the doctor could sew them on when he came.—Black-Eye.

Black Butchers.

The colony of Queensland, though one of the most recently established, possesses one of the largest territories in Australia, over the unsettled portion of which roam the aborigines of the country. They belong to the Papuan portion of the negro family, and are among the worst of mankind in mental capacity and physical formation. Very little effort has been made to civilize them, because experience has shown that they are almost incapable of living a civilized life. They wander in small tribes, subsisting on roots and the lowest forms of animal life. Their weapons are the spear, boomerang and ulah-mullah. The wealthy squatter (the term squatter in Australia is a title of honor and distinction) moving into the interior of the country, pastures his sheep and cattle upon the lands, and now and then some wandering blacks appropriate what they want. In the northern portions of the colony the blacks capture, kill and eat people. Gold mining is carried on there extensively and there are thousands of Chinese engaged in the work. These go out in small parties to work or travel, and to avoid the natives, who are often feared and hated by the natives, who prefer a Chinaman to a white man. In the more settled districts blacks frequently commit offenses of a slight character. In all these cases it is difficult to punish them, for white men have to be careful not to offend the natives, who know the country better than they and could subvert any law in the trackless wildernesses. Whites occasionally perpetrate serious offenses, and to avoid punishment they flee to the east, unpunished, in the hope of finding some other colony where they could find security from arrest. To capture offending blacks, the Queensland Government established the native police force, or black trackers, as they are more generally termed. They are selected from the tribes as far away as possible from the locality in which they are wanted, and taken to a police station in some small town, taught to ride and handle a revolver. When there is any need for their services they are drafted to the place at once. They are paid for their work, and they have lost their way or who are attempting to escape from justice. In this service they are valuable aids to the authorities. Like the Indian, they possess the power of tracing footprints which are indistinguishable to other eyes. They follow them with the tenacity of the bloodhound, and many a horse-thief and murderer has been brought to the bar of justice by their efforts, while hundreds have been saved by their persevering search, for "lost in the bush" is an Australian phrase, almost synonymous with a horrible death by thirst and starvation. There is another service which the black tracker, and performed by the black tracker, and Australian journals frequently contain items to the effect that some officer went out with a party of native police and dispersed a number of blacks. It is not very long ago that some cattle were stolen from a station about 200 miles from Bowen, and about sixty aboriginals, men, women and children, were all butchered by the blacks in the neighborhood. Three Chinese, on their way from Cooktown to the Palmer River diggings, were separated and eaten by the blacks, and several days afterward about twenty natives were slaughtered by the black trackers. When a little girl was killed and eaten near Townsville, the natives felt like leaves in autumn. It may be asked if these people do not resort to frugality. Strange to say, they do not. Nor do they seem to understand the use of them until it is proven by the death of many of their men. When first brought in contact with the trackers they had no fear of the trackers, and they were as safe among the branches as the bird from their own boomerang. They have never adopted the weapons, however, though they could easily do so, for the same reason. The black tracker is a very cunning man, and many small towns into which they are not allowed to go, partly because they dress as nature dressed them, but principally on account of their treacherous character. Driven away from white men in this way and treated with insult and injury wherever met, it is not very surprising that they occasionally kill and carry off sheep and cattle, or kill and eat men whom they meet. Whenever these outrages occur, word is sent to the police authorities and the black trackers are turned loose in charge of a white man to disperse the natives. The black tracker possesses his loss for the black brothers of the wilderness, and shows no mercy. He pursues them day after day for hundreds of miles, and shoots them down, one and all, when he gets the chance. It frequently occurs that one party of natives commit the outrage, while another party are destroyed for doing it. A party is reported to be in a certain vicinity and the trackers are ordered out. Their aim is to punish the perpetrators of the crime, but they combine the powers of judge, jury and executioner. The white men who lead them are frequently as bloodthirsty as themselves, and often excel them in acts of wanton cruelty, as will be seen from the following account of the destruction of natives, which appeared in a late number of the Queensland Advertiser, a daily journal published at Brisbane, the capital of the colony:

"One native police officer, no longer in the service, had a mob of blacks driven into a waterhole. His troopers had the water surrounded, and the blacks, who were not to escape, were driven to the water to breathe, each marksman knowing that his shot was successful by the dull thud of the bullet as it buried itself in a human brain. The officer stood by, and at last felt that he would like to take a personal share in the work. Stripping to his shirt, and with a tomahawk in his belt, he entered the water, and with demonstrations of peace induced one of the surviving wretches to approach closely. When the black was near enough, the white savage whipped out his tomahawk and buried it in his victim's brain."

The waterholes here spoken of are places to which the natives resort to quench their thirst. They are often constructed by the proprietors of large estates, but are more frequently the work of nature. The black trackers know that the natives must come to them for water. When out in search of blood they frequently wait about these waterholes for days, slaughtering the natives who come to drink. They very rarely if ever take prisoners, simply destroy the people like so many wild animals. White men are found who boast of the number they have killed, and one man near Somerset, Cape York, has a fence about his premises, each post of which is surmounted by a human skull, which, he claims, represents a native whom he has shot. The black trackers mark their rifles, each mark indicating the death of an aboriginal. On some of them there is no room for any more marks. It is not only in the thinly settled districts that these deeds of blood occur, but also in the vicinity of towns. From 500 to 2,000 people, by law the natives are forbidden to enter these towns, nearly all of which are upon the seacoast. They come, however, to gather such offal as they can on the outskirts of the town. The slightest trespass is then sufficient to send the blacks out, and woe betide the wretches whose safety has not been secured by flight. Neither age nor sex is regarded. The babe at the breast, the gray-haired crone, the mother and child, are all shot down. The black trackers do not tire of this work, and never seem to get of their labor; and, as a consequence, as they do, hundreds of natives have no affinity with those of their race about them, and do their work without a thought save of destroying those whom they are ordered to attack.

These disgraceful proceedings have attracted considerable attention during the past year, and petitions have been presented to the Queensland parliament, praying for the disbandment of the native police, and the cessation of the outrages upon the matter, their report furnishing one of the most striking details of crimes and barbarities that could possibly be imagined.—San Francisco Chronicle.

A Gambling House Which Has a Private Room for Soldiers.
The stories of ruin every day, sometimes of great authority, are horrible. Fortunes, trust money, provision for children and widows, the sums acquired by the sale of commissions, are all lost in a few days or hours. Often it is the extravagance of the companion that drives her victim back and back to the tables, deeper and deeper. But the women themselves are the most reckless gamblers. The common complaint is a suicide a month, and sometimes comes three or four together. On the ramparts, or the Garden of Monaco, there are several points from which ruined gamblers have thrown themselves into the sea, 300 feet below. Only the other day a "lady" threw herself out of her third floor chamber into the road. There have been suicides in the rooms of the Casino and one at the table itself. Having a gentleman stood up and drew his pistol and discharged it in his mouth. For the reception of such scandals there is provided a room, handy for the railway which passes, and most directly under the Casino. Some of these men must be, and it is performed by the servants of the establishment. But most of the victims go away and hide themselves and die like a sick mouse. The police are called in to take death, or a suicide a month, and sometimes comes three or four together. On the ramparts, or the Garden of Monaco, there are several points from which ruined gamblers have thrown themselves into the sea, 300 feet below. Only the other day a "lady" threw herself out of her third floor chamber into the road. There have been suicides in the rooms of the Casino and one at the table itself. Having a gentleman stood up and drew his pistol and discharged it in his mouth. For the reception of such scandals there is provided a room, handy for the railway which passes, and most directly under the Casino. Some of these men must be, and it is performed by the servants of the establishment. But most of the victims go away and hide themselves and die like a sick mouse. The police are called in to take death, or a suicide a month, and sometimes comes three or four together. On the ramparts, or the Garden of Monaco, there are several points from which ruined gamblers have thrown themselves into the sea, 300 feet below. Only the other day a "lady" threw herself out of her third floor chamber into the road. There have been suicides in the rooms of the Casino and one at the table itself. Having a gentleman stood up and drew his pistol and discharged it in his mouth. For the reception of such scandals there is provided a room, handy for the railway which passes, and most directly under the Casino. Some of these men must be, and it is performed by the servants of the establishment. But most of the victims go away and hide themselves and die like a sick mouse. The police are called in to take death, or a suicide a month, and sometimes comes three or four together. On the ramparts, or the Garden of Monaco, there are several points from which ruined gamblers have thrown themselves into the sea, 300 feet below. Only the other day a "lady" threw herself out of her third floor chamber into the road. There have been suicides in the rooms of the Casino and one at the table itself. Having a gentleman stood up and drew his pistol and discharged it in his mouth. For the reception of such scandals there is provided a room, handy for the railway which passes, and most directly under the Casino. Some of these men must be, and it is performed by the servants of the establishment. But most of the victims go away and hide themselves and die like a sick mouse. The police are called in to take death, or a suicide a month, and sometimes comes three or four together. On the ramparts, or the Garden of Monaco, there are several points from which ruined gamblers have thrown themselves into the sea, 300 feet below. Only the other day a "lady" threw herself out of her third floor chamber into the road. There have been suicides in the rooms of the Casino and one at the table itself. Having a gentleman stood up and drew his pistol and discharged it in his mouth. For the reception of such scandals there is provided a room, handy for the railway which passes, and most directly under the Casino. Some of these men must be, and it is performed by the servants of the establishment. But most of the victims go away and hide themselves and die like a sick mouse. The police are called in to take death, or a suicide a month, and sometimes comes three or four together. On the ramparts, or the Garden of Monaco, there are several points from which ruined gamblers have thrown themselves into the sea, 300 feet below. Only the other day a "lady" threw herself out of her third floor chamber into the road. There have been suicides in the rooms of the Casino and one at the table itself. Having a gentleman stood up and drew his pistol and discharged it in his mouth. For the reception of such scandals there is provided a room, handy for the railway which passes, and most directly under the Casino. Some of these men must be, and it is performed by the servants of the establishment. But most of the victims go away and hide themselves and die like a sick mouse. The police are called in to take death, or a suicide a month, and sometimes comes three or four together. On the ramparts, or the Garden of Monaco, there are several points from which ruined gamblers have thrown themselves into the sea, 300 feet below. Only the other day a "lady" threw herself out of her third floor chamber into the road. There have been suicides in the rooms of the Casino and one at the table itself. Having a gentleman stood up and drew his pistol and discharged it in his mouth. For the reception of such scandals there is provided a room, handy for the railway which passes, and most directly under the Casino. Some of these men must be, and it is performed by the servants of the establishment. But most of the victims go away and hide themselves and die like a sick mouse. The police are called in to take death, or a suicide a month, and sometimes comes three or four together. On the ramparts, or the Garden of Monaco, there are several points from which ruined gamblers have thrown themselves into the sea, 300 feet below. Only the other day a "lady" threw herself out of her third floor chamber into the road. There have been suicides in the rooms of the Casino and one at the table itself. Having a gentleman stood up and drew his pistol and discharged it in his mouth. For the reception of such scandals there is provided a room, handy for the railway which passes, and most directly under the Casino. Some of these men must be, and it is performed by the servants of the establishment. But most of the victims go away and hide themselves and die like a sick mouse. The police are called in to take death, or a suicide a month, and sometimes comes three or four together. On the ramparts, or the Garden of Monaco, there are several points from which ruined gamblers have thrown themselves into the sea, 300 feet below. Only the other day a "lady" threw herself out of her third floor chamber into the road. There have been suicides in the rooms of the Casino and one at the table itself. Having a gentleman stood up and drew his pistol and discharged it in his mouth. For the reception of such scandals there is provided a room, handy for the railway which passes, and most directly under the Casino. Some of these men must be, and it is performed by the servants of the establishment. But most of the victims go away and hide themselves and die like a sick mouse. The police are called in to take death, or a suicide a month, and sometimes comes three or four together. On the ramparts, or the Garden of Monaco, there are several points from which ruined gamblers have thrown themselves into the sea, 300 feet below. Only the other day a "lady" threw herself out of her third floor chamber into the road. There have been suicides in the rooms of the Casino and one at the table itself. Having a gentleman stood up and drew his pistol and discharged it in his mouth. For the reception of such scandals there is provided a room, handy for the railway which passes, and most directly under the Casino. Some of these men must be, and it is performed by the servants of the establishment. But most of the victims go away and hide themselves and die like a sick mouse. The police are called in to take death, or a suicide a month, and sometimes comes three or four together. On the ramparts, or the Garden of Monaco, there are several points from which ruined gamblers have thrown themselves into the sea, 300 feet below. Only the other day a "lady" threw herself out of her third floor chamber into the road. There have been suicides in the rooms of the Casino and one at the table itself. Having a gentleman stood up and drew his pistol and discharged it in his mouth. For the reception of such scandals there is provided a room, handy for the railway which passes, and most directly under the Casino. Some of these men must be, and it is performed by the servants of the establishment. But most of the victims go away and hide themselves and die like a sick mouse. The police are called in to take death, or a suicide a month, and sometimes comes three or four together. On the ramparts, or the Garden of Monaco, there are several points from which ruined gamblers have thrown themselves into the sea, 300 feet below. Only the other day a "lady" threw herself out of her third floor chamber into the road. There have been suicides in the rooms of the Casino and one at the table itself. Having a gentleman stood up and drew his pistol and discharged it in his mouth. For the reception of such scandals there is provided a room, handy for the railway which passes, and most directly under the Casino. Some of these men must be, and it is performed by the servants of the establishment. But most of the victims go away and hide themselves and die like a sick mouse. The police are called in to take death, or a suicide a month, and sometimes comes three or four together. On the ramparts, or the Garden of Monaco, there are several points from which ruined gamblers have thrown themselves into the sea, 300 feet below. Only the other day a "lady" threw herself out of her third floor chamber into the road. There have been suicides in the rooms of the Casino and one at the table itself. Having a gentleman stood up and drew his pistol and discharged it in his mouth. For the reception of such scandals there is provided a room, handy for the railway which passes, and most directly under the Casino. Some of these men must be, and it is performed by the servants of the establishment. But most of the victims go away and hide themselves and die like a sick mouse. The police are called in to take death, or a suicide a month, and sometimes comes three or four together. On the ramparts, or the Garden of Monaco, there are several points from which ruined gamblers have thrown themselves into the sea, 300 feet below. Only the other day a "lady" threw herself out of her third floor chamber into the road. There have been suicides in the rooms of the Casino and one at the table itself. Having a gentleman stood up and drew his pistol and discharged it in his mouth. For the reception of such scandals there is provided a room, handy for the railway which passes, and most directly under the Casino. Some of these men must be, and it is performed by the servants of the establishment. But most of the victims go away and hide themselves and die like a sick mouse. The police are called in to take death, or a suicide a month, and sometimes comes three or four together. On the ramparts, or the Garden of Monaco, there are several points from which ruined gamblers have thrown themselves into the sea, 300 feet below. Only the other day a "lady" threw herself out of her third floor chamber into the road. There have been suicides in the rooms of the Casino and one at the table itself. Having a gentleman stood up and drew his pistol and discharged it in his mouth. For the reception of such scandals there is provided a room, handy for the railway which passes, and most directly under the Casino. Some of these men must be, and it is performed by the servants of the establishment. But most of the victims go away and hide themselves and die like a sick mouse. The police are called in to take death, or a suicide a month, and sometimes comes three or four together. On the ramparts, or the Garden of Monaco, there are several points from which ruined gamblers have thrown themselves into the sea, 300 feet below. Only the other day a "lady" threw herself out of her third floor chamber into the road. There have been suicides in the rooms of the Casino and one at the table itself. Having a gentleman stood up and drew his pistol and discharged it in his mouth. For the reception of such scandals there is provided a room, handy for the railway which passes, and most directly under the Casino. Some of these men must be, and it is performed by the servants of the establishment. But most of the victims go away and hide themselves and die like a sick mouse. The police are called in to take death, or a suicide a month, and sometimes comes three or four together. On the ramparts, or the Garden of Monaco, there are several points from which ruined gamblers have thrown themselves into the sea, 300 feet below. Only the other day a "lady" threw herself out of her third floor chamber into the road. There have been suicides in the rooms of the Casino and one at the table itself. Having a gentleman stood up and drew his pistol and discharged it in his mouth. For the reception of such scandals there is provided a room, handy for the railway which passes, and most directly under the Casino. Some of these men must be, and it is performed by the servants of the establishment. But most of the victims go away and hide themselves and die like a sick mouse. The police are called in to take death, or a suicide a month, and sometimes comes three or four together. On the ramparts, or the Garden of Monaco, there are several points from which ruined gamblers have thrown themselves into the sea, 300 feet below. Only the other day a "lady" threw herself out of her third floor chamber into the road. There have been suicides in the rooms of the Casino and one at the table itself. Having a gentleman stood up and drew his pistol and discharged it in his mouth. For the reception of such scandals there is provided a room, handy for the railway which passes, and most directly under the Casino. Some of these men must be, and it is performed by the servants of the establishment. But most of the victims go away and hide themselves and die like a sick mouse. The police are called in to take death, or a suicide a month, and sometimes comes three or four together. On the ramparts, or the Garden of Monaco, there are several points from which ruined gamblers have thrown themselves into the sea, 300 feet below. Only the other day a "lady" threw herself out of her third floor chamber into the road. There have been suicides in the rooms of the Casino and one at the table itself. Having a gentleman stood up and drew his pistol and discharged it in his mouth. For the reception of such scandals there is provided a room, handy for the railway which passes, and most directly under the Casino. Some of these men must be, and it is performed by the servants of the establishment. But most of the victims go away and hide themselves and die like a sick mouse. The police are called in to take death, or a suicide a month, and sometimes comes three or four together. On the ramparts, or the Garden of Monaco, there are several points from which ruined gamblers have thrown themselves into the sea, 300 feet below. Only the other day a "lady" threw herself out of her third floor chamber into the road. There have been suicides in the rooms of the Casino and one at the table itself. Having a gentleman stood up and drew his pistol and discharged it in his mouth. For the reception of such scandals there is provided a room, handy for the railway which passes, and most directly under the Casino. Some of these men must be, and it is performed by the servants of the establishment. But most of the victims go away and hide themselves and die like a sick mouse. The police are called in to take death, or a suicide a month, and sometimes comes three or four together. On the ramparts, or the Garden of Monaco, there are several points from which ruined gamblers have thrown themselves into the sea, 300 feet below. Only the other day a "lady" threw herself out of her third floor chamber into the road. There have been suicides in the rooms of the Casino and one at the table itself. Having a gentleman stood up and drew his pistol and discharged it in his mouth. For the reception of such scandals there is provided a room, handy for the railway which passes, and most directly under the Casino. Some of these men must be, and it is performed by the servants of the establishment. But most of the victims go away and hide themselves and die like a sick mouse. The police are called in to take death, or a suicide a month, and sometimes comes three or four together. On the ramparts, or the Garden of Monaco, there are several points from which ruined gamblers have thrown themselves into the sea, 300 feet below. Only the other day a "lady" threw herself out of her third floor chamber into the road. There have been suicides in the rooms of the Casino and one at the table itself. Having a gentleman stood up and drew his pistol and discharged it in his mouth. For the reception of such scandals there is provided a room, handy for the railway which passes, and most directly under the Casino. Some of these men must be, and it is performed by the servants of the establishment. But most of the victims go away and hide themselves and die like a sick mouse. The police are called in to take death, or a suicide a month, and sometimes comes three or four together. On the ramparts, or the Garden of Monaco, there are several points from which ruined gamblers have thrown themselves into the sea, 300 feet below. Only the other day a "lady" threw herself out of her third floor chamber into the road. There have been suicides in the rooms of the Casino and one at the table itself. Having a gentleman stood up and drew his pistol and discharged it in his mouth. For the reception of such scandals there is provided a room, handy for the railway which passes, and most directly under the Casino. Some of these men must be, and it is performed by the servants of the establishment. But most of the victims go away and hide themselves and die like a sick mouse. The police are called in to take death, or a suicide a month, and sometimes comes three or four together. On the ramparts, or the Garden of Monaco, there are several points from which ruined gamblers have thrown themselves into the sea, 300 feet below. Only the other day a "lady" threw herself out of her third floor chamber into the road. There have been suicides in the rooms of the Casino and one at the table itself. Having a gentleman stood up and drew his pistol and discharged it in his mouth. For the reception of such scandals there is provided a room, handy for the railway which passes, and most directly under the Casino. Some of these men must be, and it is performed by the servants of the establishment. But most of the victims go away and hide themselves and die like a sick mouse. The police are called in to take death, or a suicide a month, and sometimes comes three or four together. On the ramparts, or the Garden of Monaco, there are several points from which ruined gamblers have thrown themselves into the sea, 300 feet below. Only the other day a "lady" threw herself out of her third floor chamber into the road. There have been suicides in the rooms of the Casino and one at the table itself. Having a gentleman stood up and drew his pistol and discharged it in his mouth. For the reception of such scandals there is provided a room, handy for the railway which passes, and most directly under the Casino. Some of these men must be, and it is performed by the servants of the establishment. But most of the victims go away and hide themselves and die like a sick mouse. The police are called in to take death, or a suicide a month, and sometimes comes three or four together. On the ramparts, or the Garden of Monaco, there are several points from which ruined gamblers have thrown themselves into the sea, 300 feet below. Only the other day a "lady" threw herself out of her third floor chamber into the road. There have been suicides in the rooms of the Casino and one at the table itself. Having a gentleman stood up and drew his pistol and discharged it in his mouth. For the reception of such scandals there is provided a room, handy for the railway which passes, and most directly under the Casino. Some of these men must be, and it is performed by the servants of the establishment. But most of the victims go away and hide themselves and die like a sick mouse. The police are called in to take death, or a suicide a month, and sometimes comes three or four together. On the ramparts, or the Garden of Monaco, there are several points from which ruined gamblers have thrown themselves into the sea, 300 feet below. Only the other day a "lady" threw herself out of her third floor chamber into the road. There have been suicides in the rooms of the Casino and one at the table itself. Having a gentleman stood up and drew his pistol and discharged it in his mouth. For the reception of such scandals there is provided a room, handy for the railway which passes, and most directly under the Casino. Some of these men must be, and it is performed by the servants of the establishment. But most of the victims go away and hide themselves and die like a sick mouse. The police are called in to take death, or a suicide a month, and sometimes comes three or four together. On the ramparts, or the Garden of Monaco, there are several points from which ruined gamblers have thrown themselves into the sea, 300 feet below. Only the other day a "lady" threw herself out of her third floor chamber into the road. There have been suicides in the rooms of the Casino and one at the table itself. Having a gentleman stood up and drew his pistol and discharged it in his mouth. For the reception of such scandals there is provided a room, handy for the railway which passes, and most directly under the Casino. Some of these men must be, and it is performed by the servants of the establishment. But most of the victims go away and hide themselves and die like a sick mouse. The police are called in to take death, or a suicide a month, and sometimes comes three or four together. On the ramparts, or the Garden of Monaco, there are several points from which ruined gamblers have thrown themselves into the sea, 300 feet below. Only the other day a "lady" threw herself out of her third floor chamber into the road. There have been suicides in the rooms of the Casino and one at the table itself. Having a gentleman stood up and drew his pistol and discharged it in his mouth. For the reception of such scandals there is provided a room, handy for the railway which passes, and most directly under the Casino. Some of these men must be, and it is performed by the servants of the establishment. But most of the victims go away and hide themselves and die like a sick mouse. The police are called in to take death, or a suicide a month, and sometimes comes three or four together. On the ramparts, or the Garden of Monaco, there are several points from which ruined gamblers have thrown themselves into the sea, 300 feet below. Only the other day a "lady" threw herself out of her third floor chamber into the road. There have been suicides in the rooms of the Casino and one at the table itself. Having a gentleman stood up and drew his pistol and discharged it in his mouth. For the reception of such scandals there is provided a room, handy for the railway which passes, and most directly under the Casino. Some of these men must be, and it is performed by the servants of the establishment. But most of the victims go away and hide themselves and die like a sick mouse. The police are called in to take death, or a suicide a month, and sometimes comes three or four together. On the ramparts, or the Garden of Monaco, there are several points from which ruined gamblers have thrown themselves into the sea, 300 feet below. Only the other day a "lady" threw herself out of her third floor chamber into the road. There have been suicides in the rooms of the Casino and one at the table itself. Having a gentleman stood up and drew his pistol and discharged it in his mouth. For the reception of such scandals there is provided a room, handy for the railway which passes, and most directly under the Casino. Some of these men must be, and it is performed by the servants of the establishment. But most of the victims go away and hide themselves and die like a sick mouse. The police are called in to take death, or a suicide a month, and sometimes comes three or four together. On the ramparts, or the Garden of Monaco, there are several points from which ruined gamblers have thrown themselves into the sea, 300 feet below. Only the other day a "lady" threw herself out of her third floor chamber into the road. There have been suicides in the rooms of the Casino and one at the table itself. Having a gentleman stood up and drew his pistol and discharged it in his mouth. For the reception of such scandals there is provided a room, handy for the railway which passes, and most directly under the Casino. Some of these men must be, and it is performed by the servants of the establishment. But most of the victims go away and hide themselves and die like a sick mouse. The police are called in to take death, or a suicide a month, and sometimes comes three or four together. On the ramparts, or the Garden of Monaco, there are several points from which ruined gamblers have thrown themselves into the sea, 300 feet below. Only the other day a "lady" threw herself out of her third floor chamber into the road. There have been suicides in the rooms of the Casino and one at the table itself. Having a gentleman stood up and drew his pistol and discharged it in his mouth. For the reception of such scandals there is provided a room, handy for the railway which passes, and most directly under the Casino. Some of these men must be, and it is performed by the servants of the establishment. But most of the victims go away and hide themselves and die like a sick mouse. The police are called in to take death, or a suicide a month, and sometimes comes three or four together. On the ramparts, or the Garden of Monaco, there are several points from which ruined gamblers have thrown themselves into the sea, 300 feet below. Only the other day a "lady" threw herself out of her third floor chamber into the road. There have been suicides in the rooms of the Casino and one at the table itself. Having a gentleman stood up and drew his pistol and discharged it in his mouth. For the reception of such scandals there is provided a room, handy for the railway which passes, and most directly under the Casino. Some of these men must be, and it is performed by the servants of the establishment. But most of the victims go away and hide themselves and die like a sick mouse. The police are called in to take death, or a suicide a month, and sometimes comes three or four together. On the ramparts, or the Garden of Monaco, there are several points from which ruined gamblers have thrown themselves into the sea, 300 feet below. Only the other day a "lady" threw herself out of her third floor chamber into the road. There have been suicides in the rooms of the Casino and one at the table itself. Having a gentleman stood up and drew his pistol and discharged it in his mouth. For the reception of such scandals there is provided a room, handy for the railway which passes, and most directly under the Casino. Some of these men must be, and it is performed by the servants of the establishment. But most of the victims go away and hide themselves and die like a sick mouse. The police are called in to take death, or a suicide a month, and sometimes comes three or four together. On the ramparts, or the Garden of Monaco, there are several points from which ruined gamblers have thrown themselves into the sea, 300 feet below. Only the other day a "lady" threw herself out of her third floor chamber into the road. There have been suicides in the rooms of the Casino and one at the table itself. Having a gentleman stood up and drew his pistol and discharged it in his mouth. For the reception of such scandals there is provided a room, handy for the railway which passes, and most directly under the Casino. Some of these men must be, and it is performed by the servants of the establishment. But most of the victims go away and hide themselves and die like a sick mouse. The police are called in to take death, or a suicide a month, and sometimes comes three or four together. On the ramparts, or the Garden of Monaco, there are several points from which ruined gamblers have thrown themselves into the sea, 300 feet below. Only the other day a "lady" threw herself out of her third floor chamber into the road. There have been suicides in the rooms of the Casino and one at the table itself. Having a gentleman stood up and drew his pistol and discharged it in his mouth. For the reception of such scandals there is provided a room, handy for the railway which passes, and most directly under the Casino. Some of these men must be, and it is performed by the servants of the establishment. But most of the victims go away and hide themselves and die like a sick mouse. The police are called in to take death, or a suicide a month, and sometimes comes three or four together. On the ramparts, or the Garden of Monaco, there are several points from which ruined gamblers have thrown themselves into the sea, 300 feet below. Only the other day a "lady" threw herself out of her third floor chamber into the road. There have been suicides in the rooms of the Casino and one at the table itself. Having a gentleman stood up and drew his pistol and discharged it in his mouth. For the reception of such scandals there is provided a room, handy for the railway which passes, and most directly under the Casino. Some of these men must be, and it is performed by the servants of the establishment. But most of the victims go away and hide themselves and die like a sick mouse. The police are called in to take death, or a suicide a month, and sometimes comes three or four together. On the ramparts, or the Garden of Monaco, there are several points from which ruined gamblers have thrown themselves into the sea, 300 feet below. Only the other day a "lady" threw herself out of her third floor chamber into the road. There have been suicides in the rooms of the Casino and one at the table itself. Having a gentleman stood up and drew his pistol and discharged it in his mouth. For the reception of such scandals there is provided a room, handy for the railway which passes, and most directly under the Casino. Some of these men must be, and it is performed by the servants of the establishment. But most of the victims go away and hide themselves and die like a sick mouse. The police are called in to take death, or a suicide a month, and sometimes comes three or four together. On the ramparts, or the Garden of Monaco, there are several points from which ruined gamblers have thrown themselves into the sea, 300 feet below. Only the other day a "lady" threw herself out of her third floor chamber into the road. There have been suicides in the rooms of the Casino and one at the table itself. Having a gentleman stood up and drew his pistol and discharged it in his mouth. For the reception of such scandals there is provided a room, handy for the railway which passes, and most directly under the Casino. Some of these men must be, and it is performed by the servants of the establishment. But most of the victims go away and hide themselves and die like a sick mouse. The police are called in to take death, or a suicide a month, and sometimes comes three or four together. On the ramparts, or the Garden of Monaco, there are several points from which ruined gamblers have thrown themselves into the sea, 300 feet below. Only the other day a "lady" threw herself out of her third floor chamber into the road. There have been suicides in the rooms of the Casino and one at the table itself. Having a gentleman stood up and drew his pistol and discharged it in his mouth. For the reception of such scandals there is provided a room, handy for the railway which passes, and most directly under the Casino. Some of these men must be, and it is performed by the servants of the establishment. But most of the victims go away and hide themselves and die like a sick mouse. The police are called in to take death, or a suicide a month, and sometimes comes three or four together. On the ramparts, or the Garden of Monaco, there are several points from which ruined gamblers have thrown themselves into the sea, 300 feet below. Only the other day a "lady" threw herself out of her third floor chamber into the road. There have been suicides in the rooms of the Casino and one at the table itself. Having a gentleman stood up and drew his pistol and discharged it in his mouth. For the reception of such scandals there is provided a room, handy for the railway which passes, and most directly under the Casino. Some of these men must be, and it is performed by the servants of the establishment. But most of the victims go away and hide themselves and die like a sick mouse. The police are called in to take death, or a suicide a month, and sometimes comes three or four together. On the ramparts, or the Garden of Monaco, there are several points from which ruined gamblers have thrown themselves into the sea, 300 feet below. Only the other day a "lady" threw herself out of her third floor chamber into the road. There have been suicides in the rooms of the Casino and one at the table itself. Having a gentleman stood up and drew his pistol and discharged it in his mouth. For the reception of such scandals there is provided a room, handy for the railway which passes, and most directly under the Casino. Some of these men must be, and it is performed by the servants of the establishment. But most of the victims go away and hide themselves and die like a sick mouse. The police are called in to take death, or a suicide a month, and sometimes comes three or four together. On the ramparts, or the Garden of Monaco, there are several points from which ruined gamblers have thrown themselves into the sea, 300 feet below. Only the other day a "lady" threw herself out of her third floor chamber into the road. There have been suicides in the rooms of the Casino and one at the table itself. Having a gentleman stood up and drew his pistol and discharged it in his mouth. For the reception of such scandals there is provided a room, handy for the railway which passes, and most directly under the Casino. Some of these men must be, and it is performed by the servants of the establishment. But most of the victims go away and hide themselves and die like a sick mouse. The police are called in to take death, or a suicide a month, and sometimes comes three or four together. On the ramparts, or the Garden of Monaco, there are several points from which ruined gamblers have thrown themselves into the sea, 300 feet below. Only the other day a "lady" threw herself out of her third floor chamber into the road. There have been suicides in the rooms of the Casino and one at the table itself. Having a gentleman stood up and drew his pistol and discharged it in his mouth. For the reception of such scandals there is provided a room, handy for the railway which passes, and most directly under the Casino. Some of these men must be, and it is performed by the servants of the establishment. But most of the victims go away and hide themselves and die like a sick mouse. The police are called in to take death, or a suicide a month, and sometimes comes three or four together. On the ramparts, or the Garden of Monaco, there are several points from which ruined gamblers have thrown themselves into the sea, 300 feet below. Only the other day a "lady" threw herself out of her third floor chamber into the road. There have been suicides in the rooms of the Casino and one at the table itself. Having a gentleman stood up and drew his pistol and discharged it in his mouth. For the reception of such scandals there is provided a room, handy for the railway which passes, and most directly under the Casino. Some of these men must be, and it is performed by the servants of the establishment. But most of the victims go away and hide themselves and die like a sick mouse. The police are called in to take death, or a suicide a month, and sometimes comes three or four together. On the ramparts, or the Garden of Monaco, there are several points from which ruined gamblers have thrown themselves into the sea, 300 feet below. Only the other day a "lady" threw herself out of her third floor chamber into the road. There have been suicides in the rooms of the Casino and one at the table itself. Having a gentleman stood up and drew his pistol and discharged it in his mouth. For the reception of such scandals there is provided a room, handy for the railway which passes, and most directly under the Casino. Some of these men must be, and it is performed by the servants of the establishment. But most of the victims go away and hide themselves and die like a sick mouse. The police are called in to take death, or a suicide a month, and sometimes comes three or four together. On the ramparts, or the Garden of Monaco, there are several points from which ruined gamblers have thrown themselves into the sea, 300 feet below. Only the other day a "lady" threw herself out of her third floor chamber into the road. There have been suicides in the rooms of the Casino and one at the table itself. Having a gentleman stood up and

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

SHATZER & AULT

have recently removed to their new

Furniture and Undertaking Rooms,

MAIN STREET, OAKLAND.

Where they keep constantly on hand and manufacture to order anything in the line of

HOUSEHOLD FURNITURE

All of which is offered at the

LOWEST LIVING PRICES.

Give us a call, examine our Furniture and prices, whether you wish to purchase or not. We take pleasure in showing our work.

All kinds of COFFINS and CASKETS on hand or furnished to order on short notice.

426 6th SHATZER & AULT.

H. WHEELER COMBS,

REAL ESTATE AGENT,

OAKLAND, MD.

Will negotiate sales of real estate of every description.

No charge for advertising property placed in my hands.

H. WHEELER COMBS.

The following properties have been placed in my hands

FOR SALE.

NO. 3.

One of the best little farms in Garrett county, 2 1/2 miles west of Oakland, the county seat. This farm contains 30 ACRES, 70 acres in cultivation, and all susceptible of easy and profitable cultivation. Improved by a

New 2 Story House,

containing 8 rooms and good cellar. GOOD BARN and stable. There is a good young orchard of 70 trees. The whole farm is under good fence. This farm will be offered for a short time at a very low price and on easy terms. Title perfect. Limestone and coal within two miles.

NO. 4.

Fichtner's Mill Property.

This property, containing 250 acres, situated on Muddy Creek, in Sang Run district, Garrett county, Md., will be sold at a very low price and upon the easiest of terms. It lies 10 miles north-west of Oakland, 8 miles from Hutton's Switch and 7 miles from Conley Summit. Is one of the best mill sites in the county, and is surrounded by the best timbered land of the section. It is improved by an excellent containing 16 rooms; good stable attached. The wheels and mill for a new Mill are upon the property, and will be sold with the property at a low price for the whole that the land is assessed for.

FRAME HOUSE.

This is an opportunity for a bargain seldom offered.

NO. 5.

A Desirable Property in Oakland

FOR SALE.

Lot 100x100, improved by an

Excellent Frame Dwelling House,

containing 7 rooms; with good cellar. This is one of the most pleasant homes in Oakland. It is almost immediately opposite the Oakland Hotel, and in front of Bailey's new hotel and commands one of the finest views of the town. The buildings are all new and well-constructed. There is an excellent well of water on the lot. For any one desiring a pleasant home an opportunity is here offered to secure it at a price less than that of the buildings. Terms: One-third down, balance in three equal annual payments.

Apply to

H. WHEELER COMBS,

Real Estate Agent, Oakland, Md.

OAKLAND WOOLEN FACTORY.

The subscriber is prepared to do all kinds of

CUSTOM WORK,

such as

Roll Carding, Spinning and Weaving,

at short notice.

Wool taken in exchange for goods or worked up on the shares into Blankets, Cassimere, Cassimere, Flannels and stocking yarn.

SAUEL LAWTON,

myself

PATENTS.

To Inventors and Manufacturers.

ESTABLISHED 1865.

GILMORE SMITH & CO.

Solicitors of Patents & Attorneys at Law.

American & Foreign Patents.

No fees in advance, nor until a Patent is allowed. No fees for making preliminary examinations.

Special attention given to Interference Cases before the Patent Office, Infringement Suits in the different States, and all litigation pertaining to Patents or Inventions.

Send Stamp for Pamphlet of Sixty Pages.

GILMORE & CO.,

629 F. Street, N. W.,

Washington, D. C.

MISCELLANEOUS.

This Column is Reserved for

J. R. BISHOP & CO.,

who are just now receiving one of the largest stocks of

New Goods

ever brought to Oakland.

These goods were bought for CASH, at the proper time, and of course cost less than any other stock in town.

There is not an old or second-hand piece in the house.

The assortment is complete, consisting in part of

Dry Goods, Groceries, Queensware,

Ready-Made Clothing, Boots and Shoes, Wooden ware,

Gents' and Ladies' Furnishing Goods,

Hardware, &c., &c.,

all of Which will be sold at

BOTTOM PRICES.

for Cash or country produce.

Remember the old stand recently occupied by N. B. Wayman & Co.

J. R. BISHOP & CO.

Call and examine our stock before purchasing elsewhere.

J. R. BISHOP & CO.

J. R. BISHOP & CO.

J. R. BISHOP & CO.

J. R. BISHOP & CO.

J. R. BISHOP & CO.

J. R. BISHOP & CO.

J. R. BISHOP & CO.

J. R. BISHOP & CO.

J. R. BISHOP & CO.

J. R. BISHOP & CO.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

A. C. BROOKE,

GENERAL UNDERTAKER

OAKLAND, MD.

Having a full line of

COFFINS, CASKETS & TRIMMINGS

always on hand, direct from the factory, I can furnish, at short notice, anything in this line.

VERY LOW PRICES FOR 1879:

Very Small Coffins, $2.50

Children's Coffins, 1.50 to 3.00

ADULT SIZES:

Plain flat lid Coffin, with Glass, 8.00 to 12.00

Rosewood Finish, 10.00 to 15.00

O. G. Top, Rosewood Finish, 10.00 to 11.00

CASKETS:

Black Walnut, Hinged and Locked, 12.00 to 16.00

Fancy Trimmed, 16.00 to 25.00

Other styles at corresponding low prices.

Hearse in all cases furnished in town, $2.00

I will not be Undersold.

All work guaranteed to give satisfaction, and prices as reasonable as can be had anywhere.

All orders by mail promptly attended to.

A. LOEWENSTEIN,

MERCHANT TAILOR,

OAKLAND, MD.

Respectfully announces to the citizens of Oakland and vicinity, that he has laid in his usual large stock of

Spring and Summer Cloths,

Cassimere, Vestings, etc.,

which he is prepared to make to order upon the shortest notice and in the most

Neat and Fashionable Manner.

He invites all to call and examine his goods, and leave their orders for a suit. He has reduced the price for making coats, but Guarantee a Perfect Fit.

All work WARRANTED to give entire satisfaction.

530 ACRES

Good Land

For Sale Cheap.

This Land lies on the Hooopole Road, about six miles north east from Oakland, B. & O. R. R., and is generally covered with good timber. Would make several good farms. Will be sold in bulk or in small lots. Title good.

For particulars and terms apply to this office or to the postoffice, Oakland, Garrett Co., Md.

CHAS. H. WHETZELL,

Manufacturer of

WHITE PINE, HEMLOCK AND Cherry Lumber.

Also

HEMLOCK, WHITE AND YELLOW PINE SHINGLES.

Charges reasonable and satisfaction guaranteed to all customers.

The mill is situated on Muddy Creek, one mile from the Fichtner mill.

CHAS. H. WHETZELL

May 11, 79, 1v.

B. & O. R. R. Time-Table.

The following time table of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad went into effect on the 15th of May:

GOING WEST

No. 2, 5.41 A. M.

No. 6, 9.51 A. M.

No. 8, 3.29 A. M.

No. 10, 4.49 P. M.

Way, 10.11 A. M.

GOING EAST.

No. 1, 12.40 A. M.

No. 3, 6.11 P. M.

No. 5, 12.21 P. M.

No. 7, 8.29 P. M.

Way, 8.29 A. M.

The fast trains, with the exception of those mentioned, make stoppages only at the First Class Stations. Tickets should always be procured before taking the cars, passengers saving thereby from 10 to 25 cents.

WM. M. CLEMENTS,

Master of Transportation.

L. M. COLE,

General Ticket Agent

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

MEAT MARKET.

H. E. WOLFE,

Formerly of Cumberland, Md.,

Takes this mode of announcing to the citizens of Oakland and vicinity that he has permanently located in Oakland for the purpose of carrying on the

BUTCHERING BUSINESS

in a first-class manner.

FRESH BEEF, (stall-fed), MUTTON, PORK, BOLOGNA SAUSAGE, PORK SAUSAGE, &c., at all times.

Shop near the Post Office.

Customers can get what they want without delay and at any hour of the day.

Your patronage is respectfully solicited.

H. E. WOLFE.

Sheriff's Sale.

By virtue of a writ of fieri facias, issued out of the Circuit Court for Garrett county, Md., and to the directed, at the suit of Jas. Dixon, against the goods and chattels, lands and tenements of Solomon B. Harvey, I have seized and taken in execution all the right, title, interest, claim and demand, at law and in equity, of the said Jas. Dixon, against the said Solomon B. Harvey, in and to the following property, to-wit: All that lot, piece or parcel of land called "Academy," lying and being in Garrett county, Md., and described as lot No. 11, together with all the improvements thereon. Also, all that tract of land lying and being in Garrett county, Md., called "Academy," being the same as lots Nos. 17 and 18 of the Military Lands lying westward of Fort Cumberland, together with the improvements thereon.

And I hereby give notice that on

SATURDAY, June 7th, 1879,

at 2 o'clock P. M., in front of Coldwater's Hotel in the town of Oakland, I will offer for sale the said property so seized and taken in execution to the highest bidder, for cash, to satisfy said debt and costs.

THOS. CODDINGTON,

5 17 4 Sheriff.

BRIDGE NOTICE.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, that the undersigned will make application to the County Commissioners, at their next meeting after thirty days from the first publication of this notice, for the erection of a bridge across the Youghiogheny River, near the mouth of Sawney Creek, in said district. Also, for the erection of a bridge across the same river, near the mouth of the said district. These bridges are on a new road recently located, running from near Jones Station to the West Virginia State line.

THOS. W. ASHBY,

JOSEPH MOON,

W. A. LORAN,

5 10 1

LIVERY STABLE.

THOMAS MARTIN

at the old stand, opposite the Post Office, is prepared to furnish on short notice

BUGGIES,

CARRIAGES,

WAGONS and SADDLE HORSES,

On Reasonable Terms.

See Fishing, Hunting and Picnic parties supplied with transportation to any point desired.

5 21 1v.

TRUSTEE'S SALE

OF VALUABLE

REAL ESTATE.

Under and by virtue of a decree of the Circuit Court for Garrett county, Md., in said Court of Equity, passed in a cause in said Court, to-wit: Andrew P. Fabel and Jane Fabel are plaintiffs vs. Isaac Myers and others are defendants, the undersigned, as Trustee, will offer at public sale at

Nichols's Mill, in Sethsport District, in said county, on

Saturday, June 14th, 1879,

at the hour of 11 o'clock, A. M. of said day,

all the following described real estate of which Jacob Myers died seized and possessed, to-wit:

Military Lots Nos. 2871, 2872 and 2874.

lying westward from Fort Cumberland, and which were conveyed to the said Jacob Myers by John Mackey and Barbara his wife, by deed bearing date the 20th day of December, 1852. The said lots are situated on what is known as "Baltimore" ridge, in Sethsport District, Garrett county, Md., and adjoins the lands of Noah Humberston, Jefferson Frazer, Ephial Myers and others, and about three miles from Sethsport and one mile from Nichols's Mill. The said property is improved by a good, substantial dwelling house, log barn, and a never failing spring of good water very near the house. There are forty acres of land in and near and under cultivation; the balance in timber.

TERMS OF SALE, as prescribed by the decree:—One-half of the purchase money, in cash on the ratification of the sale, and the balance in twelve months from date of sale, the deferred payment to bear interest from the date of sale, and to be secured by the single bill of the purchaser with such additional security as shall be approved by the Trustee.

ISAAC MYERS,

Trustee.

J. W. Veitch, Attorney.

HEADACHE PILLS

NEURALGIA

"DR. J. W. BENSON, a PILLER, practicing physician at 108 PILLER, 108 F. Street, Baltimore, PILLER, Md., who has paid much PILLER, attention to nervous dis- PILLER, eases, has discovered that PILLER, Extremes of Colery and PILLER, Cholera combined in PILLER, a certain proportion triva- PILLER, rably cause either bilious PILLER, dyspeptic, nervous or sick PILLER, headache, neuralgia and PILLER, nervousness. This anti- PILLER, naph in medical chemis- PILLER, try, and suffers all over PILLER, the country are ordering PILLER, by mail. He prepares it PILLER, in pills, at 60 cts. per box, PILLER, The Doctor is largely PILLER, known and highly respect- PILLER, ed in Baltimore."—Ejus, PILLER, PILLER.

CELESTY

BALTIMORE, July 5, 1871.

Dr. J. W. BENSON, of cele-

sty and Chamotte Pills

have cured my wife of

sick and nervous head-

ache of ten years standing; she had it every

week for ten days, and suffered almost everything

but death with it. We think these pills worth

their weight in gold.

Rev. H. SCHUCHTER,

Pastor Union Mission, PILLER

For sale by all Druggists

in this town.

Price 50 cts. box, mail,

city and country address, collect

be N. E. Stow St., Balti-

more, Md.

1871

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

Sheriff's Sale.

By virtue of a writ of fieri facias, issued out of the Circuit Court for Garrett county, Md., and to the directed, at the suit of Jas. Dixon, against the goods and chattels, lands and tenements of Solomon B. Harvey, I have seized and taken in execution all the right, title, interest, claim and demand, at law and in equity, of the said Jas. Dixon, against the said Solomon B. Harvey, in and to the following property, to-wit: All that lot, piece or parcel of land called "Academy," lying and being in Garrett county, Md., and described as lot No. 11, together with all the improvements thereon. Also, all that tract of land lying and being in Garrett county, Md., called "Academy," being the same as lots Nos. 17 and 18 of the Military Lands lying westward of Fort Cumberland, together with the improvements thereon.

And I hereby give notice that on

SATURDAY, June 7th, 1879,

at 2 o'clock P. M., in front of Coldwater's Hotel in the town of Oakland, I will offer for sale the said property so seized and taken in execution to the highest bidder, for cash, to satisfy said debt and costs.

THOS. CODDINGTON,

5 17 4 Sheriff.

BRIDGE NOTICE.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, that the undersigned will make application to the County Commissioners, at their next meeting after thirty days from the first publication of this notice, for the erection of a bridge across the Youghiogheny River, near the mouth of Sawney Creek, in said district. Also, for the erection of a bridge across the same river, near the mouth of the said district. These bridges are on a new road recently located, running from near Jones Station to the West Virginia State line.

THOS. W. ASHBY,

JOSEPH MOON,

W. A. LORAN,

5 10 1

LIVERY STABLE.

THOMAS MARTIN

at the old stand, opposite the Post Office, is prepared to furnish on short notice

BUGGIES,

CARRIAGES,

WAGONS and SADDLE HORSES,

On Reasonable Terms.

See Fishing, Hunting and Picnic parties supplied with transportation to any point desired.

5 21 1v.

TRUSTEE'S SALE

OF VALUABLE

REAL ESTATE.

Under and by virtue of a decree of the Circuit Court for Garrett county, Md., in said Court of Equity, passed in a cause in said Court, to-wit: Andrew P. Fabel and Jane Fabel are plaintiffs vs. Isaac Myers and others are defendants, the undersigned, as Trustee, will offer at public sale at

Nichols's Mill, in Sethsport District, in said county, on

Saturday, June 14th, 1879,

at the hour of 11 o'clock, A. M. of said day,

all the following described real estate of which Jacob Myers died seized and possessed, to-wit:

Military Lots Nos. 2871, 2872 and 2874.

lying westward from Fort Cumberland, and which were conveyed to the said Jacob Myers by John Mackey and Barbara his wife, by deed bearing date the 20th day of December, 1852. The said lots are situated on what is known as "Baltimore" ridge, in Sethsport District, Garrett county, Md., and adjoins the lands of Noah Humberston, Jefferson Frazer, Ephial Myers and others, and about three miles from Sethsport and one mile from Nichols's Mill. The said property is improved by a good, substantial dwelling house, log barn, and a never failing spring of good water very near the house. There are forty acres of land in and near and under cultivation; the balance in timber.

TERMS OF SALE, as prescribed by the decree:—One-half of the purchase money, in cash on the ratification of the sale, and the balance in twelve months from date of sale, the deferred payment to bear interest from the date of sale, and to be secured by the single bill of the purchaser with such additional security as shall be approved by the Trustee.

ISAAC MYERS,

Trustee.

J. W. Veitch, Attorney.

HEADACHE PILLS

NEURALGIA

"DR. J. W. BENSON, a PILLER, practicing physician at 108 PILLER, 108 F. Street, Baltimore, PILLER, Md., who has paid much PILLER, attention to nervous dis- PILLER, eases, has discovered that PILLER, Extremes of Colery and PILLER, Cholera combined in PILLER, a certain proportion triva- PILLER, rably cause either bilious PILLER, dyspeptic, nervous or sick PILLER, headache, neuralgia and PILLER, nervousness. This anti- PILLER, naph in medical chemis- PILLER, try, and suffers all over PILLER, the country are ordering PILLER, by mail. He prepares it PILLER, in pills, at 60 cts. per box, PILLER, The Doctor is largely PILLER, known and highly respect- PILLER, ed in Baltimore."—Ejus, PILLER, PILLER.

CELESTY

BALTIMORE, July 5, 1871.

Dr. J. W. BENSON, of cele-

sty and Chamotte Pills

have cured my wife of

sick and nervous head-

ache of ten years stand-

ing; she had it every

week for ten days, and suffered almost everything

but death with it. We

think these pills worth

their weight in gold.

Rev. H. SCHUCHTER,

Pastor Union Mission, PILLER

For sale by all Druggists

in this town.

Price 50 cts. box, mail,

city and country address, collect

be N. E. Stow St., Balti-

more, Md.

1871

MISCELLANEOUS.

SUBSCRIBE FOR

"THE REPUBLICAN,"

AND AID IN THE

CIRCULATION

— OF —

The Cheapest Newspaper

IN WESTERN MARYLAND.

ONLY

$1.50

PER YEAR

IN ADVANCE.

EVERY VARIETY

OF

JOB WORK

PROMPTLY EXECUTED.

We desire to call the attention of Merchants, Mechanics, and Business Men generally, to our extensive facilities for the prompt, speedy and accurate execution of

FIRST-CLASS

JOB PRINTING.

We keep on hand, for printing purposes, an assortment of the best Paper, Envelopes, Cards, &c., and have one of best

JOB PRESSES

now in use, and the

ONLY ONE IN OAKLAND.

We have also a complete stock of

New Plain and Fancy Type, &c.,

of the latest styles, for all the different kinds of Job Work and can now fill all orders for

Show Cards, Business Cards, Circulars, Letter Heads, Bill Heads, Legal Blanks, Certificates, Envelopes, Tags, Stationers, &c.,

Pamphlets, Programmes, Catalogues, Dodgers, &c., &c.

and every description of

Plain and Fancy Printing

At the Lowest Rates.

Drop in and take a look at a

— COMPLETE —

Printing Office,

YOU WILL BE

WELCOME AT ALL TIMES.

We are determined to be up to the times in everything connected with the printing business.

Address

"THE REPUBLICAN,"

Oakland, Garrett Co., Md.

DR. J. DAILY,

RESIDENT DENTIST

WESTERNPORT,

MARYLAND.

From one to a full set of teeth inserted in the most beautiful and substantial manner. Particular attention paid to cleaning and filling the natural teeth. All work warranted to give satisfaction, or money refunded.

1871-72

MISCELLANEOUS.

COUNTY DIRECTORY.

CIRCUIT COURT.

Jury Terms—Second Monday of September and the First Monday of May.

Non-Jury Terms—First Monday of July and Third Monday of December.

Chief Judge—Hon. R. H. Alvey.

Associates—Hons. Wm. Motter and Geo. A. Pearre.

Clerk—W. H. Tower.

Sheriff—Thomas Coddington.

State's Attorney—Jno. W. Veitch.

Court Auditor—W. P. Townshend.

Standing Commissioners—Gilmer S. Hamill and A. B. Gonder.

Crier—Wm. Smouse.

Messenger—Jas. M. Bell.

Bailiffs—Wm. Waltz and T. Bosley.

Return days of Equity process—Third Monday in January, third Monday in March, third Monday in May, third Monday in July, second Monday in September, second Monday in November.

ORPHANS' COURT.

Meets every second and fourth Tuesday of each month.

Chief Judge—Joseph DeWitt.

Associates—A. J. Michaels and Wm. Harvey.

Register of Wills—W. L. Rawlings.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS.

The regular sessions of the County Commissioners commence on the first Monday in January; the first Monday in April, being the appeal and transfer term; the first Monday in June, being the levy term; the first Monday in July, the term for appointing judges of election, and the first Monday in October.

President, E. C. Thron; Commissioners, John Biley and Jeremiah Guard.

Clerk—Wm. H. Hagans, who will be in the office on Tuesdays and Saturdays of each week.

County Surveyor—John Harned.

SCHOOL COMMISSIONERS.

President—Wm. A. Brydon.

Commissioners—G. W. Delawder

Secretary and Treasurer—Dr. E. H. Bartlett.

JUSTICES OF THE PEACE.

District No. 1—J. H. Wilson and Henry Rasche.

2—Benj. Griffith.

3—John T. Patterson and Sylvanus Butler.

4—A. J. Warnick.

7—R. B. Jamison and A. L. Osbourne.

9—Perry Neimer.

LODGES.

A. F. & A. M.—Meet every first and third Thursday night.

I. O. O. F. No. 12—Meet every Monday night.

A. L. O. E. No. 574, K. of H.—Meets in McCombs Hall 2d and 4th Thursday evenings of each month.

I. O. G. T. No. 114—Meet every Tuesday night.

PROFESSIONAL CARDS.

H. WHEELER COMBS,

ATTORNEY AT LAW,

OAKLAND, GARRETT CO., MD.

Will practice in the Courts of Garrett and Allegany Counties, Md., and in the Court of Appeals of Maryland.

Collection promptly attended to. d28y

GILMER S. HAMILL,

ATTORNEY AT LAW

AND SOLICITOR IN CHANCERY.

OFFICE IN O'NEILL'S BUILDING, (Lower Floor).

Particular attention given to Conveyancing, investigation of land titles and collection of claims. Loans negotiated. j41y

J. W. VEITCH,

ATTORNEY AT LAW

AND SOLICITOR IN CHANCERY.

OAKLAND, GARRETT COUNTY, MD.

Will practice in the Courts of Garrett County and the adjoining Counties of West Virginia, and in the Court of Appeals of Maryland. Jan. 20-41

THOS. J. PEDRICCOLI,

AND

PEDRICCOLI & GONDER,

ATTORNEYS AT LAW

SOLICITORS IN CHANCERY.

OAKLAND, GARRETT COUNTY, MD.

Will practice in the Courts of Garrett and Allegany Counties, the adjoining Counties of West Virginia, and in the Court of Appeals of Maryland. Jan. 20-41

DR. W. F. FUNDENBERG

Late Resident Surgeon, New York

Eye and Ear Infirmary,

HAS LOCATED PERMANENTLY in the City of Cumberland, Md., for the EXCLUSIVE treatment of all diseases of the Eye and Ear, including those of the Nose and Throat.

Office, No. 28 South Centre Street, ap21y1

JOHN RICHARDSON,

Manufacturer and Dealer in

WAGONS AND FARMING IMPLEMENTS,

GRAIN CRACKERS A SPECIALTY.

&c. Also, Improved Hand Saws, &c. &c. Near the Depot, Oakland, Md. j41y

THE REPUBLICAN.

OAKLAND, MD., SATURDAY, JUNE 14, 1879.

NUMBER 16.

VOLUME 3.

OAKLAND BUSINESS GUIDE.

DRY GOODS, GROCERIES, etc.

D. E. OFFUTT,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Agricultural Machines, Musical Instruments,
Guns, Pistols, etc.

G. W. LEGGIE,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Cor. Second & Oak Sts.

D. H. LOAR,
ORIGINAL NEW YORK STORE,
General Merchandise, Watches, Clocks, Jew-
elry, etc.

I. W. STALNAKER,
Grocery and Provision Store,
Corner Third and Oak Street.

L. BUSH & SON,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Cor. Third & Oak Sts.

J. A. GRANT,
Dry Goods, Notions & Groceries,
SPECIAL LINE OF TOMATOES.

DAVIS & TOWNSEND,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Agents Agricultural Machines,
Opposite Bailey's Park.

C. C. MICHAEL,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Notions, Clocks, Confectionery, etc.,
Next to Coddington's Hotel.

RICHARDSON BROS.,
GROCERIES, CONFECTIONERIES,
Canned Goods Fruit, etc.

HOTELS.

CODDINGTON'S HOTEL,
W. M. CODDINGTON, Proprietor,
Main St., Opposite Hamilton's Billiard Saloon.

LIVERY STABLE.

THOMAS MARTIN,
Opposite Postoffice.

STOVES AND TINWARE.

G. A. SHIRER,
A general line of Stoves and Tinware.

PHYSICIANS.

DR. J. LEE MC COMAS,
Office on Main Street.

DR. E. H. PARSONS,
Offers his professional services
to the people of Oakland and vicinity.
Office in the old Offutt building,
3 S 3m.

PLASTERER.

JAMES ARNOLD,
Residence on Fourth Street.

BOOT AND SHOE MAKER.

W. M. M. WAGNER,
Shop Cor. First & Oak Sts.

GEO. F. LOUGHRIDGE,
Leave orders at Express office.

SURVEYORS.

J. B. BRANT,
Surveyor, and Auditor and County Engineer.
Oakland, Garrett county, Md.

JOHN HARNED,
Address, Post Office.

JEWELER.

A. B. WOODCOCK,
In Wm. Smouse's Building,
Watches and Clocks (Cleaned and Repaired).

MILLINERY AND FANCY GOODS.

MRS. M. E. DAVIS,
Cor. Oak & Second Sts.

M. L. SCOTT'S Baltimore Store,
Millinery, Gents' Furnishing,
Main Street, Opposite Dr. McComas' office.

DRUGS AND MEDICINES.

GEO. C. STURGIS,
Drugs, Medicines,
Paraffin, Candles, Stationery,
Furniture and Glass.

G. W. MERRILL,
Near Depot.
Pure Drugs, Medicines, Toilet Goods, Station-
ery, Candles and Tobacco, Etc., etc. Country, Paints, Fishing Tackle, Etc. Physician's prescriptions accurately compounded.

PAINTING & PAPER HANG- ING.

E. J. FRINGER,
House and Sign Painter,
And Paper Hanger.

V. B. WARD,
HOUSE AND SIGN PAINTER
Shop near Davis House.

BLACKSMITHS.

CHAS. SINCELL,
Liberty Street.

CONTRACTORS & BUILDERS.

JOHN M. JARBOE,
Carpenter, Contractor & Builder,
Residence on Liberty St., nearly oppo. Depot.

P. A. CHISHOLM,
Carpenter, Contractor,
And Builder.
Residence on Centre street.

GEO. A. SPEDDEN,
Residence oppo. School house.

JOSEPH M. CRIM,
Residence on Alder Street.

A. C. BROOKE,
Res. near Republican office.

CABINETMAKERS AND UN- DERTAKERS.

A. C. BROOKE,
Res. adjoining Gazette office.

JOHN SHATZER,
Shop on Second Street.

MEDICAL.

H. T.

HELMBOLD'S

COMPOUND

Fluid Extract

BUCHU.

PHARMACEUTICAL

A SPECIFIC REMEDY FOR ALL DISEASES

OF THE BLADDER & KIDNEYS.

For Debility, Loss of Memory, Indisposi-
tion to Exertion or Business, Shortness of
Breath, Troubled with Thoughts of Disease,
Dimness of Vision, Pain in the Back, Chest,
Head, Rashes of Blood to the Head, Pale Complexion, and Dry Skin.

If these symptoms are allowed to go on,
very frequently Kidney Fits and Consumption follow. When the Constitution becomes weakened it requires the aid of an invigorating medicinal to strengthen and tone up the system—which

"Helmhold's Buchu" DOES IN EVERY CASE.

HELMBOLD'S BUCHU
IS UNEQUALED

By any remedy known. It is prescribed by
the most eminent physicians all over the
world.

Rheumatism,
Spermatorrhoea,
Neuralgia,
Nervousness,
Dyspepsia,
Indigestion,
Constipation,
Aches and Pains,

General Debility,
Kidney Diseases,
Liver Complaint,
Nervous Debility,
Epilepsy,
Head Troubles,
Paralysis,
General Ill Health,

Spiritual Diseases,
Scalds,
Bruises, Decline,
Lumbago,
Catarrh,
Nervous Complaints,
Female Complaints, &c.

Headache, Pain in the Shoulders, Cough,
Dizziness, Sour Stomach, Emphysem, Indis-
tinctness of the Sight, Pimples on the Face,
Pain in the region of the Kidneys, and a
thousand other painful symptoms, are the
offspring of Dyspepsia.

HELMBOLD'S BUCHU

Invigorates the Stomach.

And stimulates the torpid Liver, Bowels, and
Kidneys to healthy action, in cleansing the
blood of all impurities, and imparting new
life and vigor to the whole system.

A single trial will be quite sufficient to
convince the most hesitating of its valuable
remedial qualities.

Price $1 Per Bottle,

Or Six Bottles for $5.

Delivered to any address free from observa-
tion.

"Patients" may consult by letter, receiving
the same attention as by calling.

Competent Physicians attend to correspondents. All letters should be addressed to

H. T. HELMBOLD,

DRUGGIST AND CHEMIST,
Philadelphia, Pa.

CAUTION!

See that the private Pro-
prietary Stamp is on
each bottle.

SOLD EVERYWHERE.

my 10-lyr.

INTERNATIONAL BIBLE LESSONS.

SUNDAY, JUNE 15, 1879.

THE NEED OF GOD'S SPIRIT.

GENERAL STATEMENT.

The darkness of evil is over, and the remnant of the Jews are once more in the land of their fathers, and ruled by their own hereditary prince, Zerubbabel, though under the scepter of the Persian King. But their temple still stands incomplete, by the opposition of their enemies and the prohibition of the jealous government. The people have lost heart for the work, and have turned from the unfulfilled walls of God's house, to build and adorn their own homes. At this period of discouragement and lack of interest, the prophets Haggai and Zechariah arose, to urge their countrymen to renew their work for the building of the temple. Zechariah's vision appears to encourage the drooping hearts of the prince and the people. He be-holds the golden candlestick standing in its place within the Holy House, and above it hangs a golden bowl, from which flows the oil of every vessel. On either side stands an olive tree, on whose fruit-laden branches, by mysterious distillation, the oil is formed, which, flowing through golden pipes, supplies the reservoir above the candlestick—a symbol of God's sustaining grace bestowed upon his people. An angel attests the promise that the princely hands which laid the corner-stone of that temple shall yet place its head-stone on the rock, and that God's cause, however weak and small, shall triumph over all its foes.

Zechar. 1. 1-11.

Memory Verse, 4-7.

1 And the angel that talked with me came again, and waked me, saying, A man that is waked out of his sleep.

2 And said unto me, What seest thou?
And I said, I have looked, and behold, a candlestick all of gold, with a bowl upon the top of it; and his seven lamps thereon, and seven pipes to the seven lamps, which are upon the top thereof;

3 And two olive trees by it, one upon the right side of the bowl, and the other upon the left side thereof.

4 So I answered and spake to the angel that talked with me, saying, What are these, my lord?

5 Then the angel that talked with me answered and said unto me, Knowest thou not what these be? And I said, No, my lord.

6 Then he answered and spake unto me, saying, This is the word of the Lord unto Zerubbabel, saying, Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord of hosts.

7 Who art thou, O great mountain? before Zerubbabel shall he become a plain; and he shall bring forth the head-stone, and shall say, Peace be unto thee, and grace be unto thee;
8 Moreover the word of the Lord came unto me, saying,

9 The hands of Zerubbabel have laid the foundation of this house; his hands shall also finish it; and thou shalt know that the Lord
of hosts hath sent me unto you.

10 For who hath despised the day of small things? or they shall rejoice, and shall say,
The promise in the hand of the Lord was truly performed; they are the eyes of the Lord
which run to and fro through the whole earth.

11 Then answered I, and said unto him,
What are these two olive trees upon the right side of the candlestick and upon the left side thereof?

12 And I answered again, and said unto him, What be these two olive branches which between the two golden pipes empty the golden oil out of themselves?

13 And he answered me and said, Knowest thou not what these be? And I said, No, my lord.

14 Then said he, These are the two anoint-ed ones, that stand by the Lord of the whole earth.

HOME READINGS.

M. The need of God's Spirit, Zechar. 1. 1-11.
Th. The Spirit promised, Zechar. 1. 1-11.
Fr. The Spirit promised, Zechar. 1. 1-11.
Sa. The Spirit promised, Zechar. 1. 1-11.
Su. The Spirit promised, Zechar. 1. 1-11.

8 The Spirit promised, Zechar. 1. 1-11.
9 The Spirit promised, Zechar. 1. 1-11.
10 The Spirit promised, Zechar. 1. 1-11.
11 The Spirit promised, Zechar. 1. 1-11.

Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord of hosts, Zechar. 1. 6.

LESSON HYMN, S. M.

Lord God, the Holy Ghost!
In this accepted hour,
As on the day of Pentecost,
Descent in all thy power.

The young, the old inspire
With wisdom from above;
And give us hearts and tongues of fire,
To praise, and praise, and love.

QUESTIONS ON THE OUTLINE.

1. A DECEASED VISION, 1. 1-11; 1. 1-11.
2. The Spirit promised, Zechar. 1. 1-11.
3. The Spirit promised, Zechar. 1. 1-11.

What did the angel say to do?
What did the prophet see?
How many lamps were on the candlestick?
From what did the pipes proceed? (ANS.:
From the golden bowl.)

What stood beside the candlestick?
Did the prophet understand the vision?
The golden candlestick? (ANS.: 10, 21, 23.)

Where was this golden candlestick placed?
Who afterward saw in a vision the golden candlestick? (ANS.: 1. 12, 13.)

What did these represent? (ANS.: 1. 20.)
Why does the candlestick represent the Church? (ANS.: Because it bears the light for the world.)

2. A CONFIRMED LESSON, 1. 1-11; 1. 1-11.
What did the angel say, in the golden
text?

What does this mean?
How is it explained by 1. 1-11; 1. 2-7, 28?
Who was Zerubbabel? (ANS.: The governor of the Jews.)

In what work was he engaged? (ANS.: 1. 2-7.)
To what are the obstacles before him compared? (ANS.: 1. 7.)

What promise was given him?
What promise is given in Isa. 6. 1-5?
What house is here meant? (ANS.: The second temple.)

What were on each side of the candlestick?

What was their use?
What did they represent? (ANS.: 1. 14.)

TEACHINGS OF THE LESSON.

Where in this lesson do we learn—
1. That obstacles are nothing in God's way?
2. That the weak are mighty by God's aid?
3. That success is sure to God's cause?

WORDS WITH LITTLE FOLKS.

1. Remember that, though little, you may be precious to God.

2. For a shining when you are in the way of duty.

3. Remember God's eyes are in every place.

Bourbon Ballads--No. 25.

FROM THE NEW YORK TRIBUNE.

APRIL 1.

Whereas, The hiring Yankee band
of lathe and trowel, scythe and hoe,
And came, some literary avengers,
And roused us till we couldn't stand;

Thou half-sundered sword and gun
To grant, and beaten, issued forth,
And half the Neutralists of the North
Don't know which and their heads were on:

Therefore Resolved, We make this vow:
Under a bogus President
We'll see these soldiers manneled
Before we pay a single cent!

Yes, this is what we'll do—
We'll wear a badge brown
And swear till all is blue,
We never will back down!

MAY 1.

Resolved, At all the polls
Each freeman may his pistol draw:
He called to execute the law—
For this is tyrannic—
The function of a Crown!

We'll die for liberty,
And never will back down!

JUNE 1.

Resolved, Some more, We do agree
To pay the arm-of-miraculous,
But they shall never draw their swords
Except to fight the Indians.

The rickshaws will suit
And do the darkies brown;
We'll back up all the while
And never will back down!

Resolved, That Hayes has killed the bill
Whose features we have so much prized,
And whittled us over the senses till
We're very much demoralized.

Oh, shall we put on craps?
Or call the circus clown?
We surrender, retreat, give up,
Skeletal, vanquish the rascal.

Cave in and knock under—
But never will back down!

The Democratic Programme.

The Democratic Caucus has voted to put the party in range of two more vetoes.

It proposes to pass an Army Appropriation bill which will not allow any of the funds to be used to transport or subsid troops for the preservation of peace at the polls,
and a Judicial Appropriation bill which will prohibit any use of the money appropriated to pay election officers. Appropriation bills with these conditions will be sent to the President on the pretence that the Executive has no right to veto a bill merely because it contains unpalatable restrictions as to the use of the public funds.

Is there no Democratic leader who can realize that the country is sick of this miserable trickery? The plain common sense of the people will cut straight through all the chicanery that now can be invented. Either the proposed omissions and restrictions are in effect a virtual repeal of existing laws, or they are not. If they are, a veto will be sustained by every person who sustains the veto of direct and open repeal, and by some others who share the Anglo-Saxon contempt for a tricky and cowardly mode of doing business. If they are not, their employment is frivolous and childish. The President may well reason that Congress intends to effect something by departing from the usual form of appropriation, and to prevent uncertainty as to their duty on the part of courts and public officers may properly send back the bills for such amendment as shall either repeal existing laws or leave them in full and unquestioned force.
Congress can only make itself complicit by attempting to do indirectly
and by implication things which it has failed to do openly and directly.

There are three ways of getting a desired concession. One is to ask it frankly and manfully, with full recognition that the right to refuse is as clear as the right to ask. Another is the method of the swindler, who tries to trap an unwary victim by foul dealing and marked cards. A third is the method of the highway-
man, who levels a pistol and cries,
"Your money or your life!" No sane man would begin by attempted coercion, thus putting an opponent on his guard, and resort afterwards to plain asking or trickery. But this is exactly the order chosen by the Democrats. First, they tried to coerce the President; the passage of appropriation bills with partisan riders
was a threat to starve the Government if it did not yield. Then they asked the same thing without coercion. Now they are to try and carry their point by trickery and pettifog-
ing.

The President has learned that the people are with him. He has seen that the Republican party is more united than ever in resistance to Democratic demands, and that thousands of Democrats in every State sustain him. He has seen, too, that he has the power to obtain unconditional surrender. The revolutionists are at his mercy. If forced to the issue proposed by themselves, they will be abandoned by all loyal and Conservative Democrats. It is safe to say that President Hayes is not going to throw away his opportunity;

that he will make no compromise, nor abate a jot of his rightful demands.

It is his duty to insist that Congress shall obey all laws until they are constitutionally repealed, and shall provide the necessary means for the enforcement of all laws on the Statute book. So long as Congress refuses, it is his part to send back its bills for correction. An attempt to repeal a law by indirection, to leave the President without power to enforce a law because he has exercised his constitutional right to object to its repeal, will not deceive him.

Sooner or later Congress will be obliged to pass proper appropriation bills for the support of all departments of the Government and the enforcement of all its laws. Until Congress does this, it may expect a veto at every step, and a swelling chorus of popular approval for the President and condemnation for the Democratic revolutionists after each veto. That sort of thing the President and the Republicans can stand,
if the Democrats can.—New York Tribune.

A Democratic Forgery.

A few weeks since a Democratic paper published at Columbus, Ohio, printed a purported letter from the editor of the Okolona States, (the fire eating organ of the South,) to General Robison chairman of the State Republican committee of Ohio,
so framed as to create the impression that the Republicans of Ohio were supporting that paper on account of its extreme views, and really paying for these to use for campaigning purposes. The editor of the Okolona States, now exposes the letter as a forgery, as follows:

To the Editor of the Democrat, (Columbus, O.) STATES' OFFICE,
OKOLONA, MISS., May 27, 1879.

Sir:—The moment that my attention was directed to the spurious letter, that first appeared in your columns, purporting to have been written by me to General J. S. Robinson, I wrote you a few lines, demanding the name of the author, telling you in plain unvarnished terms
that I would hold you personally responsible for the forgery until you disclaimed it and disclosed the name of the Kenton correspondent from whom you professed to have received
it.

After waiting a reasonable length of time for a reply, and waiting in vain, Col. A. Y. Harper and I sent you the following telegram:

"OKOLONA, MISS., May 21, 1879."
"Editor Daily Democrat, Columbus, Ohio."
"We demand the name of the author of the forged letter, signed 'Will
H. Kernan,' which appeared in your paper, addressed to General Robinson."

You have noticed neither my letter
nor the telegram. You have continued to make use of the forgery to injure my personal standing and the paper with which I am connected.
You have thereby manifested an utter lack of the first elements and attributes of an honorable man.

Further, you have strengthened
the suspicion that you are the author of the spurious letter, or a partner in crime with the irresponsible
scoundrel who wrote it.

If this is the case—if you had let part in that wholly infamous transaction, right here and now I brand you before the world as a blistering disgrace to your name, a lying assassin
of character, who ought to be read out of the society of respectable men and women, a dastard too cowardly
to face the consequences of your guilt,
and a felon whose fit and proper place is in the penitentiary with your fellow desperadoes who have defied the laws of God and man.

WILL H. KERNAN.

The New Orleans Times wants every paper in Louisiana to insert an advertisement inviting 500 healthy and industrious families from the West or North to buy up a parish and colonize it. The Times had better persuade the gentle bulldozers to turn their attention to raising cotton
instead of hanging Republicans.

Then invite Western and Northern men with their families to settle in the South, and perhaps they will.
But not at present.

A pretty picture is a healthy looking and well cared for baby. By the use of Dr. Bull's Baby Syrup you can keep the health of your baby in splendid condition. Price 25 cents a bottle.

An Icy Funeral.

Standing the other day by the colum of his deceased brother, Colonel Robert G. Ingersoll brought his views of religion and philosophy to the test. He is an eloquent man;
strong, self-reliant, warm in his friendships and affections, but what had he to say, when they came to cast the clouds on the coffin of the brother whom he loved, and when he came to reflect that this was the end-all and that not a star-ray of hope came to him from the vast outer void
of darkness? What supported him, what cheered him with the promise of something sweet and restful to come? How hollow and unsatisfying does pretty talk seem at a moment like this! And yet this is all that Mr. Ingersoll had to offer:

Life is a narrow vale between the cold and barren peaks of two eternities. We strive in vain to look beyond the heights. We cry aloud and the only answer is the echo of our wailing cry. From the voiceless lips of the unrelenting dead there comes no word but in the night of death
hope sees a star and listening love can hear the rustle of a wing. He who sleeps here, when dying, mistaking the approach of death for the return of health, whispered with his last breath, "I am better now."

Let us believe in spite of doubts and dogmas and tears and fears that these dear words are true of all the compassionate dead. And now to you who have been chosen from among the many men he loved to do the last sad office for the dead we give his sacred dust. Speech cannot contain our love.

How inexpressibly sad are these words—sadder far in their utter hopelessness, because they are be-dizened with flowers of rhetoric that mock their vacuity and gloom as the garlands on the coffin mocked the rotting clay within! And yet such beauty as they possess is borrowed from the vocabulary of faith. Why does he speak of "sacred dust," of

The Republican.

JAS. A. HAYDEN, Publisher.

OAKLAND, GARRETT CO., MD.

LINES.

TO THE FIRST OF MAY, 1875.
DANCE on my knee with your twinkling feet,
Sing in my ears with your luring voice,
Me, as I live,
You will seek me out in my dark retreat,
With an eager zeal that no screen can hide,
And I try to slip you clear into the sweet,
Sweet, eye and nose.
I haven't seen you since 'seventy-eight,
Little has changed,
And I see you now with the bluest hair,
You can defy,
O, how I hate you, nobody knows,
Author of all of my summer woes,
O, how I hate you, nobody knows,
Villainous lie.
All through the winter you did not freeze,
Not much, Mary Ann,
Now all the summer you do as you please,
That is your plan,
When in the warm embraces we would sleep,
Near to your wakened lips you'll keep,
Frenzied in sleep, but waking is sleep,
Sleep, then, if you can.
O, how I wish that my two broad hands,
Spread left and right,
Stretch from the side of Quator's hands,
Giants of might,
Some summer's day, with a would rise,
Sweeping all space with my hands of size,
And smother all the wicked million of lies
Clear out of sight.
Vain are my wishes, O little house fly,
You feed on me,
Strong men may swear and women may cry,
Feeding their greed,
But into the house your friends you'll lug,
You'll bathe your feet in the strip lug,
And your nose you'll draw in the lolly mug,
Cheek and brash.
Still, precious lessons, dear little house fly,
You teach me,
Hate or love, you tell me that I
May be wrong,
Why should I care, when I tickle a nose,
Whether its owner's conduct shows,
That he likes it or hates it, just as it goes,
Pleasant to me.

A NEAT WAY TO PROPOSE.

DR. GERSHAM threw himself wearily into the great arm-chair in Mrs. Hyde's cozy sitting-room. He had just returned from a professional visit, and a long ride in the cold and wind had given him a severe headache. The doctor was Mrs. Hyde's boarder, but he had been so long in the family that he seemed like one of them.
Queenie Brian, Mrs. Hyde's niece, sat by the window busy with some needle-work.
Queenie was a brilliant, slender little thing of seventeen, with short boyish curls and big, roguish brown eyes. On the death of her parents years before, she had been adopted by her aunt. Queenie was wayward, willful and bewitching, and ruled right royally in the little village of Weyland. Her cousins, Tom and Johnny Hyde, were her devoted slaves, and she alternately petted and teased them. Only of Dr. Gersham was she shy; and sometimes he even was not quite safe from her wild pranks. But afterward he would invariably find a peace-offering in the shape of some favorite delicacy on the tea-table, or perhaps his dressing-gown and slippers comfortably warmed and ready for him on his return from a long, tedious ride.
It is not to be supposed, however, that she confessed to any of these weaknesses. I am afraid, on the contrary, that my small heroine manufactured impenetrable fictions when questioned closely.
Dr. Gersham had grown wise through experience, and generally accepted these little favors with a smile and but few words.
On the afternoon of the opening of my story, as the staid figure in the arm-chair gave a long sigh of weariness and pain, Queenie threw the work aside and ran from the room. She returned presently with a box of confections, which she arranged meticulously on the lounge, and wheeling it closer to him, motioned the doctor to the impromptu couch.
He smiled and obeyed her gesture, catching her hands as she sank back on the pillows.
"Why did you do this, Queenie?" she laughed acutely, trying to release herself.
"I don't know—I guess because I love you."
"Do you—do you?" he asked, his face flushed eagerly.
"I don't know. Do you love me?"
"Ah! have you need to ask me that, girl? Kiss me!"
He endeavored to draw her face down to his, but she slipped from his grasp.
"I shall not kiss you, because the man whom I love is not here. I will be his little wife," and away she danced, saluting Tom in the hall with a merry jest.
Dr. Gersham sighed.
"She is only a child," he said; "a bright, beautiful, happy child. I will be thirty-two years old to-morrow—too old and steady for a little humming-bird like Queenie."
Several evenings later, Queenie entered the library where the doctor sat reading his journal.
"Doctor, see if I don't look nice."
"O, don't bother me!" he answered, shortly, burying himself still deeper in his journal.
"Humph! Cross thing! I am going with Charlie Vill skating on the creek. There is sure to be a crowd, and I want to know if I look nice."
He put his paper aside and looked at her. It was impossible to help admiring Queenie at any time, and in her jaunty skating costume, she was more bewitching than ever. But the doctor only said, as he struggled with the passionate love in his heart, "You are a vain little thing—you look well enough."
Queenie shook her skirts together with a mischievous dash, tried to frown on him, and laughed instead, then asked with mock gravity:
"Do you love me as well as you did last Tuesday?"
"Yes."
Queenie hesitated a moment, swayed toward him, a roguish dimple coming at one corner of her mouth, then her warm breath swept his face, as with a sudden movement, she turned and left the prints of her wicked white teeth on his cheek! The next instant she had flown, while her tantalizing laugh floated back to the solitary man in the library.

Dr. Gersham was a great lover of music; and a handsome organ, his property, occupied one corner of the parlor. One afternoon, in the early spring, the doctor was singing, and accompanying himself on the organ. He had thought himself the sole occupant of the room, and drifted, presently, into grand old hymns, solemn chants and weird dirges. The deep voice rose majestically. Surely Dr. Gersham might well be proud of his voice. He paused to look at some music in the rack, and there was a moment's silence, broken suddenly by a low sob. The doctor turned, and saw Queenie curled up in the recess of a window. Never before, during all his acquaintance with her, had he seen the child in tears. He crossed the room and took her in his arms.
"Why, little Queenie! What is it, dear?"
Ah, haughty Queenie! Why did you not tell him how his music had stirred your wilful heart? But, no—she gasped and buried her face in her white apron as she answered—
"Why, you see, Tom has gone off to college, and wouldn't let me go, though I wanted to so much."
The doctor laughed.
"Queenie, you are an incorrigible snorer! Who will be responsible for all your fits?"
"You will—won't you doctor?" turning her soft cheek to his.
For a moment he strained her close to his arms, then putting her away from him, he went silently to his own room.
Thus the days went. Sometimes Dr. Gersham half hoped that Queenie was learning to love him. He had just returned from a professional visit, and a long ride in the cold and wind had given him a severe headache. The doctor was Mrs. Hyde's boarder, but he had been so long in the family that he seemed like one of them.
Queenie Brian, Mrs. Hyde's niece, sat by the window busy with some needle-work.
Queenie was a brilliant, slender little thing of seventeen, with short boyish curls and big, roguish brown eyes. On the death of her parents years before, she had been adopted by her aunt. Queenie was wayward, willful and bewitching, and ruled right royally in the little village of Weyland. Her cousins, Tom and Johnny Hyde, were her devoted slaves, and she alternately petted and teased them. Only of Dr. Gersham was she shy; and sometimes he even was not quite safe from her wild pranks. But afterward he would invariably find a peace-offering in the shape of some favorite delicacy on the tea-table, or perhaps his dressing-gown and slippers comfortably warmed and ready for him on his return from a long, tedious ride.
It is not to be supposed, however, that she confessed to any of these weaknesses. I am afraid, on the contrary, that my small heroine manufactured impenetrable fictions when questioned closely.
Dr. Gersham had grown wise through experience, and generally accepted these little favors with a smile and but few words.
On the afternoon of the opening of my story, as the staid figure in the arm-chair gave a long sigh of weariness and pain, Queenie threw the work aside and ran from the room. She returned presently with a box of confections, which she arranged meticulously on the lounge, and wheeling it closer to him, motioned the doctor to the impromptu couch.
He smiled and obeyed her gesture, catching her hands as she sank back on the pillows.
"Why did you do this, Queenie?" she laughed acutely, trying to release herself.
"I don't know—I guess because I love you."
"Do you—do you?" he asked, his face flushed eagerly.
"I don't know. Do you love me?"
"Ah! have you need to ask me that, girl? Kiss me!"
He endeavored to draw her face down to his, but she slipped from his grasp.
"I shall not kiss you, because the man whom I love is not here. I will be his little wife," and away she danced, saluting Tom in the hall with a merry jest.
Dr. Gersham sighed.
"She is only a child," he said; "a bright, beautiful, happy child. I will be thirty-two years old to-morrow—too old and steady for a little humming-bird like Queenie."
Several evenings later, Queenie entered the library where the doctor sat reading his journal.
"Doctor, see if I don't look nice."
"O, don't bother me!" he answered, shortly, burying himself still deeper in his journal.
"Humph! Cross thing! I am going with Charlie Vill skating on the creek. There is sure to be a crowd, and I want to know if I look nice."
He put his paper aside and looked at her. It was impossible to help admiring Queenie at any time, and in her jaunty skating costume, she was more bewitching than ever. But the doctor only said, as he struggled with the passionate love in his heart, "You are a vain little thing—you look well enough."
Queenie shook her skirts together with a mischievous dash, tried to frown on him, and laughed instead, then asked with mock gravity:
"Do you love me as well as you did last Tuesday?"
"Yes."
Queenie hesitated a moment, swayed toward him, a roguish dimple coming at one corner of her mouth, then her warm breath swept his face, as with a sudden movement, she turned and left the prints of her wicked white teeth on his cheek! The next instant she had flown, while her tantalizing laugh floated back to the solitary man in the library.

that reminds me—I will take another, if you please."
He was laughing again now, and Queenie clung a little closer to him with a quick gesture.
"O, no, no! I cannot. I never can again."
"You must get used to it, lady bird, and you may as well begin to practice now."
He slipped a ring from his watch chain—a diamond, with a quaint gold setting—and put it on her slender forefinger.
"This was my mother's ring, Queenie," he said, reverently, "she died years ago, I will give it to you as a token of my love."
She turned her cheeks to his with a movement that was scarcely a caress, it was so swift and timid, but she did not speak.
"Now, dear, I will take that kiss, and then I will go, for I have an engagement at the village. Next fall I shall return from Virginia to claim my little wife. Come, I will give you just two minutes in which to kiss me of your own free will, just as you did on the piazza."
He drew out his watch and waited. Queenie, standing directly before him, laughed nervously, and flushed and trembled, still hesitating. Never was there a more timid, bashful creature, now that she was fairly conquered. She dared not even lift her eyes to his face.
"One minute more," said the doctor, standing, watch in hand, like Fate.
"O, dear," Queenie gasped, and looking about her fearfully, as though she were about to do something dreadful; and then suddenly lifted two very mock lips.
"I will now," she said. And once again Dr. Gersham felt the shy pressure of the fragrant mouth on his only this time he responded with interest; and then Queenie broke away from him and ran into the house.
The next morning, just before his departure, the doctor had a conversation in the library with Mrs. Hyde, and he re-entered the sitting-room to overhear Johnnie's exclamation to Tom:
"Thomas J. Hyde! Queenie has the doctor's ring on her finger. What does that mean?"
"It means," said Dr. Gersham, "that I want you to take good care of Queenie until next September, and then there will be a wedding right here."
And there was.—Boston Sunday Times.

President Lincoln's Parable.
THE Baltimore American says: "At the entertainment given under the auspices of the Hebrew Young Men's Association on Sunday night, the Rev. Dr. Scold delivered a lecture on Abraham Lincoln, in which he related quite a number of anecdotes. It was not Mr. Lincoln's nature, he said, to argue a point, but when persons would come to him with complaints he often gave them his views on the subject in a short and comprehensible parable or story; as, for instance, some gentlemen from the West had called at the White House, and had been harassing Mr. Lincoln with excited manner about the omissions and commissions of the Government. He heard them patiently for a time, and then said: 'Gentlemen, suppose all the property you own were in the hands of Bloudin to carry across the Niagara River on a tight rope, would you shake the rope while he was passing over, or keep shouting, 'Bloudin, stop! Bloudin, stop!' as he went on? No, I am sure you would not. You would hold your breath as well as your tongue, and keep your hands off until he was safely over. Now, the Government is in the same position, and is carrying across a stormy ocean an immense weight of untold treasures are in its hands; it is doing the best it can; don't badger it; keep silence, and it will get you safely over.'"

Grateful Indians.
STANDING BEAR and party, discharged in obedience to the order of Judge Dundy, took up their line of march for the North yesterday. Before leaving, Standing Bear visited the city to bid Messrs. Poppleton and Webster, good-bye, and to make each a present in token of his gratitude for their services in this case. He went to Mr. Webster's house and presented him with a tomahawk which he had carved for many years as Chief, and which was emblematic of rank, bearing his name engraved upon it. Upon rising to speak he shook hands with all, remarking that he wished to pay respect to all the ladies, and to bid good-bye to them first. He then spoke as follows to Mr. Webster: "You and I are here, our skins are of different color, but God made us both a little while ago. When I was young I was wild. I knew nothing of the ways of the white people. I see you have a nice house here. Look at these beautiful rooms. I would like to have a house, too, and it may be after a while that I can get one, but not so good a house as this. That is what I want to do. For a great many years the white men have been driving us about. They are shrewd, sharp and know how to cheat, but since I have been here I have found them different. They have all treated me kindly. I am thankful for it. Hitherto when we had been wronged we went to war to assert our rights and avenge our wrongs. We had no law to punish those who did wrong, so we took tomahawks and went to kill. If they had guns and could kill as it was the fate of war, but you have found a better way. You have gone into the court for us, and I find our wrongs can be righted there. Now, I have no more use for the tomahawk, and I want to lay it down forever." Here he stooped down, laid the tomahawk on the floor, and then stood erect and folded his arms, saying: "I lay it down; I have found a better way." Then picking it up he handed it to Mr. Webster, saying: "I present it to you as a token of my gratitude that you may keep it in remembrance of this great victory you have gained. You can now seek the ways of peace."
Mr. Webster responded with advice as to the future course to be pursued by Standing Bear and his people. The Chief then went to Mr. Poppleton's residence, and, meeting that gentleman, said: "I told you in the courtroom that God made me and that I was a man. For many years we have been chased about as a dog chases a wild beast. God sent you to help me. I thank you for what you have done. I want to get my land back. That is what I long for all the time, for I wish to live there and be buried with my fathers. When you were speaking in the courtroom I could not understand, but I could see you were trying hard to release me. I think you are doing for me and my people something that has never been done before, and I will ask God to pay you for it, as I could never get enough to do so. I have a relic which has come down to my people through many generations. I do not know how old it is. It may be 200 or 300 years old. I present it to you for what you have done for me." Mr. Poppleton acknowledged the present in appropriate remarks. The relic is a headress worn by a Chief when Ponca made the first treaty with white men. It was since worn by the head of the most solemn councils. Curiosity-seekers have offered large amounts for it, but Standing Bear here refused to part with it.—Omaha Special to Chicago Tribune, May 20.

Lying in Bed.
Let us analyze this lying in bed a little further. Lying in bed, in the mere fact of lying in bed, there is something healthy and recuperative to the system. The wheels of life are oiled and eased. The proper and legitimate purpose of sleeping in bed is to go to sleep. There is nothing like sleep. There is no tonic or medicine in the whole world like sleep. The more sleep the brain gets the better does the brain work. All great brain-workers have been great sleepers. Sir Walter Scott could never do with less than ten hours. A fool may want eight hours, as George III. said, but a philosopher wants nine. The men who have been the greatest generals are the men who could sleep at will. Thus it was with both Wellington and Napoleon. The greatest speakers in the House of Commons have been the men who can go to sleep there as much as they like. This explained the invincibility of Lord Palmerston. There is a man who has been Attorney-General, whom I have seen bury his face in his hands over his desk and sleep soundly until his own case should come on.
There is a Greek proverb, "is the medicine for every disease. If he sleep he will do well." A friend told me that he treated himself for a fever. He went to bed with a large pitcher of lemonade by his side. He drank and slept, slept, and drank, till he drank and slept himself well again. When you take to your bed take all the sleep you can out of your bedstead, even although, to quote Dick Swiveller's saying, "you have to pay for a doctored bedstead, confessing that you have taken a most unreasonable amount of sleep out of a single bed. You will be banking a whole store of recuperative energy. Even if you cannot sleep, still keep to your bed. There is no more pestilent heresy than that you should get up directly you are awake. If it is the early riser who catches the worm, the worm is a great deal in rising still earlier in order to be caught. If you do not get sleep by lying in bed you get rest. You secure the fallow ground which will hereafter produce a good harvest. Sleep is of course the proper employment for bed, but if you ever do have to work in the day, till after a breakfast in bed. Of all sleep in the world, there is none so good as what you get in the way of treasure-trove, after the usual time of waking, when, in point of fact, you have given up the expectation of getting any more sleep. As for "being called," as the saying goes, that is simply a relic of the barbarism of our ancestors. I should quarrel with any man who presumed to call me out of bed. The main beauties of an occasional day in bed is that you get an extra stock of sleep, which goes to the credit of your sanitary account.—London Society.

Flory Ruin.
YESTERDAY afternoon the largest and most destructive fire that ever occurred in the northern field swept over a tract of territory on the east side of the main road in Harrisburg, Pa., which is owned in fee by R. C. H. and his heirs. The fire which is said to have spread from Eckert & Dodd's lease, was wafted in a north-easterly direction, and swept over territory at least one mile in length and fully the same distance in width, clearing a space of at least 500 acres of every rig, engine house and tank, except a new rig of Wilder & Warner, and a drilling well owned by A. R. Marz.
Everything from the south side of Clark & Babcock's boarding house on the south to John Lovell's boarding house at the extreme north of the main road was destroyed by the fire.
John Lovell's attempt to remove his furniture, as the flames were in the woods all around his premises, and nothing could be removed with safety. The burning oil ran over the main road in several localities, and in some places got into the run, but through the exertions of a host of willing hands the flames were extinguished before the combustible material on the opposite side was set on fire.
This morning the fire presents a dismal appearance, and no person is to be seen through the burned district, but around the limits, especially around the main road, are groups of men who are thoroughly worn out by sheer exhaustion. At short intervals some of the wells flow, and the burning oil is the only thing to mark where the derelict stood.
The scene last evening presented by the flowing of wells in the burned district was perfectly grand, and at the time was fearful to behold at each succeeding ebullition.
The engines and boilers are very badly damaged by the heat of the fire, and very few of the big tanks can be used a second time. There is no effort being made to rebuild tanks, as it will be impossible to get the fire extinguished among the wells until we have a heavy rain.

The first of last accounts, was by no means under control, notwithstanding the fact that a large force of men are throwing up embankments and making a hard fight against its crossing the main road to the west. Last night the fire crossed the hill on the east side and did considerable damage in Pembroke Run, but it is reported to be under control.
Mr. G. P. Sammlers, who is United States Gauger for that district, rendered all the aid possible to save the oil. This morning his task in that section is a light one, and his occupation is gone.—Bradford Star, May 13.

Smuggling Stories.
PERHAPS the oldest phase of smuggling (for smuggling it really was) was patent in a practice which prevailed for several years in Dover, and was carried on openly in full view of the preventives and all the inhabitants of the town. About 1819-20 the fashion came up of wearing Leghorn bonnets of exorbitant dimensions. They were huge straw plums, nearly circular, and averaging about a yard in diameter; they sold in England at two to three or more guineas each, according to their quality, and nearly half their cost was the duty paid on the importation. Now, according to the law, duty is not demandable on any article of dress worn by travelers. A clever dealer in Leghorn contrived to profit enormously by this law. He collected a numerous troop of poorest women and girls—ragged, squalid and wretched-looking creatures they were, to be sure—and paid them almost a nominal fee for accompanying him daily in his voyages to and from the French coast, carrying with the captain of one of the steamers for season tickets for the whole of them. The troop regularly left Dover in the morning with scarcely a handful of loaves on their heads; they dined at Calais, if they could afford to dine, and came back in the afternoon, two or three score of them, each with a bran new Leghorn of full-size dimensions on her head, the rag of bonnet waving in the morning breeze, and stuffed in her pocket. On landing they were all marched to the speculator's warehouse, demanded of their luxurious coiffures and dismissed for the day. A hundred times at least have I seen these faded and faded parvies of fashion both going out and coming in, and I could tell the boat they traveled by, while it was yet miles away, by the straw-colored amber line which under a cloudy sky sent glimmers of light and shadow on the hull of the vessel was distinctly visible.
"A form of smuggling," says a writer in the Daily Mail Gazette, "which is not likely soon to die out is that practiced by courtes, who think it allowable to ship paying duty on things which they have bought for their own use. Public morals on this point are slightly elastic and those of the gentler sex especially are apt to think that nothing is wrong in the declaration of volumes of Valenciennes cases of can de cologne, yards of Lyons silk or pieces of Brussels lace. Here is a story which will illustrate feminine notions on this subject and perhaps furnish a moral. A Belgian bridegroom, being about to start for Paris on his bridal tour, was informed by his bride that she thought of concealing several thousand francs' worth of lace about her, hoping by its sale to defray the cost of their journey. The bridegroom was not smitten with this frugal project, and pointed out that there were Customs House officers and a female searcher at Equevalles who were sometimes strict with even the countess favor for examining passengers' pockets. This he said, being a timid man, and his bride, to humor him, promised to give up the plan, but she secretly hid the lace at the same time, and on telling him about it. Now, as the train approached the French frontier the husband reflected that if his wife were not searched his fears would be mocked at as having been groundless, and he would start on his married life with prestige impaired. This was not desirable; rather it was essential that he should from the very outset assert his infallibility. So when the train stopped at Equevalles and the baggage was being taken out for a moment, and, sitting up in a dormier, whispered, 'I think if you search that lady yonder you may find some lace.' The dormier winked, and his wife, in a moment, was invited to walk into the female searcher's room. She turned pale, tottered, but was led away, and five minutes later dismal sounds of hysterics were heard. Then the dormier reappeared and said to the horrified husband, 'Thank you, sir; it's a good capture. The lady will be taken to prison, and half the fine will go to you.' This was a painful adventure, but it does not get the best of her journey. The bridegroom, not that all ladies who smuggle lace are caught."
A more amusing anecdote on this subject was lately told at a public dinner by M. Ferdinand Duval, Prefect of the Seine. He said that the octroi men of Paris, who levy the municipal barrier dues, are a most vigilant set of fellows, but that, having boasted of their merits, he (the Prefect) had been caught by the octroi men, and sent to prison. He had made a small bet that he would introduce a pig into Paris in his brougham without the octroi men detecting it. M. Duval took the bet, and strict orders were given at all the gates of Paris to look out for the brougham of the friend in question. Within less than a week, however, the Prefect received the sum of eighty centimes, being the amount of duty leviable on a pig, and a request to come and assure himself that the quadruped had been successfully smuggled in. It turned out that the pig, killed and scalded, had been dressed up in woman's clothes, and had been driven into Paris seated triumphantly on the box beside the coachman. Since then the octroi men, it is said, stare with some fixity at plump women when they behold them on carriage boxes.—Leisure Hours.

John Astonished.
It happened a few days ago that a committee of ladies set out to find the crockery for festival purposes belonging to one of our city churches, and they learned, after some inquiry, that the crockery when last seen had been stored in the rooms in the Minnesota House now occupied by the representatives of the Flowery Kingdom, as a laundry. They accordingly summoned up courage and invaded the premises. Finding no one at home in the reception room, the lady who had assumed the task of doing the talking, remarked in her bluntest tones: "Ahem." Thus summoned, John, he of the natty slippers, and boss man of the institution, appeared from an inner room. He bowed and gave an inquiring smile, and the lady at once made known the object of her visit by addressing to him these pointed words, "Dishee, dishee." John's smile vanished and he looked surprised. The lady again addressed, "Dishee, dishee?"
This, it will be observed, was in the choicest China, and was the language adopted both out of compliment to the gentleman of the house, and also in keeping with the china the visitors were looking for. But John was deaf both to the words and the spirit of courtesy which had breathed them. He opened his eyes; also his mouth. Then the lady changed her tone, and intonation, and asserted positively, "Dishee, Dishee." The Chinaman could not deny it, and finding himself fairly cornered, he grabbed his cue with both hands and tried to pull the top of his own head off. Still the lady persevered in her inquiries, but changed the topic of her conversation by declaring, "Stover, Stover." Then the Chinaman saw that the whole scene was out, and called aloud on his Joss. By this time the ladies were all out of patience and they broke out in concert, "We want those dishes and things which were left here," and John promptly replied, "Boss man came take him all away," and that ended the interview.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Eruptions and Earthquakes in 1878.
In its annual report on these phenomena, just published, Herr Fuchs states that the volcanic eruptions reached the unusual high number of twelve; they were at places far apart, and mostly from little known, and rather inaccessible volcanoes. Vesuvius entered on an active period in April. In January, repeated eruptions were observed from previously unknown volcanoes at the south point of South America. About the middle of March, in the New Hebrides, was active, and the Island Birara, in the New Britannic Group, was devastated in its northern part, while immense quantities of pumice reached far out to sea. Ischia, in South America, (Chile, 10 miles, lat.) was the scene of an eruption in February, accompanied by much lava. There were smaller volcanic outbreaks of Hecla, of Asamayama in Japan, of Colopapi, of Tepic and Sinaloa in San Salvador, and of Isora. To the more considerable eruptions belong those in the Aleutian and Society Islands; in the latter, the Islands Raikoke and Babura were laid waste. A large eruption took place from Paterno, in Sicily. Coming to the earthquakes, we find 103 recorded; but this enumeration includes as units many complete periods of earthquakes, in which shocks and vibrations followed each other at short intervals for days or even weeks. An earthquake in Tanna lasted four weeks, and in the Province of Catania, earth vibrations were experienced almost continuously from the 4th of October to the 10th of November. Earthquakes were most numerous in winter and autumn of the 103, there were thirty-nine in winter, twenty-six in autumn, and nineteen each in spring and summer. The most violent and destructive occurred on the 23d of January, in the Province of Terapanca, South America; it was preceded by a long period of vibration from the disastrous earthquake of the previous year. The usual flood was which followed, wrought even greater mischief than the earthquake in Arequipa, Pico, Mantilla, and other places. A notable earthquake occurred in the south of San Salvador, destroying nearly all the houses of Jiquipa, and causing much loss of life. The motion, at first wavering, ended with a violent shock. Of European earthquakes, that of the 28th of January, in the northwest of France and the south of England, will be well remembered. There repeated earthquakes in the northwest of Switzerland, and the southwest corner of the Black Forest, in January and March. The repeated shocks, too, at Innsbruck (3d, 10, 11th of January), at Fohn (2d, 3d, 4th of January), at Gossau (2d of January, 2d of March), at Lissau (26th and 27th of January, 8th of June), at Piedmont (25th of November), and the continuous earthquakes on both sides of the Bosphorus, from the 19th of April to the end of May, are worthy of notice. In the last the small township of Esme was quite destroyed, and the English fleet in the Bosphorus experienced the vibration. Interesting note on such of its violence as for its remarkable extent (relative to strength), and through the accurate data to hand concerning it, is the Lower Rhine earthquake, which began on the 26th of August. The region affected by the first shock (felt most at Cologne) must have been greater than 2,000 square miles; the shock was felt at Hanover, Offenbach-am-Main, Paris, Utrecht, etc. Supposing the center 2.5 miles west of Cologne, the rate of propagation of the movement in the earth seems to have been about 6.78 miles. It is noticeable that the earthquake could only be traced near the surface of the ground; the intensity increased with the depth.—London Times.

It is so delightful, says the Richmond State, to hear one's neighbors talk about it, and it gives such a relief to life to feel that you are not the only man in the world who says and does mean things, that it is not surprising so much more that it is evil than good should be said of our friends.

The most treacherous memory in the world belongs to a young man with a new watch.—Meriden Recorder.

THE REPUBLICAN.

OAKLAND, MARYLAND.

JAS. A. HAYDEN,
Editor and Proprietor.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.
One copy, one year, $1.00
Six months, .60
Three months, .35
REBATE IN ADVANCE.

TERMS OF ADVERTISING.
First insertion, $1 per square of 8 lines;
50 cents per square for each additional insertion.
Special contracts for advertising longer
than three months.

Correspondents must enclose full name and
address, not necessarily for publication, but
as a private guarantee of good faith. Rejected
communications will not be returned.

SATURDAY, JUNE 11, 1879.

The Washington county commissioners have fixed 85 cents on the $100 as the county tax and for the total tax rate $1.03; five cents less than last year.

Mr. Samuel D. Yutz, of Grantsville district has been appointed to fill the vacancy in the Garrett county School Board. The appointment, so far as we have been able to learn, gives general satisfaction.

About four thousand negro refugees have arrived in Kansas. Governor St. John says that they have been distributed throughout the state, that the great majority of them are at work and doing well, and that those yet to come will find no difficulty in obtaining employment in the West.

All the German newspapers in Ohio support the Republican ticket, including those that have heretofore been Democratic. The soft-money platform is what did the business for them. Hissauere, editor of the Cincinnati Volksfreund, who was talked of as a Democratic candidate for Lieutenant Governor, comes squarely out in favor of Foster.

The County Levy.

The County Commissioners, Messrs. Tillson, Riley and Guard, on Saturday completed the tax levy for 1879, which will be found in this issue. It will be gratifying to the people of the county, from whom there have been many complaints, that there has been made a very considerable reduction from last year. The levy for 1879 is fixed at 91 cents on every $100 of assessable property, a reduction of 19 cents from the levy of 1878, which was $1.10 on every $100. The state tax is 18 cents, making a total of $1.10, against $1.29 last year. The taxable basis this year has been increased $66,000 over last year. The amount levied for school purposes is $10,000, against $8,500 last year. The Board deserve great credit for this large decrease in the tax rate.

The increase of the taxable basis is due to the establishment of the new line between this and Allegany counties, which gave Garrett a large scope of territory, and also to the assessment of military lots which had escaped heretofore. Mr. W. H. Hagans, the efficient Clerk to the Board, has been indefatigable in his efforts to have these tracts of land assessed, and to him is largely due the credit for this source of revenue.

The Blunderers.

The Czar of the Caucus, otherwise Mr. Thurman, discovered it incumbent on him to explain at the last meeting that there was no "back-down" in the nullification policy that the Congressional majority have adopted, and he furthermore, probably with a wave of the red bandanna, wanted to know if the President proposed to "coerce" them. Senator Thurman will have to wait a few days for the answer to his conundrum; but surely he and every other member who is not willfully blind and deaf, knows that everybody is hoping that Congress will tire of setting up pins for the President to knock down. Nothing, indeed, but the gyves of the caucus constrain such men as Senator, Butler, Senator Bayard, Mr. Stephens and a considerable number of other Democrats from coming out in favor of passing the appropriation bills pure and simple and voting to go home. But "age cannot wither nor custom stale" the infinite variety of expedients which the managers—if so disorderly a party can be said to have any managers—summon up in excuse for prolonging their stay at the capital. They see the President's votes received with applause by the Republicans and with indifference by Democrats. If they read their own party papers they must observe that, with very few exceptions, these urge the passage of the necessary bills and adjournment immediately thereafter. But adjournment is apparently not a part of the Democratic programme. The leaders hang out after day and day, and fancying to themselves with smug complacency that they are playing the part of patriots and statesmen with their stratagems to circumvent the veto power of the President.

These gentlemen ought to be wise enough to know that the country is beginning to laugh at them. Mr. Upson, the new Democratic member from Texas, expressed the popular opinion very plainly when he told them that what they needed was not backbone, but brains. They have not conspicuously exhibited the possession of brains in the latest incubations of the thinking committee and the caucus. In the new Army bill it is proposed to deprive the President of the power to use the troops in any way in support of the civil arm to preserve order at elections. It does not repeal the law which endows the President with this power; it merely prevents him from making it operative by forbidding that any portion of the appropriation shall be used for the transportation of troops to the polls or maintenance of them there. General Joe Johnston has pointed out, however, that it would be very easy for the President to evade the prohibition by sending the soldiers months in advance to any desired portion of the country, so that they would be there on election day without any violation of the restrictions. But there is no actual need of his legislation, even were it effective, for Mr. Hayes has never shown any disposition towards military interference with elections, and is, in fact, committed to the employment of the army only where it is absolutely necessary as a last resort. What the Democrats are really aiming at is to lay a foundation for throwing out Republican votes in the next electoral count, and if even a company of regulars should be anywhere near the polls in a state carried by the Republicans in 1880, they would strive to make their presence a pretext for rejecting the vote of that state. Their design is exceedingly transparent, but it is no more absurd than their actions throughout this special session.

The President might persuade himself to approve this new Army bill, pointing out at the same time how foolish that provision of it is; but he will be hardly likely to return the Judicial bill without his veto. It virtually forbids him to execute an existing law by denying the needful appropriations, and he could scarcely be expected to endorse such an inconsistency, particularly as in his last veto message he dwelt with so much emphasis upon the value and efficacy of the supervisors and deputy marshals in securing fair and free elections. However, we do not propose to enter into any new discussion of the merit of this legislation. Its rights and wrongs have been made as plain as the alphabet to the people. The one party by its applause, and the other party by its indifference, have endorsed the vetoes, or at least have shown that they do not apprehend any abuses from the laws as they now stand. There is not in them sufficient vitality to form the basis of a prolonged fight, and especially one which can but result in vetoes. Everybody except the last-ditchers of the Blackburn stripe acknowledges that the Democratic majority cannot afford to leave Washington without passing the appropriation bills. They have practically admitted this by their course. Can they, therefore, in their most sanguine mood, fancy that further contention on this question at this time will meet with popular approval? They are yet compos mentis, and must know that they are losing friends daily. In this view of the case their action is inexplicable, except upon the theory that they have deluded themselves into the notion that they are electing the next President and the next House of Representatives.

They may continue their wranglings until the 30th of June, when the appropriations for the current fiscal year expire, and then they will be brought face to face with the issue as to whether or not they will cut off the supplies of the army, the executive departments and the courts. They have as much as already admitted that they dare not do this. Consequently, Mr. Hayes is master of the situation, and we have little doubt as the first of July approaches the majority will consent to the extension of the present appropriations or the passage of new ones. Then will they return home with the proud consciousness of having been in session over three months at an expense to the people of $12,000 per day, without accomplishing anything that they could not have done at the regular session, except waste money and stir up a superfluous row from which they were forced to back out at last.—Balto. American.

The Democrats complain that the Ohio platform revives the issues of the rebellion and calls for the fighting of the war over again. Well, suppose it does, who made the second battle necessary? The Republican party is merely stepping forward to defend what it has always defended.

It was a cruel joke, but it measures the breadth, depth and bottom of the statesmanship of the gentlemen who steer the Democratic party in the United States Senate. While Thurman and his followers were voting down every amendment offered by the Republicans to the test oath bill, Mr. Edmunds offered the 11th amendment to the Constitution of the United States, and every Democratic Senator in the chamber voted against it. As they were not familiar with so unimportant a document as the Constitution they did not discover their awkward position until the Republican side of the Senate burst into laughter over it.

One of the latest g-uns from the Okolona Southern States is this: "Aye, aye, Messrs. Blaine & Co., the Democratic party is the knight and defender of state sovereignty, as you say. It believes that the general government should be a hewer at wood and a carrier of water for the queen commonwealths of the Union, as you say. It believes in secession, as you say. It fought or sympathized with the South, as you say. It believes that the ballot is polluted by the touch of a freedman, as you say. It proposes to get up a revolution on its own hook in 1881, and repeat the last clause, syllable and letter of your war legislation, as you say. We glory and glory in making these admissions. Conciliation has been knocked inward and crooked."

THE BEGINNING OF THE END.

WASHINGTON, June 9.—The proceedings in the House were animated to-day, and gave promise of at least the beginning of the end. The Appropriations Committee had a long, important meeting, at which the Legislative bill was finally agreed upon, the Republicans deciding that while not approving they would not oppose the bill. The Democrats came into the House with their bill, and the Republicans, through General Hawley, by the arrangement which was made, entered on the records a protest as to the form of the bill. They showed conclusively that the bill is inconsistent, ambiguous and defective; that the accounting officers would have difficulty in understanding it, and that it was probable important omission existed. However, the Democrats pressed it to a vote, and the Republicans voted solidly for it. Some of the last ditch Democrats, however, insisted that a record vote should be taken, which resulted in the passage of the bill by 185 yeas to 21 nays. After this vote it will not be possible any longer for the Southern Democrats to claim that they have been lead about by the nose by Northern men, and counselled to oppose the appropriation bills, of the two or three Northern men in this list of twenty-one there is not a man who can control a single vote beside his own. A great majority of them voluntarily voted against the appropriation bill without any justification whatever. The pretence, therefore, that the South has no responsibility for the present attitude of affairs in Congress is hypocritical. After this bill passed, the Republicans very nearly succeeded in passing the Army Appropriation bill, which the Democrats themselves had reported from the Appropriation Committee. It happened in this way: Speaker Randall throughout the day had recognized for motions to suspend the rules only Democrats. The Republicans became very restive and protested. Finally, Ryan, of Kansas, was recognized, when he presented for passage, under suspension of the rules, the Army Appropriation bill, which was reported from the committee last week, and said that it was the same bill, without a word omitted or a word added. This caused consternation among the Democrats. Atkins, Chairman of the Appropriation Committee, immediately moved to adjourn. The Democrats were not disposed to allow the Republicans to secure the credit of passing the bill, and immediately resorted to filibustering. Finally an adjournment was carried. The Republicans all voted against adjourning, with the exceptions of Keiler, of Ohio, and Sapp, of Iowa. These gentlemen are being very severely denounced by their Republican associates to-night, and are charged with the responsibility of having prevented the Republicans from receiving the credit, which was due them for passing the appropriation bills. The programme had been arranged in advance, and had been kept very secret. The Republicans had agreed to support the bill, and in view of this agreement, it is reliably stated the bill will certainly meet the approval of the President.

In declining to act with their Republican associates, a majority of the Republicans say these Republicans—Keiler and Sapp—prevented its passage. The following Democrats voted against the bill: Messrs. Aiken, of South Carolina; Bouck, of Wisconsin; Culbertson, of Texas; Felton and Stephens, of Georgia; and Lowe, of Alabama, Greenbacker.

Nervousness and indigestion. These sad afflictions so destructive both to business and pleasure, arise from a morbid condition of the body, which is relieved by an occasional dose of Dr. Bull's Baltimore Pills. Try them, they will do you good.

ADDITIONAL LOCAL NEWS.

Church Services—Sunday.
M. E. Church.—Preaching in the evening at 8 o'clock, by Rev. Smith.
Stone Church.—Preaching in the morning at 11 and in the evening at 8, by Rev. Dr. Scott.

Jack Frost.
This section was visited by heavy frosts Saturday and Sunday mornings, which did considerable damage to gardens, and injured the corn and wheat in some sections of the county. The fruit is not injured to any extent.

Sunday School Reorganization.
The Sunday School at Ryan's Glades was reorganized Sunday, June 8th, with the following officers: Superintendent—Jas. W. White. Asst. Supt.—Enoch Hendrickson. Secretary—Ephraim Kelso. Librarian—Israel O. Thompson. Treasurer—Elisha Harvey, Jr.

Strawberry Festival.
The strawberry and ice cream festival for the benefit of the Oakland cornet band, held Thursday and Friday evenings of last week, proved a success. The net proceeds amounted to over fifty dollars, in addition to two gold ring contests yet undecided, which will probably net as much more.

Real Estate Transfers.
The following is a list of real estate transfers filed for record in the office of W. H. Tower, Clerk of the Circuit Court for Garrett county, for the week ending June 12:
Jas. A. Duanham to Thomas Wilborn, Military Lot No. 1731; $250.
Solomon Sibert to Esther Fazenbaker, lots 2351 and 2353; $400.

A Card of Thanks.

The members of the Oakland cornet band return their sincerest thanks to all who so liberally patronized the festival held for their benefit. They also desire to thank heartily those who donated cream, cake, &c., and last but not least, our thanks to the ladies who made it the gratifying success that it proved. We feel quite encouraged at the interest manifested, and again thank you, one and all.

North Branch Railroad.

The Bloomington Star, of June 8th, says that Hon. P. Hamill, accompanied by George W. Smith, civil engineer of the Chesapeake and Ohio canal company, with a force of assistants, arrived at Bloomington on the 26th of May, and resumed the survey of the projected railroad up the North Branch of the Potomac, they contemplate completing the surveys in six weeks, and as soon as the estimates are made, operations will begin for grading the road, probably about first of September. It is stated that the work is to be vigorously prosecuted to completion.

Restoration of Sight.

One week ago Dr. W. F. Fundenberg, of Cumberland, Md., operated upon Capt. Samuel Kimmell, aged 76 years, of Jenner township, this county, for the removal of a cataract from his left eye, the sight of which had been lost for over five years. The delicate operation was performed with that skill and care only acquired by years of practice and study. To-day we are pleased to say that the sight has been entirely restored. The delight of this aged gentleman in again being able to see after so many years of darkness can easily be imagined. A few weeks ago we made note of a similar operation by Dr. P. upon Miss Murphy, aged 73. We again take pleasure in recording another successful termination of the most delicate operation known in modern surgery.—Somerset Democrat.

Orphans' Court.

The Orphans' Court for Garrett County was convened on Tuesday, 10th inst. Present, Hon. Jos. DeWitt, Chief Judge, and Hon. A. J. Michaels and Wm. Harvey, Associate Judges, and Wm. L. Rawlings, Registrar.

Among others were the following proceedings:

The last will and testament of Wm. Harden, dec'd, was proven and admitted to record.

Letters testamentary were granted to Caroline Frazee, upon the estate of Wm. Harden, dec'd, who died her bond in the penalty of $6,000.

Ann M. Knepp, guardian to Ann Knepp, settled her third and final account.

Court then adjourned until June 21th.

County Commissioners.

The following are the proceedings of the Board of County Commissioners not published last week:

Jacob Sisler filed road account. Approved.

Citizens of District No. 6 filed petition for new bridge over Yough river at Sang Run. Laid over until next meeting.

Examiners' report of road from near James Meehan's to West Va. line confirmed, and road adopted. Citizens of District No. 2 filed petition for bridge over Buffalo Run. Laid over until next meeting.

Examiners' report of road from near Thomas Walter's farm to Oakland and Sang Run road near Wm. Bray's confirmed, and road adopted, as far as Cranberry Glade.

Michael Durst, Geo. W. Blocher, Samuel J. Beachy, Henry Miller and Jacob Platter were appointed Supervisors on National road.

Board completed levy on Saturday and adjourned to meet 1st Monday in July.

The Sunday School Convention.

The Sunday School convention to be held at Accident, commencing on Friday, June 20th, and ending Sunday, June 22d, promises to be an interesting affair. A majority of the ministers of the county will be present, besides several eminent speakers from a distance. The Sunday Schools in Oakland will be well represented: The M. E. School by Rev. John M. Davis and Messrs. Thomas J. Peddicord and W. P. Townsend, the Presbyterian by Messrs. W. H. Tower, J. W. Veitch and J. A. Grant, and the Lutheran by Rev. O. C. Miller, and delegates to be elected by the School next Sunday. A large number of visitors will also go from Oakland, including Prof. Richardson.

The first session will be opened at 2 o'clock Friday afternoon. The questions to be discussed are as follows:

1. How to make the Sunday School attractive, and what attractions are proper and allowable.
2. How can the Sunday School Superintendent make his school a success?
3. Country Sunday Schools, their special needs and difficulties.
4. Should the temperance cause be considered a part of the Sunday School work?
5. What relation should the Sunday School sustain to the family?
6. How can we secure competent teachers for our Sunday Schools?
7. What is the best plan for teaching an infant class?
8. Verbal reports from delegates of Sunday Schools.

It is expected that persons opening the questions will speak 15 or 20 minutes, and then be followed by 5 minute speeches from members of the Convention.

Corner Stone Laid in Garrett.

The corner-stone of Trinity Reformed Church, which for the last year has been in process of erection in the close vicinity of Swauger's mill, was formally laid June 4th, 1879.

At an early hour crowds of ladies and gentlemen from the surrounding country assembled to witness and participate in the observance. A glance over the number in attendance was sufficient to preclude the original design of holding the preliminary services within doors. Seats of a rustic order were speedily improvised amidst the grove of ancient chestnuts, shading the commanding elevation from which the new temple is to rear its spire over the neighboring houses. A favorable morning lent its charm to the occasion. The recent fall of rain had cooled the atmosphere and a fresh, exhilarating breeze swept from the dense forest, mellowed by the perfume of buds and flowers.

During the introductory exercises our eye wandered over the attentive assemblage, interspersed by visitors from most of the districts of Garrett, with a goodly number from Allegany county and Pennsylvania. Worn out restlessly along the out skirts of the crowd could be seen the form of a candidate for County Clerk, the bowing and smiling advertisement—not of a corner-stone.

Conspicuous on the stand fronting the audience was Mr. C. U. Hellman, the polished gentleman and able divine who, in the face of great obstacles, originated and will conduct, this important project to a successful termination. Seated on the left of Mr. Hellman were Revs. Truxel, Steckel and Keener, all we believe, from Pennsylvania. Mr. A. E. Truxel of Pennsylvania, in an earnest, forcible manner, delivered a very apposite and attractive sermon from the 11th verse, 3d chapter, 1st Corinthians. "For other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ." At the conclusion of Mr. Truxel's discourse a collection was taken up in behalf of the church, and we were informed over $20 was realized. A procession was now formed, headed by all the ministers present, and directed to the site of the contemplated structure where the durable stone was to be settled to its place, there to remain through generations, a fit talisman of the zeal and perseverance of its founders. The pastor, Mr. Hellman, using the impressive ritual of his denomination, officiated in the ceremony of laying the corner-stone. Beneath the huge granite block were placed many symbols of religious observances, together with a handsomely bound bible, representative coins of the time, various documents and then, in the order as here written, the Garrett county Harold, Democrat and Republican. We, Mr. Editor, gazed solemnly on, with the echo of suggestive aments in our ears, as your pet paper was solemnly read. Shortly after the crowd disappeared there was a general regathering from the worth and industry of the community to raise the body of the building, and when night closed in the heavy work was accomplished with the rafters standing in their position over the house. The deep and extended interest shared by citizens of different Protestant creeds in this praiseworthy undertaking, was no less strikingly manifest in the cordial, active spirit uniting twenty-five or thirty workmen in the evening than in the deeply interesting proceedings of the morning.

The edifice is being constructed of a good quality of white pine plank, 32 by 44 feet, with a vestibule in front and a pastoral room erected in rear of and connected by a door with the pulpit.

The design is to complete the building before the middle of the summer and then dedicate it in the faith of the German Reformed Church.

FROXY.

FROSTBURG, MD., June 9th, 1879.

ED. REPUBLICAN:—The undersigned is a resident of Baltimore, sojourning in this place. Since my arrival here I have come across your paper, in one issue of which I find a letter dated "Among the Pines," and written by a lady, like myself. In last week's issue I find an exquisite essay by a young lady graduate of the far West. From these productions I imagine that you are partial to lady correspondents. Tho' only a visitor to this mountain retreat, I possess in common with those of my sex, all the curiosity and ambition inherent in a woman's nature, to listen, gossip and to write.

Notwithstanding my dearth of acquaintances and the paucity of events transpiring in this little city, I manage to hear what is going on; if it will not be presuming too much on your generosity as an editor, I will enroll myself among your lady correspondents.

The people here seem to be energetic, and every household takes pride in adding attractions to his home. Every domicile presents a bright and cheerful appearance, many of them having been newly painted and otherwise improved. If the exterior of the dwellings is any indication of the habits and tastes of their occupants they should be happy and contented, as I suppose they are. The spirit of improvement animates even the city fathers, as if they too were desirous to keep pace with the citizens in making Frostburg attractive to summer visitors. During the past week a force has been at work taking the grass from either side of the principal street and repaving it. This street is no other than the National road, the highway between the eastern and western sections of our country before the days of railroads.

Frostburg is situated on a hill, and the tourist gazes with rapture on the beautiful scenery presented to his view. She takes her name from "Grandfather Frost," the first settler of the place, and not, as many suppose, from the excessive cold prevalent here during the winter months. From the admissions of the citizens I learn that she has been more prosperous than she is at present. The numerous coal mines in the neighborhood are not doing as well as formerly. The store rooms are large, and will compare favorably with those of large cities. The people, however, are not downcast over the dullness of the trade. They all look forward to the completion of the George's Creek and Cumberland R. R. which is expected to inaugurate a new era of prosperity. The new rail road will furnish another avenue by which the inexhaustible supply of coal can be put to tide-water at rates much cheaper than those which now obtain, because there is now no competition against the C. & P. R. R., the only carrier from the George's Creek region. The road exists, as yet, only in fancy, but rumor has it that it will certainly be built, and indeed appearances indicate as much, as I see from the Frostburg Journal that two New York contractors have already passed over the perspective route; and I also hear that a President and a Board of Directors are to be chosen in Cumberland to-morrow.

Frostburg is apparently a favorite place for holding religious conferences, two having been held here within the last two months. The first was that of the Lutheran denomination, held last winter; and the one which has just closed its sessions is that of the German Reformed church. The number of attendants at the last assembly was, I believe, twenty-two, eleven of whom were laymen. During their sojourn here they mingled with other denominations in their religious services.

Fearing that I have already exceeded the space which you will wish to give to an unknown and perhaps uninteresting correspondent, I remain,

Very truly yours,
NELLIE GRAY.

LOCAL NEWS.

—Dailey's Hotel will be opened July 1st.

—P. Hamill, Jr., is at home spending his vacation.

—Mr. W. H. Percey of Frostburg, was in Oakland Tuesday.

—A large number of summer visitors have arrived during the present week.

—We have been favored with several refreshing showers during the week.

—The Oakland and Deer Park Hotels will be open on and after Monday next.

—The Garrett Literary Society propose holding a festival in the near future.

—Mr. Thomas Martin has erected a carriage house adjoining his livery stable.

—200 sacks G. A. Salt for sale at Wm. P. Totten's Cheap Cash Store, Oakland, Md.

—A car load of flowers for the Oakland Hotel grounds arrived on Tuesday.

—Hon. George W. Wilson shipped two car loads of shooks from this station Monday.

—The Selbysport fishing party returned Saturday. They caught about 1,800 trout.

—Mr. W. P. Totten, Esq., has secured the services of Mr. R. R. Hamill as clerk in his store.

—Horses and hogs are running at large in Oakland in violation of the corporation ordinances.

—Mrs. Rebecca McClane, the insane woman confined in the county jail, died Friday night of last week.

—Our streets are in bad condition for driving. They should receive attention from the corporation authorities at once.

—Mr. James Bell has removed his saddlery and harness establishment to the building formerly occupied by Mr. D. E. Offutt.

—Mr. E. H. Wardwell is considered the champion fisherman of Oakland. He is certainly the most successful angler.

—Mr. W. W. Wolfe, of Cumberland, arrived in Oakland Tuesday. He will assist his brother in the butchering business this summer.

—A. Loewenstein, in his new building on Alder street, has on hand a large stock of ready made clothing and gents furnishing goods. Give him a call.

—The Hoopole road is said to be in better condition than for several years. It is generally conceded that Mr. Charles Sweeney knows how to make a good road.

—The Oakland Band of Hope will meet in the M. E. Church Thursday evening of next week. All are invited. The exercises are always interesting and instructive.

—Geo. W. Wilt, noted in our last issue as having been lodged in jail, was released Saturday on bail for his appearance at September court. The jail is now without an occupant.

—The funeral sermon of the late George Lish, whose sad fate has been previously noticed, will be preached at the Ryan's Glade church on Sunday, July 6th, at 10 o'clock, by Rev. J. R. Laughlin.

—Mr. Michael Maroney is prepared to furnish saddle horses, carriages and wagons to our summer visitors and others during this season. His residence is on High street, near the Beer Garden.

—Mr. W. P. Townsend started for Morgantown Tuesday morning, to be present at the annual commencement exercises of the university. Messrs. Charles and William Davis and Arthur Townsend, who have been attending that institution for the past year, will return with him to-day.

—Dr. W. F. Fundenberg, Oculist, and Aurist, from Cumberland, Md., is now stopping at the "Davis House," where all those suffering from diseases of the eye, ear, nose and throat can consult him every day in the week, excepting on Saturdays and Sundays. All consultations free. Hours, 9 A. M. to 4 P. M.

—A lively meeting of the Cumberland City Council occurred on Monday night. The majority report of a committee appointed to inquire into the eligibility of K. H. Butler was made by Mr. Hurley, the only signer of it, declaring that Mr. Butler was ineligible, because since his election he had become ineligible by transferring most of his property, and defaulting on mortgages and taxes. It was also declared that he was doing business in his wife's name and owns no property. Mr. Butler defended himself, and denounced Mr. Hurley as a slanderer, in terms so emphatic as to call forth applause from the spectators. The report of the majority was, however, adopted, Mr. Hurley being the only member voting in the negative.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

GARRETT COUNTY LEVY. 1879.

Annual Levy List for Garrett County, Maryland, for the Year 1879, Levied by the County Commissioners at June Session, 1879.

ROAD LEVY.

District No. 1	$400
do do 2	620
do do 3	588
do do 4	480
do do 5	400
do do 6	400
do do 7	400
do do 8	400
do do 9	90
Total,	$3,818

ELECTION EXPENSES.

District No. 1.
S W Friend, return judge 4 days and 18 miles	$10 88
John A. Junkins, associate judge 2 days	4 00
M T Brady, associate judge 2 days	4 00
W E George, clerk 2 days	4 00
L H Schofield do	4 00
M T Brady, house rent	5 00
District No. 2.
John Swalp, return judge 4 days and 50 miles	16 00
James Guard, associate judge 2 days	4 00
John Frantz, of Jos., associate judge 2 days	4 00
Thos B Welch, use Jeremiah Guard, clerk 2 days	4 00
Henry Frazee, clerk 2 days	4 00
Jacob Stuck, use Jeremiah Guard, house rent	5 00
District No. 3.
S D Yutz, use Leiceny & Keim, return judge 4 days and 60 miles	17 60
W C Broadwater, asso judge 2 days	4 00
Sam'l Engle, associate judge 2 days	4 00
Henry Winterberg, clk 2 days	4 00
H S Boucher, clerk 2 days	4 00
Mrs Figue, house rent	5 00
District No. 4.
John Barnes, return judge 4 days and 46 miles	15 36
Geo L Michael, asso judge 2 days	4 00
Andrew Mullen, asso judge 2 days	4 00
Chas Harshbarger, clk 2 days	4 00
Thos Garvey, clerk 2 days	4 00
Same, house rent	5 00
District No. 5.
Henry Kump, return judge 4 days and 40 miles	11 30
S H Ryland, associate judge 2 days	4 00
Eli McMillen, clerk 2 days	4 00
Henry Kahl, do	4 00
Geo F Englehart, house rent	5 00
District No. 6.
Jos F Frantz, return judge 4 days and 32 miles	13 12
Sam'l Ferguson, asso judge 2 days	4 00
Peter H Echar, asso judge 2 days	4 00
D H Friend, clerk 2 days	4 00
E A Browning, clerk 2 days	4 00
Elijah Friend, of E. house rent	5 00
District No. 7.
David T Enlow, return judge 3 days	6 00
Jas M Arnold, asso judge 2 days	4 00
A C Good, associate judge 2 days	4 00
A B Gonder, clerk 2 days	4 00
F P Arnold, do	4 00
District No. 8.
Win J Wilson, return judge 4 days and 20 miles	11 20
Isaac W Abernathy, associate judge 2 days	4 00
J Mc Mason, associate judge 2 days	4 00
Jas W White, clerk 2 days	4 00
Win H Grimes, clerk 2 days	4 00
Mrs W F Deakins, house rent	5 00
District No. 9.
And'w Blocher, return judge 4 days 81 miles	21 44
Bazil Anderson, asso judge 2 days	4 00
Michael Durst, do	4 00
P T Wilhelm, clerk 2 days	4 00
Aaron Wilhelm, clk 2 days	4 00
Sam'l Johnson, house rent	5 00
Total,	$306 00

MAJISTRATES' FEES.

Henry Rasche	$14 45
Isaac Umblo	5 20
Benj Griffith	7 95
A J Warnick	18 00
Win Hinebaugh	5 90
A L Osbourne, use G S Hamill, Same, use John Frantz, of Jos.	14 85
Same, balance,	2 80
R B Jamison	10 33
Total,	$103 53

REGISTRARS.

H O Hamill, Dist No 1, use G S Hamill,	$41 30
Jas H Rush, Dist No 2,	45 00
Isalah Fuller, do do 3, use Geo W Blocher,	48 00
W H Barnard, Dist No 4	44 00
Daniel Hinebaugh, do 5	46 00
Thos Browning, do 6, use G A Shirer,	44 00
R T Browning, Dist No 7, use Davis & Townshend,	22 00
Same, use W P Totten,	22 00
Wm F Deakins, Dist No 8	18 00
Joshua Faenbaker, do 9	56 00
Total,	$422 30

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

CONSTABLES.

W S Pew	$ 9 65
Silas F Cuppett	18 50
Frank McKenzie	16 50
D J Boyer	19 08
Aaron Boyer	4 50
J S Johnson	9 80
Geo D White, use W P Totten	9 80
Same, balance	10 45
John Miller, Jr., use H A Rasche	9 60
Total,	$102 03

FOX AND CAT SCALPS.

Jere Guard, 2 foxes and 2 cats	$ 6
Geo W Wilson, 1 cat	2
At drew Mallen, 13 foxes, 2 cats	17
Wm H Jacobs, 3 foxes	3
Archibald Warnick, 4 foxes	4
A C Browning, 5 foxes	5
Peter Biddinger, 1 fox	1
Jos Frantz, 1 fox	1
L P Friend, 5 foxes	5
S W Friend, Sr, 2 foxes	2
P T Garthright, 20 foxes, 2 cats	24
Thos W Ashby, Jr, 1 cat	2
Israhel Garlitz, 1 fox	1
John Wass, 4 foxes	4
Alex Mail, 1 fox	1
John W Mail, 1 fox	1
John G Paugh, 1 fox	1
Wm J Bernard, 2 foxes	2
Keller & Getty, 15 foxes, 7 cats	29
Otho Garlitz, 3 foxes	3
George Biddinger, 3 foxes	3
Francis M Garlitz, 5 foxes	5
Enoch Garlitz, 1 fox	1
C C Dunham, 3 foxes	3
A J Bevans, 1 fox	1
Noah Broadwater, 2 foxes	2
D H Loar, 11 foxes, 1 cat	12
Christian Lovengood, 4 foxes	4
J S Broadwater, 22 foxes	22
Peter Wilt, 1 fox	1
Floyd Duckworth, 11 foxes	11
John Ganagey, 32 foxes, 3 cats	38
Simon Biddinger, 2 foxes	2
Archibald Bicker, 1 cat	1
Peter M Wilt, 2 foxes	2
Hiram Duckworth, 4 foxes	4
Uriah M Stanton, 8 foxes, 2 cats	12
Melechoir Weller, 4 foxes	4
Daniel Wilson, 1 fox, 1 cat	2
C T West, 3 foxes	3
John H Friend, 2 foxes	2
John Warnick, 2 do	2
Washington Michaels, 1 fox	1
Samuel Beachy, 3 foxes	3
George W Michaels, 1 fox	1
C C Dunham, 1 fox, 1 cat	2
J J Beachy, 5 foxes	5
Joseph Reekner, 1 fox	1
James O Robinson, 9 foxes	9
J R Bishop & Co, 4 foxes	4
Daniel O Markly, 2 foxes	2
S H Wayman, 1 fox, 1 cat	2
William Wass, 3 foxes, 1 cat	3
Isaac T Frazee, 3 foxes	3
Wm Moody, 4 foxes, 1 cat	6
Wm P Totten, 7 foxes	7
Henry Thompson, 11 foxes	11
G W Legge, 6 foxes, 5 cats	11
L H Johnson, 1 fox	1
Joshua Tichnell, 5 foxes	5
Davis & Townshend, 1 fox, 1 cat	2
Geo Steyer, 6 foxes, 1 cat	7
D E Offutt, 11 foxes, 6 cats	23
Total,	$379

BRIDGES.

Jos Martin, use W P Totten, building bridge near Oakland	$ 7 75
P Martin, use Jasper Guard, lumber for bridge over Cherry Creek	36 10
D H Friend, repairs on Friendsville bridge	17 60
Joseph Irons, building bridge over Cherry Creek	32 20
Wm Wilson, building bridge n'r Wilson Procter's	38 25
Same, bridge n'r Fiecky place	50 00
A Garlitz, use John Frantz, of J., repairing bridge n'r Mrs Cornumay's	12 50
Wm D Burton, use G S Hamill, filling up abutments on Bloomington bridge	57 70
Same, use G S Hamill, work on Deep Creek bridge	83 00
Thomas Browning, building bridge over Muddy Creek	20 00
Sam'l Teats, building bridge over Teats's Run	12 00
Wm Lange, use Josiah Moon, lumber furnished and building bridge over Snowy ck	39 27
Jonas E Ganagey, repairing bridge over North Fork of Little Crossing, Hoover bridge over South Fork, Miller bridge over Shade Run	75 00
Total,	$481 38

ROAD APPROPRIATIONS.

Jno Barnes, opening road f'm Walter's farm to Hoopole road, order	$ 20 00
E Kitzmiller, use J S Combs, making road f'm Kitzmiller'sville to Bloomington	23 15
Jno W Harvey, road f'm pike to Wilson's shook shop	20 00
—Craig, road up Savage river	50 00
Wm Warner, Deep Run and 1/2 Back Bone Road	25 00
Otho Bernard, work on the Bloomington road	6 75
Joel J Breneman, road f'm Forks Meeting House to Meeks Mountain Glade	38 00
Daniel Beegly, old Morgantown road	25 00
Luke Mail, on road f'm Walter place to Hoopole road	20 00
Jos Foster, on road f'm Hoopole to Cranberry Glade	20 00
Thos Browning, additional on roads assigned him	20 00
Total,	$475 90

OUTSIDE PENSIONERS.

Wm Moody, support Mar- ion McGee	$10 00
Samuel support Margaret Morgan	10 00
Same, support Jane Holmes	10 00
Same, sup't Marg't Watson	10 00
Total,	$42 00

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

CORONER'S INQUEST.

Dr F H Parsons, post mortem of George Lish	$10 00
John Steyer, sum. witnesses	2 40
Henry Thompson, juror	50
Total,	$12 90

CLERK'S OFFICE.

W H Tower, Clerk's fees, use D E Offutt	$ 90 00
Same, use G S Hamill	71 40
Same, use Ezekiel Totten	50 00
Same, balance	1,029 97
Same, estimate to pay jurors and witnesses	2,200 00
Total,	$3,432 37

MISCELLANEOUS.

Jas A Hayden, county printing, use John S Combs	$200 00
Same, use Rindol Beckman	71 00
Same, use Mrs Amelia White	95 40
Same, balance	544 60
George A Spedden, work on Judge's stand	2 25
Dr J Lee McNamara, professional service to paupers	100 00
G W Merrill, medicine furnished paupers	8 02
Davis & Townshend, spit'tins &c, furnished court house	29 28
Davis & Townshend, use Davis & Townshend	123 69
Stark, Wright & Co., stationery for offices	132 85
Jacob Sisler, use Jere Guard, balance on road account	10 00
Chas Durst, balance on road account	22 83
A G Sturgis, medicine furnished paupers	35 80
Same, coal for court house and jail	6 00
Medary & Bowers, stationery for offices	142 41
Geo Hamed, surveying lands along county line	60 13
W M Coddington, boarding and laundry prisoners	16 85
John J Michaels, bringing prisoners to Oakland	8 50
Shitzer & Ault, chairs for court house, articles for jail and coffin for pauper	69 00
John Somerville, work in court room and coffin for pauper	12 00
W P Totten, coal for court house and jail	15 00
D E Offutt, bill articles furnished jail, &c	43 51
Sam'l Falkner, taking prisoners to jail, &c	5 00
W D Burton, use G S Hamill, erecting vane on court h'se	21 50
J G Steyer, coffin for pauper, Samuel Savage, use Jere Guard, coffin for paupers	3 00
Thos A Cuppett 4 coffins for paupers	5 00
John Wilhelm, 1 coffin for pauper	20 00
John Somerville, 1 coffin for pauper	5 00
Allen Teats, use Jere Guard, coffin for pauper	5 00
John Kerling, use of same, coffin for pauper	5 00
H P Tasker, county printing, use A A Perry	50 25
Same, use D E Offutt	600 00
Same, use J W Veitch, ag't	100 00
Same, use John Statzer	72 00
Same, use J Z Browning	31 74
Same, use Davis & Town'sd	36 72
Hamed surveying and assessing lands along county line	25 00
Henry Sines, balance on road account	10 12
Ira E Friend, same	3 50
W H Hall, taxes paid in error	5 50
A C Brooke, use E C Tilton, coffin for pauper	5 00
E C Tilton, digging grave and burial clothes for pauper	6 00
H G Davis & Co., sledge and nails for road	1 30
Sam'l lumber for fence and jail	20 00
Total,	$2,803 61

ROAD EXPENSES.

Alex Mason, surveyor 2 days	$10 40
Henry Russell, examiner 2 days	4
Wm White, do do	4
Thos W Ashby, Jr do do	4
R G White, chain car, 1 day	2
Franklin C White, do do	2
Lewis D Ashby, do do	2
John Hamed, surveyor do	2
John M Davis, ex. 11 days	2
Wm Coddington, ex. 1 day	2
Rowan White, ex. 1 1/2 days	3
Austin Speicher, ex. 2 do	4
Sam'l Beachy, do do	4
Melechoir Weller, do do	4
John B Brant, surveyor 3 days	15
John Riley, Sr., exam. do	6
Sam'l C Hoye, do do	6
L H Schofield, do do	6
P M Stemple, ch. carrier do	4
J H Stephens, use D E Offutt, ch. carrier 2 days	6
Total,	$96

SHERIFF'S FEES.

Thos Coddington, use D H Loar	$100 00
Same, use John Frantz, of J	100 00
Same, use J W Veitch, ag't	100 00
Same, use M W Lambert	100 00
Same, use D E Offutt	200 00
Same, balance	729 20
Total,	$1,279 20

ORPHANS' COURT.

Estimate to pay Judges' salaries to June 1, 1880	$390
Wm L Hatlings, Register fees	173
Same, incidental expenses	150
Same, making out list of property in hands of Guardians, &c., 1878 and 1879	25
Total,	$648

ATTORNEY'S FEES.

John W Veitch, 55 misdemeanors, 7 felonies and 1 civil case	$258 33
Jno W Veitch, extra compensation as State's attorney	300 00
Brace & Hamill, 1 felony	10 00
Brace, Hamill & Schlegel, 1 fel	10 00
Jones & Hamill, 1 misdemeanor	3 33
G S Hamill, do	3 33
Veitch & Peddicord, 1 civil case	5 00
Peddicord & Gonder, 2 felonies, 2 misdemeanors, 1 civil case, use A B Gonder	21 35
Same, use M W Lambert	10 31
Same, use same, inj't case	25 00
John J Smith vs Co Coms	25 00
Same, use same, case County Coms vs Allegany Co Coms	50 00
Total,	$696 65

HOSPITALS.

Maryland Hospital, keeping in-sane paupers	$350
--	-------

COURT HOUSE FUND.

For redemption and interest of Bonds for court house & jail	$1,780
---	---------

ALLEGANY COUNTY COMMISSIONERS.

Costs in removed cases	$72 50
------------------------	---------

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

CORONER'S INQUEST.

Dr F H Parsons, post mortem of George Lish	$10 00
John Steyer, sum. witnesses	2 40
Henry Thompson, juror	50
Total,	$12 90

CLERK'S OFFICE.

W H Tower, Clerk's fees, use D E Offutt	$ 90 00
Same, use G S Hamill	71 40
Same, use Ezekiel Totten	50 00
Same, balance	1,029 97
Same, estimate to pay jurors and witnesses	2,200 00
Total,	$3,432 37

MISCELLANEOUS.

Jas A Hayden, county printing, use John S Combs	$
---	----

VARIETIES.

—The early pill catches the cucumber.
—The early passenger catches the train.
—Hunted down—The first indications of a mustache.
—With some children a switch on the hand is worth two in the bush.
—Many people take more pains in licking the stamp than in writing the letter.
—“O come, come, my weight!” as the impatient farmer said to the man at the hay scales.
—No Indian was ever known to play on a brass horn. Hence, Pope’s allusion to his “untutored mind.”
—A larger bear sign in New York reads: “Five Hundred Men Wanted—With Five Cents Capital—To Unload Schooners.”
—Poker is fun to the gambler, but it is death to the husband—especially if the wife plays her hand well.—Waterloo Observer.
—The Angora goat is being urged upon the Southern States.—Ez. We advise the Southern States to climb a tree.—Boston Post.
—Colonel King, a Texas cattle man, has a fence seventy-five miles long, enclosing about 257 square miles, on which range 110,000 beasts.
—A young lady was noted to remark a day or two ago, “Why, I haven’t had a woolen hose on my limb this winter.” That’s excellent.—Concord Monitor.
—The number of those who are chewed up annually by careless ice-drinkers, who mistake them for tea-leaves, is beyond all earthly computation.—Cincinnati Enquirer.
—Four hundred and ninety-four persons have committed suicide in San Francisco in the last six years. Stock gambling is said to be responsible for one-third of the entire number.
—Spoken of a man’s marble brow, and he will glow with conscious pride, but allude to his marble head, and he’s mad in a minute. Language is a slippery thing to fool with much.—Boston Post.
—A widow refuses a foppish bore, she is not ready to be married, yet, she says, “Madam, I am your servant, I can wait.” “O, well, you look as though you did.” At what restaurant, pray?
—An old bachelor, who particularly hated literary women, asked an authoress if she could throw any light on kissing. “I could,” she said, looking archly at him, “but I think it is better in the dark.”
—The next place of fame to be lit by electricity is the Niagara Falls. The catenae will not only be lit by electricity, but reflectors are to be arranged so that rainbows can be made to order on the shortest notice at any hour of the night.
—“Tis said that absence conquers love,” quoted a husband writing home to his wife, from whom he had been some time away. “I hope, dear, it won’t be so in your case.” “O, no,” she replied in her next letter, “the longer you stay away the better I shall like you.” He had to take it unambiguously, as he was afraid to risk asking an explanation.
—An ambitious young clerk in a wholesale grocery establishment represents himself before the examiners. One of the questions is, “What is coffee and where does it come from?” “O, come now, you know,” says the candidate. “I can’t give away the boss—allow me to plead privilege. That’s a professional secret.”
—Sausciskartoffelbruschensauerkrautkrautzwurst is a favorite German dish.—Eschwege. A railroad traveler who had “five minutes for refreshments,” undertook to call for a plate of “Sausciskartoffelbruschensauerkrautkrautzwurst,” and the train was at the next station, twenty miles distant, before he had the dish laid named.—Norristown Herald.
—According to a careful computation, the number of daily and weekly papers and other periodicals published on the surface of our globe is 23,291. Of this number there are in Africa fifty, in Australia 100, in Asia 387, in America 1,129, in Europe 13,625. Among European countries England publishes the largest number of journals, viz., 2,509; after which come France, 2,000; Italy, 1,226; Austria, 1,200; Russia, 500.

—As some lady visitors were going through a penitentiary under the escort of a superintendent, they came to a room in which three women were seated. “Dear me,” one of the visitors whispered, “what vicious-looking creatures! Pray, what are they here for?” “Because they have no other home; this is our sitting room, and they are my wife and two daughters,” blandly answered the superintendent.
—A Dutchman once met an Irishman on a lonely highway. As they met, each smiled thinking he knew the other. Pat on seeing his mistake, remarked, with a look of disappointment: “Faith, an’ I thought it was you, an’ you thought it was me, and its naythur of us.” “Yau, dat is dru. I am anuder man, and you is not yourself, and we are some other bodies.”
—Two old Texas rangers, who had just helped bury a neighbor, were talking about religion, and one asked the other how pious he thought it was possible for a man to get in this world, if he was in real earnest. “Wa’al,” said the other reflectively, “I think of a man gets so ‘t he can swap steers or trade horses without lyin’, ‘at he’d better pull out for the better land afore he has a relapse.”
—A preacher in England has delivered a sermon by telephone to a congregation thirty-six miles distant. If this manner of preaching should be generally adopted it would encourage the ministry in slothful habits. For instance, a preacher could, as we have no doubt he would, attach his telephone to the bed-post and deliver his morning sermon before he got up and his evening sermon after he has gone to bed.—Enquirer.
—Doctor Thomson, taking once for his text, “Look not upon wine when it is red in the cup,” enlarged upon the evil effects of drinking upon the head, heart and purse. As the congregation departed, two old cronies, given to taking more than a “wee drop,” talked over the sermon. “Did you hear yon, Johnnie?” quoth one. “Did I hear’t? Wha didna hear’t? I ne’er winked an’ e’e.” “Awel, an’ what thought ye o’?” “Adzed, Davie, I think he has been a lad in his day, or he couldna ha’ ken’d I see weel about it; he’s been a sly hand, the minister!”

Over the Falls.

Niagara Falls was the scene of another tragic death this afternoon. Pie Walker was the man who furnished the death of this tragedy. After successfully wrestling with the eddies and currents and the rocks and rapids of the river for years, and saving a score or more of persons from watery graves, to-day, was swept over the American cataract in the presence of a large crowd of excursionists, who were scattered about, little suspecting the awful spectacle which they were so suddenly called upon to witness.
The primary cause of Walker’s death was drunkenness. He had a lip for liquor, which frequently got the better of him. Where he inebriated to-day is not known; but about two o’clock he was observed to leave Port Day, about two miles above the head of Goat Island, badly intoxicated. It is believed he pulled over to one of the islands, where he discussed the contents of a keg of beer with some companions. It is supposed he attempted to reach Goat Island or to return to Port Day. To row a boat to Goat Island, is a very dangerous and fool-hardy trick, but one many times attempted by Walker. He would row for a small purse or a wager, or even to gratify the curiosity of tourists.
Whatever his calculations, he miscalculated his powers and was caught in the Trap Rapids, just above Goat Island, and it was at the point that the horrified spectators first caught sight of him as he came down the river. A man on the bank shouted to row in to the sluiceway, near the Cataract House, and he tried to do so, but caught a crab, lost his balance and fell back into the boat, where he lay stupefied with intoxication. The liberated air drifted away from the boat, and the light sail was caught in the swift current and carried down until it reached a point about half way between the head of the island and the Cataract House, when it caught upon a rock and swung around for several seconds. The situation at this time was one of extreme horror, and the spectators looked on with bated breath and beating hearts. The boat then jumped upon its terrible journey, riding upon the crest of the water, then struck a half-sunken rock and parted in twain, spilling the ocean passenger into the boiling rapids. The spectators on the shore at Goat Island and the bridge, not less than four hundred of whom were spectators of this awful catastrophe, saw the man rise above the surface of the water, and his body was caught in the restless underflow and was swept from sight forever.

The ferryman below the Falls were notified, and rowing near the cataract made search for his hat badly cut by the rocks, an our injured, and the pieces of his boat. The latter were eagerly sought by curiosity hunters as souvenirs of the terrible accident.
The victim was well known at the Falls. He was a boat-housekeeper, and was a wild, hard-boiled, dissipated fellow. He cared nothing for the danger of the river, and laughed to scorn the very idea of fear. He was credited with being a good outlaw and smuggler, and when in danger from the law, he would seek one of the smaller islands, and remain until the storm blew over.

He made much trouble for his neighbors by his indifference and revengeful spirit. His redeeming feature was his proficiency in saving human life, the result of his desperate daring. He was thirty years of age and leaves a wife and two children. Special to Cincinnati Enquirer, May 25.

Going to War for Soda.

A letter from Valparaiso, Chili, to the Boston Advertiser, says: I will try to tell you the principal cause of the present difficulties in Chili, Bolivia and Peru. Bolivia broke her solemn treaty with Chili because she found it to her interest to do so. Bolivia has also the stimulus of being hounded on by Peru, because Peru has, until very lately, had the monopoly of the production of nitrate of soda, very extensively used in Europe for manure and many chemical purposes. The importance of this product and its shipment to Europe has grown enormously during the last fifteen or twenty years. I went to Iquique in 1842, still the principal port, but the only port of export, to take the weight of a cargo which was being shipped. Then three or four vessels per month were loaded, but during the past two years over one hundred vessels per month loaded at Iquique and two small adjacent ports. This monopoly of Peru has given and is giving her an income of from five to seven millions annually.

About four or five years ago the native salt from which nitrate is made was found also on the coast of Bolivia, and almost exclusively through Chilean capital and enterprise the trade in it has become a great competitor and competitor of Peru in the sales of Peru. In 1874 Chili and Bolivia made a treaty by which the latter, for some considerations of ceded rights to disputed territory, agreed not to impose any export dues on nitrate, or exact any laws that might hamper or cause any expense to the Chilean capital employed on her coast over and above such restrictions as at that time existed.

Since then, millions of Chili capital have been invested in mining and the manufacture of nitrate on this formerly unproductive coast, causing three important towns to be built, nine-tenths of the inhabitants of which are Chileans. In violation of the treaty and all justice, the Bolivian Congress, in February, 1878, decreed an export duty of ten cents per one hundred pounds on the nitrate shipped at their ports. This was done partly to obtain an income for themselves, but chiefly through the influence of Peru, which Government stipulated by a private treaty with Bolivia to sustain her against all claims by Chili. The latter country protested, and tried by every means to make Bolivia respect her treaty obligations; but, finding diplomacy useless, Chili sent her squadron, composed of two powerful iron-clads and four small corvettes, and took possession of the whole of the Bolivian coast. Of course this exasperated both Bolivia and Peru, and is the principal cause of the war. The war brings ruin to all three of these poor countries. Chili, at great sacrifices, has always maintained her credit in Europe by punctually paying the interest and sinking fund on her debt. But neither Peru nor Bolivia has pretended to do so for some years. Only a few months ago a committee of the Peruvian bondholders in England solicited the ministry to interfere, in order to force Peru to pay her debts, making some ugly assertions as to the honesty of the Peruvian Government. Naturally Peru is far more wealthy than Chili; but the latter country has greater energy, industry and economy in her Government, and, above all, more common honesty. The war must be settled in a great measure by the navies of Peru and Chili. In such a war Bolivia cannot be counted as of any importance, having no ships, and no ports. The number of vessels, but I know that the Chilean naval officers are far superior to those of Peru.

A Drunken Man's Misfortune.

It was during the reign of the good Caliph, when about Tamerlik came to the city of Bagdad, threw his grip sack on the counter, and, as he registered, spake cheerfully unto the clerk, saying, “A sample room on the first floor, and send my keyster up right away, and call me for the 6:28 train east in the morning.”

And Basler of Jab, the clerk, looked at him, but went away to his mirror and gave him his new diamond.
And about Tamerlik hid him forth and went into the booths and bazars, and laid hold upon the merchants and enticed them into his room and spread out his samples and besought them to buy. And when night was come he sent my keyster up right away, and call me for the 6:28 train east in the morning.

And before the second watch of the night, Rhumul on Upp, the porter, snatched him from the panels of his door and cried aloud:
“O, Abou Tamerlik, arise and dress, for it is train time.”
And Abou arose and gort his raiment and with bated breath and beating hearts, the boat then jumped upon its terrible journey, riding upon the crest of the water, then struck a half-sunken rock and parted in twain, spilling the ocean passenger into the boiling rapids. The spectators on the shore at Goat Island and the bridge, not less than four hundred of whom were spectators of this awful catastrophe, saw the man rise above the surface of the water, and his body was caught in the restless underflow and was swept from sight forever.

And when they got to the depot, lo! it was the mail west, and it was 10:25 p. m.
And Abou Tamerlik swore and reached for the porter, that he might up his hands once, as he was crying, “Carry me back to my own room and see, and call me at 6:28 a. m., or thou diest.”

And ere he had been asleep even until the midnight watch, Rhumul on Upp was found by his hat badly cut by the rocks, an our injured, and the pieces of his boat. The latter were eagerly sought by curiosity hunters as souvenirs of the terrible accident.

The victim was well known at the Falls. He was a boat-housekeeper, and was a wild, hard-boiled, dissipated fellow. He cared nothing for the danger of the river, and laughed to scorn the very idea of fear. He was credited with being a good outlaw and smuggler, and when in danger from the law, he would seek one of the smaller islands, and remain until the storm blew over.

He made much trouble for his neighbors by his indifference and revengeful spirit. His redeeming feature was his proficiency in saving human life, the result of his desperate daring. He was thirty years of age and leaves a wife and two children. Special to Cincinnati Enquirer, May 25.

He made much trouble for his neighbors by his indifference and revengeful spirit. His redeeming feature was his proficiency in saving human life, the result of his desperate daring. He was thirty years of age and leaves a wife and two children. Special to Cincinnati Enquirer, May 25.

He made much trouble for his neighbors by his indifference and revengeful spirit. His redeeming feature was his proficiency in saving human life, the result of his desperate daring. He was thirty years of age and leaves a wife and two children. Special to Cincinnati Enquirer, May 25.

He made much trouble for his neighbors by his indifference and revengeful spirit. His redeeming feature was his proficiency in saving human life, the result of his desperate daring. He was thirty years of age and leaves a wife and two children. Special to Cincinnati Enquirer, May 25.

He made much trouble for his neighbors by his indifference and revengeful spirit. His redeeming feature was his proficiency in saving human life, the result of his desperate daring. He was thirty years of age and leaves a wife and two children. Special to Cincinnati Enquirer, May 25.

He made much trouble for his neighbors by his indifference and revengeful spirit. His redeeming feature was his proficiency in saving human life, the result of his desperate daring. He was thirty years of age and leaves a wife and two children. Special to Cincinnati Enquirer, May 25.

He made much trouble for his neighbors by his indifference and revengeful spirit. His redeeming feature was his proficiency in saving human life, the result of his desperate daring. He was thirty years of age and leaves a wife and two children. Special to Cincinnati Enquirer, May 25.

He made much trouble for his neighbors by his indifference and revengeful spirit. His redeeming feature was his proficiency in saving human life, the result of his desperate daring. He was thirty years of age and leaves a wife and two children. Special to Cincinnati Enquirer, May 25.

Deathbed Repentance.

Appropos of the rise in Mammoth, they tell a capital story about General Dodge. Some time ago A. G. Brown, a well-known operator here, bought 1,000 shares of Mammoth from General Dodge at three dollars a share. This was when the company was first organized, about eight or nine months ago, and three dollars was bed rock. The thing hung fire for a long time. The Sierra and Nevada excitement came along, and nobody gave Mammoth a second thought. It was not on the Board; it had no value, and you couldn’t really give it away. It went by the name of “Dodge’s pup.” Assessments were levied regularly. Brown talked long and loud, and the street resounded with his curses. He swore that Dodge had swindled him, and by the gods he was going to get even with that warrier some day, come what, come what.

The day before the news of the strike in Mammoth leaked out Dodge, who was lying very low at Oakland, sent a telegram over to Brown that he would like to see him. Brown had heard that the General was at the point of death and a feeling of sympathy prompted him to respond at once, so he took the next boat. Arriving at the General’s elegant home he was shown up to the invalid’s chamber. Nobody was there but General Dodge and his secretary. The General lay propped up by pillows, looking the picture of ghastliness. He was very feeble—his breath came quick and short, his eyes were glittering and his hands lay helplessly beside him.

“I have sent for you, Mr. Brown,” said the General, with much difficulty of speech, “to say—that—that I am very ill; and I fear I may not get over it. With a view to that contingency—I—have been arranging my business affairs. [Here the General was overcome with weakness, and a pause of five minutes ensued to enable him to recover.] I—have—made—my—will—satisfied with the sale—I made to you of that Mammoth. Now I don’t want to go—out—of—the—world—feeling that I leave anybody—behind—who believes that I—have—ever wronged him. I—sincerely—do—not—know—what— I—believe—the—stock—was—worth, but I do not want anybody now—to think—that I have got the better of them. I—marked—to—prove—that—the—great—difficulty—in—the—way—of—the—universal—employment—of—the—American—to—the—exclusion—of—the—expensive—Siellian—product—may—be—obviated—by—making—our—collections—early—in—the—season—that—is, in—the—month—of—June. The—percentage—of—tannic—acid—is—not, it—is—true, quite—as—high—as—obtained—in—July, but—it—compares—favorably—with—the—Siellian—product, which, he—it—remembered, comminates—a—slightly—yellowish—tinge—to—the—tannic—precipitate. The—amount—of—coloring—matter—found—in—the—July—collection—is—sufficient—to—account—for—the—difference—of—fifty—dollars—a—ton—in—the—market—values—of—the—summe—of—honey—and—foreign—growth, regardless—of—the—proportion—of—tannic—acid. We—would—therefore—advise—that, for—the—purpose—of—tanning—white—and—delicately—colored—leather, the—collection—be—made—in—June, and—for—dyeing—and—calico—printing—in—dark—colors, where—the—slightly—yellow—color—will—have—no—injurious—effect. It—appears—that—for—all—purposes—the—collections—made—after—the—1st—of—August—is—inferior—in—quality. In—view—of—the—facts—here—presented, we—cannot—help—urging—upon—manufacturers—the—importance—of—encouraging—the—home—production—of—insisting—that—the—collections—be—made—early—in—the—season—in—order—to—bring—about—such—a—change—in—this—matter—as—to—prevent—the—annual—expenditure—of—over—$600,000—in—gold—for—the—summe—of—foreign—growth.”—Scientific American.

Facts About Phosphorus.

It is now about two hundred years since phosphorus was first obtained by Brand, of Hamburg. So wonderful was the discovery then considered that Kraft, an eminent philosopher of the time, gave Brand $300 for the secret of his preparation. Kraft then traveled and visited nearly all the Courts of Europe exhibiting. Phosphorus resembles beeswax, but it is more transparent, approaching the color of amber. Its name, which is derived from Greek signifies “light-bearer,” and is indicative of its most distinguished quality, being self-luminous. Phosphorus, when exposed to the air, shines like a star, giving out a beautiful lambent, greenish light. Phosphorus dissolves in warm sweet oil. If this phosphorized oil be rubbed over the face in the dark the features assume a ghastly appearance, and the expectant mentalist has his life a veritable living will-o’-the-wisp. The origin of phosphorus is the most singular fact concerning it. Every other substance with which we are acquainted can be traced to either carbon or air, but phosphorus seems to be of animal origin. Of all animals man yields the most; and of the various parts of the body the brain yields, by analysis, more phosphorus than any other. The fact is so important that the subject has been, perhaps, a phosphoric source. It is certain that the most intellectual beings contain the most phosphorus. It generally happens that when a singular discovery is made, man, whose desire is to apply an application of it is made to the welfare and happiness of man. This remark applies to phosphorus.

Disasters in Transatlantic Steam Navigation.

A SUPPLEMENT to the American Ship of this week furnishes the public with an elaborate table of maritime disasters, compiled by Mr. G. B. Winslow. It shows the number of vessels lost in transatlantic steam navigation from 1838, when the Sirius first crossed the ocean. The general results are shown by these summaries: The whole number of vessels, by the different casualties specified, is 147; of which never were heard of after leaving port, 26; wrecked on coasts, 80; foundered at sea, 6; sunk at sea, 6; abandoned, 8; by collision with icebergs, 3; collision with other vessels, 1; capsized, 1; burned, 1. The loss of life by the several kinds of disaster, as far as ascertained, was as follows: By missing vessels, 850; by vessels sunk at sea (including loss by Arctic, 502), 778; by vessels foundered, 583; by vessels wrecked, 1,611; by collisions, 350; by vessels foundered, 10; by other casualties, 70; total, 4,202. It is remarkable that the loss of life appears to have been made matter of open record in the case of only three of the twenty-six missing vessels in the list given. These were the President, which left New York for Liverpool in 1841, and of which the loss is vaguely given as 200, when it has always been supposed to be much higher; the City of Glasgow, of the Lunan Line, which left Glasgow for New York in 1853; and the Pacific, of the Collins Line, which left Liverpool for New York in 1856. The united loss by these vessels was 850. The total loss, as given above, does not include that of the 23 vessels against which the record is, “Missing all lost.” As far as can be judged from the character of these, and from their points of departure, they were mostly transient ships, carrying few or no passengers. With an average of 100 persons to each, including crew, the total loss of life on the list would be increased to 6,500 human beings. A critical examination of the dates when the missing vessels were built, and of their time of sailing, goes to confirm a statement made by the American Ship, viz: that many vessels were built on the Clyde and elsewhere in Scotland, on mere speculation, and cheap materials badly put together, and wholly unfit to encounter even moderate ocean storms. Of five that left their ports in November, 1872, not one was ever heard of afterward. Two others followed in 1874, two in 1877, and three in 1879, and that is the last known of them.—N. Y. Tribune.

American Sumac.

Dr. William McMurrie, Chemist of the department of Agriculture, has been making elaborate investigations as to the relative amount of tannic acid and coloring matter in American and Siellian sumacs. He finds the American product, when properly gathered, to be fully equal to the foreign. Samples of Winchester, Va., sumac were collected in the months of June, July, and August, respectively. Of these samples those collected in June and July were mixed varieties, and of the product collected in August we secured samples of the leaves of Rhus glabra and Rhus copallina separately.

In reporting his experiments Dr. McMurrie states that in some of the tests the precipitates obtained by means of the solution of the June collections, of Winchester mixed sumac were perfectly white and very much cleaner than those obtained with the Siellian product. “The difference in the color of the precipitates obtained from the solution of the June collection and that obtained from solutions of the samples of later collections, was sufficiently marked to prove that the great difficulty in the way of the universal employment of the American to the exclusion of the expensive Siellian product may be obviated by making our collections early in the season—that is, in the month of June. The percentage of tannic acid is not, it is true, quite as high as obtained in July, but it compares favorably with the Siellian product, which, he it remembered, comminates a slightly yellowish tinge to the tannic precipitate. The amount of coloring matter found in the July collection is sufficient to account for the difference of fifty dollars a ton in the market values of the summe of honey and foreign growth, regardless of the proportion of tannic acid. We would therefore advise that, for the purpose of tanning white and delicately colored leather, the collection be made in June, and for dyeing and calico printing in dark colors, where the slightly yellow color will have no injurious effect. The collections be made in July. It appears that for all purposes the collections made after the 1st of August is inferior in quality. In view of the facts here presented, we cannot help urging upon manufacturers the importance of encouraging the home production—of insisting that the collections be made early in the season—in order thus to bring about such a change in this matter as to prevent the annual expenditure of over $600,000 in gold for the summe of foreign growth.”—Scientific American.

The Umbrella Bird.

The umbrella bird is a truly remarkable creature, and from the extraordinary mode in which its plumage is arranged, never fails of attracting the attention of the most casual spectator. The bird is a native of the islands of the South American rivers—being seldom if ever seen on the main land—from whence it is not unfrequently brought by collectors, as there is always a ready sale for its skin, and for its feathers in glass cases, or as a specimen for a museum. In dimensions the umbrella bird equals the common crow of England, and but for the curious plumage which adorns its head, and the tuft which hangs from its beak, it might be mistaken at a distance for that bird. The general color of this species is rich, shining black, glazed with varying tints of blue and purple like the feathers of the magpie’s tail. Very few are known of the habits of the bird. Its crest is, perhaps, the most fully developed and beautiful of any bird known. It is composed of long, slender feathers, rising from a contractile skin on the top of the head.

The shafts are white, and the plumage glossy blue, hair-like and curved outward at the tip. When the crest is laid back, the shafts form a compact white mass, sloping up from the top of the head, and surmounted by the dense, hairy crest. Even in this position it is not an inelegant crest, but it is, when it is fully spread, that its peculiar character is developed. The shafts then radiate on all sides from the top of the head, reaching in front beyond and below the tip of the beak, which is completely hidden from view. The top then forms a perfect, slightly elongated dome, of a beautiful shining blue color, having a point of divergence rather behind the center, like that in the human head. The length of this dome from front to back is about five inches, the breadth four to four and a half inches. Scarcely less curious than the “magpie’s tail,” as this overhanging plumage is very appropriately named, is a bunch of elongated feathers that hang from the breast in a tuft, perfectly distinct from the rest of the plumage.

The peculiarity in this tuft is that the feathers of which it is composed do not grow from the neck, but from a cylindrical fleshy growth about as thick as an ordinary goosequill and an inch and a half long. The whole of this curious appendage is covered with feathers, so that the breast tuft is wholly distinct from the feathers of the neck and breast. The entire skin of the neck is extremely loose, more so than in any other bird. The feathers of this tuft are edged with a beautiful and resplendent blue, and lap over each other like so many scales. The food of the umbrella bird consists chiefly of berries and various fruits, and it always rejects the hard stones of stone fruit. As its cry is extremely loud and deep, the natives call the bird by a name which signifies a pipe.—Hatters Gazette.

The Washington Monument.

In my former letter I gave some account of the original plan and design of the Washington monument. Now I propose to write of the perfected design of the terrace and statuary at the base of the noble shaft as contemplated by the Monument Society. Even in this far-off land of poetry and song, this land of magnificent monuments and beautiful statuary, in the classic city which gave birth to him who gave his name to our great continent, every true American feels the tears spring to his eyes as he gazes on the grand monuments erected to the great men of a former age, and recalls the vision of that immense unfinished colossus, seen on the neglected banks of the Potomac, deserted, forlorn, forsaken.

Now that the time seems near at hand when work upon the Washington monument is to be renewed, much interest is excited in it, and great satisfaction felt that the original design is not to be changed. The commission having it in charge seem to have finally adopted the design for the terrace, statuary and bas-reliefs at its base as indicated on the design of Mr. Mills, the original architect of the monument. The beautiful water color drawing, ten feet in height, by Larkin S. Mead, exhibits the floor of the Senate, and adopted by the society, leaves the shaft as originally contemplated, with no pantheon, gallery or other structure at the base to detract from its severe simplicity and grandeur. According to this plan a double terrace seventeen feet high will be built around the base of the shaft, the upper one on a level with the entrance being one hundred and sixty feet and the lower one two hundred feet square. At the corners of this terrace will be statues, pedestals on which are to be placed statues representing distinguished characters of Revolutionary times, thus placing the figures in pairs at each corner, one on each side of the steps—the first pair to be a Marion dragoon and Morgan rifleman; the second, a Valley Forge man and minute man, the third a French officer and a private; the fourth a pioneer and a settler. The fourth pair will represent real characters as far as practicable, such as Generals Martin, Morgan and Lafayette or D’Estering, and John Paul Jones, in their proper costumes. These figures need no special explanation, as they tell the story of the nation’s history and the story of the war. But the grand feature of the modified plan is the immense tablets set in the shaft thirty feet from its base, being thirty feet in length and fifteen feet high, and containing Mr. Mead’s colossal bas-reliefs representing prominent events in the life of Washington.

The bas-reliefs on the east side of the obelisk will represent “Washington taking command of the army as Commander-in-Chief at Cambridge.” In this scene we get the idea of “union and nationality.” From Virginia being called on to furnish the Commander-in-Chief for the combined forces to defend her sister colony, Massachusetts, from the oppressions of the mother country.

The second bas-relief represents “The surrender of Cornwallis,” the last act in the drama of the Revolution. It exhibits some of the noblest elements in the character of Washington, dignity, self-respect and generosity. He is represented in the act of refusing to receive the sword of Cornwallis, but directs the officer to take it as the symbol of the nation’s honor. Here we see the successful chief surrenders to Congress the power given to him, and asks that he may be allowed to devote to the duties of a private citizen—a voluntary surrender of power by a great military chieftain rare as it was magnanimous. The fourth bas-relief represents “The inauguration of Washington.” Here we see the humble private citizen called upon by the country he assisted to save to assume the delicate duties of putting the machinery of a new government into active operation.

These four scenes exhibit our great commoner in the most interesting events of his civil and military life in a national capacity, and the sketches shown upon the plans exhibited to the commission were very spirit of the groupings highly artistic and effective. The small study, executed in plaster, of the surrender at Yorktown, a photograph of which has been forwarded to the Monument Association at Washington, exhibits these characteristics in a remarkable degree. The monument, if completed according to Mr. Mead’s modified, or rather perfected, design, with these magnificent bas-reliefs and statues, will be the pride and glory of our country, and fittingly transmit to future ages the memory of Washington and the gratitude of the Republic he founded.—Florence, Italy, Cor. Chicago Times.

—Mr. Owen and Miss Sanford, of Milburn, Ky., were frustrated in several attempts to get married. At length they decided to elope. She bravely jumped out of a window and broke one of the small bones near the ankle, but he got away with her, and she was held on her feet while the marriage ceremony was performed by a sympathizing clergyman.

It is one of the physiological mysteries why a boy’s hands will blister so much sooner on a horse handle than they will on a base ball bat.—Stevensville Herald.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

SHATZER & AULT

have recently removed to their new

Furniture and Undertaking Rooms.

MAIN STREET, OAKLAND,

Where they keep constantly on hand and manufacture to order anything in the line of

HOUSEHOLD FURNITURE

All of which is offered at the

LOWEST LIVING PRICES.

Give us a call, examine our Furniture and prices, whether you wish to purchase or not. We take pleasure in showing our work.

All kinds of COFFINS and CASKETS on hand or furnished to order on short notice.

4 26 6m SHATZER & AULT.

H. WHEELER COMBS,

REAL ESTATE AGENT,

OAKLAND, MD.

Will negotiate sales of real estate of every description.

No charge for advertising property placed in my hands.

H. WHEELER COMBS.

The following properties have been placed in my hands

FOR SALE.

NO. 3.

One of the best little farms in Garrett county, 2 1/2 miles west of Oakland, the county seat. This farm contains 36 ACRES. 20 acres in cultivation, and all susceptible of easy and profitable cultivation. Improved by a

New 2 Story House,

containing 8 rooms and good cellar. GOOD BARN and stabling. There is a good young orchard of 20 trees. The whole farm is under good fence. This farm will be offered for a short time at a very low price and on easy terms. Title perfect. Limestone and coal within two miles.

NO. 1.

Fichter's Mill Property.

This property, containing 20 acres, situated on Muddy Creek, in Sang Run district, Garrett county, Md., will be sold at a very low price and on easy terms. It lies 9 miles north-west of Oakland, 8 miles from Hutton's Switch and 7 miles from Canterbury Summit. Is one of the best mill seats in the county and is surrounded by the best timbered land of the section. It is improved by an excellent containing 10 rooms; good stabling attached. The wheels and mill are new and are up to date property, and will be sold with the property at a low price for the whole. The land is assessed for.

FRAME HOUSE.

This is an opportunity for a bargain seldom offered.

NO. 5.

A Desirable Property in Oakland FOR SALE.

Lot 10x100, improved by an

Excellent Frame Dwelling House,

containing 7 rooms; with good cellar. This house is one of the most pleasant in Oakland, is almost immediately opposite the Oakland Hotel, and in front of Bailey's new hotel and contains one of the finest views of the town. The buildings are all new and well-constructed. There is an excellent well of water on the lot. For any one desiring a pleasant home, an opportunity is here offered to secure it at a price less than the cost of the buildings. Terms—One-third down, balance in three equal annual payments.

Apply to

H. WHEELER COMBS,
Real Estate Agent, Oakland, Md.

OAKLAND WOOLEN FACTORY.

The subscriber is prepared to do all kinds of

CUSTOM WORK,

such as

Roll Carding, Spinning and Weaving, at short notice.

Wool taken in exchange for goods or worked up on the shares into Blankets, Cassinets, Cassimeres, Flannels and stocking yarn.

my inv

SAMUEL LAWTON.

PATENTS.

To Inventors and Manufacturers.

ESTABLISHED 1855.

GILMORE SMITH & CO.

Solicitors of Patents & Attorneys at Law.

American & Foreign Patents.

No fees in advance, nor until a Patent is allowed. No fees for making preliminary examinations.

Special attention given to Interference Cases before the Patent Office, Infringement Suits in the different States, and all litigation appertaining to Patents or Inventions.

Send Stamp for Pamphlet of Study Pages.

GILMORE & CO.,
629 F. Street, N. W.,
Washington, D. C.

MISCELLANEOUS.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Advertisements under this heading will be inserted at the following rates: For Members of the Legislature, Clerk of the Circuit Court and Sheriff, $100. For State Attorneys, Surveyors and County Commissioners, $50. For Owners of Mills and Judges of the District Court, $25 each. Advertisements to run in the morning of the Northern Star will be six times as much as those in the afternoon. No name will be announced until the fee is paid.

FOR CLERK CIRCUIT COURT.

To the Republicans of Garrett County:

Resolving so many voluntary assurances from all parts of the county, to the effect that the people, and especially those having names on the list, do not desire a change in the Clerk's office the succeeding term, I have every reason to suppose that my name will be brought before the Convention. I, therefore, take this method of announcing to the public that I am a candidate for the office of Clerk of the Circuit Court for Garrett county, subject to the decision of the Republican county nominating convention.

If I am again nominated, I shall appreciate the honor and, frankly accept. And if elected, shall perform the duties thereof with care and attention, to the best of my ability, as in the past.

April 28. W. H. TOWER.

SHERIFFALTY.

Ed. REPUBLICAN:—Please announce my name as a candidate for the Sheriffalty of Garrett county, subject to the decision of the Republican Nominating Convention.

MILTON LAWHERMILK.

Ed. REPUBLICAN:—Please announce my name as a candidate for the Sheriffalty of Garrett county, subject to the decision of the Republican Nominating Convention.

D. ADOLPHUS FENDEL.

Ed. REPUBLICAN:—Please announce my name as a candidate for the Sheriffalty of Garrett county, subject to the decision of the Republican Nominating Convention.

GEORGE H. WHITE.

Ed. REPUBLICAN:—Please announce my name as a candidate for the Sheriffalty of Garrett county, subject to the decision of the Republican Nominating Convention.

W. SCOTT PEW.

SURVEYOR.

Ed. REPUBLICAN:—Please announce my name as a candidate for the office of County Surveyor, subject to the decision of the Republican Nominating Convention.

JOHN HARNED.

Sheriff's Sale.

By virtue of an execution issued by Alex. L. Osborn, a Justice of the Peace of the State of Maryland, in and for Garrett county, and to the effect that, at the request of Adam Bette, against the goods and chattels, lands and tenements of W. M. Childers, have seized and taken in execution all the right, title, interest and estate, both at law and in equity, of the said W. M. Childers, in and to all that tract, parcel, or part of ground situated, lying adjacent and bounded by the line of the said Adam Bette, in the Park county of Garrett, and State of Maryland, described as follows: Beginning North 28° East 40 feet from the second corner of a lot sold by Emil F. Broege and wife to Geo. Marley, and running thence along Church street North 28° 40 feet, thence North 62° West 10 feet, to the line of H. G. Davis, thence with said line South 17° West 61 feet, thence South 62° East 10 feet to the beginning, containing one acre, more or less, and being the same lot obtained by Peter Court from Edward Marley, deceased, I have seized and taken in execution all the right, title, interest, claim and demand, at law and in equity, of the said W. M. Childers, in and to the following property, to-wit:

LOT NO. 15,

In McCarly's Addition to the town of Oakland, in Garrett Co., and State of Maryland.

And I hereby give notice that on

SATURDAY, June 28th, 1879,

at 2 o'clock, p. m., in front of Coddington's Hotel, in the town of Oakland, I will offer for sale the said property so seized and taken in execution, to the highest bidder, for cash, to satisfy said judgments and costs.

THOS. CODDINGTON,
6 7 4 Sheriff.

Sheriff's Sale.

By virtue of a writ of fieri facias, issued out of the Circuit Court for Garrett county, and to me directed, at the suit of James Wiseman and Mary Wiseman, against the goods and chattels, lands and tenements of Wm. T. Mullon and John G. Mullon, executed by Edward Marley, deceased, I have seized and taken in execution all the right, title, interest, claim and demand, at law and in equity, of the said Wm. T. Mullon and John G. Mullon, in and to the following property, to-wit:

LOT NO. 15,

In McCarly's Addition to the town of Oakland, in Garrett Co., and State of Maryland.

And I hereby give notice that on

SATURDAY, June 28th, 1879,

at 2 o'clock, p. m., in front of Coddington's Hotel, in the town of Oakland, I will offer for sale the said property so seized and taken in execution, to the highest bidder, for cash, to satisfy said judgments and costs.

THOS. CODDINGTON,
6 7 4 Sheriff.

PROFESSIONAL CARDS.

H. WHEELER COMBS,
ATTORNEY AT LAW,
OAKLAND, GARRETT CO., MD.
Will practice in the Courts of Garrett and Allegany Counties, Md.
Collections promptly attended to. d28-y

GILMORE'S FAMILY,
ATTORNEY AT LAW
AND SOLICITOR IN CHANCERY.
OFFICE IN OAKLAND, BUILDING, (Lower Floor).
Particular attention given to Conveyancing, investigation of land titles and collection of claims. Loans negotiated. j21-y

J. W. VEITCH,
ATTORNEY AT LAW
SOLICITOR IN CHANCERY,
OAKLAND, GARRETT COUNTY, MD.
Will practice in the Courts of Garrett County and the adjoining Counties of West Virginia, and in the Court of Appeals of Maryland. Jan. 25-y.

THOS. J. PEDDICOCH, A. B. GOSDER,
ATTORNEYS AT LAW
SOLICITOR IN CHANCERY,
OAKLAND, GARRETT COUNTY, MD.
Will practice in the Courts of Garrett and Allegany Counties, the adjoining Counties of West Virginia, and in the Court of Appeals of Maryland. Jan. 25-y.

DR. W. F. FUNDENBERG

Late Resident Surgeon, New York Eye and Ear Infirmary.

HAS LOCATED PERMANENTLY in the City of Cumberland, Md., for the EXCLUSIVE treatment of all diseases of the Eye and Ear, including those of the Nose and Throat.

Office, No. 20 South Centre Street, ap21y

HAS LOCATED PERMANENTLY in the City of Cumberland, Md., for the EXCLUSIVE treatment of all diseases of the Eye and Ear, including those of the Nose and Throat.

Office, No. 20 South Centre Street, ap21y

W. M. CLEMENTS,
Master of Transportation.

L. M. COLE,
General Ticket Agent

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

A. C. BROOKE,

GENERAL UNDERTAKER

OAKLAND, MD.

Having a full line of

COFFINS, CASKETS & TRIMMINGS

always on hand, direct from the factory, I can furnish, at short notice, anything in this line.

VERY LOW PRICES FOR 1879:

Very Small Coffins,.....$ 2 50
Children's Coffins,.....4 50 to 8 00

ADULT SIZES:

Plain oak lid coffin, with Glass,.....8 00 to 12 00
Rosewood Finish,.....10 00 to 14 00
O. G. Top, Rosewood Finish,.....10 00 to 14 00

CASKETS:

Black Walnut, Hinged and Locked,.....12 00 to 18 00
Pine Trimmed,.....14 00 to 20 00
Other styles at corresponding low prices. Hearse in all cases furnished in town.....$2 00

I will not be undersold.

All work guaranteed to give satisfaction, and prices as reasonable as can be had anywhere.

All orders by mail promptly attended to. n20y1

A. LOEWENSTEIN,
MERCHANT TAILOR,
OAKLAND, MD.

Respectfully announces to the citizens of Oakland and vicinity, that he has laid in his usual large stock of

Spring and Summer Cloths,

Cassimeres, Vestings, etc,

which he is prepared to make to order upon the shortest notice and in the most

Neat and Fashionable Manner.

He invites all to call and examine his goods, and leave their measure for a suit. He has reduced the price for making clothes, but

Guarantees a Perfect Fit.

All work WARRANTED to give entire satisfaction.

850 ACRES

—OF—

Good Land

For Sale Cheap.

This Land lies on the Hoopole Road, about six miles north east from Oakland, B. & O. R. R., and is generally covered with good timber. Would make several good farms. Will be sold in bulk or in small lots. Title good.

For particulars and terms apply to this office or to the postoffice, Oakland, Garrett Co., Md.

CHAS. H. WHITZELL,
Manufacturer of
WHITE PINE, HEMLOCK AND Cherry Lumber.

Also
HEMLOCK, WHITE AND YELLOW PINE SHINGLES.

Charges reasonable and satisfaction guaranteed to all customers.

The mill is situated on Muddy Creek, one mile from the Fichter mill.

CHAS. H. WHITZELL,
May 11, '78, 15.

B. & O. R. R. Time-Table.

The following time table of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad went into effect on the 15th of May:

GOING WEST

No. 2.....5:41 A. M.
No. 6.....5:51 A. M.
No. 8.....3:20 P. M.
No. 10.....4:43 P. M.
Way.....10:11 A. M.

GOING EAST

No. 1.....12:40 A. M.
No. 3.....10:11 P. M.
No. 5.....12:21 P. M.
No. 7.....5:29 P. M.
Way.....8:25 A. M.

The fast trains, with the exception of those mentioned, make stoppages only at the First Class Stations. Tickets should always be procured before taking the cars, passengers saving thereby from 10 to 25 cents.

WM. M. CLEMENTS,
Master of Transportation.

L. M. COLE,
General Ticket Agent

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

MEAT MARKET.

H. B. WOLFE,
Formerly of Cumberland, Md.

Takes this mode of announcing to the citizens of Oakland and vicinity that he has permanently located in Oakland for the purpose of carrying on the

BUTCHERING BUSINESS

in a first-class manner.

FRESH BEEF, salted, MUTTON, PORK, BACON, SALT SAGE, POOR SAGE, SAGE, &c., at all times.

Shop near the Post Office.

Customers can get what they want without delay and at any hour of the day.

Your patronage is respectfully solicited.

n2

H. B. WOLFE.

ROAD NOTICE.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, That the undersigned will make application to the County Commissioners of Garrett county, at their next meeting after thirty days from the first publication of this notice, for the appointment of a committee to examine and report whether the public convenience requires that the road heretofore located, leading from the corner of School House, near John Warlick's, be so changed as to run through lands of John Warlick, Joseph H. Anderson, Wesley Broadwater, Hiram Duckworth, Philip Klipsch and Ashford Warlick, terminating at or near the said Ashford Warlick's house. The length of said road will be about four miles.

HENRY M. BROADWATER,
JAMES BLUMBERG,
SALMON DUCKWORTH.

JOHN RICHARDSON,
Manufacturer of and Dealer in
WAGONS AND FARMING IMPLEMENTS.
GRAIN CHAFFERS, A SPECIALTY.
Also, Improved Hand Saws, Saws, Jaws, &c.
Near the Depot, Oakland, Md.

BRIDGE NOTICE.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, That the undersigned will make application to the County Commissioners, at their next meeting after thirty days from the first publication of this notice, for the erection of a bridge across the Youghiogheny River, near the mouth of the said river, in the town of Snow Creek, near the Ashby saw mill, in said district. These bridges are on a new road recently located, running from near James Meek's to the West Virginia State line.

THOS. W. ASHBY,
JOSEPH MEYER,
W. A. LORA W.

5 10 4

LIVERY STABLE.

THOMAS MARTIN

at the old stand, opposite the Post Office, is prepared to furnish on short notice

BUGGIES,
CARRIAGES,
WAGONS AND SADDLE HORSES,
On Reasonable Terms.

22-Fishers, Hunting and Pic-Nic parties supplied with transportation to any point desired. 5 22 1m.

TRUSTEE'S SALE

OF VALUABLE

REAL ESTATE.

Under and by virtue of a decree of the Orphans' Court for Garrett county, sitting on the 10th day of May, 1879, in and for said Court, in which Andrew Unbel and Daniel Unbel are plaintiffs and Isaac Myers and others are defendants, the undersigned, as Trustee, will offer at public sale at

Nichols's Mill, in Selbysport District, in said county, on

Saturday, June 14th, 1879,

at the hour of 11 o'clock, A. M. of said day,

all the following described real estate of which Jacob Myers died seized and possessed, to-wit:

Military Lots Nos. 2871, 2872 and 2874,

lying westward from Fort Cumberland, and which were conveyed to the said Jacob Myers by John Mackley and Barbara his wife, by deed bearing date the 20th day of December, 1862. The said lots are situated on what is known as "Bitternut Ridge," in Selbysport District of Garrett county, and adjoin the lands of Neah Humbertson, Jefferson Frazee, Elijah Myers and others, and about three miles from Selbysport and one mile from Nichols's Mill. The said property is improved by a two-story brick dwelling house, log barn, a never failing spring of good water very near the house, an orchard of fruit trees in full bearing, and a "sugar camp" in good repair on the property. The balance to be made in timber.

TERMS OF SALE, as prescribed by the decree—One-half of the purchase money in cash on the ratification of the sale, and the balance in twelve months from the date of sale, the deferred payment to bear interest from the date of sale, and to be secured with the single bill of the purchaser with such additional security as shall be approved by the Trustee.

ISAAC MYERS,
Trustee.
J. W. Veitch, Attorney. 5 21 1d

HEADACHE PILLS

NEURALGIA

CELESTINE

"Dr. J. W. Benson, a celebrated physician at the P. H. L. S. Baltimore, Md., writes: 'I have paid much attention to nervous diseases (as discovered by CELESTINE), and have found that CELESTINE, in a certain proportion, has cured every nervous disease, whether it be dyspepsia, nervousness, or any other nervous ailment. This is a true remedy in medical science. CELESTINE, try, and sufferers all over the country are only too ready to be cured by mail. He prepares it in pills, at 50 cts. per box. CELESTINE, the doctor is largely CELESTINE, known and highly respected in Baltimore. —Apex, Md. CELESTINE, Baltimore, July 27, 1874. Dr. J. W. Benson's CELESTINE, and CELESTINE PILLS have cured my wife of CELESTINE, sick and nervous headache of ten years' standing; she had it every CELESTINE, for almost everything CELESTINE, but death with it. We CELESTINE, think these pills worth CELESTINE, their weight in gold. CELESTINE, Rev. H. SCHULTZ, Pastor Salem Mission, CELESTINE, For sale by all Druggists CELESTINE, in this town. CELESTINE, Price 50 cts. a box, mailed to any address. Office CELESTINE, 101 N. E. 1st St., Baltimore, Md. 157

MISCELLANEOUS.

SUBSCRIBE FOR

"THE REPUBLICAN,"

AND AID IN THE

CIRCULATION

—OF—

The Cheapest Newspaper

IN WESTERN MARYLAND.

ONLY

$1.50

PER YEAR

IN ADVANCE.

EVERY VARIETY

OF

JOB WORK

PROMPTLY EXECUTED.

We desire to call the attention of Merchants, Mechanics, and Business Men generally, to our extensive facilities for the prompt, speedy and accurate execution of

FIRST-CLASS

JOB PRINTING.

We keep on hand, for printing purposes, an assortment of the best Paper, Envelopes, Cards, &c., and have one of best

JOB PRESSES

now in use, and the

ONLY ONE IN OAKLAND.

We have also a complete stock of

New Plain and Fancy Type, &c.,

of the latest styles, for all the different kinds of Job Work and can now fill all orders for

Show Cards, Business Cards, Circulars, Letter-Heads, Bill-Heads, Legal Blanks, Certificates, Envelopes, Tags, Statements, &c., Posters, Handbills, Programmes, Pamphlets, Catalogues, Lodgers, &c., &c.

and every description of

Plain and Fancy Printing

At the Lowest Rates.

Drop in and take a look at a

—COMPLETE—

Printing Office,

YOU WILL BE

WELCOME AT ALL TIMES.

We are determined to be up to the times in everything connected with the printing business.

Address

"THE REPUBLICAN,"
Oakland, Garrett Co., Md.

DR. J. DAILY,
RESIDENT DENTIST
WESTERNPORT,
MARYLAND.

From one to a full set of teeth inserted in the most beautiful and substantial manner. Particular attention paid to cleaning and filling the natural teeth. All work warranted. To give satisfaction, or money refunded.

1221-15

MISCELLANEOUS.

COUNTY DIRECTORY.

—507—

CIRCUIT COURT.

Jury Terms—Second Monday of September and the First Monday of May.

Non-Jury Terms—First Monday of July and Third Monday of December.

Chief Judge—Hon. R. H. Alvey.

Associates—Hons. Wm. Motter and Geo. A. Pearce.

Clerk—W. H. Tower.

Sheriff—Thomas Coddington.

State's Attorney—Jno. W. Veitch.

Court Auditor—W. P. Townshend.

Standing Commissioners—Gilmer S. Hamill and A. B. Gonler.

Crier—Wm. Smouse.

Messenger—Jas. M. Bell.

Bailiffs—Wm. Waltz and T. Bosley.

Return days of Equity process—Third Monday in January, third Monday in March, third Monday in May, third Monday in July, second Monday in September, second Monday in November.

ORPHANS' COURT.

Meets every second and fourth Tuesday of each month.

Chief Judge—Joseph DeWitt.

Associates—A. J. Michaels and Wm. Harvey.

Register of Wills—W. L. Rawlings.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS.

The regular sessions of the County Commissioners commence on the first Monday in January; the first Monday in April, being the appeal and transfer term; the first Monday in June, being the levy term; the first Monday in July, the term for appointing judges of election, and the first Monday in October.

President, E. C. Tillen; Commissioners, John Riley and Jeremiah Guard.

Clerk—Wm. H. Hagans, who will be in the office on Tuesdays and Saturdays of each week.

County Surveyor—John Harned.

SCHOOL COMMISSIONERS.

President—Wm. A. Brydon.

Commissioners—G. W. Delawder, Secretary and Treasurer—Dr. E. H. Bartlett.

JUSTICES OF THE PEACE.

District No. 1—J. H. Wilson and Henry Basche.

2—Benj. Griffith.

3—John T. Patterson & Sylvanus Butler.

4—A. J. Warnick.

5—R. B. Jamison and A. L. Osborn.

6—Perry Weimer.

LODGES.

A. F. & A. M.—Meet every first and third Thursday night.

I. O. O. F. No. 12—Meet every Monday night.

Alta Lod. E. No. 574, K. of H.—Meets in McComas Hall 2d and 4th Thursday evenings of each month.

I. O. G. T. No. 114—Meet every Tuesday night.

REGISTRARS OF VOTERS.

District No. 1 H. O. Hamill, 2 James H. Rush, 3 Isiah Fuller, 4 W. H. Bernard, 5 Daniel Hinebaugh, 6 Thomas Browning, 7 R. T. Browning, 8 W. F. Deakins, 9 J. Facenbaker.

TOWN OF OAKLAND.

Burgess—G. W. Delawder.

Commissioners—Thos. Carr, David Little, John Heibig, Edmund Jamison.

Clerk—King Delawder.

Bailiff—Joseph M. Crim.

Postmaster—Ralph Thayer.

ROAD NOTICE.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, That the undersigned will make application to the County Commissioners of Garrett county, after thirty days from the first publication of this notice, for a private road through the lands of Elias P. Kerr and Mrs. Edwards, commencing at my place stone quarry, and intersecting the Spruce Hollow road.

To give satisfaction, or money refunded.

6 7 5

SOLOMON TURNEY.

THE REPUBLICAN.

VOLUME 3.

OAKLAND, MD., SATURDAY, JUNE 21, 1879.

NUMBER 17

OAKLAND BUSINESS GUIDE.

DRY GOODS, GROCERIES, etc.

D. E. OFFUTT,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Agricultural Machines, Musical Instruments,
Cans, Pistols, etc.

G. W. LEGGIE,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Cor. Second & Oak Sts.

D. H. LOAR,
ORIGINAL NEW YORK STORE,
General Merchandise, Watches, Clocks, Jew-
elry, etc.

I. W. STALNAKER,
Grocery and Provision Store,
Corner Third and Oak Sts.

L. BUSH & SON,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Cor. Third & Oak Sts.

J. A. GRANT,
Dry Goods, Notions & Groceries,
SPECIAL LINE OF TOBACCO.

DAVIS & TOWNSEND,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Agents Agricultural Machines,
Opposite Bailey's Park.

C. C. MICHAEL,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Notions, Laces, Confectionery, etc.,
Next to Coddington's Hotel.

RICHARDSON BROS.,
GROCERIES, CONFECTIONERIES,
Canned Goods, Fruit, etc.

HOTELS.

CODDINGTON'S HOTEL,
W. M. CODDINGTON, Prop'r,
Main St., Opposite Jackson's Billiard Saloon.

LIVERY STABLE.

THOMAS MARTIN,
Opposite Postoffice.

STOVES AND TINWARE.

G. A. SHURER,
Oak Street, near Second.
A general line of Stoves and Tinware.

PHYSICIANS.

DR. J. LEE MCCOMAS,
Office on Main Street.

DR. E. H. PARSONS,
offers his professional services
to the people of Oakland and vicinity.
Office in the old Offutt building.
3 S 3m

PLASTERER.

JAMES AINOLD,
Residence on Fourth Street.

BOOT AND SHOE MAKER.

W. M. WAGNER,
Shop Cor. First & Oak Sts.

GEO. F. LOUGHRIDGE,
Leave orders at Express office.

SURVEYORS.

J. B. BRANT,
Surveyor, Auctioneer and
Conveyancer,
Oakland, Garrett county, Md.

JOHN HARNED,
Address, Post Office.

JEWELER.

A. B. WOODCOCK,
In Wm. Snouse's Building,
Watches and Clocks Cleaned and Repaired.

MILLINERY AND FANCY

GOODS.

MRS. M. E. DAVIS,
Cor. Oak & Second Sts.

M. L. SCOTT'S Baltimore Store,
Millinery, Gents' Furnishing
Main Street, Opposite Dr. McComas' office.

DRUGS AND MEDICINES.

GEO. C. STURGIS,
Drugs, Medicines,
Perfumery, Toilet articles, Stationery,
Tobacco and Cigars.

G. W. MERRILL,
Near Depot.
Pure Drugs, Medicines, Toilet Goods, Station-
ery, Cigars and Tobacco, French Candy,
Paints, Fishing Tackle, &c. Physician's prescriptions accurately compounded.

PAINTING & PAPER HANG-

ING.

E. J. FRINGER,
House and Sign Painter,
And Paper Hanger.
Leave orders at Bush's Store.

V. B. WARD,
HOUSE AND SIGN PAINTER,
Shop near Davis House.

BLACKSMITHS.

CHAS. SINCELL,
Liberty Street.

CONTRACTORS & BUILDERS.

JOHN M. JARBOE,
Carpenter, Contractor & Builder,
Residence on Liberty St., nearly oppo. Depot.

P. A. CHISHOLM,
Carpenter, Contractor,
And Builder,
Residence on Centre street.

GEO. A. SPEDDEN,
Residence oppo. School house.

JOSEPH M. CRIM,
Residence on Alder Street.

A. C. BROOKE,
Res. near Republican office.

CABINETMAKERS AND UN-

DERTAKERS.

A. C. BROOKE,
Res. adjoining Gazette office.

JOHN SHATZER,
Shop on Second Street.

II. T.

HELMBOLD'S

COMPOUND

Fluid Extract

BUCHU.

PHARMACEUTICAL

A SPECIFIC REMEDY FOR ALL

DISEASES

OF THE

BLADDER & KIDNEYS.

For Debility, Loss of Memory, Indisposi-
tion to Exertion or Business, Shortness of
Breath, Troubled with Thoughts of Disease,
Dimness of Vision, Pain in the Back, Chest,
and Head, Rush of Blood to the Head, Pale Complexion, and Dry Skin.

If these symptoms are allowed to go on,
very frequently Eclipsic Fits and Consumption follow. When the constitution becomes
affected it requires the aid of an invigorating
medicine to strengthen and tone up the system—which

"Helmhold's Buchu"

DOES IN EVERY CASE.

HELMBOLD'S BUCHU

IS UNEQUALED

by any remedy known. It is prescribed by
the most eminent physicians all over the world, in

Rheumatism,
Spermatorrhea,
Neuralgia,
Nervousness,
Dyspepsia,
Indigestion,
Constipation,
Aches and Pains,
General Debility,
Kidney Diseases,
Liver Complaint,
Nervous Debility,
Epilepsy,
Head Tremors,
Paralysis,
General Ill Health,
Spinal Diseases,
Sciatica,
Deafness,
Decline,
Lunatic,
Catarrh,
Nervous Complaints,
Female Complaints, &c.

Headache, Pain in the Shoulders, Cough,
Scurvy, Sore Throat, Eruptions, Bad
Taste in the Mouth, Palpitation of the Heart,
Pain in the region of the Kidneys, and a
thousand other painful symptoms, are the outsprings of Dyspepsia.

HELMBOLD'S BUCHU

Invigorates the Stomach.

And stimulates the torpid Liver, Bowels, and
Kidneys to healthy action, in cleansing the
blood of all impurities, and imparting new
life and vigor to the whole system.
A single trial will be quite sufficient to
convince the most hesitating of its valuable
remedial qualities.

Price $1 Per Bottle,

Or Six Bottles for $5.

Delivered to any address free from observa-
tion.
"Patients" may consult by letter, receiving
the same attention as by calling.
Competent Physicians attend to correspondence. All letters should be addressed to

H. T. HELMBOLD,

DRUGGIST AND CHEMIST,

Philadelphia, Pa.

CAUTION!

See that the private Pro-
prietary Stamp is on
each bottle.

SOLD EVERYWHERE.

my10-lyr.

INTERNATIONAL BIBLE LESSONS.

SUNDAY, JUNE 22, 1879.

CONSECRATION TO GOD.

GENERAL STATEMENT.

A century has passed since the times of the last lesson, and we are now at the close of the Old Testament history. The temple has been restored, and the cloud of sacrificial smoke arises from the altar before the porch, while the fragrant incense fills the Holy Place. The idolatry of ancient days has been purged
away by the captivity, and all bowed now worship the one God of the fathers. But new evils have arisen, a cold, hard ceremonialism, the parent of the Phariseism of the later ages; a dissatisfied, doubting skepticism, which questions the worth of worship and the fick-the blind, the lame, the torn—instead of the acceptable sacrifices. The Jews rebuke their rulers of God and unbelieving spirit, which has cursed their land with drought and famine; bids them return to their fidelity, and receive God's blessing, and holds up to their view the bright example and abundant reward of those who, amid the general neglect, are still loyal to their God and his cause.

Malachi 3, 8-18.

Memory Verses, 16-18.

8 Will a man rob God? Yet ye have robbed me. But ye say, Wherein have we robbed thee, in tithes and offerings.

9 Ye are cursed with a curse; for ye have robbed me, even this whole nation.

10 Bring ye all the tithes and the whole increase thereof, and there may be meat in mine house,
and ye may now be enriched, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open unto you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it.

11 And I will rebuke the devourer for your sakes, and he shall not destroy the fruits of your ground; neither shall your vine wither
before the time in the field, saith the Lord of hosts.

12 And all nations shall call you blessed; for ye shall be a delightful land, saith the Lord of hosts.

13 Your words have been stout against me,
saith the Lord; ye say, What have we spoken so much against thee?

14 Ye have said, It is vain to serve God: and what profit is it that we have kept his ordinance, and that we have walked mournfully
before the Lord of hosts?

15 And now we call you happy; yea, ye that say, We are not sinners: for ye have said, We will spare them, as a man spareth
his own son that serveth him.

16 Then they that feared the Lord spake often one to another, and said, Look of them
and behold it, and a book of remembrance
was written before him for them that feared
the Lord, and that thought upon his name.

17 And they shall be mine, saith the Lord,
in that day when I make up my jewels; and I will spare them, as a man spareth his own son that serveth him.

18 Then shall ye return, and discern between the righteous and the wicked, between him that serveth God and him that serveth him not.

HOME READINGS.

M. Consecration to God. Mal. 3, 8-18.

Th. Why? 1 Peter 2, 1-5.

W. What? Mal. 3, 15-22.

Fr. When? 1 Chron. 28, 1-10.

F. When? John 21, 15-21.

S. How? Luke 5, 1-11.

S. For what? Rev. 21, 1-7.

GOLDEN TEXT.

And they shall be mine, saith the Lord of hosts, in that day when I make up my jewels.
Mal. 3, 17.

LESSON HYMN, 78.

Thine forever—God of love,
Hear us from thy throne above;
Thine forever may we be,
Here and eternally.

Thine forever—thou our guide,
All our wants by thee supplied,
All our sins by thee forgiven,
Lead us, Lord, from earth to heaven.

QUESTIONS ON THE OUTLINE.

1. A SERIOUS CHARGE, V. 8, 9. Prov. 3, 9, 10.
What charge is made against the sinner?

2. What is meant by robbing God?

3. How did they rob God? How can we rob God?

4. What is meant by tithes and offerings?

5. What is the duty of God to us?

6. A GRACIOUS OFFER, V. 10-15; Deut. 28, 12.
What command is given by God?

7. What gracious offer is made by the Lord?

8. How will the Lord be glorified? And why?

9. How will the nations treat those who honor God?

10. How had the people spoken against God?

11. What charge has come upon the proud?

12. And the wicked? And the tempted?

13. A FULFILLING PROMISE, V. 16-18; Ezek. 36.
What did they who feared the Lord do?

14. What should all do who fear God?

15. Who heard and remembered their words?

16. What precious promise is given in the Golden Text?

17. What further promises is given them?

18. Is this promise to us as well as to them?

19. What knowledge is given to those who fear God?

TEACHINGS OF THE LESSON.

Where in this lesson do we learn—

1. That robbery of God brings a curse?

2. That consecration to God brings a bless-
ing?

3. That the service of God has a reward?

WORDS WITH LITTLE FOLKS.

1. Give liberally to God's cause. 2. Talk often with those that fear God. 3. Be among God's precious jewels.

Thou shalt also be a crown of glory in the hand of the Lord. Isa. 62, 3.

DOCTRINAL SUGGESTION—The acceptable sacrifice.

ADDITIONAL PRACTICAL LESSONS.

1. God has a claim on men, to neglect which is to defraud him of his just rights. V. 8.

2. All that we have belongs to God, and by our offerings we recognize him as our Lord and proprietor. V. 9.

3. To neglect God is just claim upon us is to bring down his displeasure and his curse. V. 9.

4. Those who give God a faithful service will receive an abundant blessing. V. 10.

5. The blessedness of those who serve God may be seen by the world's people. V. 12.

6. Our service of God should be loyal and sincere, with a deep, selfless love. V. 13.

7. Our service will be aided by a spirit of love, helpfulness, encouragement, and communion of saints.

From the Harp of Okolona.

From the Mississippi Okolona States, June 4.

We like the snap and jingle of the speeches that a majority of our Confederate brigadiers made in the present Congress.

They will do it a dot, as far as they go, but they hardly go far enough. They leave a little too much to be understood by intuition.

But wait till our President takes his seat in 1881.

The way that the Capitol will then ring and reverberate with Okolona melodies will be a caution to Lincoln
blacklegs and Southern scatterbreds.

The Federal brigadiers went forth
to battle against our sovereign States.

They tried to riddle our government with rifle-balls.

They thereby committed treason—
the highest crime that is known to the laws of the Lord and man.

They forfeited their right to everything under the sun, save and except the rope of the hangman.

The fact is, no case has yet been found since the war was fairly over where any one person has been deprived of the right to vote by the military. — Gen. J. A. Garfield.

Why?

Because when you sent your soldiers here we made them keep at a respectful distance from the polls.

If they had tried to interfere with the elections in your sovereign States, their lives would have paid
the forfeit.

And they know it.

Let your Federal hirelings disobey
the orders of our people if they dare.

Do you think, ye bastard Democrats of Yankeeedom, that we have one tithing of the love and veneration
for the Union that we had for the old Confederacy?

Do you think that we feel one tittle of the deep devotion for the star-spangled banner that we feel for the Bonny Blue?

Do you think that we have the slightest respect for the beastly Radical laws that blot and blacken your statute books?

You are fools or knaves if you answer in the affirmative—blind fools
or besotted knaves.

For every drop of Southern blood
that was spilled by your Lincoln murderers we will have revenge.

For every Southern roof-tree that was fired by your Lincoln incendiaries we will have revenge.

For every Southern dollar that was stolen by your Lincoln thieves we will have revenge.

For every insult and outrage that we suffered at the hands of your Lincoln mud-sills we will have revenge.

The perpetuity of the Union, as far as Dixie is concerned, depends upon the supremacy of our sentiments.

The triumph of States rights and White Supremacy may possibly lead to the secession of Yankeeedom,
but the triumph of Centralism and negro domination will positively lead to the destruction of this Confederacy of States.

Our people will never acknowledge that the Federal Government is a Nation, and they will march with bare feet through gore and fire because they will again bow to the rule of the wretched blacks.

Try your strong government and a Dictator, if you dare.

The former will be broken up in ten minutes by the watch, and the latter will be put to bed with a pick and spade before his honors are a day old.

"Perhaps the States of Okolona
would like to have Yankeeedom howl as she did in 1861-5. — Tonawanda (N. Y.)
Index.

Let 'er howl.

The South isn't caring a continental

At least 500,000 of your blacklegs
in blue were shot down to the death in 1861-5.

Perhaps you feel like sparing un-
other half million of your arrant
thieves and cut-throats.

How is it?

You are taxed and impoverished
until one sublime, terrible, universal squalor is rising from your ranks.

That is part of the price you are paying for the invasion of our sacred soil.

Do you think that you can stand a debt of $250,000,000 on top of your present liabilities?

How is it?

Oh, make your threats! but since we have recaptured the reins of our State governments we have been whooping along toward prosperity

and power at a hand-gallop.

We can stand another fight if you can—glory to God!

Unconditional Surrender.

The back down of the Democrats in respect to two of the bills which they asserted their determination to insist upon "to the bitter end," is now complete. They have passed the Legislative Appropriation bill without any of the political conditions originally demanded so stubbornly as to render necessary an extra session and a subsequent veto.

In fact, the bill was put into such shape that no Republican voted against it, and the twenty-two negative votes were all cast by the "last ditch" Democrats. It will be understood by the country that this unconditional surrender by the majority of the Democrats was not more meritorious than that of the rebels at Fort Donelson. The "last ditch" leaders were those who originally controlled the Democratic caucus,
caused the extra session and committed the party to the plan of coercing
the Executive or stopping the wheels of Government. Then the extremists had a large majority of the Democrats with them, and the entire party
consented to be ruled by the caucus.

But the successive vetoes, coming
like solid shot from the White House,
and the strong expression of popular indignation, finally drove a portion of the Democrats to mutiny against the rule of the caucus. It became certain that their votes would be cast
against its revolutionary programme,
and in sufficient number, with the Republican votes, to insure the passage of proper appropriation bills.

Then the majority made a virtue of necessity. It resolved to back down, and sent a committee to explore the ground, and to discover some path
by which the party could crawl out.
The Legislative bill, as it was passed by the House, was one product of this exploration; and the fact that all the Republicans voted for it, while twenty-two Democrats voted against it, is proof that the coercive and revolutionary plan has, in that particular, been completely defeated.

The proceedings as to the Army bill were still more discreditable to the Democrats. The bill originally passed, as the President's veto showed, was intended to deprive the Government of all power to employ its military force in enforcing its election laws, or in sustaining its officials in the prevention of fraud or violence at the polls. This was the measure which the Democratic caucus solemnly resolved to insist upon as a condition of the further support of the Army. When the majority found that it could not hold itself together in the attempt to coerce the Executive, the committee of exploration framed a bill which merely prohibits the use of troops "as a police at the polls." Inasmuch as no Republican of any sort or shade has ever desired to have a single soldier employed in that way, the bill was satisfactory to the Republicans of the House. But the measure did not seem to have been satisfactory to the Democrats, seventeen of whom voted against its passage.

Ohio German Democrats.

The well-known German Democratic newspaper, the Cincinnati Volkblatt, says of the Ohio Democratic ticket: "The meaning of General Ewing's nomination is too
clear to need a lengthy explanation.
By it the Democratic party of Ohio
again places itself on the ground which it occupied in 1875, and to which, after a brilliant victory it

The Republican.

JAS. A. HAYDEN, Publisher.
OAKLAND, GARRETT CO., MD.

POEM BY HOLMES.

A BEAUTIFUL, LITTLE DELICATELY MADE
EXQUISITE JEWELRY IN STOCK.

Explainer of Erin, whose magic has bound us,
Thy wand for one moment we fondly would Entrusted while it summons the phantoms
Of the past into life at the sound of thy name.

The tell-tales of memory wake from their slumbers—
I hear the old song with its tender refrain—
What passion lies hid in those honey-voiced numbers!

What perfume of youth in each exquisite strain!

The home of my childhood comes back as a vision—
Hark! Hark! A soft chord from its song-haunted room—
The strings in bud and the lute in bloom—
We are clustered around the "Clementi" piano—
There were six of us then—there are two of us now—
She is singing—the girl with the silver soprano—
How "The Lord of the Valley" was false to the bow.

"Let Erin remember," the echoes are calling—Through "The Vale of Avon" the waters are falling—
"The Exile" laments while the night-dews are falling—
"The Morning of Life" dwells again as of old.

But all these warm love-songs of fresh adolescence—
Around in such raptures celestial they flung Themselves—
The scorching lips of the maiden
that sang!

Long hushed are the chords that my boyhood enchanted—
As when the smooth wave by the angel was stirred—
Yet still with their music is memory haunted—
And oft in my dreams are their melodies heard.

I feel like the priest to his altar returning—
The crowd that was kneeling to bow in there,
The flame that was burning, but the flames are still burning—
And saffron and cinnamon sweeten the air.

The veil for her bridal young Summer is weav-
ing—
In her azure-dressed hall with its tapestried floor—
And Spring the last tendrils of May-dew is leaving—
On the daisy of Binnis and the shamrock of Munster.

How like, how unlike, as we view them together,
The song of the minstrel who record we hear—
One fresh as the breeze blowing over the heathland—
One sweet as the breath from an olden pipe's flute!

Ah, passion can glow 'mid a palace's splendor;
The cage does not alter the song of the bird;
And the carmine of silk has known whispers as tender—
As over the blossoming Hawthorn has heard.

No fear lest the steps of the soft-shuffled, green
Should fright the young loves from their warm
little nest—
For the heart of a queen, under jewels and lace,
Beats true with the pulse in the peasant-girl's bosom!

Thrice welcome each gift of kind Nature's bestowing—
Her fountain sends little this golden we hold;
Alike, when its music is flowing,
The shell from the seaside, the chalice of gold.

The twins of the lily to her voices had listened;
Both laid their last gifts upon Liberty's shrine—
For Colin's loved minstrel the holly-entwined glitter—
For Erin's the rose and the myrtle entwined.

And while the fresh blossoms of summer are
leaving—
For the sun-gilded, stream-silvered, lake-jewels—
While her mantle of verdure is worn unfaded, While Summer and Lullaby sleep dimpled and smile.

The land where the staff of Saint Patrick was planted,
Where the shamrock grows green from the cliffs to the shore,
Where the meadows are fair and the men are un-
danted,
Shall exult with her bright harp with the parades
of Moore!

A MOTHER'S HEART.

It was all over. But all of that lay folded down and covered up in the heart of Mrs. Fleetwood, none knew or could know but herself alone.

"You are a happy mother," one had said to her at the close of the ceremony, when the sweet young face of the bride was unveiled, "happy in so good and lovely a daughter, and in her union with one so worthy to possess her hand." How almost strangely the words had sounded in her ears. Happy.

It was over. The windows had been thrown open, the lights turned out, and the refreshments served. Then came a hurried change of attire; orange blossoms, and lilac veil, and spotless robes were laid aside for the plain traveling dress. How swiftly it all passed!

Swiftly as the changes in a troubled dream. One strong clasp to the matterial bosom; one clinging embrace of the daughter's arms; a moment's resting of the bride's cheek on the breast
where it might never lie as of old again,
and then, and then!

"It's the way with them all," said
one of the guests, speaking with light indifference as he remarked on the mother's pale face and wet eyes, out of which she had striven, oh! so hard, to keep the grief. "It's the way with them all. Crying is a part of the programme."

"I couldn't have worn a face like that if the bride had been my daughter," said another of the guests. "Men like George Cleveland are not picked up every day. But we mothers are selfish, and it's a great trial to have somebody else come in between us and our children, whom we have loved and cared for from babyhood—who are bone of our bone and flesh of our flesh—and to be set aside as having no longer any property in them, or right to claim the smallest service. To be second where we have always been first. To have the love, which had once been all our own, divided, and the larger share given to another. Ah, me! It's a little too closely set, and has nothing of that womanly softness which is the sign of a kindly nature, and which you so often see in men of nobleness and great strength of character. Everybody speaks well of him, as a young man of good principles, and as one who is bound to make his way in the world.

But if I read his face aright he lacks a tender and generous spirit. He will love his own, but he will be apt to love
it very selfishly. Poor Mrs. Fleetwood!
Her face, as I saw it after she had kissed Maria for the last time, and her child had turned away from her to go with her husband, hunts me as faces I have sometimes seen in pictures."

Yes, it was over. The day and the hour to which Mrs. Fleetwood had looked forward for so many months with a failing heart, had come and wrought its change in the whole order of her own and her daughter's life. It had been happiness to give the best that was in her—love, care, devotion—everything for the sake of her beloved child. And in the beautiful unfolding of this precious human flower, its exquisite grace and perfection, and the sweet perfume of its love had been all for her. But now, when beauty, grace and sweetness had gained their full perfection, another hand had plucked her flower and carried it away.

Poor mother! She couldn't help herself. And she had tried and was still trying so hard to get control out of the thought that Maria was going to be very happy—happy, as she had been in the days of her own early wedded life, the joy of which still lived in her heart as one of its most precious memories.

Our hands are not skilled enough to hold back the tears, and uncover her heart; we can only let you see it beating against the close investiture, under which she is trying, but in vain, to conceal its throbbing pulse.

"Dearest mother," So the brief
epistle read. It was two days after Maria had gone away. "Dearest mother: I snatch a moment to write
you. I'm well and happy; so happy George is hurrying me to go out with
him, and I can only give you a line or
two. Good-bye! a thousand kisses from your loving daughter, "MARIE."

Trembling hands and tear-filled eyes made the letter hard to read. Was the mother happier after its reading? Did it comfort her? Was anything supplied to the aching void of her heart?

We fear not. There was the sweetness of honey in the hastily-scrawled letter,
and the bitterness of aloes as well.
George is hurrying me to go out with
him, and I can only give you a line or two." Ah, more was hidden in that brief sentence than Marie had thought,
or she would never have let it drop from her pen, to be forgotten by her self, and as soon as written. It came to her mother as the first sad confirmation of her fears. The young husband meant that his possession should be complete. The brief wedding ceremony had severed the old bond, and the absolute the old relations. The daughter must now be lost in the wife.

So she read the sentence and it lay upon her heart like a great stone.

Two weeks since the brief wedding ceremony was over. The brief letter which had come from Marie were full
of loving words hastily written; but in
each expression of endearment the
mother's eyes saw something which
gave a dash of bitterness to the cup she
was drinking to her lips; something which told her that the new way into
which Marie's feet had turned was already losing its parallel with her.

She might have known how it would
be, and in truth, did know, for Mrs.
Fleetwood was neither weak nor blind,
but mother-love was the intense passion
which had ruled her life, and absorbed
the future a stronger than filial love would
take possession of her daughter's heart,
and the absolute the old relations. Marie
would turn from her and give possibilities dimly seen and invested with a dreamy kind of romance. For her beautiful child, fancy, when it turned that
way, had pictured an ideal man, and
not as she was pure and lovely; a
man who, grateful for the gift of so precious a thing, would cherish her for the tenderest regard and give her the added blessing of a considerate and true
son. It was this vision that had been times when another picture, truer to her
weak and selfish human nature, had
suddenly spread itself before her eyes;
and the sight of it had made her heart
sick, and cast a shadow around her
from which she could never wholly emerge.

That George Cleveland was not her
ideal man, it did not take Mrs. Fleetwood long to discover. He had been entertained, and she had seen, and
subject before she gave her reluctant
consent to her marriage, no long time
had passed before an engagement ring
had been placed on Marie's finger, before they were dispelled. And then
there had been a change in the young man's bearing toward her; but to her
more subtle and jealous observation, the signs of indifference too surely became visible. The little courtesies
and attentions which the young man
had been so quick to offer, began to
have less warmth and freedom in them,
and were sometimes omitted altogether.
He was not so ready to defer to her
tastes and opinions, and did not listen
when she talked, with the old apparent
interest. So it went on month after month, each day giving its new revelation of the truth, and making it plainer
and plainer to Mrs. Fleetwood that,
while loving the daughter, and that there
would never exist between them any
true relation of confidence of affection.

But Marie had come back to the old home again? Not so! The old home
was large enough; had many unfiled
chambers; but the young husband
wanted his beloved all to himself. So
he made her a home in which they might dwell together and be happy in themselves alone.

To share any of his blessings with another, and so increase his capacity for
still higher enjoyment was something
out of the range of Cleveland's philosophy. What he had made his own, so
to speak, was his own, to hold and enjoy for himself alone. Marie was now
his wife, and in becoming his wife, her
old duties and relations as a daughter
had come to an end. In marrying the daughter there had been no intention
on his part to assume any obligations
in regard to the mother. The question
did not even come up in his mind for debate. Indeed, it was not his habit to discuss questions involving duty.
Others must take care of themselves as he was taking care of himself. He had gained for his wife one of the purest,
truest and sweetest of women, and he

was happy in the possession of so rich
a blessing. But he had never thought
of putting himself in the mother's
place, and trying to imagine what
would be her sense of loss, what her
loneliness and desolation of spirit, when
the light of her life would be taken
away from her.

Alone, with her desolate and aching
heart, Mrs. Fleetwood began the difficult task of adjusting herself to these
new conditions. Were the reserve
forces still in her possession strong enough for the work? Could a life
which had flowed on in a sweet rhythm
for twenty years be suddenly arrested
in its course and turned into a new and
strange channel, ever move on again
to the old freedom and delight? Not so! The mother hid her heart as best
she could, and tried to rally herself and
put on the semblance of a resigned and contented spirit. And Marie was so happy in her new home, and in the love
of her husband, that she did not see
what others saw in the face of her
widowed and now almost childless
mother, a fading and a falling that
made themselves more and more visible
as the weeks and months went on.

Ah, had not the mother been wounded
in her love—in her very life. Out of husband was away from home. Now
and then, at remote intervals, he went
with Marie to see her in the evening,
and put on a kind of pretense of caring
for her; but though he said pleasant
words, an ear acute to discern every
sign of grief, could perceive
no heart in them, listen though it often
did with a hungry longing for the love
and tender considerations which were denied. Not that Mrs. Fleetwood ever
annoyed him with ungracious intru-
sions of herself, or made herself disagreeable in any way. He was simply indifferent; had never taken her into account, and never meant to. If she had been in any personal or pecuniary
relations with him, and for the sake
of appearances, he would have supplied
all her necessities. But for any higher claim he had no recognition. The tender and sentimental side of his nature
had received so far in life but little exercise.

One day a lady who had known him
intimately for so many years that she
had acquired the privilege of plain
speaking, asked with some concern
his voice, if Mrs. Fleetwood had been sick.

"I presume not," was the rather
cool reply.
"When did you see her last inquired
the lady.

The young man lifted his eyes to the ceiling in a half indifferent way, and after reflecting for a moment or two
said:

"Really, Mrs. Ray, I cannot just remember when it was. The brief letter
which had come from Marie were full
of loving words hastily written; but in
each expression of endearment the
mother's eyes saw something which
gave a dash of bitterness to the cup she
was drinking to her lips; something
which told her that the new way into
which Marie's feet had turned was already losing its parallel with her.

She might have known how it would
be, and in truth, did know, for Mrs.
Fleetwood was neither weak nor blind,
but mother-love was the intense passion
which had ruled her life, and absorbed
the future a stronger than filial love would
take possession of her daughter's heart,
and the absolute the old relations. Marie
would turn from her and give possibilities dimly seen and invested with a dreamy kind of romance. For her beautiful child, fancy, when it turned that
way, had pictured an ideal man, and
not as she was pure and lovely; a
man who, grateful for the gift of so pre-
cious a thing, would cherish her for the
tenderest regard and give her the added blessing of a considerate and true
son. It was this vision that had been
times when another picture, truer to her
weak and selfish human nature, had
suddenly spread itself before her eyes;
and the sight of it had made her heart
sick, and cast a shadow around her
from which she could never wholly
emerge.

That George Cleveland was not her
ideal man, it did not take Mrs. Fleetwood long to discover. He had been entertained, and she had seen, and
subject before she gave her reluctant
consent to her marriage, no long time
had passed before an engagement ring
had been placed on Marie's finger, before they were dispelled. And then
there had been a change in the young
man's bearing toward her; but to her
more subtle and jealous observation, the signs of indifference too surely
became visible. The little courtesies
and attentions which the young man
had been so quick to offer, began to
have less warmth and freedom in them,
and were sometimes omitted altogether.
He was not so ready to defer to her
tastes and opinions, and did not listen
when she talked, with the old apparent
interest. So it went on month after
month, each day giving its new revelation of the truth, and making it plainer
and plainer to Mrs. Fleetwood that,
while loving the daughter, and that there
would never exist between them any
true relation of confidence of affection.

But Marie had come back to the old
home again? Not so! The old home
was large enough; had many unfiled
chambers; but the young husband
wanted his beloved all to himself. So
he made her a home in which they
might dwell together and be happy in
themselves alone.

To share any of his blessings with an-
other, and so increase his capacity for
still higher enjoyment was something
out of the range of Cleveland's philosophy. What he had made his own, so
to speak, was his own, to hold and enjoy for himself alone. Marie was now
his wife, and in becoming his wife, her
old duties and relations as a daughter
had come to an end. In marrying the
daughter there had been no intention
on his part to assume any obligations
in regard to the mother. The question
did not even come up in his mind for
debate. Indeed, it was not his habit to discuss questions involving duty.
Others must take care of themselves as
he was taking care of himself. He had gained for his wife one of the purest,
truest and sweetest of women, and he

was happy in the possession of so rich
a blessing. But he had never thought
of putting himself in the mother's
place, and trying to imagine what
would be her sense of loss, what her
loneliness and desolation of spirit, when
the light of her life would be taken
away from her.

Alone, with her desolate and aching
heart, Mrs. Fleetwood began the difficult task of adjusting herself to these
new conditions. Were the reserve
forces still in her possession strong
enough for the work? Could a life
which had flowed on in a sweet rhythm
for twenty years be suddenly arrested
in its course and turned into a new and
strange channel, ever move on again
to the old freedom and delight? Not
so! The mother hid her heart as best
she could, and tried to rally herself and
put on the semblance of a resigned and
contented spirit. And Marie was so
happy in her new home, and in the love
of her husband, that she did not see
what others saw in the face of her
widowed and now almost childless
mother, a fading and a falling that
made themselves more and more visible
as the weeks and months went on.

Ah, had not the mother been wounded
in her love—in her very life. Out of husband was away from home. Now
and then, at remote intervals, he went
with Marie to see her in the evening,
and put on a kind of pretense of caring
for her; but though he said pleasant
words, an ear acute to discern every
sign of grief, could perceive
no heart in them, listen though it often
did with a hungry longing for the love
and tender considerations which were
denied. Not that Mrs. Fleetwood ever
annoyed him with ungracious intru-
sions of herself, or made herself disagreeable in any way. He was simply indifferent; had never taken her into account, and never meant to. If she had been in any personal or pecuniary
relations with him, and for the sake
of appearances, he would have supplied
all her necessities. But for any higher
claim he had no recognition. The tender and sentimental side of his nature
had received so far in life but little
exercise.

One day a lady who had known him
intimately for so many years that she
had acquired the privilege of plain
speaking, asked with some concern
his voice, if Mrs. Fleetwood had been sick.

"I presume not," was the rather
cool reply.
"When did you see her last inquired
the lady.

The young man lifted his eyes to the ceiling in a half indifferent way, and
after reflecting for a moment or two
said:

"Really, Mrs. Ray, I cannot just remember when it was. The brief letter
which had come from Marie were full
of loving words hastily written; but in
each expression of endearment the
mother's eyes saw something which
gave a dash of bitterness to the cup she
was drinking to her lips; something
which told her that the new way into
which Marie's feet had turned was already losing its parallel with her.

She might have known how it would
be, and in truth, did know, for Mrs.
Fleetwood was neither weak nor blind,
but mother-love was the intense passion
which had ruled her life, and absorbed
the future a stronger than filial love would
take possession of her daughter's heart,
and the absolute the old relations. Marie
would turn from her and give possibilities dimly seen and invested with a dreamy kind of romance. For her beautiful child, fancy, when it turned that
way, had pictured an ideal man, and
not as she was pure and lovely; a
man who, grateful for the gift of so pre-
cious a thing, would cherish her for the
tenderest regard and give her the added blessing of a considerate and true
son. It was this vision that had been
times when another picture, truer to her
weak and selfish human nature, had
suddenly spread itself before her eyes;
and the sight of it had made her heart
sick, and cast a shadow around her
from which she could never wholly
emerge.

That George Cleveland was not her
ideal man, it did not take Mrs. Fleetwood long to discover. He had been entertained, and she had seen, and
subject before she gave her reluctant
consent to her marriage, no long time
had passed before an engagement ring
had been placed on Marie's finger, before they were dispelled. And then
there had been a change in the young
man's bearing toward her; but to her
more subtle and jealous observation, the signs of indifference too surely
became visible. The little courtesies
and attentions which the young man
had been so quick to offer, began to
have less warmth and freedom in them,
and were sometimes omitted altogether.
He was not so ready to defer to her
tastes and opinions, and did not listen
when she talked, with the old apparent
interest. So it went on month after
month, each day giving its new revelation of the truth, and making it plainer
and plainer to Mrs. Fleetwood that,
while loving the daughter, and that there
would never exist between them any
true relation of confidence of affection.

But Marie had come back to the old
home again? Not so! The old home
was large enough; had many unfiled
chambers; but the young husband
wanted his beloved all to himself. So
he made her a home in which they
might dwell together and be happy in
themselves alone.

To share any of his blessings with an-
other, and so increase his capacity for
still higher enjoyment was something
out of the range of Cleveland's philosophy. What he had made his own, so
to speak, was his own, to hold and enjoy for himself alone. Marie was now
his wife, and in becoming his wife, her
old duties and relations as a daughter
had come to an end. In marrying the
daughter there had been no intention
on his part to assume any obligations
in regard to the mother. The question
did not even come up in his mind for
debate. Indeed, it was not his habit to discuss questions involving duty.
Others must take care of themselves as
he was taking care of himself. He had gained for his wife one of the purest,
truest and sweetest of women, and he

was happy in the possession of so rich
a blessing. But he had never thought
of putting himself in the mother's
place, and trying to imagine what
would be her sense of loss, what her
loneliness and desolation of spirit, when
the light of her life would be taken
away from her.

Alone, with her desolate and aching
heart, Mrs. Fleetwood began the difficult task of adjusting herself to these
new conditions. Were the reserve
forces still in her possession strong
enough for the work? Could a life
which had flowed on in a sweet rhythm
for twenty years be suddenly arrested
in its course and turned into a new and
strange channel, ever move on again
to the old freedom and delight? Not
so! The mother hid her heart as best
she could, and tried to rally herself and
put on the semblance of a resigned and
contented spirit. And Marie was so
happy in her new home, and in the love
of her husband, that she did not see
what others saw in the face of her
widowed and now almost childless
mother, a fading and a falling that
made themselves more and more visible
as the weeks and months went on.

Ah, had not the mother been wounded
in her love—in her very life. Out of husband was away from home. Now
and then, at remote intervals, he went
with Marie to see her in the evening,
and put on a kind of pretense of caring
for her; but though he said pleasant
words, an ear acute to discern every
sign of grief, could perceive
no heart in them, listen though it often
did with a hungry longing for the love
and tender considerations which were
denied. Not that Mrs. Fleetwood ever
annoyed him with ungracious intru-
sions of herself, or made herself disagreeable in any way. He was simply indifferent; had never taken her into account, and never meant to. If she had been in any personal or pecuniary
relations with him, and for the sake
of appearances, he would have supplied
all her necessities. But for any higher
claim he had no recognition. The tender and sentimental side of his nature
had received so far in life but little
exercise.

One day a lady who had known him
intimately for so many years that she
had acquired the privilege of plain
speaking, asked with some concern
his voice, if Mrs. Fleetwood had been sick.

"I presume not," was the rather
cool reply.
"When did you see her last inquired
the lady.

The young man lifted his eyes to the ceiling in a half indifferent way, and
after reflecting for a moment or two
said:

"Really, Mrs. Ray, I cannot just remember when it was. The brief letter
which had come from Marie were full
of loving words hastily written; but in
each expression of endearment the
mother's eyes saw something which
gave a dash of bitterness to the cup she
was drinking to her lips; something
which told her that the new way into
which Marie's feet had turned was already losing its parallel with her.

"No time telling when she will turn from you and go to mother."
"Go to mother!" There came a flash out of the clouds that swept into the young man's face.

"And she went from her mother to you."
For a little while a silence fell between them. Swift changes were passing in Cleveland's face.

"From the mother?" resumed Mrs.
Ray, "who bore her in pain, and cared for and nurtured her through all the years of her hopeless infancy and childhood. From her mother who watched over her with a gentle solicitude, and a tireless devotion all along the path of her life, guarding her from evil, and drawing towards her all the ministries of good within her reach, and moulding and fashioning her with a wisdom of a love which no man's heart can measure or comprehend into a being of such loveliness that your heart bowed down before her as if she had been an angel. From this mother she went to you! Was as nothing hurt in the transition? Were no clouds rent?
No heart stricken? No life made desolate? Think of her going from her to you!"

George Cleveland sat as one who had been stunned by a sudden shock.

"And think," continued the lady,
"of a man accepting this transfer without a cold 'thank you,' and then turning away from the giver without a touch of gratitude, or the feeblest sense
of obligation in his heart!"

"When did you see your mother, Marie?" asked Cleveland, as he looked at her table at his wife that evening.
There was a new quality in his voice.
A something that caused her to look at him intently.

"She was here yesterday," Marie answered.

"How is she?" The interest expressed in her husband's voice sent a quicker thrill to Marie's heart.

"About as usual."
"Some one said that she was not looking very well," said Marie, as she looked at her husband's face.

"The young man saw a change in Marie's countenance. Swift as the movement of a thought had the inner and now clearer sight of the draught passed to the mother's face—the face that Marie had looked with her natural eyes, on the day before. How much more she saw in it now than then? No, she was not looking well. A feeling of anxiety crept into her heart and began to shadow her face.

"Here must be very lonely now
that I'm away from her," said Marie,
a slight quiver in her voice. "I wonder,
sometimes, that she's as cheerful as she is."

"Yes, it must be a great change for her—greater, perhaps, than we have realized," remarked her husband, speaking in repressed tones, as one
trying to hide some feeling.

Little more was said during the meal.
But, unconsciously, in their own thoughts—thoughts which neither was ready to unveil to the other.

"Suppose we call around and see your mother this evening," said the young husband as they rose from the table.
"We haven't been there for I can't say how long."

"O! shall we? I've been wanting to see her all day. Poor mother! I often think how lonely her life must be. She was quieter than usual when she was here yesterday, and didn't take as much interest in things as she had been in the habit of doing. And now I remember that it struck me once or twice that she had an expression in her face which I never saw before, and which I did not understand."

No, Marie had not understood the meaning of what she saw in her mother's face at their last meeting. The alliance of her own life had given her no means by which to estimate or determine the poverty of her mother's life. Feeding herself upon the manna of love, and with its rich juice coursing
through her veins, how could she know that her mother was wasting from starvation because food had been withdrawn and denied—the food of the heart.

"Mother!" The heavy eyelids unclosed and lifted themselves looking at the table at his wife that evening.
He had been asleep in the great armchair, or only lost in a waking dream
of her old delight?

"O, mother! My dear, dear mother!"
What a wild passion of love expressed itself in Marie's voice as she drew her arm around her mother's neck and held her face closely to her bosom.

When strong feeling had died away,
and the mother sat quiet in her chair
and Marie's eyes, clearer for the tears
which had blinded them, met her face,
she looked steadily into her face, its paleness smote her with a sudden fear.
And how wasted it seemed! How transparent the skin! How strange and wistful and hungry the eyes that never turned from their intent gaze into yawns for a moment!

"Mother!" It was George Cleveland who uttered the word. He had never called her mother before. No son could have spoken it more tenderly.
He bent down and laid a kiss upon her forehead. How swiftly her eyes turned from Marie's face to his. What the young man saw in them was a parable only the closer and lower meaning of which were then understood. They held his gaze steadily for while, looking through his very soul; then the lids shut softly down and something of peace and restful quiet gathered in the colorless face and about the tranquil mouth. As she sat thus, George Cleveland looked steadily into her face. Ten minutes later there came the sound of wheels at the door.

"Mother!" The young man was standing over Mrs. Fleetwood again.
"Mother! you are going home."
The words were said in a low, steady voice, with no hidden meaning in the parable of his voice.

There was no strength left for any thing. Thought and will were pended for a time, and she could only feel and submit. In the strong arms that took her up and bore her to the carriage, she felt a tender pressure;
and in the voice whose tones had been so cold to her ears—sometimes striking her with words the pain of which went deeper than the pain of any blow—
she recognized peace to her broken
heart.

"Mother," said the young man, as he sat alone with Mrs. Fleetwood a few days afterward, when the light and warmth were beginning to come back from her heart into her face. "I have never thanked you for the greatest blessing of my life; for the gain which has been your loss. Let me do so now.

If, in my selfishness, I have forgotten to be grateful, it shall never be so again.
I owe more to you than to any one living. God bless and reward you!
There is room in Marie's heart for both of us."—T. S. Arthur.

A Convict's Life in a Siberian Quick-silver Mine.

BEFORE I had been there six months
my beautiful auburn locks were as white
as possible, when they were not smothered in the dirt of the mine. In another six months every hair on my body was gone, and I showed symptoms of salivation. There was no escape from the mine; the prisoners worked on there hopelessly entombed till they died.
Five years was considered a long life
there, some did not live more than two years. It

THE REPUBLICAN.

OAKLAND, MARYLAND.

JAS. A. HAYDEN,
Editor and Proprietor.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.
One copy, one year, $1.50
Six months, .75
Three months, .40
Invariably in advance.

TERMS OF ADVERTISING.
First insertion, $1 per square of 8 lines;
50 cents per square for each additional insertion. Special contracts for advertising longer than three months.

Correspondents must enclose full name and address, and necessarily for publication, but as a private guarantee of good faith. Unpublished communications will not be returned.

SAURDAY, JUNE 21, 1879.

Facts vs. Cheek.

It is amusing to read the quarrel of the Democratic papers of this country over the "glory" of last Fall's election in the county. With its usual egotism, one claims that all the "glory" of that election is solely due to its individual efforts and influence—which, considering its circulation and the ability with which it is edited, is a very probable (?) result. The other claims that the county has always been Democratic and that "the fact of a few Republicans being elected to office was the result of local causes, in which the ballot failed to speak the true political sentiments of the voter and became the reflex of his sectional prejudices." These claims remind us of the impudent John G. Thompson who, when chairman of the Executive Committee of the Democratic party of Ohio would, on the eve of election, telegraph, in cipher, to the chairmen of the subordinate committees throughout the State, "Ignore all reports and facts, and claim everything." The Democratic journalists of this county are following the example of this illustrious chieftain, who is now sergeant-at-arms to that congregation of loyal and battle-scarred rebel brigadiers at Washington, and with as much cheeky impudence as he could command, are ignoring facts that are well known to all the citizens of this county. A review of the political history of the county will show a Republican victory at each and every election previous to last fall, when the carelessness of Republican voters permitted this glorious majority of 2 to be rolled up by the great Democratic party; and the reference to, and parade of, this wonderful 2 reminds us of the man who held a quarter so close to his eye that he could not see the moon and then swore that the quarter was larger than the moon; and these journals are hugging that wonderful 2 so close to their eyes that it shuts out all previous results; behind it they cannot see that out of four Sheriffs elected in this county there have been Republican; that the Board of County Commissioners has always been Republican, as also the Orphans' Court and Clerk of the Court, and that the only Democrats ever elected owed their election entirely to sectional prejudices. They hold up the present State's Attorney, and want to know whether his election was a Republican victory? Well, no, not exactly; at least we don't like to think so, but then you know, circumstances alter cases sometimes. Mr. Veitch was elected, we admit, but was it a victory? Yes, such a victory as the boy achieved who came home from school and proudly proclaimed that he "got head that day." "Why how was that?" enquired his dotting parent. "Why, you see, there's only Bill Johnson and me in the class, and Bill staid at home to-day and I got head;" and that is the way with Mr. Veitch—nobody ran in opposition to him and he was elected by a large majority; in fact, it was all majority, and now he wears his laurels with the pride and dignity of a conquering hero, and these journals point to this as a glorious achievement.

Such victories as these and the glorious 2 are all that the Democratic party in this county have to boast of; but they do the cause full justice—and a little more.

In 1876, when the contest was a warm one, and the vote a test, the Republican ticket had a majority of 70, which establishes beyond a doubt that, upon a full vote, the county is largely Republican.

In 1878, more than 110 Republicans did not vote; about 70 Democrats did not vote; there were 52 Greenback votes cast, and the Democratic ticket had a plurality of 2; which shows the county to be, after deducting the 70 Democrats who did not vote and the wonderful 2, Republican by 68, to which may be added nearly all of the 52 Greenback votes, which are well known to have come from the Republican strength. Here in this district, where one would naturally suppose these journals would have influence, if they have anywhere, there was a Democratic loss of 19; and these 19 now vote and work with the Republican party. So, gentlemen, you needn't quarrel over the "glory" of last fall. You'll have no reason for further differences on that score. We will roll up such a majority next fall that you will forget you ever had the glorious 2.

But we want to urge our voters to the necessity of going out; we want every vote this fall; not that we need them all to elect our ticket, but we want to roll up such a majority as will settle these cheeky claimers for all time to come. We say to you, Republicans, go to the primaries, not as an "armed foe," unless you be armed with a determination to send good and true men to our Convention; men who will nominate a ticket that will draw out every vote; men of character, worth and integrity. Let every Republican determine to cast his ballot, the most powerful of all arms in a republic, where it will tell. Let no Republican this fall run the risk of having to say after the election, as was the case in 1878, "if I had voted, the result would not have been thus." Your duty calls you to the primaries first and to the polls afterward. Fulfill that duty to a man. Swerve not, but go where duty calls even if it is at your individual cost or inconvenience. Let us see this fall if we cannot take the "glory" and let that "glory" be more than a paltry plurality of 2.

The German Vote.

In 1876, 70 per cent. of the German-Americans in New York believed in Tilden and reform, so called, and voted the Democratic ticket. Now they stand by the platform of "national authority in all national matters, and the honest performance of the plighted faith of the nation." The German Republican declares its belief that 90 per cent. of the Germans of New York and the whole Union will this year support the Republican ticket. On the main questions of the supremacy of the national government and the payment of just debts, the Germans have never wavered.

Senator Morgan, of Alabama, at the Winchester, Va., unveiling of the monument erected to the Confederate dead, is reported to have said: "those who lie here died in the cause of truth and justice." On which the editor of the Independent (N. Y.) says, "when he categorically declares that their's was 'the cause of truth and justice,' he betrays the facts of history. They died to sustain a rebellion against the Government of the United States, gotten up mainly to perpetuate the institution of slavery; and every one of them, by the express definition of the constitution, was a traitor, and, by the equally express language of law, was, if he had not already died, liable to the penalty of death. This is the matter of fact and there is no impediment more nonsensical and no falsehood more unblushing than that of Senator Morgan. * * * It is about time that Southern orators abandoned this sort of talk; or, if they must indulge in it, they should take care that no reporters are present. The Government and loyal people of the United States make no apology to rebels for having conquered them. If they have anything to regret, it is their unparalleled leniency toward them after the conquest."

The Columbia (S. C.) Register advises the people of the South that they must combine "Yankee grit" with "Southern dash" if they want to succeed. "If," it says, "we cheer up and stand up, and rally and give the touch of the elbow to each other, and make up our minds to brave adversity with big hearts, and to bring success out of the vast resources by which we are surrounded, we may yet go in and win and learn the great lesson that one Appomattox can't teach."

General Grant's horses, the gift of the Sultan of Turkey, are one of Washington's attractions now. They are beautiful animals, both dapple gray, five and six years old respectively, bright, upright and kind. They are broken to saddle only. They were delivered in Philadelphia free of cost for transportation. They are now at Brightwood Park and will be kept in this vicinity until General Grant's return.

The army bill as passed by the House had only 21 votes against it, 17 of which were Democrats, the majority of the Republicans voting for it. In view of this vote the Baltimore Gazette wants to know if the Democrats call it a "back-down" when they have to present a bill that commends itself to the Republicans and does not get the full Democratic vote.

The Springfield (Miss.) Republican's view is that the extra session of Congress has done excellent service in killing off two candidates for the presidency—Grant and Thurman. It merely costs the country $12,000 daily to effect that grant object.

The New York Herald, an independent in politics, has lately read the Democrats a lesson upon the plunders of the extra session. This session, it says, was brought about by Northern Democrats out of a conviction that it was necessary to harmonize between the East and West to create a new issue for 1880 which should so occupy the public mind as to sink other and troublesome questions out of sight. These Democrats saw very plainly that the currency notions of the West were insupportable to the Eastern Democrats, and that the currency question had assumed such importance in the Western Democratic party, by reason of the countenance given to it by such men as Thurman, Pendleton and Voorhees, that unless something was done to make it of secondary or third rate importance by next year, there would inevitably be an irreconcilable division between the Eastern and Western Democrats. The problem was how to get the whole currency question out of politics, and the Herald declares that to Mr. Hewitt, Mr. Clarkson N. Potter, and one or two other Eastern Democrats, inspired, perhaps, by the estate Tilden, belongs whatever credit may be due to the inventors of the new issues which the extra session was intended to force upon the public attention.

But these new issues have been so blunderingly handled in the opinion of the Herald that the people have lost all interest upon them. The single object of the session was to make troops at the polls and election marshals the prominent and overshadowing issues in the popular mind; "but," says the Herald, "so entirely have the Democrats failed in this that when the Ohio convention met in the midst of the great contentions of the party in that State deliberately turned its back on these issues, placed the currency questions in the forefront, and to intensify its declarations nominated General Ewing, the most conspicuous and decided representative of the Western currency beliefs. The Ohio convention in fact, declared the defeat of all that the extra session was called to accomplish, and Mr. Hewitt and Mr. Potter and other Eastern Democrats, who thought to save their party's unity by a shrewd and promising piece of strategy, have had the mortification to see that their plans have come to naught and the very thing they anxiously sought to prevent is that which has come about."

And now the Herald wants to know what "the sound money Democrats of the East are going to do about it?"

The second "lesson" read by the independent New York Herald to the Democratic party is not less significant than the one above quoted from by us. In number two the Herald dwells upon the mistake made especially by the Southern Democracy in allying themselves with the Western Democrats on the issue of soft money against the Eastern Democrats, and on the theory that the solid South, with a few Western States, can elect the next President without Eastern aid. In the start the Herald argues that it is a great mistake for the South to act "solidly." That eleven States, it says, but lately engaged in a fierce war upon the Union should continue, after all their grievances have been remedied, to act in a solid political body, making themselves a Confederacy within the Union, is, to say the least, imprudent. That they should do so regardless of the policy of the party with which they choose to ally themselves and remain solidly Democratic, whether the Democratic party is for sound currency or for inflation, for free trade or for protection, for internal improvements or against them, can only increase the Northern suspicion of ulterior motives. But when we find the solid South agreeing to the Ohio policy of virtual repudiation, and by its vote promising that policy its only hope of success, the matter becomes yet worse and more suspicious. The scaling of public debts has become a familiar proceeding in the Southern States; can the South complain if its adhesion to the Ohio policy gives rise to the suspicion that it is "solid" only in the desire for a repudiation of national obligations? In the opinion of the Herald the North will suspect and resent this "solid" affiliation of the South with the West, and says that "if anything is certain in the future it is that the support of the solid South in 1880 will be fatal to the party which has it."

In view of the signs of division upon the financial issue between the Eastern and Western Democrats, one of which is the resignation by Senator Bayard of the chairmanship of the Senate finance committee, these storm warnings of the Herald are attracting considerable attention at political centres.—Omaha News.

Baby shows are the fashion now, but as long as mothers continue to nurse their little ones with ladanum or other opiates, they cannot expect their babies to look bright. If your baby needs medicine get a good and harmless one such as Dr. Bull's Baby Syrup.

Jeff. Davis' Late Speech.

We have nowhere seen such a terse and scathing review of Jeff. Davis' speech to the Mississippi editors the other day as we find in Wednesday's Cincinnati Commercial. Its force consists in the exact justice which it does to the author. Says the Commercial:

"The size of Jeff. Davis appeared in his vicious little speech to the editors at Pascagoula. He had never, he said, seen a Southern woman reconstructed. This was a boast that the South was still, through the influence of the women, enraptured with the rebellion. It was a boast and defiance, and an attempt to keep alive and cultivate all the hatreds aroused during the war. The next point of Jeff. was that he had been a friend of Mississippi. He loved Mississippi! He had been her friend when he was in chains. Not a word about his country. The speech was as narrow, mean and malvolent as could possibly have been made, and shows that Davis is the same small man he was before the war, for which he was more responsible than any other man, and which on his side he mismanaged, through his vanities and irritations, until the Southern people should have hanged him on their own account."

Democratic Assessments.

In order to carry the City of Baltimore for the Democratic nominees, the Finance Committee of the party under the lead of Mr. John Gill, Jr., its Chairman, has decided that its office-holders and nominees must be assessed. To perfect all the machinery needed to make their campaign successful $12,000 will be required for, what they are pleased to call, legitimate expenses. It wasn't said how much would be needed for negro-intimidators, such as were employed in 1875 to secure the defeat of J. Morrison Harris, or for ballot-box stuffers and pudding ticket manufacturers,—although it is understood that there will be no stint in that direction. A portion of the money required will be secured by an assessment, on office holders, of one per cent. on all salaries of $1,000 and under, while others will be taxed as high as two and a-half per cent.—Frederick Examiner.

Last summer, just previous to the opening of the picnic season, orders were issued by several Catholic bishops prohibiting the use of liquor at any picnics or gatherings which had any connection with church purposes. Such an order was issued by the Archbishop of Baltimore, and immediately aroused such a protest from the German Catholic population with reference to the use of beer at such gatherings that it is believed an exception was made in favor of malt liquor. Bishop McCloskey, of Louisville, has started the ball this season, and his language upon the question of beer is very plain. He says: "We again forbid the use of all intoxicating liquors at these picnics, and lest there should be any misunderstanding about it, we now state for the benefit of all who may have any doubt on the subject that beer is included in the prohibition." Bishop McCloskey is evidently a believer that beer is an intoxicant in the average picnic doses, and his order, if strictly enforced, would certainly have the effect of preventing the disorderly conduct that sometimes prevails at such places, and is liable to be taken as a reflection upon the church that tolerates it. Bishop McCloskey also forbids the clergy from allowing their people to stay at such places later than ten o'clock in the evening.

TELEGRAPHIC.

THE GREAT BOAT RACE.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE, June 16.—The sculling match for the championship, £200 a side and the sportsman's challenge cup, between the English champion, William Elliott, Blythe, who had twice won the championship, and Edward Hanlan, of Toronto, Ontario, who defeated John Hawdon, Deleval, on the 5th of May last, came off to-day on the Tyne championship course, and resulted in an easy victory for Hanlan. The start was made from a point off the Mansion House. The weather was fine though dull, and the water was beautifully smooth. There was an immense concourse of spectators and twenty steamers laden with passengers followed the race. Five to two on Hanlan had been laid during the morning, but Elliott came into much better favor just prior to the start and only a slight shade of odds was laid on the Canadian. Elliott won the race and took the northern shore. After some delay at 12:15 o'clock the men got off to a capital start. Hanlan oared to a stroke at the rate of forty-two to the minute and at once drew to the fore. Elliott struck at the rate of forty to the minute and exerted all his enormous strength, but slashed now and then, and his boat did not travel well. Red Hough bridge. The time for the mile was 6 minutes 11 seconds, the Canadian leading by five lengths. Hanlan now slowed down and contented himself with keeping the advantage, and eventually won very easily by eight lengths in the good time of 21 minutes and 1 second. There was an immense crowd at Southwood, who cheered Hanlan to the echo.

THE PROSPECT OF A SPEEDY ADJOURNMENT FADING AWAY.

WASHINGTON, June 15.—The prospects of a final adjournment of Congress appear daily to grow less. One veto is certain; three are possible. The probability and expectation are that the Army bill will be approved. Still, the Republicans in the Senate are determined to make a resolute fight against it on two accounts—first, that the restriction contained in the political amendment is an invasion of the constitutional right of the Executive; second that the restrictive section, in nullifying the power of the President for this year, which is a matter of no practical importance in the absence of material election, is intended as a precedent for next year, when the elections are general and vital. On these two subjects the President, in principle, is as determined as any Republican Senator, and if he can be made to look at the restrictive features of the Army bill in the light in which it is regarded by the majority of Republican Senators, it would seem probable that the Army bill would encounter a veto. This, however, is not expected, as the restrictive feature was drafted with the intent to comply with the suggestions of the President's last message, in which he stated that a proper bill, providing that troops should not be used as a police power, he would sign. In the absence of overwhelming influence from Republican Senators, and of unexpected disclosures in the debates in the Senate, it is probable that the President will sign the Army bill. That, certainly, is his present intention. He has stated as much to more persons than one. Indeed, the President does not hesitate now to talk freely about such matters, as his opinions have become so well known that any further concealment under the technical veil of courtesy to Congress is unnecessary. There is a possibility, too, that the Legislative Appropriation bill may be vetoed. This will depend on the decision of the accounting officers of the Treasury as to their ability to pay out money under it after it shall have been passed. It is the purpose of the President to submit the bill, when it shall come to him, to Secretary Sherman, who, in turn, will refer it to the auditing and controlling officers of the Treasury. As to the lateness of its form there is no dispute. There probably is but one Democrat in Congress, and that the author of the bill, Mr. Atkins himself, who will claim that it is a most imperfect and audacious piece of legislation. The practical question for the accounting officers to determine is whether it will be possible for them to technically pay or to so construe the law that they can, without ambiguity and without exposing the executive officers to penalties, which might arise from mistaken construction, that the necessary disbursements for the maintenance of the government can be made. If the accounting officers say they can pay, no matter with how much difficulty, as it is now believed they will say, the bill will pass. If they say that the law is too ambiguous to warrant undertaking the disbursements of the millions which it appropriates, the President will return the bill to Congress without his approval, on the ground that it is ill-considered and hasty legislation. And every intelligent Democrat, if he is honest, would support the President's veto, that bill on that ground. But, whatever doubts there may be as to the fate of the Army and of the Legislative bills, there are no doubts in either party as to the fact that what is called the Little Judicial bill will encounter a Presidential veto. That bill covers the main points which have been at issue during this entire Congress. It carries out the Democratic purposes of the bill to nullify, if it does not repeal, the election laws. To that the President will never consent, and that bill contains the necessary appropriations to maintain the federal courts. Should it fall after July 1st it would not be possible for the courts to run. Prayers could not be received, juries could not be summoned, the bankruptcy cases could not be concluded, and the entire judicial machinery of the federal courts of this country would be blocked. There is no doubt as to what the President's course would be after the failure of that bill. He certainly would convene Congress in another extra session. He has said as much to more than one who have inquired of him what his purposes are. The only undetermined question is when the extra session would be called. It probably would be convened in July. It might be called immediately, or should the present session terminate before July, there are many reasons which have been urged upon the President to convene Congress immediately upon the adjournment of the present session, before the members could have left the city. One argument is that those who live at great distances, and who found it necessary to go home this spring, have already gone. Another, that a short interval of a week, or two weeks, would not be sufficient for those who live at long distances to go to their homes, while by calling Congress immediately a special undertaking of the deadlock might be expected. The Democrats in turn are not determined upon their policy in the certain event of a veto of the Judicial bill. The majority of the Democrats, including the leading men, have been of the opinion that while the President would veto this bill he would not convene Congress certainly before September or October, and would leave the courts to go on as the Army did, without an appropriation bill, until the fall.

Many have declared that the President would not be likely to convene Congress at all; but would allow the courts to stop until the regular session, in December. But within a day or two a new plan has been suggested by those who have become advised of the President's purpose to call another extra session. The plan is, that Congress shall take recesses of thirty days, more or less, from now until the regular session; that there shall be present at the time fixed for the reassembling of each session enough to cause Congress to take still another recess, and in this way to occupy the summer by a practical continuous session, at which nothing will be accomplished until the winter months, and after that the delay. This is an outline of the several plans. Nothing is definite or determined. The only hope of a final adjustment of the controversy is that after the veto of the Judicial bill there may be Democrats enough who are unwilling to prolong the fruitless contest, and who are still more unwilling to remain here during the heat, already become intolerable, to join with the Republicans, and pass, pure and simple, without political restrictions, the Judicial bill.

THE JUDICIAL BILL.

WASHINGTON, June 16.—After a desultory debate of over six hours to-day the Senate passed by a strict party vote the supplemental Judicial bill in a slightly modified form. According to previous arrangement, Dawes and Conkling conducted the Republican side of the case, and Hill and Morgan the Democratic side. No other senator attempted to say anything except Hereford, whose constant endeavors to thrust himself into every debate, at the risk of displaying his utter lack of experience and judgment, have made him the object of general ridicule and the special target at which Conkling directs his shafts of sarcasm. The fact is, both parties weighed well their words to-day, and acted like counsel arguing their case before some tribunal, with a view to render judgment. Ever since Edmunds' great speech just prior to the second veto the Democrats have been particularly watchful lest the Republicans should make what Thurman called a sophistry for the President, and to-day Hill and Morgan came into the Senate with long and carefully prepared speeches in answer to the points raised on Saturday last by Dawes and Conkling. Dawes made the first speech to-day, and it was a masterly review of the situation. The point upon which he and subsequently Conkling spoke mainly was the proposition of the Democrats to make partisan juries. On Saturday last Conkling and Hill arrived at an amicable understanding as to the proper construction of existing law in reference to the drawing of juries. To-day Conkling was in a complimentary mood, and Hill seemed unusually amiable. These two senators were engaged in a somewhat protracted cross-questioning debate this afternoon, and the tone of them both was so mild that it had the effect of securing good humor throughout the rest of the discussion. Hill admitted to Conkling that the bill did promise to make the juries partisan, and for that reason he did not like it. Indeed, the Georgia senator was frank enough to admit that the method of this bill was a vicious one, one which he would not vote for, except that the evils it proposed to remedy were more vicious. He charged that the federal judge of Georgia disregarded the law relating to drawing juries, when, upon Mr. Conkling's inquiry if it was right to change the whole law and thereby effect every federal court in the country simply because one or two judges in Georgia fail to do their duty. He suggested that the proper thing to do would be to add to the present law. Mr. Hill admitted the force of this argument, but said that as in nearly all the Northern states the federal juries were drawn from the state jury-boxes, they would not be affected by the bill; that all the people of the South wanted was a return to the custom of drawing jurors from state own colleges, said that the bill ought to be amended, and gave notice that he would offer an amendment so as to make it optional for any judge in any district to order the names of jurors to be drawn from the boxes used by state authorities. He did not hesitate to say that even with this amendment the bill was wrong, but he felt constrained to vote for it while wrong in order to remedy a great one. Hill's amendment was subsequently adopted, so that if the bill becomes a law any federal judge in the South, instead of having a half-and-half partisan jury, may avail himself of the privilege of taking all of the jurors from the Democratic state jury box. Wallace also offered an amendment, which exempts the war and navy department officers, as provided for in section 3,732 of the Revised Statutes, from the restriction of the bill in regard to incurring liabilities in advance of appropriations. This amendment and one or two verbal changes were adopted, and the bill was then passed by a strict party vote. Mr. Conkling gave notice on Saturday that he would move two amendments to-day, but he did not deem it worth while to do so. The Democrats were opposed to any changes, and only consented to such amendments as were necessary to correct the imperfections which even Hill perceived. The Republicans believed that they have pointed out the most serious objections to the measure, and feel confident that the President will veto the bill.

LOCAL NEWS.

—Capt. Stoy is in town, instructing the band.

—Mr. W. M. Coddington is having his hotel painted.

—Mr. G. W. Merrill has improved the interior of his drug store.

—A car load of timber arrived on Tuesday, to be used in rebuilding the Schmittman bridge.

—200 sacks G. A. Salt for sale at Wm. P. Taiten's Cheap Cash Store, Oakland, Md. a25-4f.

—Mr. A. A. Perry and family arrived at Oakland Friday last. They will spend the summer here.

—The appropriation by Allegany county for the maintenance of the National road in that county is $1,250.

—This section was visited by another heavy frost Wednesday morning. Vegetation was damaged to some extent.

—Summer visitors are arriving by every train, and the indications are that the present season will be the most successful in the history of Oakland.

—Attention is called to the Normal School notice in our advertising columns. Those who design to teach are requested by the Examiner to attend this school.

—The contracts for the construction of the road from Cumberland to George's Creek were opened at New York Tuesday. The contracts include the rolling stock, two hundred coal hoppers, five or six midget engines and a team of passenger cars.

—A strawberry and ice cream festival will be held by the Garrett Literary Society, on Thursday and Friday evenings, June 26th and 27th, in the old Olcott Building. Proceeds to be used in the interest of the Literary Society. All persons are cordially invited to be present.

—A reduction of wages has gone into effect on the Pennsylvania Railroad in Maryland. Some of the conductors and brakemen talked of striking, but a compromise was effected, and the rates are now down to the same basis as the Baltimore and Ohio Road.

—Miss Gilpin, who recently made her debut at the Holiday Street Theatre in Baltimore, appeared before an audience in Cumberland on Monday. She appeared as Madame Fontanges, in the play of "Gold; or, Did and Passion," and fully justified the encomiums her debut elicited.

—The track of the Pennsylvania Railroad into Cumberland will be completed during the present week. Although the road is not yet properly ballasted, an engine belonging to the Pennsylvania Road has been run over the track with cars laden with materials.

—Dr. W. F. Fundenberg, Oculist, and Aurist, from Cumberland, Md., is now stopping at the "Davis House," where all those suffering from diseases of the eye, ear, nose and throat can consult him every day in the week, excepting on Saturdays and Sundays. All consultations free. Hours, 9 A. M. to 4 P. M.

—Church Services—Sunday. Lutheran Church.—Preaching in evening at 8 o'clock, by Rev. Miller. M. E. Church.—Preaching in the evening at 8 o'clock, by Rev. Benj. Ison.

—Preaching at Deer Park, Sunday morning and evening, by Rev. A. Getty, Universalist, from Peñar.

—Basket Pic-Nic and Concert.

A basket picnic and free vocal and instrumental concert will be held at Johnstown, this county, by the Sang Run, Johnstown, Accident and other singing classes, on the Fourth of July, under the leadership of Prof. S. C. Smith, of Portland, W. Va. A general invitation is extended.

—House and Contents Burned.

The dwelling house of Mr. A. C. Browning, on Deep Creek, this county, was burned on Friday of last week, together with the contents. The family were all absent except Mrs. Browning, at the time of the fire, which had gained such headway before it was noticed, that she was unable to save anything. No insurance. Loss not stated.

—Corporation Meeting.

A special meeting of the Town Council was held Monday night. The bonds of the Burgess and Bailiff were approved.

The Bailiff was instructed to enforce the ordinance against hogs and horses running at large in the corporate limits.

An ordinance was passed forbidding the running at large of cows within the corporation, making it incumbent upon the owners of cows to stable them at night, and have them driven and kept beyond the limits of the town during the day.

Roll of Honor.

The following persons have paid us on account of subscription, advertising, &c., since our last report:

Joseph A. Spiker, Solomon Baker, Nelson Kechin, Samuel Chester, Thos. Coddington, S. B. Yoder, Oakland Cornet Band, Daniel Baker, Thos. Bush, J. Z. Browning, J. E. Bishop & Co., John Arnold, Chas. Swaney, John A. Grant, Thos. J. Nimmo, David Lott, Aaron Boyer, John Tugger, David Lott.

Grand Basket Pic-Nic.

A basket picnic will be held at McHenry on the 4th of July. All are invited. Ice cream and refreshments of all descriptions will be in abundance. Plenty of good music and dancing. Come one, come all.

Committee of arrangements—S. P. Specht, N. C. Browning, S. K. Welch. Floor Managers—N. H. Wilburn, T. J. Browning.

Successful Operation.

On last Thursday Dr. W. F. Fundenberg, Oculist and Aurist from Cumberland, Md., operated upon Mr. Isaac Davis, of this county, for the removal of his right eye, which had been destroyed by an injury some years ago, causing the sight of the sound one to be very much impaired. The operation was entirely successful. Dr. E. H. Parsons, of this town, rendered valuable assistance. Mr. Davis returned home the next day, and there is now no danger of the remaining eye going blind, as it would have done if the sightless one had not been removed.

Bloomington Items.

On the 1st inst., the M. E. Sabbath School closed its term. Rev. E. K. Comp, A. D. Sedgwick and Wm. Moody as delegates to represent the school in the Garrett county Sunday School Convention that meets at Accident on 20th to 22nd inst.

On the 17th inst., Capt. S. M. Ambrose left here for Jarratt, City, Wyoming Territory, where, it is reported, he will remain for some time in assisting in making surveys for the Government.

On the 18th inst., Al. Wilson, of this district, was severely injured at Davis' Saw Mill. Whilst engaged in running a truck load of lumber out of the mill, he was preoccupied to the ground, breaking his right leg near the hip and his left leg near the ankle. Dr. A. C. Conley, of Piedmont, set the broken limbs, and the young man is doing as well as could be expected.

On the 18th inst. Rev. W. H. Bell, arrived here to assist the pastor of the M. E. Church in charge of this circuit. Mr. Bell is a young unmarried man, a graduate of Hickerson College and comes well recommended. We hope his sojourn with us will be pleasant and conducive to him and our community.—Bloomington Star.

Real Estate Transfers.

The following is a list of real estate transfers filed for record in the office of W. H. Tower, Clerk of the Circuit Court for Garrett county, for the week ending June 21:

Anson Clement and wife to Rufus C. Clement, one undivided one-half interest in a tract of land called "Elk Garden," $500.

Philip Wolf and others to Silas Snyder, part of a tract of land called "The Royal Charlotte," $500.

Mary E. Chisholm to William Chisholm, part of a tract of land called "Addition to Cromarty," 106 acres, more or less; $5.

Margaret A. Bailey and Elmore S. Bailey to William T. Jamieson, military lot No. 946; $600.

An Astounded Editor.

An exchange says: "We find upon our table one of the newest pictures. It is beautiful in design, small, but showing great artistic skill in its make up. The prevailing colors are green and black, the two blending so harmoniously that the effect is pleasing in the highest degree. We shall not, of course, presume to give an exact description of this picture, but some of the characters look so noble, so striking, that we cannot refrain from describing them. The head-centre, or rather the hero of this picture, looks in his left hand a banner, in his right hand a sword; his hat is thrown upon the ground; his head is thrown back, his left foot extended, and taken altogether, his appearance is that of one challenging another to mortal combat, waiting for the other fellow to knock off the chip. His eyes are cast upward, resting on the word 'Hello! what's this? Great snakes! if it isn't a five dollar bill! We took it for some kind of a Christmas chromo that had come in by the mail. But we see how it is—either our devil has been robbing a bank, or some delinquent subscriber has been conscience stricken." We wish those of our subscribers who owe us by subscription would at least us by sending us what is due us.

—Frostburg, Md., June 17th, 1879. Mr. Editor:—Last Wednesday was a day of accidents for Frostburg. No less than three runaways occurred within a few minutes of each other. The most serious of them was that which resulted in the dreadful accident to Fred, a little boy about 11 years old, son of Mr. George Wehner. He undertook to drive his father's horse and wagon, and while proceeding quietly down the street the horses became suddenly frightened, and started on a run-off. One of the wagon wheels came off and the boy was pitched violently against a fence, sustaining such severe injuries that for a long time his life was despaired of. He is now, happily, recovering. The horse, as usual, in these occurrences, escaped injury. The other runaways did not occasion any injury or damage.

Last Friday and Saturday evenings an ice cream and strawberry festival was held in the basement of the M. E. Church. The proceeds are to be applied to the liquidation of the church debt. The topic of conversation during the past week has been the approaching nuptials of Miss Maggie Thomas and Hon. Wm. Bruce. Miss Thomas is the reigning belle of Frostburg, and one of the most charming of Maryland's fair daughters. She is the daughter of James B. Thomas, Esq., the General Superintendent of the Consolidated coal company. Mr. Bruce is, I suppose, already known to your readers. He is a prominent young lawyer of the Cumberland bar, and has already attained an enviable position in the practice of his profession. He has also represented his native county twice in the Legislature of this State, and from the manner in which his admirers speak of him, I have reason to believe that he is yet destined to receive higher political honor from his constituents. The wedding will take place tomorrow at the residence of the future bride's father. Rev. John W. Nett, Rector of the Episcopal church at Mt. Savage, will perform the ceremony. Only the members of the two families about to be united by this alliance in the bond of friendship are expected to be present. Madame Rumor has given out that the bride will be attired in white brocade silk, and that the wedding tour will extend to Niagara and other noted places of interest in the North. The wonderful musical prodigy and boy musician, Tagon, whose residence is at this place, will, it is said, visit Oakland this summer, and give to the people an exhibition of his musical skill and talent. Favorable notices of him have on many occasions appeared in the Eastern papers, and the most eminent musicians of our country have endeavored to procure his services to play in the large cities; but his father, with his characteristic modesty, says his son is almost too young to appear before the public. In a year or two, however, he will permit him to appear. Your correspondent does not hear much upon the subject of politics, but from occasional chaffings with her acquaintances, she believes it is the intention of the residents of this district to solicit your editorial brother, J. B. Oiler, to again become a candidate for the Legislature. They claim that he, on account of the faithfulness and ability which he displayed in the last Legislature, should be honored with a re-election if he will consent to again become their representative. This being the objective of the festival of Corpus Christi, the Catholics here have had church every evening. The benediction of the most blessed sacrament concludes the services.

NELLIE GRAY.

Close of the Dunkard Annual Meeting at Broadway, Va.

HARRISONBURG, VA., June 7.—The annual meeting of the Dunkards at Linville's Creek, eleven miles down the valley from here, closed yesterday, and most of the delegates and visitors leave for home to-day. The business session closed on Thursday. The most of the session on that day was taken up with the consideration of several petitions, asking that Mr. Henry Holsinger, one of the editors of the Progressive Christian, an organ of the church, should be called to account for certain incendiary articles published, in which sentiments were expressed of which many of the elder members disapproved. Most of these articles referred to the evident inconsistency of keeping up an established discipline against dressing in accordance with prevailing customs, and it was charged that one article accused some of the brethren with making old clothes a matter of idolatry. To this Mr. Holsinger demurred, contending that he has been misunderstood, and had never intended to convey any such impression. He was willing, however, to acknowledge that some of his views were more extreme than justified by church policy and existing facts. In consideration of his concession an answer was framed to the petitions by the standing committee giving a very modified summary of the ultra answers that had been made already by the district meetings. This matter which came up in this shape represents the only material divergence of opinion in the church. There is what is called a "progressive party," and there is what is called a "old order party." Those who represent the progressive ideas contend for more liberty in the matter of dress, and in their own persons do not conform to some of the established usages, such as shaving the upper lip and letting their beard grow on all the rest of the face. Instead of letting their hair grow long and uncut, they wear it "shingled," as it is termed—that is, cut off close at the back of the neck in the way almost everyone wears his hair. They also wear pantaloons and coats like other men, being careful, however, to keep them of sober color. A few among them, while conforming in more or less extent in what they consider the non-essential matter of dress, advocate an advanced and liberal spirit in missionary work, the establishment of Sunday Schools and the introduction of preaching into cities where there are no established meetings of the Brotherhood.

The "old order" party of the church, as it is called, represents the original principles, and believe in their preservation intact. In the adjudication of this as of other matters a spirit of concession on both sides has been preserved, the great aim of all annual meetings being as far as possible to strike a balance between existing differences. The meeting just closed has been most successful in this respect. The tendency of the answers given to queries generally was, to place the largest liberty in matters of detail in the hands of the district meetings. It was recognized that the usage which is entirely acceptable to Brethren in remote parts of Pennsylvania may be difficult for the members living in Illinois and other parts of the great and now thickly settled West to conform to. This divergence of views and to some extent of practices of Brethren from different parts of the country was noticeable during the annual meeting. There were differences of intelligence, of appearance of dress, and of sentiment on many points of the church policy. Almost all the Dunkards of the Valley of Virginia are welded to the old established principles, and while taking advantage of every progress in mechanical appliances to make their farms more profitable, have been loth to turn from the usages of the past in many points from which Brethren in other parts of the country have long since departed. Still, there is no lack of intelligence among the Brethren of the Valley, and in all that they consider right they have made advancement. There is not a church in the Valley, it is said, that has not a Sunday School attached, and they also contribute their quota to missionary support.

Much curiosity exists as to the singular ceremony of feet washing, which has all the force of a religious rite among the brethren. It does not take place at the annual meeting but is confined to regular religious service, in the church. After preaching, prayer and song, two deacons gird themselves with towels, and two others carry large tin basins filled with water. Four women on the other side of the church act similarly. The men all sit on one side of the church and the women sit facing them on the other. The men are bare headed. The women wear small linen caps. The men and women each have their feet uncovered. The men's feet are washed by men and the women's feet by women. It is a very simple process, and is conducted in a very matter-of-fact way, without any attempt at being made impressive. As the holder of the basin comes along the person in front simply dips his or her feet one after the other, and they are immediately dried by the person who follows with a towel. The covering and uncovering of the feet is down in separate apartments. This ordinance, as they consider, there is a test of membership, and everyone must conform to it. A Dunker, no matter what may be his or her sentiment on the dress question, will not be tolerated in the church if they refuse to show a becoming spirit of humility in the observance of this custom.

They take as the command for it John, chapter XIII., verses 12-15; "So after He had washed their feet and taken His garments, and had sat down again, He said unto them, Know ye what I have done to you? Ye call Me Master and Lord, and ye say well, for I am. If then your Lord and Master has washed your feet, ye ought also to wash one another's feet for I have given you an example that ye should do what I have done to you." They consider that the "one another" makes it distinct from the ancient question of feet washing, where visitors washed their own feet on entering, or had it done by a servant. Such commands as that you must love your enemies, do good to them that hate you, entertain strangers, feed the hungry, and so on, they regard as religious duties, but feet-washing they hold as necessary as the Lord's Supper. Its penalty, if neglected, they get from John, chapter XIII., verse 8: "Peter said to him, Thou shalt never wash my feet. Jesus answered him, If I wash thee not thou hast no part with Me." Taking Timothy, chapter V., verses 9-10, as their guide, they will not admit any woman into the Church who will not wash the brethren's feet. I have been shown in one of their books a whole chapter going to show that the Savior could not have had in mind the Apostles' careless habits, and that command was not given to impress upon them the necessity of keeping their feet clean. In conversation about this and other practices they say that they see apparent unreasonableness of them, but still they are Christ's commands, and have to be obeyed.

The passover, or Lord's Supper, succeeds the feet-washing whenever a spirit of unity prevails. A hearty meal of lamb soup, with platter of boiled beef and sliced bread, are eaten from tables made by spreading covers across the high, straight back of their seats. The sacrament proper—the drinking of wine and the breaking of bread—follows, and only members in regular standing are allowed to take part, as the Dunkards are very close communicants. During the meal proceeding the taking of the bread and wine they chat and talk pleasantly, just in the way that might be expected at any social feast.

Regarding the taking of lamb soup and other food before the Lord's Supper they say that according to the established meaning of the Greek word deipnon, the Bible word for the sacrament—first, it must be a full and plentiful meal; and second, it must be eaten in the evening. A fragment of bread, a half-inch square, and a sip of wine that scarcely fills a teaspoon, I heard one say, is not a deipnon, as the Greeks used that word, any more than sprinkling a few drops of water in a man's face is an immersion in him.

For some years past a Democratic nomination in this city has been considered equivalent to an election. The great Democratic majority in Baltimore has, whenever the party has been united, almost made victory a certainty. There has been, however, one occurrence in the past which ought to stand forever as a warning. Four years ago there was a revolt against Ring rule which was so violent and so ably and influentially managed that the Democratic party was divided and many Democrats voted with the Republicans rather than with the Ring. Should the primary elections to-day be carried by any unworthy means for the Courthouse Ring it will cause a disgust in the Democratic ranks that may lead to a split in the party. The only way to insure harmony and health in the party for the great election of 1880 is to cleanse the Democracy of its Ring rulers. This should be done at the polls to-day and done thoroughly.—Bald, Gazette, Dem., Tuesday.

If the Democrats will offer a bill to prohibit "any armed man or body of men from coming within two miles of a place of holding election on election day," it would probably escape a veto. This would secure the casting of an unthreatened vote, since rifle clubs, raffians, and bull-dozers would be excluded. But to the Democratic vote the outrages of these fellows in violations of the law are not in any sense so objectionable as the presence of a U. S. soldier whose mission is to afford protection to every honest voter. The Democratic idea is—to succeed, peaceably if it can—forcibly if it must.—Cumberland Herald.

If you have a Sick Headache take a dose of Dr. Bull's Headache Pills; we know you will find relief.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

COMMISSIONERS' MEETING.

OFFICE OF THE GARRETT COUNTY COMMISSIONERS, OAKLAND, MD., June 17th, 1879.

Notice is hereby given that the County Commissioners of Garrett county will meet at their office in Oakland

On Monday, July 7th, 1879,

For the appointment of Judges of Election, and transacting such other business as may come before the Board.

W. H. HAGANS, Clerk.

6212

Normal School.

OFFICE OF THE GARRETT COUNTY BOARD, OAKLAND, MD., June 18, 1879.

The Garrett county Normal School will be opened in Accident,

On Monday, July 21st,

under the tuition of Mr. J. T. Mitchell. Examination will take place on last day of June.

Those who design teaching in Garrett County are advised to attend the Normal School in the fall of 1879, and apply to J. T. Mitchell, Listerburg, Pa.

E. H. BARTLETT, Secretary.

Law office of David W. Stuart, 6 Washington Street, Cumberland, Md.

Order of Publication.

Duncan McPherson } in the Circuit Court for Garrett county, in George T. Climo, } Equity, No. 13.

The object of this Bill is to set aside a Deed from the Complainant to the Defendant.

The Bill alleges that the Complainant executed a deed to the Defendant for two Mills in Garrett county, N. H., and that the Defendant, on the 10th of March, 1878, in consideration of the conveyance to him of a lot in Potomac county, Iowa, that said deed was executed and duly delivered on the same day.

That the lot preparing to be conveyed by the defendant was not at the time owned by him. That the deed from the Defendant to the complainant was executed with intent to deceive him, and to defraud him of his property. Was therefore void and voidable. That the said defendant is a non-resident. And it is prayed that the same be set aside.

It is therefore ordered by the Court, this 1st day of June, 1879, that the complainant cause a copy of this order, together with the original and substance of the Bill, to be inserted in some newspaper published in Garrett county, once a week for four successive weeks, before the 10th day of July, 1879, giving notice to the Defendant in said bill, and warning him to appear in this court in person or by solicitor, on or before the 10th day of October, 1879, and show cause, if any he has, why he should not be set aside as prayed.

THIS COPY—test—

6212

ROAD NOTICE.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, That the undersigned will make application to the County Commissioners of Garrett county, after thirty days from the first publication of this notice, for a private road through the lands of Elus P. Kerr and Mrs. Edwards, commencing at my line stone quarry, and intersecting the Spruce Hollow road.

675

SOLOMON TURNER

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Advertisements under this heading will be inserted at the following rates: For diamonds of the 12-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 10-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 8-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 6-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 4-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 2-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/2-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/4-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/8-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/16-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/32-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/64-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/128-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/256-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/512-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/1024-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/2048-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/4096-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/8192-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/16384-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/32768-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/65536-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/131072-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/262144-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/524288-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/1048576-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/2097152-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/4194304-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/8388608-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/16777216-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/33554432-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/67108864-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/134217728-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/268435456-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/536870912-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/1073741824-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/2147483648-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/4294967296-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/8589934592-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/17179869184-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/34359738368-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/68719476736-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/137438953472-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/274877906944-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/549755813888-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/1099511627776-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/2199023255552-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/4398046511104-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/8796093022208-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/17592186044416-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/35184372088832-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/70368744177664-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/140737488355328-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/281474976710656-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/562949953421312-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/1125899906842624-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/2251799813685248-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/4503599627370496-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/9007199254740992-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/18014398509481984-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/36028797018963968-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/72057594037927936-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/144115188075855872-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/288230376151711744-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/576460752303423488-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/1152921504606846976-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/2305843009213693952-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/4611686018427387904-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/9223372036854775808-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/18446744073709551616-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/36893488147419103232-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/73786976294838206464-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/147573952589676412928-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/295147905179352825856-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/590295810358705651712-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/1180591620717411303424-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/2361183241434822606848-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/4722366482869645213696-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/9444732965739290427392-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/18889465931478580854784-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/37778931862957161709568-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/75557863725914323419136-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/151115727451828646838272-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/302231454903657293676544-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/604462909807314587353088-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/1208925819614629174706176-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/2417851639229258349412352-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/4835703278458516698824704-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/9671406556917033397649408-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/19342813113834066795298816-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/38685626227668133590597632-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/77371252455336267181195264-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/154742504910672534362390528-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/309485009821345068724781056-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/618970019642690137449562112-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/1237940039285380274899124224-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/2475880078570760549798248448-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/4951760157141521099596496896-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/9903520314283042199192993792-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/19807040628566084398385987584-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/39614081257132168796771975168-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/79228162514264337593543950336-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/158456325028528675187087900672-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/316912650057057350374175801344-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/633825300114114700748351602688-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/1267650600228229401496703205376-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/2535301200456458802993406410752-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/5070602400912917605986812821504-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/10141204801825835211973625643008-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/20282409603651670423947251286016-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/40564819207303340847894502572032-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/81129638414606681695789005144064-point size, $1.00; for diamonds of the 1/162259

The Republican.

JAS. A. HAYDEN, Publisher.

OAKLAND, GARRETT CO., MD.

"HE AND SHE."

"She is dead!" they said to him: "Come away: Kiss her and leave her—she is clay."

They smoothed her tresses of dark brown hair: On her forehead of stone they laid it fair:

Over her eyes that gazed too much They drew the lids with a gentle touch:

With a tender touch they closed up well The sweet thin lips that had secrets to tell:

Alone her brows and beautiful face They feel her veil and her marriage lace:

And drew on her white feet her white silk shoes: Which were the whitest no eye could choose:

And over her bosom they crossed her hands: "Come away," they said: "God understands."

And there was silence, and nothing there But silence and secrets of eagles:

And jasmine and roses, and peonies: And they said: "God understands, lies she."

And they held their breath as they left the room: With a shudder, to glance at its stillness and gloom:

But he who loved her too well to do: The sweet, the sad, the clay, the awful do:

He lit his lamp and took the key: And turned it—alone again—he and she:

He and she: but she would not speak: Tho' he kissed, in the old place, the quiet cheek:

He and she: though she would not smile: Tho' he called her the sweetest, the love, the child:

He and she: still she did not move: So airy, so passionate, whisper of love:

Then he said: "Cold lips and cheeks without breath: Is there no voice, no language of death?"

"Dumb to the ear and still to the sense: But to heart and to soul distinct, intense?"

"See now, I will listen with soul, not ears: What was the secret of dying, dear?"

"Was it the infinite wonder of all That you could ever let life's flower fall?"

"Or was it a greater marvel to feel The perfect calm over the agony steel?"

"Was the miracle wonder to find her deep Beyond all dreams sunk downward that sleep?"

"Did life roll back its records, dear: And show, as they say it does, past things clear?"

"And was it the innermost heart the bliss To find out what a wisdom love is?"

"O perfect dead! O dead most dear: I hold the breath of my soul to you here:"

"I listen as dead as to a horrible hell: As high as to heaven, and you do not tell."

"There must be pleasure in dying, sweet: To make you so placid from lead to feet."

"I would tell you, darling, if I were dead: And 'twere your lot, I fear, upon my brow shed—"

"I would say, though the Angel of Death had: His sword on my lips to keep it unsaid."

"You should not ask vainly, with streaming eyes: Which of all deaths was the chiefest surprise?"

"The very strangest and saddest thing: Of all the surprises that dying must bring."

"Ah, foolish world! oh, most kind death: Though he told me, who will believe it was said?"

"Who will believe that he heard her say: With the sweet, soft voice, in the dead old way?"

"The utmost wonder is this—I hear: And so you, and love you, and kiss you, dear:"

"And am your angel, who was your bride: And know, that, though dead, I love, never died."

—Edwin Arnold, Author of "He Who Dies at Dawn."

THE PRODIGAL BOY.

One fine autumnal afternoon as a country gentleman, named Dwight, was out for an hour's ride in his vehicle, he came upon a group of men sitting in the road, and among them saw his son, a boy of ten, flying his kite. The novel thought struck him of giving his son a ride, while he was in the future, as well as his desire the child took a seat by his side, the horse trotted on, and the kite-string, through the back of the wagon, still held by the pleased youngster, maintained the traveling kite in the air. It was, however, not long before the boy lost his hold of the stick, upon which the kite rapidly descended from his gay attitude, and disappearing behind some trees, fell into a swampy bog.

To regain what was so much prized by his son, if possible, without too much effort, the father drove back, and now saw that one of the group of children had already started in pursuit of the missing toy, and was wading his difficult course through the swamp, from which in the time he made his way back, with a shout of joy, bringing the unharmed kite and its roll of twine, which, on reaching the road, he presented with smiling grace to their owner.

"You are a gallant and unselfish boy," said Mr. Dwight, giving him a handful of pennies; "what is your name?"

"Herbert Archley," said the youth, blushing at the compliment and lifting his cap in recognition of it; and then, turning to his playmates, he divided among them what he had received by tossing the coins into the air and saying:

"Come, boys, here's for a scramble!"

His companions proved themselves not slow to accept the offer, and young Archley, sharing in the scramble with high glee, took his scant portion with the others.

"You are too generous by half," exclaimed Mr. Dwight, admiring the boy's benevolence quite as much as his good-natured services and politeness. "You must learn to be more careful of your means—when you grow older, at least; or you will find it a thankless and very rude world to live in."

"Ah, sir," said the boy, with a brighter glance even than before, and again telling his cap, "father taught me never to be mean, and to be unselfish always makes me feel happy."

His looks told the truth as eloquently as his words and tone, as he stood there in the road, his fine, open, handsome face rosy with health and beaming with intelligence and joy—a far more beautiful object to contemplate than even the declining sun, whose light displayed him to such advantage.

"The sun is lengthening your shadow, my boy," said the gentleman, reflecting for a moment. "And even so it is with the light of experience, which increases the shade of sorrow the longer it shines. Take my advice, my boy, and hereafter never give all your spare money away. Be liberal, as your father taught you; but save at least half for yourself. There is no virtue in being prodigal; often it is an error, and prevents both the power to be just and to be generous."

"I thank you, sir, for the advice, and I will remember and try to follow it."

"Good afternoon, my boy."

"Good-bye, sir."

As they rode home, which was not far from the neighborhood, Mr. Dwight learned from his son that Herbert Archley was a poor boy, living with his widowed mother; that he was a forward scholar, and so generally a favorite that presents were often made to him, and these he almost as often distributed among his comrades, to whom he seemed to make but little distinction.

Within a few days Mr. Dwight again met young Archley, and repeating his injunction to "save half at least," gave him a money-box for that purpose. And the boy, smiling, again promised, and, applauded by his mother, did as he had been advised, careless and thoughtless of how it accumulated, from month to month. The gentleman who had been so interested in him often gave him small sums, like others, though debarred, like others, from rendering his mother assistance, which an honest pride forbade her to accept, and of which heath and industry prevented her from being in absolute need.

A year passed, and, changing to be in the company of evil associates Archley got into trouble with them. They committed some thefts, in which he was ignorant until he was arrested, like them, and tried as their accomplice. Information of the affair being brought to Mr. Dwight, he felt convinced of the boy's innocence, and after questioning him, he undertook to plead his case, which influence, however, only succeeded so far against the false testimony of the really guilty that Archley was fined for trespass while the others were more severely dealt with.

The shame of the accusation seemed to overcome the griefed boy far more than the fear of punishment, however unjust; and he wept more bitterly than the young reprobates who were brought to make him share their punishment as well as their disgrace.

"You need not shed tears, my boy," said his temporary protector, soothingly, so that all could hear. "None who know you can think harm of you. The injury done you is not so great as you think; and if you are injured by false evidence beyond their power of defense against law; and in this case, the penalty it prescribes for you I believe you can pay, without depending upon anybody but yourself."

"My mother is so poor," sobbed the boy, "that I don't like her to pay so much and how can I pay it?"

"What have you done with the box?"

"O, I forgot that, but I don't think there can be so much in it, for the little I have saved up in it."

"Send for it, and we will see about that."

The little box was therefore brought, and used in conversation, and much to the surprise of the boy, far more was found in it than was demanded to meet the penalty. This discovery cheered young Archley, for he was now relieved from his mortification as a delinquent, and he felt that he had done his duty, and that he was now free to go on with his money, which he did with some pride; and, with his mother, his friend and his box, he marched out of court amid the cheers of his joyful playmates.

"You see my young friend, that by being provident, without being mean, you have been able to rescue yourself from delinquency," said Mr. Dwight, on parting with them. "Bear the lesson in mind, in future, as well as you have been able to pay the penalty of your delinquency, and you will find it of service throughout your life, long after I am dead, perhaps. There is more than the amount you have paid. I wished you to send for the box, only to better illustrate what virtue there is in providence, and how thoughtless prodigality might have left you without one friend to serve you."

The lesson thus learned had a doubly good effect, and the boy was more careful as to the character of his companions ever after.

The manifold changes of a few more years, transforming the boy into a man, involved other alterations in the conditions of his life. His mother died, and he, as the grave, his good friend, Mr. Dwight, had moved away, he knew not whether; and he, in a neighboring town, no less popular as a man than he had been as a boy, had, by dint of intelligent enterprise, acquired a thriving business, of which he was the head.

Fortune long seemed to favor the young man, and often the image and counsel of his early good adviser came up before him, and the pleasant remembrance made him yearn to see him. But, unfortunately, the advice which he remembered he did not follow. His benevolence and confiding nature, his eagerness to oblige, and his impulsive sympathy at every sign of distress, led him to the detriment of his own interests, and by slow and sure degrees the instilled exercise of his uncalculating charity annulled the good results of his honest industry, and carried his affairs gradually into the background, where prodigal generosity often leads and leaves a man, and where debt incurred by helping others brings distress and ruin upon the deserted bankrupt.

Herbert Archley failed, and found few friends to praise, pity him, or defend his honesty of purpose, and none who were able or dared to help him. To him came now the old experiences of the too benevolent, who have less means to sustain than heart to prompt generous actions; and though fortune did not so utterly forsake him as to consign the well-meaning debtor to a jail, his freedom to wander seemed no liberty to him, who, as he left the town, reflected as he mourned, "Yes, in what light I have, it sometimes seems unjust that charity should be the cause of its own punishment, or be permitted at all to suffer. But now, how well I recollect the counsel given me by that good man in my youth—to be kind, without giving all away, and that one might be provident without being mean. He gave me a fatherly lesson in those happy days, and I was wiser, because more mindful, even then; but grown confident by success, I neglected the advice which would have spared me the trials I now bear; the loss of good reputation and the lugubrious memories of the old theory which I have injured the volume of actual production and the extent of arable area have been sometimes suggested by interested speculators; but on the other hand, derogatory statements have been made upon a very inadequate basis of fact. Some authenticated data on the subject were desirable, and we have found them in this year and now published by the Kansas State Board of Agriculture.

The notion that the limit of production is marked by the hundredth meridian seems to be only the latest formula of the old theory which ascribed sterility to the soil of the plains and affirmed the existence of a Great American Desert. Formerly the so-called drought line or limit of fruitful tillage was placed much further to the east, but it has moved steadily westward with the progress of knowledge and experiment. For some time after the settlement of Kansas Territory the arable portion was supposed to reach no further than 130 miles west of the Missouri River, and twelve years afterward the county of Saline, some sixty miles beyond, was supposed to mark the border of cultivation. So late, indeed, as 1870 the Kansas Pacific Railway was making agricultural experiments with great success in Russell County, fifty miles west of Saline. Last year, however, Russell County produced 227,000 bushels of wheat, and Ellis County, only eighteen miles east of the one hundredth meridian, yielded 92,000 bushels in the same twelvemonth.

What is still more significant, the county of Norton, which stretches twelve miles west of the one hundredth meridian, was credited with more than 100,000 bushels of wheat in 1878. Passing from single counties to broad sections, we may note that the western half of that portion of the State now cultivated, which in 1868 was entirely uncultivated, produced last year upward of 23,300,000 bushels of wheat. This was seventy-two per cent. of the whole product of the State, or over 7,000,000 more bushels than was, according to the estimates, returned by Ohio in the same year.

In connection with these statistics, which seem to indicate that soil productivity keeps pace with civilization, the report goes on to compare the wheat products of Ohio and Kansas during the past thirteen years. In 1866 the yield of the former State was to that of the latter as 40 to 1; in 1869, as 7 to 1; in 1873, as 1 to 1; and in 1878 the wheat product of Ohio has been variously computed at figures ranging between 16,000,000 and 32,000,000 bushels, but even the latter estimate was exceeded by nearly one-third of a million in Kansas, which thus took its place at the head of the list of wheat-growing States. The amount of wheat produced in the western half of Kansas alone was larger by 10,000,000 bushels than that of New York for the year 1877, or over 300,000 bushels greater than the aggregate wheat crop of all the New England States, with Pennsylvania, Delaware, and Mississippi included.

The county of Norton, cut by the one hundredth meridian, yielded more than twice the quantity of wheat returned by Massachusetts, Connecticut, and Rhode Island in the last named year. It appears, however, that soil productivity is still moving westward, but that the average rain fall is increased under these conditions. Considerable evidence to this effect is adduced in this report; but whatever this may be, it is demonstrated that the most productive wheat section in the United States lies in the vicinity of the one hundredth meridian. That arable section, moreover, is still moving westward. The organized counties of Decatur, Ravalli, and Cheyenne, stretching to the western boundary of the State, from twelve to a hundred miles beyond the supposed limit of production, are being rapidly settled, and, according to this report, embrace on an average as good land as any in the Commonwealth. At present the advanced posts of settlement are over 300 miles west of the Missouri River, and it is affirmed that the whole area to the east of that frontier is available for farming purposes. No doubt the section beyond the general settlement line is, under existing circumstances, best adapted to this purpose, and the line represents no inexorable law of nature, and that it is constantly pushed onward by the wave of improvement and culture.—N. Y. Sun.

A Good Neighbor.

In Germany, during the war, a Captain of cavalry was ordered out upon a foraging expedition. He put himself at the head of his troops, and marched to the quarter assigned him. It was a solitary valley, in which hardly any thing but woods could be seen. Finding in the midst of it a small cottage, he approached, and, knocking at the door, it was opened by an old and venerable man, with a beard and white hair. "Father," said the officer, "show me a field where I may set my troops to forage in." The old man complied, and conducting them out of the valley, he was accordingly resumed, and at the distance of a mile they arrived at another field of barley. The troops immediately alighted, cut down the grain, trampled it, and remounted. The officer thereupon said to his conductor: "Father, you have given yourself and us unnecessary trouble; the first field was far better than this." "Very true, sir," replied the good old man, "but it was not mine."

NO QUARTER—A twenty-cent piece.

Our Young Folks.

THE MERCHANT'S DREAM.

In his dark office in busy Broadway, A merchant and merchant aid doing one day: The clang of his bell the monotone grew loud, On the pavement so near surged the hurrying crowd:

But far, far away from the dust and the glare Of the close-stony street and its turmoil of trade,

He felt the cool breeze lift his silvery hair: 'Neath the old hemlock-clim with its wide-spreading shade.

Yes, he sat in the same mossy seat that, of yore, On each fair Sabbath morn, was like heaven of rest.

The dog and the cat lay asleep by the door, And the gold robin swung in her leaf-shaded nest.

So quiet the scene, 't was the tick of the clock In the old kitchen-room, fell distinct on his ear.

By her, on the sill, in a dainty white frock, O'erspread he saw his dead sister appear!

And even he noticed the green tendrils away And clamber to touch her white arm, where it lay.

As she leaned from the casement, and caught the low tone She breathed o'er the blossoms that morning in June.

And his heart thrilled again with that magical joy That filled it in school days, as full in the clock.

By the old hemlock-clim, fell distinct on his ear, He saw a trout darting at bottle-dry lake.

The rushes away lightly, the swallows skimmed Late peach blossoms whitened the low garden.

And he murmured in slumber, "How sweet to be here, Where the bees hum for gladness and the lady-olives call."

Through the trees on the hilltop, just kissed by the sun, Brightly glimmered the rim of his dear village bell.

As the ringer the summons for service began, And the voices so familiar filled every green dell.

And hush of yore, leaving sweet clover nook To him, and from him to me, as fall in the home brook."

Thus her neck o'er the bars as if ready to go! The scene grew so vivid the sleeper awoke.

He rose, and the audience-room, already packed, And reaching to fondle old Dobbin's warm nose, Sang into the strains of his office-staircase.

—Youth's Companion.

A SECOND TRIAL.

It was commencement at G. College. The people were pouring into the church as I entered it, rather tardily. Finding the choice seats in the center of the audience-room, already taken, I pressed forward, looking to the right and to the left for a vacancy. On the very front row of seats I found one.

Here a little girl moved along to make room for me, looking into my face with large gray eyes, whose brightness was softened by very long lashes. Her face was open and fresh as a newly-blown rose before sunrise. Again and again I found my eyes turning to the rose-like face, and each time the gray eyes moved, half smiling to meet mine. Evidently the child was ready to "make up" with me. And when, with a bright smile, she returned my dropped handkerchief, and I said, "Thank you," we seemed fairly introduced. Other persons, now coming in to the seat, crowded me quite close up against the little girl, so that we soon felt very well acquainted.

"There's going to be a great crowd," she said to me.

"Yes," I replied; "people always like to see how school-boys are made into men."

Her face beamed with pleasure and pride as she said this. "My brother's going to graduate; he's going to speak; I've brought these flowers to throw to him."

They were not greenhouse favorites; just old-fashioned domestic flowers, such as we associate with the dear grandmothers; "but," I thought, "they will seem sweet and beautiful to him for little sister's sake."

"That is my brother's," she went on, pointing with her nosegay.

"The one with the light hair?" I asked.

"O no," she said, smiling and shaking her head in innocent reproach; "not that homely one, with red hair; that handsome one with brown wavy hair."

His eyes looked brown, too; but they are not—they are dark blue. There! he's got his hand up to his head now. You see him, don't you?"

In an eager way she looked from me to him, and from him to me, as if some important fate depended upon my identifying her brother.

"I see him," I said. "He's a very good-looking brother."

"Yes, he is beautiful," she said, with a glow of delight; "and he's so good, and he studies so hard. He has taken care of me ever since mamma died. He is his name on the programme. He is not the valetudinarian, but he has an honor, for that."

"Leave in the little creature's familiarity with these technical college terms that she had closely identified herself with her brother's studies, hopes and successes."

"He thought, at first," she continued, "that he would write on the 'Romance of Monastic Life.'"

What a strange sound these long words had, whispered from her childish lips! Her interest in her brother's memory had stamped them on the child's memory, and to her they were ordinary things.

"But then," she went on, "he decided that he would rather write on 'Historical Parallels,' and he's got a real good oration, and he says it beautifully. He has said it to me a great many times. I most know it by heart. O! it begins so pretty and so grand, 'ence requires water to be kept in vessels for several hours before use, it should be covered unless the vessels are tight. Wherever practical, all distributing reservoirs should be covered. Filtering always adds to the purity of water. Drinking water should not be taken from lakes or rivers on a low level. Surface water, or water in lakes, pools or rivers which receive the surface wash, should be avoided as much as possible. Do not drink much water at a time. More than two tumblers full should not be taken at a meal. Do not drink between meals unless to quench thirst, as excess of water weakens the gastric juice and overworks the kidneys. Excessive potations, whether of water or other fluid, relax the stomach, impair its secretions, and paralyze its movements. By drinking a little at a time all injury is avoided."

"Now, it's his turn," she said, turning to me a face in which pride and delight and anxiety seemed about equally mingled. But when the overture was played through, and his name was called, the child seemed, in her eagerness, to forget me and all the earth beside him. She rose to her feet and leaned forward for a better view of her beloved, as he mounted to the speaker's stand. I knew by her deep breathing that her heart was throbbing in her throat. I knew, too, by the way her brother came up the steps and to the front that he was trembling. The hands hung limp; his face was pallid, and the lips blue as with cold. I felt anxious. The child, too, seemed to discern that things were not well with him. Something like fear showed in her face.

He made an automatic bow. Then a bewildered, struggling look came into his face, then a helpless look, and then he stood staring vacantly, like a somnambulist, at the waiting audience. The moments of painful suspense went by, and still he stood as if struck dumb. I saw how it was; he had been seized with stage-fright.

Alas! little sister! She turned her large, dismayed eyes upon me, as if to forget her. "He's forgotten it," she said. Then a swift change came into her face; a strong, determined look; and on the funeral-like silence of the room broke the sweet, brave, child-voice:

"Amid the permutations and combinations of the actors and the forces which make up the great kaleidoscope of history, we often find that a turn of Destiny's hand—"

Everybody about us turned and looked. The breathless silence; the sweet, childish voice; the childish face; the long, unchildlike words, produced a weird effect.

But the help had come too late: the unhappy brother was already staggering in humiliation from the stage. The band quickly struck up, and waves of lively music were rolled out to cover the defeat.

I gave the little sister a glance in which I meant to show the intense sympathy I felt; but she did not see me. Her eyes, swimming with tears, were on her brother's face. I put my arm around her. She was too absorbed to heed the caresses, and before I could appreciate her purpose, she was on her way to the shame-stricken young man sitting with a face like a statue's.

When he saw her by his side, the set face relaxed, and a quick mist came into his eyes. The young men got closer together, to make room for her. She sat down beside him, laid her flowers on his knee, and slipped her hand in his.

I could not keep my eyes from her sweet, pitying face. I saw her whisper to him, bending a little to catch her words. Later, I found out that she was asking him if he knew his "piece" now, and that she answered yes.

When the young man next on the list had spoken, and while the band was playing, the child, to the brother's great surprise, made her way up the stage steps, and pressed through the throng of professors and trustees and distinguished visitors, up to the college President.

"If you please, sir," she said with a little courtesy, "will you and the trustees let my brother try again? He knows his piece now."

For a moment, the President stared at her through his gold-bowed spectacles, and then, appreciating the child's petition, he smiled, and went down and spoke to the young man who had failed.

So it happened that when the band had again ceased playing, it was briefly announced that Mr. Norton now deliver his oration—"Historical Parallels."

"Amid the permutations and combinations of the actors and the forces which make up the great kaleidoscope of history—"

perpetual to him as he rose to answer the summons.

A ripple of heightened and expectant interest passed over the audience, and then all sat stone-still, as though mightily to breathe, and the speaker might again take fright. No danger! The hero in the youth was aroused. He went at his "piece" with a set purpose to conquer, to redeem himself, and to bring the smile back into the child's tear-stained face. I watched the face during the speaking. The wide eyes, the parted lips, the whole rapid being said that the breathless audience was forgotten, that her spirit was moving with his.

And when the address was ended with the ardent abandon of one who catches enthusiasm in the realization that he is fighting down a wrong judgment and conquering a sympathy, the effect was really thrilling. That dignified audience broke into rapturous applause; bouquets intended for the valetudinarian rained like a tempest. And the child who had helped to save the day,—that one who was always in its prime and gladness, is something to be forever remembered.—Sarah Winter Kellogg, St. Nicholas for June.

Hints About Water.

No water that has stood in open vessels during the night should be used for drinking or cooking. By exposure to the air it has lost its "aeration," and has absorbed many of the dust germs floating in the atmosphere. If convenient requires water to be kept in vessels for several hours before use, it should be covered unless the vessels are tight. Wherever practical, all distributing reservoirs should be covered. Filtering always adds to the purity of water. Drinking water should not be taken from lakes or rivers on a low level. Surface water, or water in lakes, pools or rivers which receive the surface wash, should be avoided as much as possible. Do not drink much water at a time. More than two tumblers full should not be taken at a meal. Do not drink between meals unless to quench thirst, as excess of water weakens the gastric juice and overworks the kidneys. Excessive potations, whether of water or other fluid, relax the stomach, impair its secretions, and paralyze its movements. By drinking a little at a time all injury is avoided.

When they rob a man in Deadwood they make him "put up his hands."

When the thing is to be done in Wall street the party, according to the Boston Commercial Bulletin, is asked to put up a margin.

THE REPUBLICAN.

OAKLAND, MARYLAND.

JAS. A. HAYDEN,
Editor and Proprietor.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.
One copy, one year, $1.50
Six months, $1.00
Three months, $0.50
SINGLE COPIES, 10 CENTS.

TERMS OF ADVERTISING.
First insertion, 10 cents per square of 10 lines.
Second insertion, 5 cents per square of 10 lines.
Third insertion, 3 cents per square of 10 lines.
Special contracts for advertising longer than three months.

Correspondents must enclose full name and address, and not necessarily for publication, but as a private guarantee of good faith. Rejected communications will not be returned.

SATURDAY, JUNE 28, 1879.

"Organ"-ized—A clique club.

"There is a split in the Democratic Party"—Totten.
"There is no split in the Democratic Party"—Merrill.

A few Democrats of Oakland endeavored to organize a campaign club on Friday evening of last week, but owing to factional differences it is likely to prove a failure.

President, E. H. Bartlett; Recording Secretary, H. P. Tasker; Corresponding Secretary, Jno. J. Smith. Ye gods! what a trio—a whole between two minnows—how we little fish and big fish do swim!

We are indebted to Mr. W. P. Townsend, Secretary to the Accident Sunday School Convention, for the full and comprehensive report of the proceedings of that body furnished THE REPUBLICAN for publication.

Rev. W. A. Baker, State Sunday School Superintendent, and Mr. F. L. Morling, editor of the Woodberry News, Baltimore county, called at our office Wednesday morning. These gentlemen deserve the thanks of our people for their labor in our county during the past week.

The last veto message of President Hayes is an admirable paper, and punctured the rebel scheme of nullification mercilessly. The President's ground is unassailable. He cannot, he says, approve a bill which while it does not repeal a law plainly makes it an offence to enforce it. It is a ridiculous inconsistency to suppose he could, for in such a case he would be liable to impeachment if he enforced the law or if he didn't. The better part of the Democrats feel chagrined at his forcible criticism.

The effort of the Democratic bulldozers to subordinate the Senate to their coercive measures last week was a disastrous failure. For the first time in history they undertook to choke off debate in that body. Of course the Republicans resented and resisted it. This provoked the most insulting manners on the part of the Democrats, and Lamar was fifty called a blackguard by Mr. Conkling. It was supposed Lamar would challenge Mr. Conkling, but he has found discretion the better part of valor, and gone home. The bulldozers have learned that they cannot ride rough shod over the Northern Senators.

Our Local Laws Constitutional.

Shortly after the passage of our local laws, or that part incorporated in "An Act to add an additional article to the Code of Public Laws, to be entitled Garrett county," the question of their legality was raised, and an offender against one of its provisions was indicted by the Grand Jury of this county. On the case coming to trial in the Circuit Court the defendant's counsel objected to the legality of the laws, the court sustained the objections and the case was carried to the Court of Appeals.

On the 17th inst., Judge Miller delivered the opinion of that Court in the case of the State of Maryland vs. John Fox, indicted for a violation of Section 10, chapter 198, of the act of 1878, making it a felony to cut timber and trees in Garrett county. The only question worth deciding, says the Court of Appeals, is the law unconstitutional? from the fact, as was alleged, that the title did not describe what the law was to accomplish. The Court thought it did, and reversed the judgment given below and remands the record.

If the same capital were invested in manufacturing useful articles of industry as is used in manufacturing intoxicating drinks it would give employment to one-fourth more men, and there would be no cry of bread famine or hard times.

The $500 fine of Miss Lillie Duer was raised and paid by her friends, who received her at her father's house in Pocomoke City with demonstrations of joy.

"Honest" Versus "Free" Elections.

Our Democratic friends claim to have formulated the issues for 1880 out of the results of the called session, and to be contented with their work. For their contentment with it, we apprehend they are very much in the situation described by the Dutchman, who in reply to an inquiry concerning his lately deceased wife, said: "Resigned? Mein Gott, she had to be." At any rate there is the work, and they must make the best of it. Their opponents certainly are satisfied and will meet them cheerfully upon the points in dispute. The Democrats have condensed and epitomized the whole controversy in the demand which they propose to fling out upon their banners for "Free Elections." It is perhaps as terse a statement as could be made; has a good sound; impresses into party service a qualifying word which they have had no stomach for since "Free Soil" first began to win victories; and is, upon the whole, as good for the next as "Reform" was for the last campaign. The Republicans are quite willing to give them their way; to let the case be docketed for the court of last resort, and the verdict of the people, as an appeal for "Free" against "Honest" elections, and on that take testimony and hear arguments.

The grievance they bring forward is Federal interference at the polls; and under this general head they specifically allege that Republican policy has stationed soldiers with bayonets, and United States Marshals with orders of arrest, at the ballot-boxes. Grant it. But the honest voter, who sees no bayonet actually at the polls, and fears no arrest in the discharge of his right and duty, will inquire as to the bayonet business; when it began; what caused it; when it ceased; and why; and what are the dangers to be apprehended. Such inquiries lead him back into the history of a Democratic attempt to use the Army at the polls, twenty-five years ago, to force slavery on free territory; of a Democratic rebellion; of its suppression; of the necessity for garrisons in captured towns, and of their continuance to uphold an emancipated race in the exercise of the right of citizenship; of their final withdrawal, and the silencing of the voice and vote of the oppressed race from that moment; and at last of the Democratic demand that the National Government should not withdraw the bayonets; they had long been withdrawn—abdicating its own supremacy, and surrendering the principle upon which it had fought and won a costly war. The Republican party is quite willing to let the voter go to the record on that appeal.

The honest voter, who, contemplating no crime, fears no arrest, when appealed to on behalf of "Free Elections" to register his protest against General supervision, will be very likely also to ask the reason for it. The inquiry takes him back upon the record, and lands him plump upon the transactions of the Democratic party in 1868, which disclosed the necessity for some measures to prevent the repetition of gigantic frauds. As Republicans are we will not decide between the two parties on that showing. Or if he asks why the repeal of the Federal Supervisors law is demanded by Democrats, and is answered by the latter that it is an infringement of the rights of the States, as is their claim, we can well afford to leave him to the use of his own intelligence, and the exercise of his own reasoning powers, to find out the effect of that concession upon the stability, credit and permanence of the Government. The argument does not need even to be outlined. It suggests itself to every intelligent voter. The Democratic demand for "Free Elections" sends the voter back to the history of the Democratic party, and the Republican answer "Give us Honest Elections rather!" makes sharp and clear the contrast between the records of the two parties as well as between their aims and purposes. N. Y. Tribune.

It is good news to hear that the medical authorities are of the opinion that the yellow fever will not break out in the South this summer. They think that if the poisonous germs for the production of an epidemic had kept over they would have developed themselves before now. It was toward the end of June last year that the first cases of disease occurred in New Orleans, and, considering how little has been done to improve the sanitary condition of the city, we have much to be thankful for if the supposition of the physicians proves correct. The only danger then existing would be from the importation of the fever from the West Indies, and that can be guarded against by a strict and efficient quarantine.

An unpleasant passenger in a street car is a crying baby. In such cases Dr. Bull's Baby Syrup should be given to the little sufferer to ease its troubles. 25 cents a bottle.

The Baltimorean, one of the leading Democratic papers of Baltimore, referring to the candidates nominated last week, says "Is it superfluous to recite at length the objections that exist to the ticket nominated last Wednesday. The fact that this ticket is Doer's ticket ought to be sufficient to damn it in the eyes of all decent people. The question to be determined in this campaign is whether we will have our municipal politics controlled by a man whose notorious violations of law have stamped him with the indelible brand of a criminal. The unparalleled arrogance of this man, who although highly violating the law, seeks to lord it over a municipality of over 250,000 people deserves a crushing rebuke. Will the people of Baltimore have this notorious character to rule over them?"

What the South needs to-day, says the Boston Herald, is not more legislation or federal bayonets, but an infusion of the ideas on which American civilization is based—the ideas which have made such States as Massachusetts, New York, Ohio and Pennsylvania, and for lack of which, Virginia, South Carolina and Louisiana are where they are to-day. This is not a question of race or section. It is equally interesting to white or black. The South needs honest administration, protection of the law and education. It should spend five dollars for schools, where it now spends one, and go to work to pay its debts, instead of sitting down in a corner grocery and whining about them. These ideas are all that will save the South, whether carried there in carpet-bags or evolved by the example of the growing North.

In the walking match in London, last week, for the Astley belt, Edward P. Weston, the American, made 550 miles, in 145 hours, beating the best record by over 7 miles. The championship belt comes back to America, Rowell has challenged Weston for a match to take place in New York in September. Brown, Weston's competitor covered 453 miles. There has been considerable fan made of Weston's walking, but he has proved himself the champion walkist by the above score.

In 1878 the United States received as revenues from liquors $50,429,815.80, and on distilled spirits as tax $9,267,061.75, which was about seven millions less than in 1877. These figures go to show that the temperance cause is making good headway against the liquor traffic.

TELEGRAPHIC.

THE JUDICIAL BILL VETOED.
WASHINGTON, June 28.—The President's message vetoing the judicial bill is short but pointed. It goes briefly over the ground that laws should not be defeated in their operation by lack of appropriation, and concludes as follows:

There are two lawful ways to overturn legislative enactments—one is their repeal; the other is the decision of a competent tribunal against their validity. The effect of this bill is to deprive the executive department of the government of the means to execute laws which are not repealed, which have not been declared invalid, and which it is therefore the duty of the executive and of every other department of the government to obey and enforce.

I have in my former message on this subject expressed a willingness to concur in suitable amendments for the improvement of the election laws; but I cannot consent to their absolute and entire repeal, and I cannot approve legislation which seeks to prevent their enforcement.

RUTHERFORD B. HAYES.

Executive Mansion, June 28, 1879.

THE ARMY BILL SIGNED.

WASHINGTON, June 28.—At a quarter to twelve o'clock to-day, the President signed the Army appropriation bill.

SENATORS CONKLING AND LAMAR.
WASHINGTON, June 19.—In the Senate between 12 and 1 o'clock this morning, Mr. Conkling in speaking on the army bill charged the other side with bad faith in not allowing the time taken up by the Mississippi river commission bill this morning to be allowed in the debate on the army bill. Mr. Lamar rose at the conclusion of Mr. Conkling's remarks and said that as far as any intimation of bad faith to him was concerned he had lived in vain if he was not superior to such a charge from such a source. It is not my purpose, he said, to lodge in personalities, but I will say to the senator that if he intended to intimate that anything I have done was not in good faith I pronounce his statement a falsehood, which I repel with all the unmitigated contempt that I feel for the author of it.

Mr. Conkling, who had been walking slowly back and forth behind the benches, advanced to his seat and said: "Mr. President, I was diverted during the commencement of the remarks, the culmination of which I heard from the member from Mississippi. If I understand the member aright he intended to impute and did in plain and unparliamentary language impute to me an intentional misstatement. (Pausing)—The senator does not disclaim that?"

Mr. Lamar. I will state what I intended, Sir, so that there can be no mistake.

The presiding officer (Cockrell) called Mr. Lamar to order and Mr. Conkling proceeded—whether I am willing to respond to the member from Mississippi depends entirely upon what that member intends to say and what he did say, and for the time being I do not choose to hold any communication with him. I understood the Senator to remark in plain unparliamentary language that the statement of mine to which he refers was a falsehood. If I caught his words right I have only to say, this not being the place to measure with any man the capacity to violate decency, to violate the rules of the Senate or to commit any of the improprieties of life—I have only to say that if the Senator—the member—from Mississippi did impute, or intended to impute to me a falsehood, nothing except the fact that this is the Senate would prevent my denouncing him as a blackguard, as a coward. [Applause and hisses.] Let me be more specific Mr. President. Should the member from Mississippi, except in the presence of the Senate, charge me by intimation or otherwise with falsehood, I would denounce him as a blackguard, as a coward and a liar. The rules and the proprieties of the Senate are the only restraint upon me. I do not think I need say any more, Mr. President. [Applause and hisses.]

The Chair then demanded quiet in the galleries.

Mr. Lamar, I have only to say that the Senator from New York understood me correctly. I did mean to say just precisely the words and all that they imported. I beg the Senate's pardon for the unparliamentary language. It was very harsh; it was severe; it was such as no good man would deserve and no brave man would wear. [Renewed demonstrations of approval and disapproval.]

The Chair. The galleries will be cleared upon rejection of applause. This ended the controversy.

TROOPS FOR BREATHITT COUNTY, KENTUCKY.

FRANKFORT, June 28.—Governor McCreary to-day, in accordance with the application of Judge Randall, sent a detachment of twenty-five of the McCreary Guards and twenty-five of the Louisville Legion to Breathitt county. The military will remain there during the term of the Circuit Court, which commences next Monday, for the trial of nine men indicted for murder, who have been confined in the Louisville jail for safe keeping for the past three months. Judge Randall believed that he could not hold his court peaceably, and hence his application to the Governor for military aid in order to preserve the peace. The nine prisoners, accompanied by the Louisville Legion, arrived in Frankfort this evening.

ADDITIONAL LOCAL NEWS.

About the 1st of May last, G. H. Snapp lost his mucklet book containing some cash, and papers of great value to him, but valueless to any one else. If the finder will return said papers to him, by mail, at Engles Mills Post Office, Garrett Co., Md., he can retain the cash, and no questions will be asked.

An order was passed by our County Court during this term appointing Messrs. J. P. A. Katter, T. B. Davis, Alex. Kalbaugh, John Sloan and Sanford J. Whip, a commission on behalf of Mineral county to act in conjunction with a like commission to be appointed by Allegany and Garrett counties, Md., whose duty it shall be to look after Mineral county's interest in the bridges between the two States.—Piedmont Herald.

Church Services—Sunday.

Lutheran Church—Preaching at 8 o'clock P. M. by Rev. O. C. Miller.

Messina Quail.

Dr. J. Lee McComas a few days since received from a friend in Baltimore, seven Messina Quail, three females and four males, which he proposes to turn loose on the farm of Mr. William White, about five miles southwest from Oakland. These birds have been but recently introduced into North America, first in Canada and a short time ago in New England. A consignment of six hundred was received in Baltimore a few weeks since. They are somewhat smaller than our partridge and of a lighter color—a very handsome bird. We hope our sportsmen will not disturb them for a few years. The Doctor has ever taken a deep interest in the propagation of game.

The Glades Hotel

This elegant and spacious Hotel will be ready for visitors next week. The building is near the site of the Old Glades, which was destroyed by fire in 1875. The main building is 60 by 52 feet and three stories in height. The wing, only a part of which is completed, will be 34 by 112 feet, and will be used as a dining hall and kitchen on the first floor, and bed chambers on the second. The building was erected under the supervision of Capt. J. M. Jarboe, which is a sufficient guarantee of its substantial character. Mr. Jas. S. Johnson superintended the stone and brick work, which reflect credit upon him as a master workman in his line. The plastering was done under the direction of Mr. George Miller, of Frostburg, and is an elegant piece of work. Mr. S. V. B. Ward did the painting in his usual good style.

Mr. Dailey's national reputation as a caterer, precludes the necessity of our saying anything with the expectation of adding thereto.

The Glades will be open during the entire year, and no doubt will be a paying investment.

Coal Oil Explosion.

A coal oil lamp exploded in the sitting room of the residence of Mr. J. M. Jarboe, in Oakland, Wednesday morning, about five o'clock, but fortunately little damage was done. The lamp had been burning all night, on account of the illness of his daughter Stella, sleeping in an adjoining room, who was awakened by the explosion, and gave the alarm in time to save the dwelling and contents, and probably the lives of some of the inmates.

—Dr. W. F. Fundenberg, Oculist, and Aurist, from Cumberland, Md., is now stopping at the "Davis House," where all those suffering from diseases of the eye, ear, nose and throat can consult him every day in the week, excepting on Saturdays and Sundays. All consultations free. Hours, 9 A. M. to 4 P. M.

Frostburg, Md., June 24th, 1879.

Mr. Eubank.—From the extensive notices in the Journal, and the hand bills scattered around I glean the information that Hon. Geo. Colton, the gentleman who has for the past few years always managed to secure, in spite of the most strenuous opposition, the State printing, will deliver a lecture in Oakland on the 1st of July, next evening. The proceeds of the lecture will be applied to procure a library for the Frostburg Lyceum and its subject will be the "Nobility of Labor and the Dignity of the Poor." Mr. Colton has very good and clever assistants, having risen from poverty to a position of wealth and honor in his native State. He has delivered several lectures, all of which have been well received, and from which he has obtained considerable funds. He deals chiefly in the humorous, and his entertainment this evening is expected to be large.

For a long time the Presbyterians here have been without a pastor. That want will now be supplied in the person of Rev. William A. Powell, who will be installed pastor this evening. Clergymen from Baltimore and Cumberland will be in attendance and assist in the services, which will doubtless be interesting.

B. Stern, Esq., one of the sterling business men of Frostburg, had a brother living at Szegedin, in Hungary, at the time of the great flood some time ago. He lost everything, and saved his life only by climbing a tree, where he remained five hours until the water had subsided.

The Lutherans held a festival last week for the benefit of their church, and the Methodists are to have another one this week.

There is some talk of holding the county convention in Frostburg this year, instead of at Cumberland, where it is usually held. I do not know the result of this except that the people of the county may think that they will thereby have a better chance to secure some of the offices for themselves and keep the Cumberlanders from getting the lion's share.

The Sheriff of Allegany county appears to be a nice little fellow. The Sheriff's fees this year, with it, is said, amount to eleven or twelve thousand dollars.

Things political are getting warm. At a picnic held "down the creek" at Moscow, the other day, I am told, there were a regiment of soldiers, comprising the big dogs and little dogs of the Democratic party. Frostburg present spots of gentleness for public favor. They are Reuben Anthony, Isaac Amos, and — McLaughlin, for Clerk; John S. Grove, Esq., for State's Attorney, and others. Her citizens are very favorably disposed toward Henry Hauekamp for the Sheriffship. Mr. Hauekamp, I believe, is a resident of Louisa, and one of the staunchest Democrats of the county.

The weather last week was delightfully cool. To-day, however, it is quite warm. Perhaps the summer holidays, for whom Frostburg has been sighing will now begin to arrive, as the "heated term" seems to have set in.

Last Saturday being pay day the streets in the evening presented quite an unlimited scene. The merchants were all busy, and to a new comer it would seem that the people had never reached Frostburg.

The annual entertainment of Wheeler Hall, an educational institution under the management of the Messrs. Korn, took place yesterday evening in the Odd Fellows' Open House. The exercises comprised selections from favorite authors, essays, dialogues, performances on the piano, etc. Every one enjoyed his part well, and the pupils evidenced careful training. The exercises were opened with prayer, by Rev. Mr. Wilson, of the M. E. Church, and at the conclusion of the entertainment the benediction was pronounced by Rev. Mr. Harrison, of the English Lutheran church.

NELLIE GRAY.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

DR. W. F. FUNDENBERG
Late Resident Surgeon, New York
Eye and Ear Infirmary.

HAS LOCATED PERMANENTLY in the City of Cumberland, Md., for the EXCLUSIVE treatment of all diseases of the Eye and Ear, including those of the Nose and Throat.

Office, No. 25 South Centre Street.
ap213y

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

COMMISSIONERS' MEETING.

OFFICE OF THE
HARRIET TOWNY COMMISSIONERS,
OAKLAND, MD., JUNE 17th, 1879.

Notice is hereby given that the County Commissioners of Garrett county will meet at their office in Oakland.

On Monday, July 7th, 1879,

For the appointment of Judges of Election, and transacting such other business as may come before the Board.

W. H. HAGANS,
Clerk.

6 21 2

Normal School.

OFFICE OF THE GARRETT COUNTY SCHOOL BOARD,
OAKLAND, MD., JUNE 18th, 1879.

The Garrett county Normal School will be opened in October.

On Monday, July 21st,

under the tuition of Mr. T. Mitchell.

Examination will take place on last day of session.

Those who design teaching in Garrett Co., are advised to attend the Normal School if possible. For terms, &c., apply to J. T. Mitchell, Baltimore, Md.

E. H. BARTLETT,
Secretary.

6 21 3t

TRUSTEE'S SALE

OF VALUABLE

REAL ESTATE.

By virtue of a decree passed by the Orphans' Court for Garrett county, in a cause wherein Ira E. Friend and John T. Garvey are complainants, and David Kent, Administrator, and others, are defendants, I will on Monday, July 7th, 1879,

at the house of J. M. Jarboe, P. M., in front of Colington's Hotel, in the town of Oakland, offer for sale to the highest bidder, all that part of the late estate of Adam Seligman and seized and possessed, being a part of

Military Lot No. 3141,

containing 583 acres, to be sold subject to the widow's dower, and part of a tract of land called

"The Youghiogheny Hills,"

containing 583 acres, more or less, which will be sold free from the widow's dower and land, adjoining the lands of John Friend, Alfred Kelly and others, near Friendsville, in Garrett county, and are fully described in the proceedings in the aforesaid cause. The above property is improved by a and necessary out-buildings, and a good part thereof is in a fine state of cultivation. Plans and full description of improvements will be shown by the trustee to any one desiring to purchase.

COMFORTABLE DWELLING

TERMS OF SALE, as prescribed by the decree, are:—One-half the purchase money to be paid in cash on the day of sale, and the remainder to be paid in four equal installments, to be secured by mortgage, and to be approved by the trustees, for the deferred payment. Conveyancing at cost of purchaser.

THOS. J. PEDDICORD,

6 14 1d Trustee.

DR. J. DAILY.

RESIDENT DENTIST

WESTERNPORT, MARYLAND.

From one to a full set of teeth inserted in the most beautiful and substantial manner. Particular attention paid to cleaning and filling the natural teeth. All work warranted to give satisfaction or money refunded.

Law office of David W. Sharp, at Washington Street, Cumberland, Md.

Order of Publication.

David McPherson v. E. the Circuit Court for Garrett county, in

George F. Otto, & Emily, No. 1st.

This object of this bill is to set aside the

from the complaint in the

The bill alleges that the complainant executed a deed to the defendant for two in the 18th of March, 1878, in consideration of the conveyance to him of a county, Iowa. That both deeds were executed and duly delivered at the same day.

That the 1st deed was given to the complainant by the defendant was not at the time owned by him.

That the deed from the defendant to the complainant was executed with intent to defraud him of his property.

That the defendant is a non-resident. And it is suggested that the same be set aside.

It is therefore ordered by the Court, this 13th day of June, 1879, that the complainant execute a copy of this order, together with the original and substance of the bill, to be inserted in some newspaper published in Garrett county, once a week for four successive weeks, before the 15th day of July, 1879, giving notice to the defendant in said bill, and warning him to appear in this Court on or before the 15th day of October, 1879, and show cause, if he has any, why a decree ought not to pass as prayed.

W. H. TOWER, Clerk.

6 21 1w

HEADACHE NEURALGIA PILLS

"DR. L. W. HENSON, a practicing physician at 106

N. E. St., Baltimore,

has cured many cases of headache and neuralgia

by the use of his

NEURALGIA PILLS.

These pills are composed of

purely natural ingredients, and

are perfectly safe and effective.

They are sold by all druggists.

Price 25

cents per bottle.

Prepared

by Dr. L. W.

Henson, 106

N. E. St.,

Baltimore,

Md.

ap213y

LOCAL NEWS.

—Headquarters for fishing tackle at Sturgis' Drug Store.

—200 sacks G. A. Salt for sale at Wm. P. Totten's Chem Cash Store, Oakland, Md.

—A large amount of wool has been shipped from Oakland within the past two weeks.

—Fresh meat at Wolfe's, near the postoffice, every Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday.

—Seltzer, Congress, and Hanyadi James Waters at Sturgis' Old Reliable Drug Store.

—Mr. I. S. Craft, wife and child, of Alliance, Ohio, are stopping at Mr. Bowie Johnson's.

—Our new Bailiff is determined to keep order in the town. The people of Oakland will sustain him.

—Mr. Gosora of the Government Printing office is spending a short vacation in Oakland.

—Sturgis, at the Old Reliable Drug Store keeps the finest cigars and tobacco ever brought to Oakland.

—There is a large willow tree in the jail yard, at Cumberland, which was brought from the tomb of Napoleon by Capt. Roger Perry.

—The town authorities are improving the streets by cleaning off loose stones, smoothing up the rough places, cleaning out the gutters, &c.

—W. H. Tower, Esq., who has been in ill health for several days, has so far recovered as to be able to attend to the duties of his office.

—Mr. J. M. Jarboe is erecting a veranda in front of the dwelling owned by him and occupied by Mr. A. G. Sturgis, on Alder Street.

—Mr. J. M. Crane, contractor, has raised the frame of an addition 52 by 21 feet to the residence and store room of Mr. J. R. Bishop, on the corner of Second and Alder streets.

—A party consisting of Mr. Jere Browning and two daughters, Mrs. Brown and Mr. John J. P. Hoye, last week visited Black Water on a fishing excursion, and caught in two days 998 trout.

—Professor Nimmo, the photographer, who has been at Oakland for several seasons, has associated himself with Mr. G. H. Pritchard, where they will be pleased to see their old friends.

—Married—At the residence of the bride's sister, at Webster, W. Va., Sunday June 22d, 1879, by Rev. Dr. J. J. Mason, Mr. George M. Mason and Miss Maggie E. Longbridge, both of Oakland, Md.

—Married—At Emmanuel (Episcopal) Church, Cumberland, by Rev. S. C. Thrall, D. D., on Thursday, June 19th, 1879, Mr. Webster Bruce and Miss Laura Shriver, both of that city.

—Married—At the residence of the bride's parents, in Frostburg, by Rev. J. W. Nott, on June 18th, Mr. Wm. Brace, of Cumberland, and Miss Maggie Thomas, daughter of J. R. Thomas, Esq., of Frostburg.

—Married—On the 17th inst., at the residence of the bride's father, by Rev. W. Y. Cline, Mr. Henry A. Shaffer to Miss Rebecca A. Roth, both of Preston county. The pastor's wife was kindly remembered by sending her a nice, large cake.

—Miss Laura Stahaker returned home from the Western Maryland College on Saturday. She was accompanied by Miss Anna Chesney, of Baltimore, who will spend her vacation here.

—Saturday last week Lloyd Michael was declared to be an insane pauper by a jury summoned by order of Judge Pearce, who ordered that he be taken to the Maryland Hospital. He was taken down Tuesday last.

—Mrs. W. Steele, who has been teaching in Revere, Mass., for the last nine months, will return to her home in Deer Park next week. She is desirous of disposing of her business at the latter named place. A good opening for a person wishing to enter into the mercantile business.

—Sunday School meetings were held in the M. E. Church Monday and Tuesday evenings, which were addressed by Rev. W. A. Baker and Messrs. Morling and Keyser, of Baltimore. They were largely attended, and much interest was manifested in the proceedings.

—The contract for building the Georges Creek and Cumberland railroad has been awarded to Willis and J. N. Phelps, of Springfield, Mass. The road is to be completed and in running order by March 1, 1880. It is to cost $600,000, including the cars, hoppers, eight engines, etc.

—Mr. L. F. Stentz, representing the Masontown, Pa., nurseries, is now in our county, for the purpose of taking orders for fruit and ornamental trees, shrubs, roses, grape vines, small fruits, &c. We have known Mr. Stentz for twenty years, and take pleasure in recommending him to our citizens wishing anything in his line.

—Wednesday last Dr. J. Lee McComas amputated the right leg, just above the ankle joint, of Mrs. Jere Moan, residing near Oakland, who had been suffering for several years from a scrofulous affection which had its seat in the foot. The operation was successfully performed and the patient is now doing well.

Sunday School Convention.

The proceedings of the third Sunday School Convention for Garrett county, which met in the Lutheran church at Accident, on Friday 20th inst., at 2 o'clock, and adjourned on Sunday night, are given below. As the others have proved to be a success, so did this, its success being equal to if not greater than that of the Oakland convention of 1878. A majority of the Schools in the county were represented by delegates, in addition to the pastors and superintendents of the same. Rev. Wm. A. Baker, State Superintendent, F. L. Morling, of Baltimore, and Rev. J. M. Davis, Vice President, were present, and were meeting and uniting in the work to advance and benefit the Sunday School cause. They, with the many other ministers present, in conjunction with the delegates, made the convention an exceedingly interesting and pleasant one—one to be long remembered in the annals of the work of the Saviour in Garrett county. The religious communion here had and the interchange of sentiments indicated that all thus engaged were trying to obey the Divine injunction, "Feed My Lambs." The attendance of the people and the interest displayed far exceeded that of any former convention held in the county. At all times the building was filled to overflowing, and more especially was this the case during the services of Sunday. In the morning the large and commodious church of the Dunkards, who, with great kindness permitted it to be used on this occasion, was filled to its utmost capacity by people estimated to number 1,000, representing many sects, to listen to the Rev. J. W. Bishop, who preached an eloquent and affecting sermon.

It was cheering to the hearts of all Christians to see so many, notwithstanding their different modes of worship, here assembled with but one object in view, and their hearts fixed and intent upon the accomplishment of no other object or purpose than the advancement of the Sunday School cause, the redemption of souls and progress of the work of Christ.

The hospitality and kindness of the people of the vicinity, and the reception which all met with can hardly be overestimated; and to the exertions of Drs. E. H. Gifford and A. F. Speicher and Messrs. Eli McMillen and Wm. Hinebaugh may the success of the convention and the comfort of those attending the same be to a considerable extent attributed. The music and singing was very good, conducted by Prof. Smith and Richardson, and Miss Emma McMillen, organists.

FRIDAY AFTERNOON.

Convention opened in Lutheran church at 2 o'clock and was called to order by Rev. O. C. Miller, President of last convention and was opened by singing "Joy to the World," and prayer by Rev. J. J. Young, after which on motion of Brother W. A. Baker, a committee composed of Bros. Wm. A. Baker, J. M. Davis, C. M. Miller, W. H. Tower and E. H. Gifford, was appointed by the President to nominate permanent officers and act as the Business Committee of the Convention. Committee retired and during absence hymn "What a Friend we have in Jesus," was sung.

Committee returned and reported the following nominations for permanent officers: President, Rev. J. J. Young; vice presidents, F. L. Morling, Thos. J. Peddicord, C. M. Miller and Wm. Hinebaugh; secretaries, W. H. Tower, W. P. Townsend; treasurer, A. C. Hamill.

On motion prayer was adopted and nominees declared elected.

The Address of Welcome was then delivered by Rev. J. J. Young and replied to by F. L. Morling on behalf of delegates and visitors. Hymn "Praise the Lord," was then sung, whereupon Bro. Wm. A. Baker suggested that the time for opening and closing sessions of Convention be fixed, and on motion hours for same were fixed as follows: Morning session, 9 to 11; afternoon session, 2 to 5; evening session, 7 to 10.

Reports from Sunday Schools as given elsewhere were read. After reading of reports two stanzas of hymn "Nearer my God to Thee," were sung, after which the President announced the programme for the succeeding sessions. Congregation then engaged in singing "The Saviour at the Door." The remainder of the session was taken up in discussing the best means to organize and sustain a school in face of opposition and negligence, and was engaged in by Revs. M. A. Salt, Chas. Price, O. C. Miller, Wm. A. Baker, John M. Davis, and Bro. F. L. Morling. Bro. Baker then led in prayer. On motion Convention adjourned after singing hymn "Gathering Home," and benediction by Rev. J. M. Davis, to reassemble at 7 o'clock P. M.

EVENING SESSION.

Session opened at 7 o'clock, and first half hour engaged in devotional exercises, conducted by Bro. A. C.

Hamill, after which proceeded with regular order of business of the convention, which was called to order by the President, Rev. J. J. Young. Roll of delegates called and 28 found to be present. Minutes of afternoon session read and approved. Hymn "Rescue the Perishing," was sung; and afterwards the first question for discussion, "How to make the Sunday School attractive, and what attractions are proper and allowable," was opened by Rev. Chas. Price, and engaged in by Revs. Geo. A. Snapp, O. C. Miller, Wm. A. Baker, M. A. Salt, J. J. Young, and Bro. T. J. Peddicord. After which the following resolution was offered by Bro. F. L. Morling and unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That our Schools can only be made attractive by varying the exercises, by using all the modern appliances for improving the lessons, and by singing any gospel hymns now so universally used, and that all attractions are allowable that do not tend to lead the mind to worldliness.

The second question for discussion, "How can the Sunday School Superintendent make his school a success," was opened by Rev. J. M. Davis, who was followed by C. M. Miller, O. C. Miller and F. L. Morling. Singing by choir; during which a collection was taken up and afterwards the resolution as follows, introduced by Bro. F. L. Morling, was adopted:

Resolved, That a Superintendent, to make his school a success, must thoroughly qualify himself for his duties, must make use of all the advantages presented for keeping his school at all times interesting, and must never allow his exercises to become dull or heavy. It is his duty to give a careful and prayerful attention to the work of his teachers.

The President announced programme for Saturday morning, and on motion Convention adjourned after singing doxology, and benediction by Rev. Chas. Price, to meet at 9 o'clock A. M. Saturday morning.

SATURDAY MORNING.

Convention assembled at 9 o'clock. One-half hour was devoted to religious worship conducted by Rev. Chas. Price, with Prof. R. G. Richardson officiating as organist, after which the regular business of the convention was proceeded with. Rev. J. J. Young presided. Roll of delegates called and 41 answered to their names. Bro. Baker offered a motion that all visitors, including ladies, be admitted as delegates and have the privilege of speaking on all questions. Motion carried. Minutes of session held Friday afternoon read and approved. Five additional reports of Sabbath Schools were received and read. The hymn, "Let the lower lights be burning," was sung by the choir, after which the question "Country Sunday Schools; their special needs and difficulties," was ably discussed by C. M. Miller making the opening argument, who was followed by Rev. O. C. Miller, N. L. Baumgardner, J. M. Davis, W. A. Baker, Charles Price, M. A. Salt, and Bro. F. L. Morling.

The following resolution was then introduced by Rev. O. C. Miller and adopted:

Resolved, That country Sunday Schools need all the modern improvements, and that it is the sense of this convention that every school should have the Lesson Leaves, blackboard, maps, &c.

Singing by the Choir. 4th question "Should the temperance cause be considered a part of Sunday School work?" was announced by the President and discussed by Bro. T. J. Peddicord, Rev. J. M. Davis then offered the following resolution, which was unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That the temperance cause should be a part of the Sunday School work; that temperance societies should be organized in each school, and that the children should be taught from infancy in this great moral reform.

The hymn "Yield not to temptation" was then sung, Rev. G. A. Snapp pronounced the benediction and the convention adjourned to reassemble at 2 o'clock.

SATURDAY AFTERNOON.

Afternoon session opened at two o'clock. Engaged in devotional exercises until 2½, conducted by Rev. N. L. Baumgardner. Convention was then called to order by the President, Rev. J. J. Young, and the regular order of business was taken up. Roll of delegates called and 60 answered to their names. Minutes of morning session read and approved. Two additional reports of Sunday Schools were received and read. Singing: An essay was read by W. A. Baker, on the 5th question "What relation should the Sabbath School sustain to the family?" and was followed by singing hymn "What hast thou done for Me?" Bro. T. J. Peddicord offered the following resolution, which was adopted:

Resolved, That it is the sense of this convention

1st. That the Sunday School does sustain a relation to every family in the community.

2d. The relation between the Sunday School and the family should be one of mutual help and dependence.

3d. That the family should exercise

a home government with reference to the Sunday School work, and every member of the family, both young and adult, should attend regularly and aid the Sunday School in every proper way.

4th. That the Sunday School should help the family by sending into it a good literature that will instill into the minds of the young those truths which will lead them to the Saviour.

5th. That it is our duty to cultivate this relation of mutual help and dependence between the family and Sunday School as the surest means of success and happiness to both.

The discussion of the question, "How can we secure competent teachers for our Sunday Schools," was opened by Rev. O. C. Miller, who was followed by Bros. C. M. Miller, T. J. Peddicord, C. J. Otto, F. W. Yager, D. H. Friend, M. A. Sault, J. J. Young and F. L. Morling, after which the following resolutions were offered by T. J. Peddicord and adopted:

Resolved, That it is the sense of this Convention that in order to furnish competent teachers, that teachers' meetings be held weekly by the superintendent or pastor of each school, and that all our teaching in Sunday Schools be of a normal character.

Singing by the choir, followed by the opening of the question box.

1st. Should country Sunday Schools be kept open during the winter? was assigned to and answered by Rev. John M. Davis.

2d. "How should superintendents and teachers appear to the children when meeting meeting them on the street and during the school?" was responded to by T. J. Peddicord and Rev. O. C. Miller.

3d. "What is the best mode of conducting a library?" answered by W. A. Baker.

4th. "What form of opening exercises would you adopt for country schools?" answered by Rev. G. A. Snapp.

5th. "What is the best time of day to hold school in the country?" answered by Rev. O. C. Miller.

6th. "How old should a person be before they cease to attend Sunday School?" answered by C. M. Miller.

7th. "For whose benefit should the school be?" answered by F. L. Morling.

8th. "What are the pastor's duties to the Sunday School?" answered by Rev. John M. Davis.

9th. "Is it right to allow the children to lead in prayer in the school and regularly attend to visit the school?" answered by W. A. Baker.

10th. "What mode would be best to induce young men to retain their interest and regularly attend the Sunday Schools?" answered by Rev. J. J. Young and W. A. Baker.

Rev. M. A. Sault offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That it is the sense of this convention that a competent person should be appointed to visit the Sabbath Schools in Garrett county and give such instruction to them as may be necessary.

Bro. T. J. Peddicord offered the following as a substitute:

Resolved, That the vice president for Garrett county appoint one who in each district be appointed to visit the school when requested and give such aid as may be in his power, and report to the vice president the condition and necessities of each school.

On motion of Wm. Moody, there was a recess until 7 o'clock P. M.

The President appointed Dr. Speicher and Charles Davis ushers.

Mr. Winterburg offered a motion that the next convention be held at Grantsville. Motion carried.

Bro. W. A. Baker offered a motion that W. H. Townsend be elected permanent Secretary of Garrett county Sunday School conventions. Adopted.

The President announced the programme for the evening session. Adjourned after singing doxology, and benediction by Rev. O. C. Miller, to convene at 7½ o'clock P. M.

EVENING SESSION. Session opened at 7½ o'clock and engaged for half hour in devotional exercises conducted by Dr. A. F. Speicher, after which convention called to order by President Young and business proceeded with. Role of delegates called and 38 found to be present, more coming in afterwards. Minutes of afternoon session read and approved.

Bro. T. J. Peddicord's substitute for resolution introduced by Rev. M. A. Sault taken up and adopted. Singing, after which seventh question for discussion "What is the best plan for teaching an infant class?" was opened by Bro. F. L. Morling. Singing "Jewels" and discussion continued by Wm. Hinebaugh, Wm. A. Baker and J. M. Davis. At the close of the discussion Rev. O. C. Miller introduced the following resolution which was unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That in the opinion of this convention the best mode of teaching an infant class is,

1st. To obtain whatever practicable separate room for this class.

2d. To procure a teacher, lady preferred, who has (when practicable) had experience in the management of children, one who will deal gently with them, one who will control them.

3d. To teach the little children reverence for God and God's word and also to teach them to memorize verses of Scripture and thus become familiar with the Bible.

4th. To so vary the exercises as to make them attractive and above all to prevent the exercises from being tiresome and irksome to the children.

Singing, after which question box was opened. 1st. question, Is it the duty of this convention to adopt a uniform constitution and by-laws under which Sunday Schools should be organized? and 2d. question, Is it really necessary for a Sunday School to be regularly organized under a constitution and by-laws? answered by Bros. Wm. A. Baker and T. J. Peddicord.

3d. Should the use of tobacco be prohibited from members of the Sunday School? answered by Rev. O. C. Miller.

4th. Is it proper for the superintendent of a Sunday School to teach? answered by Bro. Morling. Singing followed by verbal reports from delegates.

Reports from schools as follows: Bloomington, reported by Wm. Moody; McHenry, by Thaddeus Gifford; Accident, by Wm. Hinebaugh; Blooming Rose, by Ira E. Friend; Johnstown, by Henry E. Friend; Bear Creek, by A. F. Speicher; Bolteins Chapel, by J. F. Hargry; Grantsville, by Henry Winterberg; Winding Hill, by Morgan Conaway; New Germany, by S. D. Yutz; Sang Run, by J. H. Eulow; Oakland, M. E. T. J. Peddicord.

Time for these reports having expired no others were made. The following resolutions were then offered by Bro. F. L. Morling:

Resolved, That the official members of this church be tendered the thanks of this convention for the use of the church and other courtesies.

That the thanks of the convention be returned to Profs. Smith and Richardson, and Miss Emma McMillen, and the ladies and gentlemen who have so elegantly entertained us with music during the session of the convention.

That the thanks of this convention be extended to the officers of the convention for the able and courteous discharge of their duties.

That our thanks be extended to Dr. E. H. Gifford, and those who have so kindly assisted him, for the efficient manner in which they have performed their duties as Executive Committee, in procuring homes and accommodations for delegates.

That the thanks of delegates and visitors be tendered to the citizens of Accident and the surrounding country, for the kind welcome and grand Christian hospitality that they have given us, and which we have so heartily enjoyed.

That our thanks be extended to our Delegates for the use of their house, and other kindnesses tendered to the Convention.

That the thanks of this convention be tendered to Bro. J. M. Davis, Vice President of the Maryland Sunday School Union for his indefatigable and untiring energies and labors which have contributed so largely to the success of this convention; and we earnestly beseech all Christians to pray that the blessing of God may rest upon him and all his labors.

Unanimously adopted by a rising vote.

Rev. J. J. Young addressed the convention in reply to the resolutions. Hymn "Gathering Home," was sung, during which a collection was taken up.

Rev. J. M. Davis addressed the convention in reply to the resolutions and remarks by Bro. Morling.

Programme for Sunday announced by President Young, after which the doxology was sung and convention adjourned with benediction by Rev. J. M. Davis.

SUNDAY MORNING. General prayer meeting held in the Dunkard church at 9 A. M., conducted by Rev. Wm. A. Baker.

At 9 o'clock German service, conducted by Rev. J. J. Young.

At 10 o'clock assembled again for worship. Singing, hymn "Nearer my God to Thee;" then 15th chapter of 1 Cor., read by Rev. O. C. Miller, who afterwards led congregation in prayer. Singing, hymn "Precious Promise," followed by sermon by Rev. J. W. Bashor, of Ohio, who took for his text, 1 Cor. 15th chap., 35 verse. At conclusion of sermon Rev. J. J. Young led in prayer, followed by singing "All the way my Saviour leads me," doxology, and benediction by Rev. J. W. Bashor.

AFTERNOON SESSION. At 2 o'clock children's meeting held in Lutheran church, conducted by F. L. Morling. Singing "We shall meet by and by," and "Ninety and Nine." Prayer by Rev. J. W. Bashor; singing "Jewels;" reading scripture by T. J. Peddicord; singing "Precious Promise;" Address by Rev. O. C. Miller. Singing "Come to me;" Address by W. A. Baker; singing "Let the lower lights be burning;" and "More to follow;" afterwards addressed by Rev. J. W. Bashor; singing "Rescue the perishing;" addressed by F. L. Morling; singing "Ninety and Nine;" doxology, and benediction by Rev. J. J. Young.

EVENING SESSION. Evening meeting commenced at 7½ o'clock, and first portion of session devoted to prayer, promise and praise service, conducted by Rev. J. M. Davis; singing hymn, "Whosoever will," followed by prayer and benediction by Rev. J. M. Davis, after which various persons engaged in the reading of portions of Scripture referring to and bearing upon the subjects of praise and promise, interspersed throughout with prayer and singing. At the conclusion of these services a collection was taken up, after which Bible reading and songs of praise on the subject "From the Cross to the Crown," was led by Wm. A. Baker, assisted by F. L. Morling. After these services Rev. J. J. Young made the address of farewell. Singing, "Haste to the Fatherland." Benediction by Rev. J. J. Young.

The following is a list of the schools and number of teachers and scholars reported:

Backwoods, 27; Shrock's, 27; Upper Savage, 35; Lower Savage, 26; Frankville, 46; Bloomingtown, 36; Emanuel, M. E., 69; Swanton, 50; Oakland, Pres., 71; Grantsville, M. E., 31; Deer Park, E. L., 56; McHenry, B.; Accident, E. L., 146; Mt. Zion, 53; Blooming Rose, 44; Johnstown, 61; Bear Creek, 62; Grantsville, G. H., 39; Bethesda Chapel, 81; Bolteins chapel, 30; Grantsville, E. L., 63; Ridgely, 38; Schenck, 45; Winding Hill, 40; New Germany, 115; Sang Run, 50; Oakland, M. E., 140; Glade Valley, 31; Cove, 47; Sunny side, 94; Flatwoods, 56; Pleasant Valley 46; Oakland, E. L., 129; Mandrier Ridge, 67; Emanuel, E. L., 43; Mercy chapel, 45; Hillman Ridge, 45; Deep Creek, 39; Oak Hill, 21. Total number of schools, 39; number of officers, estimated, 195; number of teachers, 277; number of scholars, 2,198; total, 2,670; number scholars united with church during year, 129; number of schools that use uniform Lesson Leaves, 23; number that do not, 14; number schools kept open entire year, 9; kept open part of year, 39.

The following ministers were present at the Convention:

Wm. A. Baker, J. M. Davis, O. C. Miller, J. J. Young, J. W. Bashor, Chas. Price, M. A. Sault, J. Ferguson, Geo. A. Snapp, H. E. Friend, J. J. Brumager, A. C. Hamill, N. L. Baumgardner, D. H. Friend, Jos. DeWitt.

The following is a list of the DELEGATES.

Oak Hill, G. J. Ferguson, supt; Jas Lee and Garrett Dixon, delegates.

Ridgely—Henry Winterberg, supt; Levi Kinsinger, delegate.

Schlossport—Samuel Kessler, supt; Richard Liston, Edw Stack, dels.

Winding Hill—Morgan Conaway, supt; Robert Sterling, Jr., delegate.

New Germany—C. J. Otto, supt; S. D. Yutz, O. M. Durst, delegates.

Sang Run—J. H. Friend, supt; Jos. DeWitt, delegate.

Oakland, M. E.—J. M. Davis, supt; T. J. Peddicord, W. P. Townsend, del.

Glade Valley—Johnson White, supt; Cove—W. F. Daniels, supt; Moses Hillman, delegate.

Sunny Side—D. S. Arnold, supt; J. W. Beegley, delegate.

Pleasant Valley—David Eulow, supt; Wm. Pritchard, John Taggart, delegates.

Deep Creek—Thos. Wilburn, supt; Jno Edgar, delegate.

Hillman Ridge—Henry Davis, supt; Jackson Fike, delegate.

Mandrier Ridge—J. G. Brumager, superintendent.

Emanuel, E. L.—Henry Biddinger, superintendent.

Mercy chapel—Jas Gourd, supt.

Oakland, E. L.—A. L. Osborn, supt; J. M. Arnold, W. D. Hoye, delegates.

Emanuel, M. E.—Geo A. Crow, supt; Perry Welner, Wm Murphy, dels.

Backwoods—J. W. Groves, supt; Noah Broadwater, delegate.

Shrock's—Nimrod Gifford, supt; Upper Savage—Eli Merrill, supt; Lower Savage—Stephen Wiltspott, supt; Frankville—H. B. Durst, supt; Bloomingtown—E. Kemp, supt; Rev. H. B. Wooden, Wm Moody, J. D. Netkin, delegates.

Swanton—A. C. Hamill, supt; C. M. Miller, delegate.

Oakland, Pres.—W. H. Tower, supt; J. W. Veitch, A. A. Grant, delegates.

Grantsville, M. E.—S. J. Beechey, supt.

Deer Park—John Jenney, supt.

McHenry—F. W. Yager, supt; Thaddeus Gifford, delegate.

Accident—Wm. Hinebaugh, supt; Aaron Boyer, Eli McMillen, dels.

Mt Zion—J. J. Michaels, supt; Lewis Pope, delegate.

Blooming Rose—Alfred Kelley, supt; Ira E. Friend, Wm McCabe, delegates.

Johnstown—Geo E. Bishoff, supt; H. E. Friend, J. P. Lowdermilk, dels.

Bear Creek—A. F. Speicher, supt; David Hostetter, delegate.

Grantsville, G. H.—G. C. Rice, supt; Maggie Brown, Dr. Keller, delegates.

Bethesda chapel—Uriah Merrill, supt; Perry Browner, Aug Snyder, delegates.

Bolteins chapel—David Kent, supt; S. P. Cuppert, J. T. Gary, delegates.

Grantsville, E. L.—Henry Winterberg, supt; Franklin Bill, Jerry Wagner, delegates.

Baltimore—Wm A. Baker, F. L. Morling, Myrtad S. S. Eulow.

Band of Hope.

The Band of Hope held their regular meeting Thursday evening of last week, Rev. Beni. Ison presiding. The following programme was well rendered: Essays, A. C. Brooke and Zealous Tower; declamations, Arrie Harne and Edward Sincell; selection, Miss Laura Lang.

Orphans' Court.

The Orphans' Court for Garrett County was convened on Tuesday, 24th inst. Present, Hon. Jos. DeWitt, Chief Judge, and Hon. A. J. Michaels and Wm. Harvey, Associate Judges, and Wm. L. Rawlings, Register.

Among others were the following proceedings:

The last will and testament of Charles Wolf, dec'd, was filed for record, after having been duly proved before the Register of Wills for Allegany county.

The Mormons, it seems to me, have no religion. They, however, have a creed and believe in it. They have a system of theology, too, but such a conglomerate affair is it that it defies description. It is worthy of mention only as a curiosity. There are eminent saints here are many gods in heaven. They rise one above another in power and glory to infinity. Joseph Smith is now the god of the Latter-day Saints, the first being Jesus Christ, whose superior god is Adam. Above Adam is Jehovah and above Jehovah is Elohim. These all have many wives and they all rule over their descendants, who are divided into kingdoms in number and dominion. The glory of a saint when he becomes a god depends in some degree upon the number of wives and children which he has. Hence the duty that polygamy enforces is enforced as a duty. Wives are sealed to saints here on earth to increase their dominion in heaven. The gods are in the form of men and are the fathers of the saints. The ten commandments are the rule of life, together with a revelation given to Joseph Smith in 1833. This revelation is called "A Word of Wisdom," and is regarded as a word of prophecy. According to the Mormon creed infant sprinkling is condemned. At eight years of age children are immersed. Baptism for the dead is practiced, a living son being baptized for one of the great dead persons. Some of the great men of the Nation and of the world are by proxy members of the church of Latter-day Saints, as Washington, as well as prominent men, have had many dispensations of religious truth, but the greatest of all is that made through the prophet Joseph. This dispensation will culminate in the settlement of the ten saints in Babylon. When all the saints were expelled there will all the saints be gathered in due time and all others will be cut off. All preaching, so far as doctrine is concerned, is ringing a bell, and the people are not allowed to know their articles of faith by heart and are not allowed to forget them. Neither can a Gentile, though a fool, fail to learn what the saints believe. It is an eclectic theology, a mixture of all religions from every creed up to the present. It is a compound of Christianity, Philosophy and Mythology in about equal parts. The form of church government is that of the Methodist Church, but the doctrine is that of the Methodist Congregationalist in the matter of church order and Baptist by profession.

2. There never was a creation, except as appropriation and combination constitute a creation. New worlds are constantly being formed from "matter unformed and void," to use the prophet's words. These worlds are stocked with spirits unembodied. Saints of this last dispensation rule over these spirits and become gods.

4. There are vast numbers of gods in the world over kingdoms, nations, families, etc., but only one god reigning in each world. The worlds are governed by time, space, and matter. 'Saints' must build up his own kingdom, i.e., populate it. Elohim is the greatest god known to man. He dwells in the planet Kolob in the centre of our system. He has created the world in six thousand years, which are with the Lord as one day. There were six of our days in the first "creation," or six "preparations of matter void," and six of the "days" of our world, or preparation course of this world, each one of a thousand years. There were two days to each dispensation; two to the Moslems, two to the Patriarchial; Christianity had its two days of trial, and the great apostasy. Now have continued eighteen hundred years of darkness, who no true priesthood has been on earth. The various sects have each a part to play, but "all shall be gathered to the Lord's day approaches. Greed will soon desert nearly all the Gentiles—the survivors will serve the saints. Men will, indeed be scarce, but the scenes will be grand, and the work on man. The Indians, descendants of the Jews, will become "a delightful people." The ten lost tribes will be found. The world gather at Jerusalem about the throne of the universal Father. The world there is the paradise promised to saints.—Sunday Afternoon.

An animal is wanted for the special purpose of destroying carrion, so as to prevent it becoming a nuisance. The creature appropriate for this purpose is a small worm known as a maggot. How are such worms to be exterminated, when a mass of putrid meat is to be disposed of? The difficulty is beautifully got over by sending a particular kind of big fly called a blue-bottle, that is entitled to rank as a scavenger-general. Instinctively, the blue-bottle discovers where its services are required. There it deposits eggs; the

A large number of young people, men and women, went to the Church of Our Savior, in West Fifty-seventh street, New York, on a recent evening, to hear Dr. M. M. Lusk, of Princeton, preach on "The Estate of Manrimony." At the outset Mr. Pullman said he did not intend to lay down any thing else but the plain principles of the Bible. He was not gratified to lay down principles, and if he should attempt to do so, it heavers would doubtless be ridiculed all the rules he might lay down, and he would be sure to be laughed at. He would be. A great change, he said, had taken place in the surroundings of civilized society during the past fifty years. The old-fashioned, simple, unadorned, unpretentious and ingenious machinery, which now does the work formerly done by the debt fingers of our mothers and grandmothers, has been replaced by the machinery had at the same time changed, not for the better, but for the worse. On the part of a great majority

Mr. Pullman said that although the assertion might be met with ridicule, it was nevertheless undoubtedly true that loyalty and patriotism owed their origin to the estate of matrimony. A man who had a family and a home was naturally patriotic and loyal, for he always had something to defend. Patriotism would be impossible in a community where there were no homes. This has been demonstrated many times and very fairly, he thought, in words

r

There was a frog and a ephalant, and the ephalant it sed to the frog:
 "Were wude you be if I wude step onto you?"
 The frog it sed:
 "You must be a mity big fool if you think sech an act as that wude make me go away."
 The ephalant sed he ment wot wude be come of the frog, wich thot a while and then sed, the frog didd:
 "Wel, I wont deny that if you don it a purpos, and bore on as hard a you ende, it would make me hoppin pad!"

Then Billy he spoke up and sed:
"So the tode won the rubber?" an Mister Pitehel he sed: "William doutn't k'no wot you mean by rubber, co its a word wiah isn't in the Bible, an is the speech of the worldly and the sinful; but William, it is truee that was ordained by Providence that tode got a way with the odd game."

Marbles is the game for me, yes I deed, but no smutch up; and tit, tat, it is mitty good fun too, wen I can go three in a ro.

"There, there, never mind, my precious darlin', where does it hurt you?"

But the labin kept a hollerin' loud and loud, and louder, coss while the bear was a-singin' and singin' like a boy, he was a-singin' like a skeezekeen titer and titer all the time, and Bimby by the old ram he seen wot wot was up, and he dropt his head, the old arn' was in a dip, and come like he was out out of out of the gun and let him have it in the m'f' in the m'f' of his belly, and hubblel' him up in the m'f' he was a raver, and sent him rollin' over and over without his preshins on his back. And wen the bear had pnd it he self together again and shake the dust out of

"Out his narn, he said: 'That lambs ta' was quicken lightning, but I didn't know that was powerfuller, too.'"

"Jest then he see how it was, for the stood the old ranch a holding down the head ready for to let him have it agin and shakin it, like he sed:

"That little shaver wident narn more than a monile for a feller like you. I gess you better serve up the c man."

"But the bear he woeked off a shakin, too, much as to say:

"I don't hanker after a dinner white goss against my stunnack like that,'"

San Francisco Argonaut.

THE other day a West Hill woman found a large, dark bottle, worth about a pint, in the closet, and she immediately took it down and jerked out the cork to see what there was in it. She smelt it vigorously for a second, and then, unable to determine just what it was, she tipped the bottle very cautiously, but before it was more than half turned over, the little green snake that her son had stowed away in the bottle shot out and dropped into her extend hand, and the curtain went down on the most magnificent transformation scene since Bank-Eye.

Two LOVERS, like two armies, generally get along well enough till they are engaged, and then the powder generally flies—from the girl's cheek to the young man's coat collar.—Elmira Standard Telegraph.

—A spunk in the head is worth two in the heels.

—No one never tried to punch the head of navigation.

—Now is the time to muzzle the dogs and muzzle the girls.

—Now you grow old, your hair becomes quarrelsome; it is continually falling out.

—The lady with a new bonnet never likes to hear a elegyman pray for rain.

—Unlucky

—Uneasy lies the man who has already been caught at it once or twice.

—Hawk-Eye.

—The New Orleans Picayune thinks it seems no relationship in the age of the moment with the light of time.

—When a boy reaches the age of ten years, he condescendingly begins to talk about "the children." —New Haven Register.

—The sister, in warm water, says the Philadelphia Chronicle-Herald, acts like a young woman in love. It always assumes a melting mood.

—When an honest hen is laying the foundation for a family and doing all the hard work, some absurd rooster is ready to do the crowing.

A Philadelphia litigant visited every juror at home while the trial was in progress, "just to argue the matter quietly." He says that he meant no harm.

—The Boers of South Africa are moving for independence. In time they may come to be as independent as the bores of this country.—New Orleans Picayune.

—The young man who feels too proud to climb a greased pole for the amusement of the Fourth of July public will never be heard of in school books.—Free Press.

—When children get a few cents they generally spend them for candy. When they get older they learn to save their money to buy a § of 1¢.—Newburyport Herald.

—The house flies held their regular annual convention all over the country the first of this month, and unanimously resolved to adopt last year's platform without any changes.

—The Frankfort (Mich.) Express says: "Betsey's mouth has been thoroughly cleansed out, so as to permit the free passage of logs," without explaining that Betsey is the name of a lake in that neighborhood.

—The idea that you can read a man's thoughts in his face is all bosh. Look at the man in the face who borrowed ten dollars of you a year ago "for a day or two," and it expresses nothing but plainness—the blankest kind.—Free Press

—When you see a woman going toward the river with a good-sized pole in her hand and a wrinkle across her nose, you needn't think she's going fishing. Not much; she's got a big fish down that way who promised her, with tears in his eyes, he wouldn't go swimming. —Steubenville Herald.

—It seems that the eleven school children who died so suddenly at Jacob's Mill, a little village in Northern Vermont, were not poisoned at the brook, as at first supposed, but were the victims of diphtheria, induced by foul pools and sinks under and around the schoolhouse. The warning is seasonable.

—The inventor of shoes for walking on the water gave an exhibition in Memphis. He stepped boldly off the levee, but the buoyancy of the shoes was not equal to expectation, and he immediately sank into the river. He was so nearly drowned when rescued that they rolled him on a barrel. More successful was the trial of a flying machine at San Francisco. The inventor started from a horse-top, flung it briefly in the air, and fell into the stream, where the apparatus nearly caused is death by sinking him.

—There was a terrible light at the West Hill school yesterday afternoon. Two boys, burning with rage and hate, got on opposite sides of the street and called each other "nigger" and "red head" till the sun went down. The boy with the red hair was the madder, but the colored boy had the louder voice, and consequently was declared the victor. People who live in the neighborhood say it sounded like a Congressional debate.—Hawked-Eye.

—A foreign telegram recently announced that from 20,000 to 30,000 persons perished from cholera in India while returning from a religious fair. It is highly probable that these unfortunate beings conducted grab-bag and "chancing-off" enterprises, and charged twenty cents for an oyster immersed in a bowl of warm water, and were interested in other swindles at the religious fair. On no other theory can we account for the awful fate which overtook them on the way home.—New York Herald.

A pair of lovers in Central Georgia, who had been subjected to the tyrannical parental discipline, went to a minister's house a few days ago and were married. They then made a call on one of their acquaintances, a student of the law, and he, knocking at the door, announced the arrival of the bride's mother. The lovers jumped from the side window and fled riotously. The aggrieved parent rapidly pursued them, and a lively race was witnessed by the neighbors. The young people were full of foot and stuff, and placed several feet of space between them and the old lady. The boys, who remained in their hiding places, watched the river bank until dusk.

A ramp applied for food at a house of a suburban agriculturist recently, and while he was eating the tins that had been furnished at his invitation, he was asked, "What are you looking for?" "I have looked for a place that I would like to see," he replied, "but have never found it." There was plenty of work at farming, asked the interrogator. "Yes," he answered, "but you are right; if you suggest, I want to find a vineyard where a man who goes in at the eleventh hour is the first to come out and to draw full day's wages, the oldest man in the vineyard by a day. That is the New Testament treatment, a place that is what I am looking for." At the close of his meal he started again

—A new comet is coming—sit down, sit down, what's the use of getting excused, it is only a comet, and so to the top of the peak of Mount Ayteyibombarung dalahasta, in Central Asia, and only there with a three story telescope, and then it is only visible for about twenty minutes at midnight, and not then, but at midnight, it is visible only to the right, and when it is visible only to the right, a star about half the size of the little one in Job's collar. By all the starry worlds that swing in space, when we come around every summer, with heads on them like fire balloons, and tails that stretched from the big dipper to the southern cross, and wagged back and forth, and came so close to the sun, and then, and came so close to the earth, that they put the moon out. Out of these single barred comets, three for a quarter, that they get up for us in these degenerate modern days. We have a hundred of 'em.—Wack-Eye.

Pouring oil on troubled waters generally is regarded by sea captains more as a fine sentiment than as a practical hint to be observed in times of danger, but as far back as 1770, a Dutch East Indian trader, seeking to have been saved from shipwreck on treacherous oil, later, another instance is recorded in which a vessel having been wrecked in a hurricane, a cask of lamp oil, which was kept in a small boat, became broken, and so quieted the sea in the immediate vicinity, that most of the crew succeeded in getting to a island nearby.

Capt. Jarman, of the four-masted ship Romsdal, now in this port, stated to a Tribune reporter recently, that although he had long known of the voyage of the Arcturion, he had never learned its rough sea, yet he never had put his knowledge into practice until his last voyage. The subject having been reviewed to his mind lately by a little article in one of the seamen's tracts, he decided to test their truth.

He sailed for the canal, sacks of flour like a bottle, each having a capacity of three gallons of oil. These he filled with common lamp oil. Soon after he was in the middle of the Atlantic, he encountered a violent hurricane which lasted for twenty hours, and during the years broke over the stern and threatened to swamp the vessel. Remembering his oil, he punctured the canvas bags, and caused one to be towed over each quarter. The effect was to keep the water from rising, although remaining at the same height, no longer broke over the stern, but for several yards around, where the oil had spread under the water, there was apparent calm. The ship was saved, and the water in the compartments of heavy seas breaking over her, and the danger was considerably lessened. Captain Jarman thinks that the use of oil in the case of a ship hoisted in a storm would have gone far to save her, although this was the first time he had ever tried the experiment, and was not tried by any means. He has known cases where crews had escaped from vessels when it would have been impossible to lower a boat without being swamped, except that oil was thrown over the ship's side, and the sea thus sufficiently calmed to allow the boats to be lowered without danger. He has also known cases where vessels while near by their other vessels were violently tossed about. The whaling vessels were so thoroughly saturated with oil that the water was calm all about them. He says that the use of oil is a very simple and expensive, that he intends to have a few bags always ready for use hereafter.

N. Y. Tribune.

Nathan Meyer de Rothschild is descended from the family of the Rothschilds. He was the eldest of the sons of Baron Lionel Nathan de Rothschild, and was also the heir of the title and estates of his uncle, Sir Anthony de Rothschild, brother of Baron Lionel. The deceased gentleman was Member of Parliament for Aylesbury.

The founder of this famous family who have become known all over the world, was a man of great energy and their vast financial undertaking was Meyer Asenm Rothchild, a German banker, who was born in Frankfurt, in 1743, and who died there in 1812. He belonged to a powerful family, and he was able to establish himself at Frankfurt, where his integrity and ability brought him into relation with German Government, particularly that of Basse-Cassel. The Elector of Cassel on the 15th of January, 1806, gave him an investment of 100,000 by the French, deposited about $5,000,000 for safe keeping with Rothchild for eight years without interest, and subsequently received from his heirs a personal interest of ten per cent. He was succeeded by his son, Meyer Asenm Rothchild, and his son and successor in 1828. The enormous investment of this capital was the source of the colossal fortune of the Rothchilds. Meyer Asenm's five sons—Naples, London, Vienna, Frankfurt, and London, and his sons, respectively—became chiefs of houses at Frankfurt, Vienna, London, Naples and Paris, and all were famous by the Emperor Francis. The sons acquired world-wide celebrity and became the most powerful bankers in other financial operations. The name is continued by members of the family at all these places, except at Naples. The London and Paris houses being the most important, special agents of the family were established in all parts of the world.

James, Baron Rothschild, the first and the last survivor of the sons of Mayer, was born at Frankfurt, May 28, 1792, and settled at Paris in 1812. Several years after he received from the Emperor of Austria the title of baron, has preserved the name of the Comptoir d'escompte in France. The Restoration, in its embarrassed finances, I recourse to him for aid for the grants and other loans, but without any way gratifying his ambition. He was called the "money lender of kings." In 1830 he made on behalf of the loan of the three days a gift of 12,000 francs, and soon took a prominent part in the affairs of the country. He mented his fortune considerably by assisting in the construction of the railroads of Saint Germain and the North. Following the famine of 1847, he became the object of divers pamphlets, and the pillage of his chateau of Suresnes was one of the first acts of violence of the Revolution of 1848. He nevertheless remained at Paris, sent to the victims of February a sum of 50,000 francs, resumed his banking operations, and when calm returned he took as conspicuous a part in public affairs as ever.

Baron James Rothschild died Nov. 15, 1898. Several journals valued his fortune at this time at 1,700,000,000 francs. He had been decorated with many foreign orders and the Grand Cross of the Legion of Honor. He had married the daughter of his brother Solomon, founded or richly endowed a number of Israelite establishments such as the New Synagogue and the vast hospital of the Rue Piepus, Paris, in which the gratte-Je of his co-religionists generally called by his name.

The eldest of his sons, Edmond Rothschild, born at Paris about 1826, was married to a French girl, and had a son, the father, in February, 1848, took the French title and in 1856 married his first cousin, the daughter of the Baron Lionel Rothschild, of London. The Baron James left three other sons, and a daughter, the latter married the Baron Gustave was appointed Consul-General of Austria at Paris in place of his father (April, 1869), at which time Alphonse succeeded as President of the Bank of the Alps and the Northern Railway (November, 1868), the latter was also appointed Consul-General of the North German Confederation at Paris (February, 1870). Another son, the fourth in rank by birth, London merchant Baron Rothschild, born at London in 1808, was the eldest son of the Baron Nathan, established first at Manchester in 1798, then at London in 1806. He succeeded his father, in 1830, as banker and Baron of the Empire of Austria. He was guided by his liberal ideas, a partisan of the freedom of commerce of direct import and of the abolition of duties on tea. He was constantly selected since 1847 to be the city of London itself a member of the Rothschild family. He was rejected at each session until that of 1858 for refusing to take the oath of Christian. He married in 1836 his cousin Charlotte, daughter of the Baron Charles Rothschilds, of Naples.

Sir Anthony, born in 1910, Consul General of Austria at London (1958), created an English Baron by the Queen in 1946 and High Sheriff of Bucks in 1961, and the Baron Meyer Rothschild, born in 1818. He was made Deputy Lieutenant of Buckingham, and represented for many years the town of High Wycombe in the House of Commons, where he was elected with the Liberal party. Sir Anthony chose as the heir of his rank and estate his nephew, Nathan Meyer Rothschild, the eldest son of the Baron Meyer, and the gentleman whose death is announced to-day. All the members of the Rothschild family have been highly esteemed for their patriotism, their liberal institutions liberality and charity, and for the hearty manner in which they identified themselves with the interests of the Kingdom.

Prof. O. C. Marsh has a brief but interesting article on "Polydactyle Horses, recent and extinct," in the June number of the American Journal of Science and Arts, in which he cites several curious instances of extra digits in the foot of the modern horse, and shows that these reversions to an older type are far more numerous than is commonly supposed. As to the ancestry of these animals, says the Professor

there can be no doubt. America is the original home of the horse, and during the whole of tertiary time this continent was occupied with equine mammals of many and various forms. Although the horse has been introduced into every country, their abundance and diversity of forms in this country, their abundance marks out the genealogy of the horse in an almost unbroken succession of forms. If we examine the remains of the oldest representatives of the horse in this country, we find that the earliest animals were all polydactyle, and of small size. As the line was continuing toward the present era, there was gradual increase in size, and a diminution in the number of toes, until the present type took form, and the immediate ancestor of the horse was as yet discovered, undoubtedly had its toes on each foot. The oldest member of the group now known is the Eohippius which had four well-developed toes, the rudiment of another on each foot. The animal was about the size of a fox, its remains are from the Corymbos beds near the base of the Eocene, the next higher division of the Eocene, another equine genus, the Archaeohippius, is found. It was smaller than its predecessor in size, but had only four toes in front and three behind. At the top of the Eocene a third all-genus has been found (Ephippippus), still smaller, resembling the Archaeohippius in its teeth, with three toes on the base of the next formation, the Miocene, another equine mammal, Mesohippus, occurs. This animal was about as large as a sheep, and had the insubstantial toes and the splint of another animal, with three toes on each hind. At a somewhat higher horizon a nearly allied genus, Miohippippus, been found, which has the splint but of the outer or fifth digit reduced to a short remnant. In the Eocene also of the same horizon, the Archaeomys as large as a donkey, was abundant, and still higher up a nearly ally of modern horse, with only a single splint on each foot (Prohippippus), makes its appearance. A True Equus, as large as a horse, is found in the Eocene of this horizon, the remains of which are complete.

If the young man who went to call on a girl on Fourth street last Sunday night, but who suddenly left the front door and shot out of the yard, with a dog attached to the dome of his trousers, will return the dog, a reward of five dollars will be paid by the girl's father, and no questions asked.—St. Louis Water Lumbermen.

MISCELLANEOUS.

A. LOEWENSTEIN,
MERCHANT TAILOR,
OAKLAND, MD.

Respectfully announces to the citizens of Oakland and vicinity, that he has

NOW ON HAND

A large and complete assortment for Men's, Youths' and Boys' wear. Just notice the following prices:

Men's Pants, 70 cts. and upward.
Men's Suits, $3.00 and upward.
Youths' & Boys' wear, all prices.

Now is the time for Bargains. Call early and we guarantee to suit you both as to price and quality. Great reduction in the price of all kinds of GENTS' FURNISHING GOODS at prices that defy competition.

FASHIONABLE MANNER.

Call and examine a first class assortment of Dress Goods, Ready-Made Clothing and all kinds of GENTS' FURNISHING GOODS at prices that defy competition.

SHATZTER & AULT

Have recently removed to their new

Furniture and Undertaking Rooms,

MAIN STREET, OAKLAND,

Where they keep constantly on hand and manufacture to order anything in the line of

HOUSEHOLD FURNITURE

All of which is offered at the

LOWEST LIVING PRICES.

Give us a call, examine our Furniture and prices, whether you wish to purchase or not. We take pleasure in showing our work.

For all kinds of COFFINS and CASKETS on hand or furnished to order on short notice.

MEAT MARKET.

H. B. WOLFE

Formerly of Cumberland, Md.

Takes this mode of announcing to the citizens of Oakland and vicinity that he has permanently located in Oakland for the purpose of carrying on the

BUTCHERING BUSINESS

in a first-class manner.

FINISH BEEF, veal, pork, MUTTON, PORK, BOLDEN'S SAUSAGE, POKE SAUSAGE, &c., at all times.

Shop near the Post Office.

Customers can get what they want without delay and at any hour of the day.

Your patronage is respectfully solicited.

H. B. WOLFE.

LIVERY STABLE.

THOMAS MARTIN

at the old stand, opposite the Post Office, is prepared to furnish on short notice

SUGGES,
CARRIAGES,
WAGONS and SADDLE HORSES,
On Reasonable Terms.

For Fishing, Hunting and Pic-Nic parties supplied with transportation to any point desired.

Sheriff's Sale.

By virtue of an execution issued by Alex. J. Osborn, a Justice of the Peace of the State of Maryland, in and for Garrett County, to and to the effect, that the said Alex. J. Osborn, do hereby give notice that he has for sale the said property as set out and taken in execution to the highest bidder, for cash, to-wit: said judgment and costs.

THOS. CODDINGTON,
6 7 4 Sheriff.

OAKLAND WOOLLEN FACTORY.

The subscriber is prepared to do all kinds of

CUSTOM WORK,

such as

Roll Carding, Spinning and Weaving, at short notice.

Wool taken in exchange for goods or worked up on the shares into Blankets, Cassimere, Flannels and stocking yarn.

SAMUEL LAWTON.

JOHN BATHAM.

Manufacturer of and Dealer in

WAGONS and FARMING IMPLEMENTS,
GRAIN CRADLES, &c. SPECIALTY.

Call on or write to

JOHN BATHAM, near the Depot, Oakland, Md.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

GARRETT COUNTY LEVY.
1879.

Annual Levy List for Garrett County, Maryland, for the Year 1879, Levied by the County Commissioners at June Session, 1879.

ROAD LEVY.

District No. 1	$400
do do 2	621
do do 3	588
do do 4	480
do do 5	410
do do 6	300
do do 7	400
do do 8	300
do do 9	300
Total,	$3,818

ELECTION EXPENSES.

District No. 1.
S W Friend, return judge 4 days and 18 miles	$10 88
John A. Jenkins, associate judge 2 days	4 00
M T Brady, associate judge 2 days	4 00
W E George, clerk 2 days	4 00
L H Schofield, do	4 00
M T Brady, house rent	5 00

District No. 2.
John Swalp, return judge 4 days and 50 miles	16 00
James Guard, associate judge 2 days	4 00
John Frantz, of Jos., associate judge 2 days	4 00
Thos B Welch, clerk 2 days	4 00
Henry Frazer, clerk 2 days	4 00
Jacob Stuck, use Jeremiah Guard, house rent	5 00

District No. 3.
S D Yutz, use Leichly & Keim, return judge 4 days and 60 miles	17 60
W C Broadwater, asso judge 2 days	4 00
Saml Engle, associate judge 2 days	4 00
Henry Winterberg, clk 2 days	4 00
W S Boucher, clerk 2 days	4 00
Mrs Figg, house rent	5 00

District No. 4.
John Barnes, return judge 4 days and 46 miles	15 36
Geo L Michael, asso judge 2 days	4 00
Andrew Mullen, asso judge 2 days	4 00
Chas Harshbarger, clk 2 days	4 00
Same, house rent	5 00

District No. 5.
Henry Kamp, return judge 4 days and 40 miles	11 30
S H Ryland, associate judge 2 days	4 00
L H McMillen, clerk 2 days	4 00
Henry Kahl, do	4 00
Geo F Englehart, house rent	5 00

District No. 6.
Jos F Frantz, return judge 4 days and 32 miles	13 12
Saml Ferguson, asso judge 2 days	4 00
Peter H Echar, asso judge 2 days	4 00
D H Friend, clerk 2 days	4 00
E A Browning, clerk 2 days	4 00
Eljah Friend, of E. house r't	5 00

District No. 7.
David T Enlow, return judge 3 days	6 00
Jas M Arnold, asso judge 2 days	4 00
A C Good, associate judge 2 days	4 00
A B Gander, clerk 2 days	4 00
F P Arnold, do	4 00

District No. 8.
Wm J Wilson, return judge 4 days and 20 miles	11 20
Isaac W Abernathy, associate judge 2 days	4 00
J Mc Mason, associate judge 2 days	4 00
Jos W White, clerk 2 days	4 00
Wm H Grimes, clerk 2 days	4 00
Mrs W F Deakins, house r't	5 00

District No. 9.
And'w Blocher, return judge 4 days 81 miles	21 44
Bazil Anderson, asso judge 2 days	4 00
Michael Durst, do	4 00
F T Wilhelm, clerk 2 days	4 00
Aaron Wilhelm, clk 2 days	4 00
Saml Johnson, house rent	5 00

Total,	$306 00
--------	----------

MAGISTRATES' FEES.

Henry Rasche	$14 45
Isaac Umble	5 20
Bond Griffith	7 35
A J Warlick	18 00
Wm Hinebaugh	5 20
A L Osborn, use G S Hamill	14 85
Same, use John Frantz, of Jos.	21 45
Same, balance	2 80
R B Jamison	10 33
Total,	$103 53

REGISTRARS.

H O Hamill, Dist No 1, use G S Hamill	$14 30
Jas H Rush, Dist No 3, use Isiah Fuller, do do 3, use	48 00
W H Barnard, Dist No 4	41 00
Thos Browning, do 6, use G A Shirer	46 00
R T Browning, Dist No 7, use Davis & Townshend	41 00
Same, use W P Totten	22 00
Wm F Deakins, Dist No 8	38 00
Joshua Fencibaker, do 9	50 00
Total,	$122 30

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

CONSTABLES.

W S Pew	$ 9 65
Silas F Cuppott	18 50
Frank McKenzie	16 50
D A Bower	19 05
Aaron Boyer	4 50
J S Johnson	3 95
Geo D White, use W P Totten	9 80
Same, balance	10 45
John Miller, Jr., use H A Rasche	9 60
Total,	$102 03

FOX AND CAT SCALPS.

Jerre Guard, 2 foxes and 2 cats	$ 6
Geo W Wilson, 1 cat	2
Al drew Mullen, 13 foxes, 2 cats	17
Wm H Jacobs, 3 foxes	3
Archibald Warlick, 4 foxes	4
A C Browning, 5 foxes	5
Peter Biddinger, 1 fox	1
Jos Frantz, 1 fox	1
L F Friend, 5 foxes	5
S W Friend, Sr., 2 foxes	2
George Biddinger, 3 foxes	3
Thos W Ashby, Jr, 1 cat	1
Israel Garlitz, 1 fox, 1 cat	1
John Wass, 4 foxes	4
Alex Mall, 1 fox	1
John V Mail, 1 fox	1
John G Paugh, 1 fox	1
Wm J Bernard, 3 foxes	3
Keller & Getty, 15 foxes, 7 cats	25
Olth Garlitz, 3 foxes	3
George Biddinger, 3 foxes	3
Francis M Garlitz, 5 foxes	5
Enoch Garlitz, 1 fox	1
Israel Garlitz, 1 fox	1
J C Dunham, 3 foxes	3
A J Bevans, 1 fox	1
John Broadwater, 2 foxes	2
D H Lear, 11 foxes, 1 cat	13
Christian Lovengood, 4 foxes	4
J S Broadwater, 23 foxes	23
Peter Will, 1 fox	1
Floyd Duckworth, 11 foxes	11
Henry Frazer, 32 foxes, 3 cats	38
Simcon Biddinger, 2 foxes	2
Archibald Tasker, 1 cat	1
Peter M Will, 2 foxes	2
Hiram Duckworth, 4 foxes	4
Uriah M Standon, 5 foxes, 2 cats	12
Michael Weller, 4 foxes	4
Daniel Wilson, 1 fox, 1 cat	1
C T West, 3 foxes	3
John H Friend, 2 foxes	2
John Warlick, 2 do	2
Washington Michaels, 1 fox	1
Samuel Beachy, 3 foxes	3
George W Michaels, 1 fox	1
C C Michaels, 1 fox 1 cat	1
J J Beachy, 5 foxes	5
Joseph Reckner, 1 fox	1
Uriah M Standon, 5 foxes	5
J R Bishop & Co, 4 foxes	4
Daniel O Markly, 2 foxes	2
N B Wayman, 1 fox, 1 cat	1
Milton Vass, 3 foxes, 1 cat	3
Isaac Enlow, 2 do	2
Wm P Totten, 1 foxes, 1 cat	1
Henry Thompson, 11 foxes	11
G W Legge, 6 foxes, 5 cats	16
L H Johnson, 1 fox	1
Franklin C White, 3 foxes	3
Davis & Townshend, 1 fox, 1 cat	1
Geo Steyer, 6 foxes, 1 cat	7
D E Offutt, 11 foxes, 6 cats	13
Total,	$479

BRIDGES.

Jos Martin, use W P Totten, building bridge near Oakland	$ 7 75
P Martin, use Jasper Guard, lumber bridge over Cherry Creek	36 10
D H Friend, repairs on Friend's bridge	17 60
Joseph Irons, building bridge over Cherry Creek	32 20
W M Coddington, bridge n'r Wilson Prenter's	38 25
Same, bridge n'r Fleckey place	50 00
Same, bridge n'r Fleckey place	50 00
Same, repairing bridge n'r Mrs Comanys	12 50
Wm D Burton, use G S Hamill, filling up abutments on Bloomington bridge	57 70
Same, use G S Hamill, work on Deep Creek bridge	83 00
Thomas Browning, building bridge over Muddy Creek	20 00
Saml Teats, building bridge over Deep Creek	12 00
Wm Loraw, use Josiah Moon, lumber furnished and building bridge over Snowy c'k	39 27
Jonas E Gnager, repairing bridge over North Fork of Little Crossing	75 00
Miller bridge over Shade Run	$481 38

ROAD APPROPRIATIONS.

Jno Barnes, opening road f'm Walters farm to Hoop pole road, order	$ 20 00
E Kitzmiller, use J S Combs, making road f'm Kitzmiller's to Bloomington	231 15
Jno W Harvey, road f'm pike to Wilson's creek shop	20 00
— Craig, road f'm Savage river to Warnick, Deep Run and Back Bone Road	50 00
Oscho Bernard, work on the Bloomington road	25 00
J J Breuneman, road f'm Forks Meeting House to Meadow Mountain Glade rd	6 75
Daniel Beeghly, old Morgan-town road	38 00
Luke Mall, on road f'm Walter's place to Hoop pole road	25 00
Jos Foster, on road f'm Hoop pole to Cranberry Glade	20 00
Thos Browning, additional on roads assigned him	20 00
Total,	$475 30

OUTSIDE PENSIONERS.

Wm Moody, support Marlon McGee	$10 00
Same, support Margaret Morgan	10 00
Same, support Jane Holmes	10 00
Same, sup't Marg't Watson	10 00

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

CORONER'S INQUEST.

Dr E H Parsons, post mortem of George Lish	$10 00
John Steyer, sum. witnesses	2 40
Henry Thompson, juror	50
Total,	$12 90

CLERK'S OFFICE.

W H Tower, Clerk's fees, use D E Offutt	$ 90 00
Same, use G S Hamill	71 40
Same, use Ezekiel Totten	50 00
Same, balance	1,020 37
Same, estimate to pay jurors and witnesses	2,200 00
Total,	$3,132 37

MISCELLANEOUS.

Jas A Hayden, county printing, use John's Combs	$200 00
Same, use Rudol Beckman	71 00
Same, use Mrs Amelia White	95 40
Same, balance	511 60
George A Spedden, work on Judge's stand	2 25
Dr J Lee McComas, professional service to paupers	100 00
G W Merrill, medicine furnished paupers	8 02
Davis & Townshend, spittins &c., furnished court house	29 25
David Chambers, Janitor, use Davis & Townshend	129 69
Stark, Wright & Co., stationery for offices	132 55
Jacob Sisler, use Jere Guard, balance on road account	10 00
Chas Durst, balance on road account	22 83
A G Sturgis, medicine furnished paupers	38 80
Same, coal for court house and jail	6 00
Meddary & Bowers, stationery for offices	112 11
Jas Harned, surveying lands along county line	60 13
W M Coddington, boarding and hauling prisoners	16 85
John J Michaels, bringing prisoners to Oakland	8 50
Shatzer & Ault, chairs for court house, articles for jail and coffin for pauper	69 00
John Shatzer, work in court room and coffin for pauper	12 00
W P Totten, coal for court house and jail	15 00
D E Offutt, bail articles furnished jail, &c	33 51
Saml Falkner, taking prisoners to jail, &c	5 00
W D Burton, use G W Legge erecting yam on court h'se	21 50
J G Steyer, coffin for pauper, Salathiel Savage, use Jere Guard, coffin for paupers	3 00
Thos A Cuppott, 1 coffin for pauper	20 00
John Wilhelm, 1 coffin for pauper	5 00
John Somerville, 1 coffin for pauper	2 50
Allen Teats, use Jere Guard, coffin for pauper	5 00
John Kerling, use of same, coffin for pauper	5 00
H P Tasker, county printing, use A A Totten	56 25
Same, use D E Offutt	600 00
Same, use J W Veitch, ag't	100 00
Same, use John Shatzer	72 00
Same, use J Z Browning	31 71
Same, use Davis & Townshend	36 72
J Z Browning, assisting Jno P M Stemple, ch. carrier do	6
J H Stephens, use D E Offutt, ch. carrier 2 days	4
Total,	$86

SHERIFF'S FEES.

Thos Coddington, use D H Friend	$100 00
Same, use John Frantz, of J	100 00
Same, use J W Veitch, ag't	50 00
Same, use M W Lambert	100 00
Same, use D E Offutt	220 20
Same, balance	729 20
Total,	$1,270 20

ORPHANS' COURT.

Estimate to pay Judges' salaries to June 1, 1880	$300
Wm L Rawlings, Register fees	173
Same, incidental expenses	150
Same, making out list of property in hands of Guardians, &c., 1878 and 1879	25
Total,	$648

ATTORNEY'S FEES.

John W Veitch, 55 misdemeanors, 7 felonies and 1 civil case	$258 33
Jno W Veitch, extra compensation as State's attorney	300 00
Braze & Hamill, 1 felony	10 00
Braze, Hamill & Schley, 1 fel	10 00
Jones & Hamill, 1 misdemeanor	3 33
G S Hamill, do	3 33
Veitch & Poddicord, 1 civ case	5 00
Poddicord & Gonder, 2 felonies, 2 misdemeanors, 1 civil case, use A B Gonder	21 3
Same, use M W Lambert	10 3
Same, use same, 11 fel case	25 00
John J Smith vs Co Coms	50 00
Same, use same, case County Coms vs Allegany Co Coms	50 00
Total,	$696 65

HOSPITALS.

Maryland Hospital, keeping insane paupers	$550
---	-------

COURT HOUSE FUND.

For redemption and interest of Bonds for court house & jail	$1,750
---	---------

ALLEGANY COUNTY COMMISSIONERS.

Costs in removed cases	$72 50
------------------------	---------

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

CORONER'S INQUEST.

Dr E H Parsons, post mortem of George Lish	$10 00
John Steyer, sum. witnesses	2 40
Henry Thompson, juror	50
Total,	$12 90

CLERK'S OFFICE.

W H Tower, Clerk's fees, use D E Offutt	$ 90 00
Same, use G S Hamill	71 40
Same, use Ezekiel Totten	50 00
Same, balance	1,020 37
Same, estimate to pay jurors and witnesses	2,200 00
Total,	$3,132 37

MISCELLANEOUS.

Jas A Hayden, county printing, use John's Combs	$200 00
Same, use Rudol Beckman	71 00
Same, use Mrs Amelia White	95 40
Same, balance	511 60
George A Spedden, work on Judge's stand	2 25
Dr J Lee McComas, professional service to paupers	100 00
G W Merrill, medicine furnished paupers	8 02
Davis & Townshend, spittins &c., furnished court house	29 25
David Chambers, Janitor, use Davis & Townshend	129 69
Stark, Wright & Co., stationery for offices	132 55
Jacob Sisler, use Jere Guard, balance on road account	10 00
Chas Durst, balance on road account	22 83
A G Sturgis, medicine furnished paupers	38 80
Same, coal for court house and jail	6 00
Meddary & Bowers, stationery for offices	112 11
Jas Harned, surveying lands along county line	60 13
W M Coddington, boarding and hauling prisoners	16 85
John J Michaels, bringing prisoners to Oakland	8 50
Shatzer & Ault, chairs for court house, articles for jail and coffin for pauper	69 00
John Shatzer, work in court room and coffin for pauper	12 00
W P Totten, coal for court house and jail	15 00
D E Offutt, bail articles furnished jail, &c	33 51
Saml Falkner, taking prisoners to jail, &c	5 00
W D Burton, use G W Legge erecting yam on court h'se	21 50
J G Steyer, coffin for pauper, Salathiel Savage, use Jere Guard, coffin for paupers	3 00
Thos A Cuppott, 1 coffin for pauper	20 00
John Wilhelm, 1 coffin for pauper	5 00
John Somerville, 1 coffin for pauper	2 50
Allen Teats, use Jere Guard, coffin for pauper	5 00
John Kerling, use of same, coffin for pauper	5 00
H P Tasker, county printing, use A A Totten	56 25
Same, use D E Offutt	600 00
Same, use J W Veitch, ag't	100 00
Same, use John Shatzer	72 00
Same, use J Z Browning	31 71
Same, use Davis & Townshend	36 72
J Z Browning, assisting Jno P M Stemple, ch. carrier do	6
J H Stephens, use D E Offutt, ch. carrier 2 days	4
Total,	$86

<

THE REPUBLICAN.

OAKLAND, MD., SATURDAY, JULY 5, 1879.

NUMBER 19

VOLUME 3.

OAKLAND BUSINESS GUIDE.

DRY GOODS, GROCERIES, etc.

D. E. OFFUTT,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Agricultural Machines, Musical Instruments,
Guns, Pistols, etc.

G. W. LEGG,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Cor. Second & Oak Sts.

D. H. LOAN,
ORIGINAL NEW YORK STORE,
General Merchandise, Watches, Clocks, Jew-
elry, etc.

I. W. STALNAKER,
Grocery and Provision Store,
Corner Third and Oak Street.

L. BUSH & SON,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Cor. Third & Oak Sts.

J. J. DAVIS,
Dry Goods, Notions & Groceries,
SPECIAL LINE OF TOBACCO.

DAVIS & TOWNSEND,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Agricultural Machines, Musical Instruments,
Guns, Pistols, etc.

C. C. MICHAEL,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Notions, Clocks, Confectionery, etc.,
Next to Coddington's Hotel.

RICHARDSON BROS.,
GROCERIES, CONFECTIONERIES,
Canned Goods, Fruit, etc.

HOTELS.

CODDINGTON'S HOTEL,
W. M. Coddington, Proprietor,
Main St., Opposite Hamilton's Billiard Saloon.

LIVERY STABLE.

THOMAS MARTIN,
Opposite Postoffice.

STOVES AND TINWARE.

G. A. SHIRER,
Oak Street, near Second.
A general line of Stoves and Tinware.

PHYSICIANS.

DR. J. LEE MCCOMAS,
Office on Main Street.

DR. E. H. PARSONS,
offers his professional services
to the people of Oakland and vicinity.
Office in the old Obit building,
3 S St.

PLASTERER.

JAMES ARNOLD,
Residence on Fourth Street.

BOOT AND SHOE MAKER.

W. M. WAGNER,
Shop Cor. First & Oak Sts.

GEORGE F. LOUGHRIDGE,
Leave orders at Express office.

SURVEYORS.

J. B. BLANT,
Surveyor, Auctioneer and
Conveyancer.
Oakland, Garrett county, Md.

JOHN HARNED,
Address, Post Office.

JEWELER.

A. B. WOODCOCK,
In Wm. Shouse's Building,
Watches and Clocks Cleaned and Repaired.

MILLINERY AND FANCY GOODS.

MRS. M. E. DAVIS,
Cor. Oak & Second Sts.

M. L. SCOTT'S Baltimore Store,
Millinery, Fancy Goods, Station-
ery, and all kinds of Goods, and Stoves,
Main Street, Opposite Dr. McComas's Office.

DRUGS AND MEDICINES.

GEORGE C. STURTESS,
Drugs, Medicines,
Perfumery, and all articles, Stationery,
Tobacco and Cigars.

G. W. McBRIDE,
Near Depot.

M. L. SCOTT'S Baltimore Store,
Millinery, Fancy Goods, Station-
ery, and all kinds of Goods, and Stoves,
Main Street, Opposite Dr. McComas's Office.

PAINTING & PAPER HANG- ING.

E. J. FRINGER,
House and Sign Painter.
Leave orders at Bush's Store.

S. V. B. WAID,
HOUSE AND SIGN PAINTER
Shop near Davis House.

BLACKSMITHS.

CHAS. SINCELL,
Liberty Street.

CONTRACTORS & BUILDERS.

JOHN M. JARBOE,
Carpenter, Contractor & Builder,
Residence on Liberty St., nearly opp. Depot.

P. A. CHISHOLM,
Carpenter, Contractor,
And Builder,
Residence on Centre Street.

GEO. A. SPEDDEN,
Residence opp. School house.

JOSEPH M. CRIM,
Residence on Alder Street.

A. C. BROOKE,
Res. near Republican office.

CABINETMAKERS AND UN- DERTAKERS.

A. C. BROOKE,
Res. adjoining Gazette office.

JOHN SHATZER,
Shop on Second Street.

H. T. HELMBOLD'S

COMPOUND

Fluid Extract

BUCHU.

PHARMACEUTICAL

A SPECIFIC REMEDY FOR ALL

DISEASES

OF THE

BLADDER & KIDNEYS.

For Debility, Loss of Memory, Indisposition to Exercise or Business, Shortness of Breath, Frequent Urination, Pain in the Back, Head, and Neck, Rheumatism, Gout, Gravel, Catarrh,
and all the ailments of the Urinary System.

If these symptoms are allowed to go on,
they will become permanent, and the system will be ruined. When the Urinary System is affected, it requires the aid of an invigorating
medicine to strengthen and tone up the system—which

“Helmhold's Buchu”
DOES IN EVERY CASE.

HELMHOLD'S BUCHU

IS UNEQUALED

By any remedy known. It is prescribed by
the most eminent physicians all over the
world.

Rheumatism,
Spermatorrhea,
Neuralgia,
Nervousness,
Dyspepsia,
Indigestion,
Constipation,
Aches and Pains,
General Debility,
Kidney Diseases,
Liver Complaint,
Nervous Debility,
Epilepsy,
Head Troubles,
Paralysis,
General Ill Health,

Spinal Diseases,
Sciatica,
Deafness,
Lumbago,
Catarrh,
Nervous Complaints,
Female Complaints, &c.

Headache, Pain in the Shoulders, Gout, Laziness, Sour Stomach, Emphysema, and Taste in the Mouth, Painful Urination of the Pain in the region of the Kidneys, and a
thousand other painful symptoms, are the consequences of Dyspepsia.

HELMHOLD'S BUCHU

Invigorates the Stomach.

And stimulates the torpid Liver, Bowels, and
Kidneys to healthy action, in cleansing the
blood of all impurities, and imparting new
life and vigor to the whole system.

A single trial will be quite sufficient to
convince the most hesitating of its valuable
remedial qualities.

Price $1 Per Bottle,

Or Six Bottles for $5.

Delivered to any address free from observation. “Parties” may consult by letter, receiving
the same attention as by calling.
Competent Physicians attend to correspondents. All letters should be addressed to

H. T. HELMBOLD,
DRUGGIST AND CHEMIST,
Philadelphia, Pa.

CAUTION:
See that the private Pro-
prietary Stamp is on
each bottle.

SOLD EVERYWHERE.
myt-lyr.

INTERNATIONAL BIBLE LESSONS.

SUNDAY, JULY 6, 1879.

PEACE WITH GOD.

GENERAL STATEMENT.

Paul was preaching at Corinth, (Acts 20, 21.)

3. In the fallacies of his strength and the plurality of his intellect. He wrote in the form of an epistle a grand summary of Christian doctrine, and an exposition of the glorious scheme of salvation, more full and complete than had yet been attempted in the Christian Church. As Rome was then the capital of the world, he addressed his letter to the Church which had been founded in that city, and which, though as yet unevangelized

by the apostle, held among its members many of its intimate friends. In the first eleven chapters of the epistle he presents the doctrine of his subject—Man in sin and under condemnation, (chap. 1-3.) Man saved by faith in a crucified Saviour, (4, 5-6.) Man convinced that he is saved, (7-8.) Man in the last five chapters, (9-11.)

Paul presents the practical duties and consequences of the doctrine he has presented. The result of the doctrine is peace with God, and the evidence and consequences of the love of God toward us. From one view of the glorious fruits of Christian privilege,

from the other the glorious reward of eternal salvation.

Romans 5, 1-10.

Memory Verse, 1-10.

1 Therefore being justified by faith, we have

peace with God through our Lord Jesus

Christ.

2 By whom also we have access by faith into this grace wherein we stand, and rejoice in the hope of the glory of God.

3 And not only so, but we glory in tribulation also, knowing that tribulation worketh

patience;

4 And patience, experience; and experience, hope;

5 And hope maketh not ashamed, because

the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts

by the Holy Ghost, which is given unto us.

6 For when we were yet without strength,

in due time Christ died for the ungodly.

7 For scarcely for a righteous man will one die: yet peradventure for a good man some would even dare to die.

8 But God commendeth his love toward us,

in that, while we were yet sinners, Christ

died for us.

9 Much more then, being now justified by his blood, we shall be saved from wrath

through him.

10 For if, when we were enemies, we were reconciled to God by the death of his Son

much more, being reconciled, we shall be saved by his life.

HOME READINGS.

1. Peace with God, Rom. 5, 1-10.

2. Peace promised, Isa. 54, 1-7.

3. Peace from God, John 16, 21-33.

4. Peace be unto the wicked, Isa. 57, 1-21.

5. Christ's gifts to peace, Luke 1, 17-25.

6. Peace abounding, Gal. 3, 1-17.

GOLDEN TEXT.

Therefore being justified by faith, we have

peace with God through our Lord Jesus

Christ, Rom. 5, 1.

LESSON HYMN, L. M.

Lord, how secure and blest are they
Who feel the joys of pardoned sin?

Should sinners of this world be glad?
Their souls have heaviness and pain.

How oft they look to the heavenly hills,
Where graces of living peace grow;

And longing hopes, and cheerful smiles,
Still undimmed upon their brow.

QUESTIONS ON THE LESSON.

1. Peace through Christ, v. 1-10; John

11, 27. What is it to be justified? (Ans.: Pardon and acquittal by God.) How many do we justify? What do we have in the result? Through whom do we have peace?

John 16, 23. How is Christ our peace? Eph.

2, 11. What other blessings are promised in

2, 22? In what do we rejoice? Should Christians be always happy? Phil. 4, 4. In what may we glory? What are tribulations? (Ans.: Trials and troubles.) Why should we glory in them?

2. How is Christ, v. 4, 5; Gal. 1, 3. What does justice work? What does this mean?

(Ans.: That patience under trial brings a sense of God's approval.) How is this illustrated in Isa. 54, 5-7? What is the result of experience? How is this shown in Isa.

54, 17? What is the character of a Christian home? 2 Thess. 2, 16. What is the result of hope? How is this shown in Phil. 1, 25?

What is the relation with God does Christ death bring us? What will his life do for us?

How should we feel and act toward such a Saviour?

TEACHINGS OF THE LESSON.

Where in this lesson do we learn—

1. That faith brings peace?

2. That tribulation brings patience?

3. That the Holy Ghost brings love?

WORDS WITH LITTLE FOLKS.

1. Find peace with God.

2. Be rejoicing Christians.

3. Love Christ for what he has done for you.

Peace I have with you, John 14, 27.

DOCTRINAL SUGGESTIONS.—Christ's redeeming sacrifice.

ADDITIONAL PRACTICAL LESSONS.

1. Salvation through Christ requires faith

on our part as its condition, v. 1.

2. Salvation brings entrance into a relation of peace with God as its result, v. 1.

3. Salvation gives to us the privilege of entering and abiding in the favor of God, v. 2.

4. Salvation extends beyond the present, and has a hoped-for glory hereafter, v. 2.

5. Salvation does not exempt us from the trials and sorrows of life, but gives us insight into the future, v. 3.

6. Salvation involves the discipline and development of our character here, for heaven

hereafter, v. 3, 4.

7. Salvation gives us the assurance of God's love, by the presence of his Spirit, v. 5.

8. Salvation comes to us through Christ,

when it could come from no other source, v. 6.

9. Salvation begins in our earthly life, and continues until it will be completed in heaven, v. 8.

In Texas there are 30,000 white children who cannot read.

A Baffled Conspiracy.

The result of the extra session of Congress is now definitely known.

It is settled that there is to be no change in existing laws. The Election laws will stand. Whatever power has existed for the prevention of fraud will still exist, and the laws will be neither repealed nor enacted. The Army, also, will remain under the control of a President armed with all the constitutional powers for the enforcement of the laws. Every power that President Hayes or his predecessor has had, to employ the Army and Navy in the suppression of resistance to law, and the protection of civil officers in the discharge of their duties, President Hayes will retain, to the end of his term. So much is settled.

The conspiracy of the Democrats to capture the next election by force and fraud, so far as it depended upon any change of the laws, is beaten already.

The Democrats do not yet confess a defeat. Their backing down from the position taken and the threats uttered when the extra session was made necessary, and again at the opening of that session, has indeed been complete; no change whatever has been or will be made in the laws which they resolved in caucus to wipe out. As to the present session, they confess defeat, but they still declare that they will renew the contest at the beginning of the regular session in December. But they could have done without refusing appropriations in February, or making an extra session necessary. Of what use has been this long and costly session, the country will ask. What excuse was there for it, if it could not after all have been postponed until the regular meeting in December next? The practical people of this country have a wholesome contempt for so-called statesmen who make desperate efforts to do impossible things at unnecessary times, thus involving great expense and long turmoil without any practical excuse. By adjourning the congress, as the Democrats of the Senate have resolved that they must, they confess that the public contempt has been richly deserved.

But they know that a renewal of the struggle next winter will not help them. No change in the laws is possible even then. The President has taught them what they ought to have known from the onset, that enactments cannot be defeated by a mere refusal to make appropriations.

He has given them notice that he has all the power needed to enforce the Election laws, whether they make appropriations as the law requires, or show themselves law-breakers by refusing. No repeal of law can be effected without his signature. He has proved that he has all the cleanness of mind and fixedness of purpose to prevent any evil change of the laws, and it has been shown that his vetoes are death to the bills at which they are aimed. Even if it should be found possible to frame an appropriation bill as to prevent the enforcement of a law, it is clear that he will veto any such measures. And the Democrats have given proof that they do not dare to stop any branch of the Government

THE REPUBLICAN.

OAKLAND, MARYLAND.

JAS. A. HAYDEN.

Editor and Proprietor.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.
One copy, one year, $1.00
Six months, .60
Three months, .35
IN ADVANCE.

TERMS OF ADVERTISING.
First insertion, 25 cents per square of 10 lines;
Subsequent insertions, 15 cents per square of 10 lines.
Special contracts for advertising longer
than three months.

Correspondents must enclose full name and
address, not necessarily for publication, but
as a private guarantee of good faith. Rejected
communications will not be returned.

SATURDAY, JULY 3, 1879.

With the sweep of an eagle and the rear of a lion the Harold descended to make a repast upon the dishes served by us in "Facts vs. Check." When we saw the spread of its pinions and did not hear its lion-like roar we trembled as an aspen, for we felt that our time had come—and we were to be devoured. But unlike the eagle or lion it made not its repast from the dishes set before it, but like a panther, leaping to attack them, it preferred to beat in the jungles for its feast. Having in its panther-like hunt gorged itself like a boa constrictor, with self-satisfying ideas of the history of the Republican party and its influence upon finance and trade,
it then, unlike the boa constrictor, disgorged this conglomerated mass of undigested matter from its distended stomach in alternate volleys of "We charge!" "We assert!" "We charge!"
"We assert!" and so on, ad infinitum.

Not a word of proof, not a line of fact, not a word in refutation of our arguments; it contents itself with these volleys of "charges" and "asserts." If assertions and charges, howling and braying could demolish
us we surely were gone; but they fall
upon us as harmlessly as the springtime shower; we rather welcome this little breeze, for it cools our fevered brow. Gentlemen, these volleys of "charge" and "assert" will not do;
give us, as a relief, some arguments and proof. The "Facts" given by us of the political condition of Garrett county stand untouched and our arguments unassailed; and those "Facts"
stand not alone by us uttered;
they are not mere charges and assertions of ours—they are corroborated by the organs of the faithful. We were not expecting an operation from this source, but "we are truly thankful for all we receive." The horoscope we cast for our party in this county will be verified this fall to such an extent that you will in truth forget your little harold. Make the most of that little accidental pair, gentlemen; "fondle" them, for they will soon be but a memory of the past. "Whom the gods love die young," and these poor little little waifs will pass from existence in early infancy; they will never enter their second year. That thou hast loved them will be a pleasant recollection; that thou didst fondle them will be a sweet retrospection. Retain these blessed memories of the past;
we would not rob thee of that solace
in the bitter cup of the soon coming
"to-morrow."

We agree with you, gentlemen,
that those confederate brigadiers
are taking good care of themselves
just now, and of the country, too, if depleting the Nation's exchequer to the tune of three thousand dollars per day or over four million, three hundred and eighty thousand dollars per annum can be construed in that way, and this is the sum that it is costing to maintain that congregation
of would-be law breakers in session
just now. You forget, gentlemen, that the imposts, the stamps and the bonds, over which you raise such a dismal howl, were the necessities of an emergency caused by these self-same battle-scarred rebel brigadiers that you so boastfully laud for taking care of themselves. You forget that our fields were stained and our waters crimsoned by the blood of the heroes who gave their lives to rescue
our Union from the death blow which these rebel brigadiers were endeavoring to give it. You forget to mention that in the little time you have been in power you have squandered
hundreds of thousands of dollars on investing committees. You forget to tell us that all these committees have been appointed and all this money squandered without discovering the misapplication of one dollar
under Republican rule. You forget your howls about the financial disaster that would attend resumption—You forget that that day came and passed not unlike other days. You forget your persistent efforts to postpone that day. You forget that depreciation of values is the natural sequence of the inflated values that your war caused. Surely, gentlemen, thou wert under the potent influence of the powerful drug Nepenthe; how pleasant it must be to dream in this way and discourse so sweetly obliv-ions to stern facts. We would like to drink of the fountain that thou hast tasted that we might forget thy well-beloved twins that thou dost fondle

so tenderly.

But, gentlemen, come back to local affairs. "Facts vs. Check" was written in refutation of your impudent claims that Garrett county is Democratic and that it had always been so.
You took that article for your text,
and we verily believed that you were going to answer us; that you were going to show us just how and why Garrett county was Democratic; that you were going to attempt to prove your checky claims. When lo! thou didst ignore the narrow limits of our county and didst roam in quest of "anecdotes" from the Atlantic to the Pacific shores; from the Northern Lakes to the Southern Gulf and thou didst bring back what thou didst start after—"anecdotes"—only that and nothing more.

Stick to the text, gentlemen, and when you give us anything to answer
we will give you the second act of "Facts vs. Check."

Two Democratic Papers Express Themselves.

The New York Sun sums up the not results thus far of the extra session as follows: "The end and the result of the extra session is that the Democracy are covered with disgrace while glory is shed upon Hayes."

Editor Keller, of the Memphis
Archives, writes to his paper from Washington as follows:

"The most indifferent observer of political events can predict with the accuracy of figures the result of the contest of 1879 and 1880. The Democratic party will be overwhelmed with political disaster and overthrow.
The South will be its sacrifice and its victim at the second Appomattox Court House, subjecting it to a more dependency in the Union to the triumphant and dominant North. Under sectional politics, the South will not increase its population nor ever hold its own. The calamities of the yellow fever plague are almost equalled by the filth and crimes of the Democratic leaders, and they seem to be allies in the devastating work of spreading poverty and ruin in the South."

Maryland this year elects a Governor, a Comptroller, an Attorney-General, Clerk of the Court of appeals,
one-half of the State Senate (thirteen members), the whole House of Delegates, (composed of eighty members),
a State's Attorney in each county, as well as the Clerk of the Circuit Court, Register of Wills, except where vacancies have been filled, Judges of the Orphans' Court, County Commissioners, Sheriffs and County Surveyors. The next Legislature, which will assemble on the first Wednesday in January next, will elect a United States Senator to succeed the Hon. Wm. Pinkney Whyte,
a Police Commissioner for Baltimore city, who will hold his office for six years, and a State Treasurer who will hold his office for two years.

There is to be no abrupt or rude adjournment of Congress. The whole thing seems to be gradually and unconsciously melting away. Speaker Randall Thursday announced that there would soon be no quorum in the House. Over one hundred and fifty members are present and one hundred and twenty-two are absent.
It is greatly to be regretted that the pay of the one hundred and twenty-two absent gentlemen can't be stopped. Perhaps it would be just as well for the country if the pay of the whole concern could be doctored.— Balto. Gazette, Democratic.

The Wheeling Intelligence says:
"The Harrison county, W. Va., stock dealers are negotiating with the Pennsylvania railroad to transport their cattle, horses, sheep and hogs from Uniontown, Pa., to Philadelphia and Baltimore at prices much lower than those now charged on the Baltimore and Ohio road."

The Cincinnati Commercial remarks that the signing of the Army bill takes the so-called bayonet out of the campaign, and together with the veto of the Judicial bill "draws the line of battle for the Republicans in the next presidential campaign on high and hard ground, and gives them an impregnable position."

The Baltimore Gazette thinks that
"Weston's great success in England,
after years of blunders and failures,
should encourage the Democratic party to persevere." England was a long way off, but then there was no encouragement for the Democratic party to be gotten at home.

Judge Boutwell has harvested between three and four thousand bushels of wheat from his farm near Rockville, Montgomery county, and expects to cut two hundred tons of hay and make eight hundred barrels of corn.
This land, so productive, was a few years ago unimproved, barren old fields, some of it marshy and bearing pine trees.

Wisdom by Experience.

There seems to be nothing more necessary in the present condition of political affairs than that various orators, either Democratic or Republican,
who imagine that speeches roared or whispered upon the floor of Congress are swaying the body politic, should be informed of their vast mistake.
The majority of the people are looking upon this special and most especial session of Congress with a kind of pitying curiosity, wondering why
the majority and minority should keep up a wrangle in this hot weather that their constituents are not caring the loss of a copper about.
The voluble declaration, the strategy
and by-play over the appropriation bills, the efforts to circumvent the vetoes and the beautifully eloquent speeches that the official stenographers listen to so attentively, are more like the parts of a dreary comedy than anything else. Of course, so long as the Democrats choose to prolong the session the Republicans are helpless to terminate it, and they are reduced to the extremity of resisting their superior intellectual and tactical force to worry the opposition and try its temper to the verge of forbearance. When the history of this extra session is written there will be a record made of the fashion
in which the Republicans made the majority virtually stonier than the minority, and found their last opportunity in the fact that the majority was split into factions that very unwillingly yielded to the dictates of the caucus.

There is a wonderfully grotesque side to many of the set orations that have recently been delivered in Congress. Senator Beck and Mr.
Blair and Mr. Cox, of the House of Representatives, have given the world to understand that they would die in their tracks before the appropriation bills should be vetoed without the political riders attached.
They were so intent on slaughter that nervous people read their speeches with trembling and amazement. But these modern counterfeits of Bonaparte's Parade do not come up to the original mark. They have condescended to acknowledge the authority of the presidential veto, and their quintessence now is like that of somebody who has been struck by lightning
where he supposed the bolt could never fall.

While these practical lessons are being passed around we do not know
but that Senator Wade Hampton should have his share of them. In the last speech he made he declared that the war "has not changed in any way the relative powers of the state and the Union." General Hampton probably does not remember that one of the greatest issues of the war was bluntly this: Has a state a right to secede? The South said yes, and the North said no, and the greatest civil war of modern times occurred. It took several years, cost millions of treasures and hundreds of thousands of lives to settle the problem. But it was settled at last, and the result did change the relative powers which certain states claimed with respect to the Union. It is not necessary to go any further into particulars to prove Senator Hampton's blunder of the morning that nothing was decided by the war.—Baltimore American.

CONDITION OF THIS YEAR'S CROP.
—The June report of the Agricultural Department shows that the average of oats has dropped off four per cent. The general average is 51 against 55 last year. The decrease in the average of rye is about 4 per cent.; New England is full, New York is only 80 and Pennsylvania 88.
Barley is low; the general average is 75, while in 78 it was 93. Corn is backward owing to droughts. The condition of clover is very low all over the country, except in the New England States and those bordering on the Gulf of Mexico. The prospect for a good crop of fruits is gloomy. There will be a short crop of apples. The average is low except in New England. The crop in all the Atlantic States is fair. In the Gulf States the yield will be only half of the full crops. In the Eastern States and particularly in those where the culture of peaches is a specialty
the crop is represented as good, but in the Atlantic States south of Virginia it is a failure, and that is the case in the States bordering on the Ohio river except in a few localities.
California will have a full crop this year.

The fight is fought, the victory
won. It would now be eminently appropriate, and in good taste for Gen. Slater, commander-in-chief of the Baltimore Ring Democracy, to hire a brass band, and ride at its head through the principal streets to the air of "Hail to the chief who in triumph advances." An appropriate symbol and motto would be a fawn bank pointed upon a banner,
with the significant words "Ketchum & Cheatum," breakers—Baltimorean, Demo.

The Democrats seem afraid of the issues they themselves have raised.
After compounding the explosives
which are to cause wreck and ruin in the Republican camp, they stand off
as if they are afraid to handle them.
If the troops-at-the-polls issue is worth anything at all to the Democratic party, it should have been clearly and definitely stated, free
from entanglement with other questions. It would not have been too late to have done this after the first veto of the Army Appropriation bill
by the President, for there were plenty of Republican precedents for tacking legislative enactments to appropriation bills, and had the issue
been then presented to the President in a specific enactment, apart altogether from the appropriations, a veto would have at least afforded them the opportunity of making a big outcry on the stump about the bayonet at the polls. But instead of that they tinkered away at it, paring
it down and smoothing off its sharp edges, until they got the President's approval to the measure and destroyed its availability as an issue at the same time. Since Tilden ceased to be the party leader the brains have been out, and one of the strongest cards that Tilden will be able to play at the next nominating convention will be: "See what a mess you have made of it since you have undertaken to get along without me." There was sense and capacity in the conduct of the Democratic presidential campaign up to the day of election, when Tilden's superintendence of details seems to have ceased. After that the character of the work to be done obliged him to depend upon the energy and smartness of the "wicked partners," who not only failed, but committed the unpardonable political sin of being found out. Since then the course of the Democratic party has been from blunder to blunder, until at present
the chief interest it excites arises
from its immense ability in discovering new follies.—Balto. American.

By no means the least of the pleasures and perquisites of a seat in Congress is that of being a member of some one of the many committees
that are appointed, with privileges to sit during the recess for this or that purpose. One committee will select Saratoga for its meeting-place;
another finds that its business can only be conducted at Cape, Long Branch or Atlantic City; a third decides that its duties necessitate a trip across the continent or up to the St. Lawrence, and so goes on the merry farce. This year the Senate has dipped very extensively into this sort of proceeding, some sixty of its members being already looked for some ostensible committee work. The House is as yet somewhat backward in making similar provision for its statesmen, but it still has a chance to catch up with the Senate before the Speaker announces the close of the session. Of course, the committees travel and lodge in the top of the style. Palace cars, the best staterooms on the steamboats, second floor quarters at the nobbiest hotels, squads of deputy sergeants-at-arms
as attendants, and unlimited refreshments in glass—these are some of the features that combine to make an official junketing tour a thing to be enjoyed once and remembered forever. And then it is not at all costly to the participants. The government settles all the bills, and we never knew of people being economical when somebody else had to pay the score. True, occasionally a party of roving Congressmen cut such a tremendous splurge, as Patterson's committee did when it went out to the Indian Territory, that its expenses create a temporary scandal, but they never fail to demonstrate that the account is all right, and that what they facetiously term their work has been of incalculable benefit to the nation. The latter fiction is of course the justification for the free folies to be enjoyed this summer.

There are people at the North, and possibly at the South, who can see no reason for the negro emigration to Kansas. The negroes themselves say they have three reasons, and all good ones: First, that they cannot make enough where they are to keep from starving to death; secondly, that they cannot buy any land at a decent figure, so as to give hope of bettering their condition in the future; and,
thirdly, that they are not allowed to vote except in the way their white neighbors dictate.

Senator Windom spoke for a large number of people in the country
when he declared that, notwithstanding the fact that the Democrats had been in control of the House four years, and had had thirty-one investigating committees at work to hunt up dishonest officials, they had only succeeded in expending about three hundred dollars of the people's money without discovering a single instance in which a dollar had been improperly used.

Crop reports from Ontario and other Canadian provinces show prospects for more than an average crop.
In some places fall wheat was winter killed, and in others the lateness of the spring delayed its growing; but the favorable weather of the past few weeks has worked wonders. The despatches indicate that the crops are looking better in the eastern than in the western sections of Ontario; but the harvest the country over will be a bountiful one. The hay crop will be unprecedentedly large. Wheat, oats and barley are above the average. Root crops of all kinds are thriving well, and fruit will give at least an average yield. The potato crop thus far has thus far escaped the ravages of the potato bug.

TELEGRAPHIC.

THE MARYLAND JUDGESHIP.
Special to the Chamberlain Daily News.

WASHINGTON, July 1.—To-day Mr.
Mathews, to relieve the situation of all embarrassment, asked the President to withdraw his name from the nomination for the Maryland judgship. This was done, and the name of Mr. Thomas J. Morris, of Baltimore, sent in and immediately confirmed for the position.

Judge Morris is a member of the law firm of Hurdick & Morris, Baltimore. He is a gentleman in the prime of life. Although he has not a wide reputation at the bar, he is known to be a lawyer of sound attainments. In character he is unob-jectionable. He is a pronounced Republican. His nomination was brought about by the influence of Mr. Mathews and friends. Twenty-four hours ago his name was not publicly mentioned in connection with the office, and he may literally
be said to have had "gratuitous thrust upon him." It is confidently thought his appointment will prove a good one, although it will be a sore disappointment to some of the ambitious gentlemen who have been fighting Mr. Mathews and who hoped to profit by Mr. Mathews' failure to secure the office.

PRESIDENT HAYES' OBJECTION TO THE LAST HOPE OF THE LAST DITCH DEMOCRATS.

WASHINGTON, June 30.—The following message from the President was delivered to the House of Representatives immediately after 12 M.
to-day:

To the House of Representatives:
I return to the House of Representatives, in which it originated,
the bill entitled, "An act making appropriations to pay fees of United States marshals and their general
deputies," with the following objections to its becoming a law: The bill appropriates the sum of $600,000
for the payment during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, of United States marshals and their general
deputies. The office has provided for are essential to the faithful execution of the laws. They were created and their powers and duties defined by Congress at its first session after the adoption of the Constitution, in the Judiciary act which was approved September 24th, 1779.
Their general duties as defined in the act which originally established them, were substantially the same as those prescribed in the statutes now in force.

The principal provision on the subject in the revised statutes is as follows: "Section 757. It shall be the duty of the marshal of each district
to attend the district and circuit courts, when sitting therein, and to execute throughout the district all lawful precepts directed to him and issued under the authority of the United States, and he shall have power to command all necessary assistance in the execution of his duty."
The original act was amended February 28, 1793, and the amendment is now found in the revised statutes in the following form:

"Section 758. The marshals and their deputies shall have in each state
the same powers in executing the law of the United States as the sheriffs and their deputies in such state may have by law in executing the laws thereof."

By subsequent statutes additional duties have been from time to time imposed upon the marshals and their deputies, the due and regular performance of which are required for the efficiency of almost every branch of the public service. Without these officers there would be no means of executing the warrants, decrees or other processes of the courts, and the judicial system of the country would be fatally defective. The criminal jurisdiction of the courts of the United States is very extensive. The crimes committed within the maritime jurisdiction of the United States are all cognizable in the courts of the United States. Crimes against public justice; crimes against the operations of the government, such as forging or counterfeiting the money or securities of the United States; crimes against the postal laws; offenses against the revenue franchises against the civil rights of citizens, against the existence of the government;
crimes against the internal revenue laws, the custom laws, the neutrality
laws; crimes against laws for the protection of Indians and of the public lands—all of these crimes and many others can be punished only under United States laws, which taken together, constitute a body of jurisprudence which is vital to the welfare of the whole country, and which can be enforced only by means of the marshals and deputy marshals of the United States. In the District of Columbia all of the processes of the courts is executed by the officers in question. In short, the execution of the criminal laws of the United States, the service of all civil process in cases in which the United States is a party, and the execution of the revenue laws, the neutrality laws,

and many other laws of large importance depend on the maintenance of the marshals and their deputies.
They are in effect the only police of the United States Government. Officers with corresponding powers and duties are found in every state of the Union, and every country which has a jurisprudence which is worthy of the name. To deprive the national government of these officers would be as disastrous to society as to abolish the sheriffs, constables and police officers in the several states. It would be a denial to the United States of the right to execute its laws—a denial of all authority which requires the use of civil force. The law entitles these officers to be paid. The funds needed for the purpose have been collected from the people and are now in the treasury. No objection is therefore made to that part of the bill before me which appropriates money for the support of the marshals and deputy marshals of the United States.

The bill contains, however, other provisions which are identical in tenor and effect with the second section of the bill entitled "An act making appropriations for certain judicial expenses," which on the 23d of the present month was returned to the House of Representatives with my objections to its approval. The provisions referred to are as follows:
"Section 2. That the sums appropriated in that act for the personal and public service embraced in its provisions are in full for such persons and public service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and no department or officer of the government shall during said fiscal year make any contract or incur any liabilities for the payment of money under any of the provisions of title 25, mentioned in section one of this act, until an appropriation sufficient to meet such contract or pay such liability shall have first been made by law."

Upon a reconsideration in the House of Representatives of the bill which contained these provisions it lacked a constitutional majority, and therefore failed to become a law. In order to secure its enactment the same measure is again presented for my approval, coupled with the bill before me, with appropriations for deputies during the next fiscal year.
The object manifestly is to place before the executive this alternative;
either to allow necessary functions of the public service to be crippled or suspended for want of appropriation,
or to approve legislation which is official communications to Congress
he has declared would be a violation of his constitutional duty. Thus in this the principle is clearly established that, by virtue of the provision of the Constitution which requires that
"all bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives," a bare majority of the House or Representatives has the right to withhold appropriations for the support of the government unless the executive consents to approve and sign appropriation bills. I respectfully refer to the communications on this subject which I have sent to Congress
during its present session for a statement of the grounds of my objections, and I desire here to re-emphasize that, in my judgment, to establish the principle of this bill is to make a radical, dangerous and unconstitutional change in the character of our institutions.

RETHURFORD B. HAYES.
Executive Mansion, June 30, 1879.

DEMOCRATIC PRETENSIONS.

WASHINGTON, June 27.—The utter falsity of Democratic pretensions was never more clearly demonstrated than to-day in the Senate. Over and over again this session Davis has be-stirred, and, in one instance, openly charged that evidence already taken by his investigating committee fully sustains his charges of discrepancies in the debt statement. It has gone even farther, and by imputations has reflected upon Republican officials.
Today Allison, backed by the whole Republican side, submitted a resolution providing for the printing of all the testimony and other evidence
now in the possession of the Davis committee. Strange to say, Davis and Beck both opposed the resolution, the latter even threatening to resign if it was adopted, for the reason that the evidence consists mainly of ex parte statements and obscure excuse Treasury officials and obscure what Davis and Beck feign to regard as gigantic frauds. The fact is that the evidence gathered by the Davis committee entirely exonerates the Treasury officials and everybody connected with the matter, and for this reason Davis objects. Until now no one supposed that, ignorant as Davis is of the method of bookkeeping in the Treasury Department, he was capable of practicing such duplicity.
The Republicans humored him in December, 1877, by appointing a committee of investigation, of which he was made chairman, and gave him
all the scope he desired to battle windmills; but now their eyes are opened to the monstrosities are no longer actuated by honest motives,
but are only endeavoring to manufacture political capital. Ingalls, a member of the committee, denied that there was any scintilla of evidence to sustain Davis' charges. The resolution was not disposed of to-day.
The Republican will try to obtain action upon it to-morrow.

LOCAL NEWS.

—Rev. Henry P. Hamill is home on a visit.

—Miss Lizzie Mason is visiting at Piedmont.

—A sign has been put up at the post office.

—Mr. Alton Osbourn is spending the summer at his home.

—Matt. Callahan has placed a bar-ber pole in front of his shop.

—Miss Katie Townsend returned from her Western trip Saturday.

—The County Commissioners will meet for the transaction of business Monday next.

—Our old friends Drs. Bezell and Holbert, of Smithfield, Pa., called at our office Wednesday.

—A car load of shingles and a car load of staves were shipped from this station this week.

—Fresh meat at Wolfe's, near the postoffice, every Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday.

—200 sacks G. A. Salt for sale at Wm. P. Totten's Cheap Cash Store, Oakland, Md.

—The July term of the Circuit Court for Garrett county will commence next Monday, and will probably continue but one or two days.

—Bush and Heckard have shipped seven car loads of shank since they started their manufactory, and intend hereafter to ship two car loads a week.

—Mr. Charles Sweeney, one of our energetic livermen, Wednesday received from the manufacturers a handsome "bandaw," with seats for six persons.

—The members of the Garrett Literary Society return their thanks to the ladies who so ably assisted at their festival and the citizens for their generous and liberal patronage.

—At the commencement exercises of the West Virginia University at Morgantown recently, George A. Pearce, Jr., of Cumberland, was awarded the $25 prize for the best essay.

—Dr. W. P. Funderberg, Oculist, and Aurist, from Cumberland, Md., is now stopping at the "Davis House," where all those suffering from diseases of the eye, ear, nose and throat can consult him every day in the week, excepting on Saturdays and Sundays. All consultations free. Hours, 9 A. M. to 1 P. M.

—The body of Bridget E. Kelly, who from a card found on her person is supposed to be a resident of Washington, D. C., was discovered Thursday of last week near Rawlings station, twelve miles from Cumberland. An inquest was held, and a verdict of death from falling from a train going east on Monday night last was rendered. Her left leg was broken and the whole right side of her skull was torn off.

—The Messrs. Phelps, contractors for the construction of the Georges Creek and Cumberland railroad, yesterday sub-let the contract for the tunnel work on the line to Mr. John Humbird, of this city. There will be three tunnels, 500, 300 and 200 feet long, respectively, all located between this city and Clarysville. The contract for the six miles of the work nearest Lonaconing has been let to Mr. Hendricks, of Massachusetts, who will begin to day with a force of men the work of clearing timber from the line. The three miles of the line between the nearest tunnel and this city has been let to Mr. Mathew Corrigan. —Cumh. News, July 1.

—Complaint is often made that garden seeds do not sprout into plants with that certainty that the florid catalogue of the seedsmen would lead us to expect. Peter Henderson, the veteran gardener, thinks he has discovered the cause and the remedy is certainly simple enough. Before the recent convention of nurserymen and florists he said that if seeds when planted in spring are pressed firmly with the foot after they are under the ground they will invariably grow, drought or no drought. Peter says that although he has been in the business for over a quarter of a century he only discovered this simple truth a few years ago. This information may be rather late for this season, but it is in first rate time for next spring.

—The Jeremy Diddlers have resorted to a new system of swindling the unsuspecting farmer. A stranger calls upon the farmer and represents that he is desirous of purchasing a farm, and prevails upon the farmer to show him around his premises. By this time he has ingratiated himself into the farmer's favor, and he is given a good supper and bed; but when the farmer awakes in the morning he finds his customer has decamped with whatever valuables he can lay his hands on. Such was the experience a few days since, of Mr. Philip Snyder, who resides below town, the thief having stolen from him a watch and chain valued at $150. From runoffs that reach us Mr. S. was not the one only upon whom the trick was tried in this county. Farmers should be on their guard now how they entertain strangers, who often come to them as wolves in sheep's clothing. —Huntington News.

Church Services—Sunday.
M. E. Church.—Preaching in the evening at 8 o'clock, by Rev. Henry P. Hamill.

Lutheran Conference.
The Joint Conference of the Ev. Lutheran Synods of Maryland and Virginia will convene in the Oakland Ev. Lutheran church on Tuesday evening next. The services are of a devotional character and will continue during several days and evenings. Opening sermon on Tuesday evening at 8 o'clock, by the President. All are cordially welcomed.
O. C. MILLER,
Pastor.

Sewing Machine Agency.
I. W. Shonaker, Esq., agent for the Singer Sewing Machine Company, has his headquarters at Coddington's Hotel, in Oakland, where he is prepared to furnish all kinds of sewing machine needles, parts of machinery, machine oil, &c. He will also repair machines of any make. Mr. S. has sold a great many machines in this county and has always given satisfaction. Call and see him.

Opening of the "Glades."
The Glades Hotel was thrown open Monday afternoon for inspection, and a large number of our citizens took advantage of the opportunity to examine the rooms, furniture, &c. Expressions of delight and admiration were heard on all sides, brought out by the elegant workmanship, large airy rooms, handsome furniture, carpets, paintings, &c. A large number of guests have already registered for the season, and we understand that the rooms are all engaged.

Bloomington and Fairfax Railroad.

The survey of the Bloomington and Fairfax railroad, extending from the former point to Elk Garden a distance of eight miles, has been vigorously pushed for several weeks past under the direction of G. W. Smith, engineer of the Chesapeake and Ohio canal, and will be completed within ten days. The contract for the construction of the road will probably be let shortly and if so the road will be completed within the next year. —Cumh. News.

The Ring Contests.

At the Oakland Band festival two rings were contested for, one between Miss Nettie Michael and Miss Annie West, and the other between Miss Mattie Kepner and Miss Annie Holbiz. The first contest was concluded two weeks since, and resulted in favor of Miss Nettie. The amount realized aggregated $37.92. The second contest was decided Tuesday evening and was favorable to Miss Mattie, realizing in the aggregate $17.55. These amounts added to the receipts of the festival make the total net receipts $119. The members of the band are negotiating for a band wagon, which will be here in a short time.

Sunday School Work in Western Maryland.

Mr. W. A. Baker, State superintendent Maryland Sunday School Union, has just returned this morning from a very extended tour through Garrett and Allegany counties, under the auspices of the State Society. Two very successful county Sunday School conventions were held at Accident and Cumberland. A number of union meetings were held at Oakland, Frostburg and other towns, through which the missionary party passed on the Evangelical canvass. The Sunday schools are in a very prosperous condition. Rev. Encas English, county missionary, is doing a good work organizing and reorganizing schools in the above counties. —Baltimore Bulletin, Monday.

Knights of Honor.

The semi-annual election of officers of Alta Lodge No. 574, Knights of Honor, took place Thursday night of last week, with the following result: Dictator—John M. Davis. Vice Dictator—Thos. Carr. Asst. Dictator—David Little. Recorder—W. H. Tower. Financier—A. G. Sturgiss. Treasurer—J. A. Hayden. Guide—John Compton. Chaplain—H. B. Wolfe. Sentinel—Chas. H. Sineell. Guardian—A. Loewenstein. Medical Examiner—J. Lee McComas.

The Fourth.

In order to keep cool we recommended our citizens to go early and often to Richardson's Ice Cream Parlors where their wants are always anticipated. Also a fine assortment of fire works, foreign fruits, confections, &c., &c.

The Law of Newspapers.

The courts have decided that if a person orders his paper discontinued he must pay all arrears, or the publisher may continue to send it until payment is made, and collect the whole amount whether the paper is taken from the postoffice or not. Also, action for fraud can be instituted against any person, whether he is responsible in a financial view or not, who refuses to pay for a publication. Some forget this, and think by merely refusing to take the paper from the postoffice, settles the matter.

The "Palladium" Expedition.

By our own Correspondent.

As promised in our last edition we lay before our readers a brief description of the expedition which left this place on Wednesday of last week upon a piscatorial visit to the teeny waters of Cheat river. As it will be necessary to occasionally refer to some of the individual members composing this excursion, I will briefly state that the party numbered six persons, being a detachment of the "A. of D." and commanded by Gen. Wardwell in person; second in rank and first in importance was Gen. John Swan, whose genial manner, versatile conversation and jovial companionship made him the life of the party. Next in order comes the pleasant and well-mannered gentleman from Ohio, Maj. Gen. J. B. Tytus, who also, in the language of our esteemed fellow-townsmen, ("Dandridge Coley," Esq.) made things cheerful by his "pleasant addresses and agreeable observations." Our next introduction is Col. Davies Swan, son of the distinguished gentleman before mentioned, and whose jovial disposition was on this occasion only second to that of his illustrious sire. The Colonel was indeed most full of life, and furnished the greater part of the music for our entertainment, with such choice selections as "Hardly ever," "Boasted Pea Nut Man," &c. Our next illustrious presentation, who looms into prominence from the doughty deeds performed, is Corporal "Gauymede," surnamed the "Familiar," of whose prowess we are anon. Last, but hardly least, comes the Master of the Horse; that great Sir Gallahad of all cavalry, private Thos. Sweeney, with the great rival and compeer of the Seven Sleepers.

And now having presented to you each of our party personally, I must come to our journey itself. Transition is abrupt, not to say dangerous, and yet I propose for want of space, to skip all details of preparation and show you our party seated behind a pair of stout bay cobs, in a large and roomy road wagon, the latter packed in every available space with ice, provisions and all the necessary traps for our enterprise, we bid good bye to Mrs. Mason and Turner, and other friends on the balcony of the Oakland Hotel, Private Thomas clucks to the horses, the wagon creaks, the wheels move—hurrah! we're off for the fierce and angry waters of the restless Cheat!

Nothing of note transpired for the first two miles of our journey, save a halt at "Thompson's Water Station," where we took in a supply of fresh water for our live stock, and also branched a couple of bottles of "Green Seal," after which we resumed our journey, nothing as we went by the various farms, streams, woodcock covers, &c., with various comments upon the crops and scenery; an occasional melody by our Nawa-dalia, or sweet singer, also served to make two hours glide swiftly by, at the end of which time we entered the rather quaint looking town of Aurora, called after the day goddess, we presume, on account of its great brilliancy. At this charming spot we made quite a halt, and General Wardwell dispatched Corporal Gauymede as a courier to the commandant of the arsenal at Oldtown, requesting the loan of some stands of arms and two "Greek Fire Ships," to aid us in a night attack upon wary denizens of the deep. At this village the whole command received their noon-day ration, and also a small allowance of grog. The General, being in a generous mood, also distributed a quart of pea nuts, which occasioned much joy, and Col. Swan gave "Billy, the Pea Nut Man," with much power and pathos, Gauymede having returned with the arms and fire ships, we once more took our seats and the road being fine, proceeded at a spanking rate on our way. A drive of two miles, through a fine farming country, brought us at last to the summit of the much celebrated Cheat mountain; and truly we do not think that travelers have ever exaggerated the terrible grandeur of this lofty mountain. Where you first strike the summit (down Western turnpike sides the North Western turnpike winds its way) you also see in your front and to your right the lofty crests of two other huge mountains, whose towering peaks seem to mingle with the clouds. While looking at your feet, below yawns with open mouth a frightful abyss, appearing, so far as the eye can discern, to be bottomless, and seeming a great chaos laughing from Heaven to Hell between the gigantic mountains, reminding one of Milton's grand description in Paradise Lost. And now we begin the descent of the mountain, observing with admiration the beautiful foliage, flowers and vines which grow in rich profusion and density over the entire mountain side. Clambering up the sides of the gigantic poplars we beheld the most luxurious of Virginia Creepers, whilst from the limbs of almost all the stately timber, drooped and twined with their serpentine embrace thousands of grape vines and evergreens, making a perfect shade and reminding the traveler of tropical views in the sunny climes of the Orient. Gen. Swan also pointed out to us the skillful manner in which the engineers had directed and graded the road, which wound around the mountain like a spiral stairway. The road itself is a pretty sight, crossing as it were from in and out the recesses of the mountain, bordered on each side by stately poplar, linden and walnut-trees, which seem like sentinels guarding the mountain pass. The road itself is in most excellent condition, and is quite a credit to West Virginia—in fact we found but one fault with it, and that was its great length. Indeed, so long it seemed that Gen. Swan declared over and over again that some one had cut the bottom of it off. But all things have an end, and so at last we finished the mountain and entered the plain below; and here, for the first time, we caught a glimpse of the fierce and angry, though majestic "Cheat," flowing noisily over the foot of the great precipice we have just described. Oh, peerless stream! may thy course never be checked, or the noble habits of thy bosom ever become extinct!

A drive of half a mile brings us over Wolf Creek and gliding out to the open flat we are on the river's bank, and see it flowing in its tremendous might, gathering force from every tributary, rushing with frightfully increasing power and rapidly to the Monongahela, nearing which it shouts exultingly, anxious leaps within its bosom assisting, with a god-like strength, to rend a passage to the ocean.

(Concluded next week.)

Frostburg, Md., July 1st, 1879.

ED. REPUBLICAN:—In my last week's letter I omitted, to state, as I observed in the Cumberland News, what party would probably hold its convention here. It was the Democratic party to which I referred. I, however, apprehend that the citizens of Frostburg will not be honored with the grand schemes of the Democratic party appearing in convention in this little city wherein have been held so many religious assemblies of late. This alone would be enough to frighten away any political party, but that would probably not be the only reason. The Cumberland gentlemen would resist such an innovation with all their might and main, well knowing that their hopes of obtaining most of the offices would be sure to result in disappointment if they have to attend a convention outside of Cumberland.

On Sunday last there was held here a Sunday School reunion. The children of the Presbyterian, Eng. Baptist, German Reformed and Lutheran churches assembled with the children of the Methodist church, in whose magnificent building they listened to instructive discourses from their own teachers, ministers and lay delegates from abroad. Among the strangers there was pointed out to me a gentleman by the name of Peddicord, who, I was told, was a resident of Oakland. The earnestness and sincerity with which he spoke showed plainly that he was heart and soul in the noble work, and I think Oakland must feel honored in having a citizen who, when in the midst of multifarious and engrossing duties at home, can take time to enlist in the noble cause of bringing wandering souls to a knowledge of the gospel.

Marx Wineland, Esq., sold last week to Mr. McMullen, interior superintendent of Borden mine, his stock of goods. For many years Mr. Wineland has been one of the most prominent business men of Allegany county. His store room was a perfect palace, and he was noted for the urbanity of his manners, the immense stock of goods which he carried, and the excellent order in which he kept his store. For nearly a year he has been an invalid and has been compelled to remain in the house the last six months, during which time his sufferings were acute, but he bore them all with Christian fortitude. He is now recovering slowly, and will soon be out again, to the great delight of his friends.

In the way of sales I have another item to record. On Saturday last Messrs. Brace and Blackiston sold the residence of the late Mr. Huntley to Nelson, Beall, Esq., for $1,500. The house is a two-story frame and has all the necessary out buildings. The price obtained indicated that real estate is pretty cheap in Frostburg.

Under the auspices of the Maryland Temperance Union, temperance meetings were held in the Odd Fellow's Opera House two evenings last week. The meetings were addressed by Mr. C. L. Mosher and his daughter. Their purpose was to obtain a sufficient number of persons interested in the temperance cause to advocate the selection of legislative candidates pledged to local option.

The annual exercises of the Frostburg Institute, under the management of Miss Allie Hartzell took place last Friday evening, in the Odd Fellow's Opera House. The entertainment was similar to the one given the week previously by the Misses Kern, except there were tableaux in the latter. All the exercises were imminently rendered and every person was pleased with the entertainment. As an evidence of the esteem in which "Miss Allie" is held may be related the fact that on Commencement day her scholars handed her a receipted bill for the rent of the Opera House.

A disastrous runaway occurred yesterday. The horses of Mr. Sinclair, Esq., when between Borden mine and Frostburg, ran away with the carriage in which were seated Mr. Sinclair and his two children. All the occupants, including the driver, were more or less injured. One of the children's arms were broken as were also several ribs of Mr. Sinclair. The carriage was smashed to pieces and one of the horses was injured so badly that he is not expected to recover.

Hon. Wm. Brace and lady returned from their bridal tour Saturday. They are now sojourning here.

NELLIE GRAY.

DEEP CREEK, June 27, 1879.

ED. REPUBLICAN:—All things are lovely and grubbing frolics are the order of the day in this "neck of the woods." Here in our quiet little neighborhood, wherever you go you can hear the sound of the mattock, and as soon as night comes, how delighted it is to go into some snug corner and watch the young heroes, who just one hour previous were swinging the mattock, now swinging the fairer sex. Mr. C. H. Browning gave us a chance to test our muscle at one of the above mentioned frolics, and greatly pleased was "Cal," when evening came to find that we had grubbed and piled the grub on five acres of ground. Mrs. J. Z. Browning at the same time gave the young ladies of the neighborhood a chance to show their skill at quilting, and they also did remarkably well. After the grubbing was done and the quilt was finished, we all partook of a small "jigger," to sharpen our appetites, partook of a most excellent supper, and then, after clearing away the encumbrances, the dancing began and was continued most of the night, the laddies going home with the lassies in the morning.

Yesterday Mr. W. also gave us a call to come to a grubbing and dance. We had a large crowd of grubbers, especially at the table, and all enjoyed themselves at the dance which followed.

Respectfully,
J. L. McR.

—The festival for the benefit of the Garrett Literary Society Thursday and Friday evenings of last week, was a success. The net receipts was $30.13.

List of Letters.

List of letters remaining unclaimed in the Post Office at Oakland, July 5th, 1879.

Persons calling for them will please say they are advertised.

Broadbent & Sullivan, Hannah Henry H. Cotton, Lewis Esch, Geo. D. England, Maggie Harris, L. Jordan, Ellen Kight, Geo. G. Long, J. A. Miller, Samuel Moore, Samuel Pritts, V. B. Rigg, G. B. Rust, S. S. Summers, Mary West, Harry Walton.

R. TRAVER, P. M.

Both Houses of Congress adjourned Wednesday afternoon.

It is not possible that the cause of the South and the cause of the North were both "the cause of truth and justice." Both could not be right. In the bloody and deadly struggle which rent the land for four years and still fills it with mourning, the righteous principles were not equal on both sides. If the Confederate cause was "the cause of truth and justice," then the Union cause was the opposite; and when Senator Morgan affirms the one, he logically and inevitably maintains the other. In order to pay all proper respect and honor to the Confederate dead, it is not necessary to assert that they fought in a just cause. To do that it is to reassert the doctrine of rebellion, and to show that its spirit is still cherished.

Sherman's Tribute to the Army.

From his Orchard Lake Address.

Our orators are wont to indulge in flights of fancy at the danger to liberty and civil government by an army, deriving their cues from some old English prejudices and examples. To the fidelity of our army England owes the stability of her government, and the proverbial respect paid to her courts of law and civil administration. Search her literature throughout and you will find no more beautiful tribute to this fact than Dickens pays to the troops who suppressed the Lord George Gordon riots, as described in Barnaby Rudge, after the civil authorities had become paralyzed with fear by the action of a wild mob. Our own country furnishes innumerable examples of the absolute respect paid to the supremacy of law by the soldier element of America; but why search for minor examples when the majestic one of 1865 stands of record? the admiration of mankind, of an army of a million of men, who could have usurped all civil power, but which silently, and peacefully restored their arms to the public arsenals, stripped off their uniforms and resumed their accustomed places in the ranks of the people.

The Baltimore American says:

The Baltimore and Ohio Railroad company have been contemplating for some time the erection of a Bessemer steel rail mill for the manufacture of steel rails for use by the company. It is understood the company have determined to institute this improvement, and will proceed as soon as practicable to build the mill at Cumberland, which will have a capacity of about 15,000 tons of rails annually. The company is also considering the feasibility of manufacturing all the Bessemer metal required for its use; but this has not been definitely determined upon. There are large quantities of ore along the line of the Orange and Alexandria road (operated by the Baltimore and Ohio company), and this has led to a favorable consideration of the project. The company is now investigating the entire subject, and will doubtless adopt the plan as soon as the Bessemer steel rail mill shall have been built. This will be at an early date, as the architects are now preparing plans for the structure. The company has recently built a large plate iron mill at Cumberland, with a capacity equal to the broadest consumption, and will at once begin to manufacture all the plate iron needed at its terminals and along the lines of road. Since 1861, the Baltimore and Ohio Company has been purchasing its steel rails of the Edgar Thomson company, with the exception of about one thousand tons imported from England.

THE TRANSATLANTIC CATTLE TRADE.

—The transportation of cattle across the Atlantic is a hazardous business at best. More than 12,000 animals, cattle, sheep and hogs, succumbed to the hardships of the passage during last winter, and of course every one of these represented so much loss to the shippers. This severe mortality, and the lowering of the prices of meat now ruling in England in consequence of the inability of the people to purchase animal food, no doubt more than neutralizes the profits on many shipments. The Toronto Globe takes quite a despondent view of the situation, so far as the Dominion trade is affected. It says: "It may be depended upon that when we hear of Canadian cattle being shipped to England and thence transhipped to the point from which a hundred thousand cattle are annually sent to England, the market must be in a curious condition."

ESTIMATING THE PEACH CROP.

A correspondent of the Wilmington, Del. Evening and Chronicle, who is vouchered for by that paper as a competent judge, after a tour of inspection through the peach district, gives the following estimate of the yield which will be marketed: By rail, 2,587,000 baskets; by water to Baltimore 735,000, by water to Philadelphia and New York 675,000—total 3,997,000 baskets. The correspondent adds: "This is a good yield both for the growers and the consumers. Peaches will be plentiful and cheap, but will not be so cheap as to fail giving the shippers a fair profit. At home the dryers and canners will probably consume over 500,000 baskets and possibly 1,000,000. This has not been taken in account in the report of probable shipments, so that the local crop will be something over 4,000,000 and probably 5,000,000 of baskets."

If you want to feel well and lively use Dr. Bull's Baltimore Pills. All druggists keep them. Price 25 cts.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

JOHN RICHARDSON, Manufacturer of and Dealer in WAGONS AND FARMING IMPLEMENTS. GRAIN CRADLES A SPECIALTY. Rep. Assorted Improved Hand Sown Seeds. See the Depot Catalogue, 364

The Escape of W. M. Tweed.

Wm. M. Tweed escaped from the custody of the Sheriff of the County of New York on the evening of Dec. 5, 1875. In April, 1876, the schooner, #rank Atwood lay at the foot of Bayview street, loaded with a general cargo and cleared for Port Maria, Jamaica. A messenger from Michael Murray, her owner, handed her Captain (Bryant) a note summoning him to the owner's office, and in the office the owner said: "Captain, I want you to send two passengers out to Cuba with you. They will be on board to-night. You will want some fancy stores to vary your ordinary sea fare. Here is fifty dollars. Lay in your stock at once. You are ready for sea now?"

"Yes, sir."

"One of the passengers will assume charge of the schooner. You will do whatever he desires, as if he was myself. By the by, I will send down to the schooner this afternoon. Give my messenger some token or other that the passengers can bring to you as proof that they are the proper persons, and you needn't put yourself out to tell any one about this either."

The messenger boarded the schooner that afternoon, and Captain Bryant gave him a token wherewith the expected passengers might authenticate themselves. Captain Bryant continues the narrative as follows:

"It was getting toward dark that evening, and I was ready for sailing. Some friends of mine were talking to me on the quarter deck when a man came down the wharf. He was an ordinary-looking medium-sized man, dressed in a common dark suit. He strode along as if he had nothing particular to do, and plenty of time to do it in. He passed down the wharf toward the schooner's bow. He stopped at the fore-rigging, stepped on to the bulwark, and jumped down on the deck. He didn't come aft, though, but fooled around forward, chatting with the cook, who was getting supper ready, till my friends went ashore. Then, just as I was going down the cabin stairs, he walked briskly aft and called:

"Captain Bryant?"

"That's my name," I said.

"Then you know what this means?" and he handed me the token. I told him I recognized it, and asked him what I could do.

"If you have no objection, I wish you would get clear of this dock at once. The sooner New York sees our heels the better I'll like it."

"Very well," I said; "but I'd like to know some name to call you by."

"My name is William Hunt."

"I had the watch called up, and we cast off from the wharf. I signaled a tug and was towed out of the dock and down to Governor's Island. There the tug cast loose and we made sail. There was a brisk breeze going, and we bowled along at a good rate till we were about midway between Fort Hamilton and Murray & Norton's Covey Island wharf. There Hunt told me to pull close into the beach as I could and anchor. I obeyed. Hunt was perfectly cool and collected, as if he had his whole programme clearly mapped out. But he watched every movement on the schooner keenly. When the anchor was let down, he asked me if we would fail the sails. He said:

"Not much. Unless you want the trouble of setting them again to-night."

"This time it was again to-night. The men went to supper, and I took a snack on deck, as Hunt had said he might want me any minute. He sat on the tail rail, smoking one cigar after another, humming a tune, and looking toward the shore without ever taking his head. Suddenly, at about nine o'clock, a bright light flashed out ashore. It looked like one of the flash lights made by burning resin, which we used to signal ships at night. It jumped to the deck and threw its glare overboard. He said hurriedly: 'Lower a boat, Captain.' We pulled straight to where the light had showed, and beached the boat just below Murray & Norton's wharf. There were three men there. One was Murray himself, and one was a big, portly, middle-aged man, with a clean shaved face. He wore a slouch hat, pulled down over his eyes, a rough blue woollen shirt and dark pantaloons. There were three other men. Suddenly, three handsome silver or nickel-mounted valises on the beach at his feet.

"Hunt landed and said something I could not hear, sitting in the boat. Murray and I went over to shake hands with the middle-aged man and with Hunt; and wished them good-by and a pleasant voyage. McKay put the valises into the boat, and Hunt and the other man got in. He sat in the stern, and was so heavy that he almost swamped the gig. When he pushed off Murray called to me:

"You know your orders, Captain. Don't make any mistake."

"He won't if I follow myself," said Hunt, and we rowed off, leaving them watching us. The man in the stern never said a word after we started.

"As soon as we got on board Hunt and the other passenger went into the cabin. I ordered the anchor to be hove short, and followed them. The middle-aged man was sitting on the sofa, with his hat on yet, mopping his face with a blue silk handkerchief. Hunt said, 'Captain, let me introduce you to Uncle John Secor.'

"We shook hands, Uncle John saying, without rising, 'Glad to meet you, Captain,' and taking his hat off. I knew him at a glance, from his pictures in the papers. It was Bill Tweed.

"We were well out to sea by daylight. Tweed began to sea-sick the minute we struck rough water. He was about the sickest man I ever saw, and was as helpless as a baby. When we got clear of the Bahamas, Hunt told me they had concluded to land at Santiago de Cuba. They had settled on that place from a book they had brought on board. It was called 'West India Pickles.' Among the 'West India Pickles' was Santiago de Cuba. Tweed had taken a fancy to it from the description, but when he found another of Matanzas he did not know which to choose. Hunt favored Santiago. So they made a dash for it, with the head of a twenty-dollar piece for Santiago and the tail for Matanzas. Head won.

"I was naturally curious to know how they were fixed for money, but got very little satisfaction on that score. The three valises were filled with linen and a few odd suits of clothes of Hunt's; but in one was a Russia leather satchel, with straps to sling it over the shoulders, and it was full of something. There was also a leather writing case, similarly fixed for carrying. Hunt had a money belt around his waist. The only weapon I saw was a little Remington revolver which Hunt carried.

"On the 30th of April, sixteen days out, we weathered Cape Mavi, and began to think of the end of the voyage. I overhauled my book of sailing directions, and we held a council of war. We found from the book and chart that there was a little river emptying into the sea, about four miles from Santiago de Cuba. It is a lovely place, only visited for fresh water by occasional ships. There Tweed determined to go ashore, so we ran for that point. We had head winds and an ugly sea, and did not raise the coast till after dark on the 1st of May. I ran in as close as I dared, and cleared the boat, which had been hoisted on deck, for lowering. We were laying to at the time, and the night was very thick and black, indeed.

Tweed and Hunt were below, packing the few things they intended to take ashore into one valise. It was midnight. Hunt had brought the valise on deck. Tweed had the satchel slung to him. Hunt carried the writing case. They spoke together in low voices on the opposite side of the deck from me. Then Hunt went into the cabin and called me down.

"He had a roll of something in his right hand. He put his hand out and grasped mine. I felt the bank notes pressed into my palm, and he said, 'Stuff them into your pocket, Captain, and say no more about it. Is the boat ready?'"

"It is."

"Here's fifty dollars. The old man wants you to share it among the crew. You can have those two valises. They are of no use to us."

This money was in gold five-dollar pieces. He laid it on the cabin table, and I left it there. We got into the boat with two men at the oars, and pulled for the shore. The schooner was laid to within a mile of the shore, but though we could hear the sea breaking, we could not see the land. A sort of fog was drifting out from the mangrove swamps ashore, and between it and the wind it was so chilly that it made us shiver. Tweed now had a cut on which I had given him. Other-wise he was dressed as he had been when he came on board at Coney Island. He was very quiet, but uneasy and anxious. Hunt, on the contrary, seemed to be as cool as ever. Bespoke now to him to his companion in a whisper. Guided by the sound of the breakers, we pulled down the coast till I found a current setting steadily seaward. It was the little river we were in search of, and, turning the head of the river, we rowed in. There was a spit of sand at the mouth of the stream, on the Santiago side. The stream was a mere creek, not fifty feet wide, but deep, and with a strong current of ice-cold, fresh water.

Turning to the passengers on the sand spit, with their valise. Tweed stumbled in getting over the gowwale, and caught a ducking. He only laughed at it though. All his good spirits seemed to return to him. He felt the hand under his feet.

"Hunt shook hands with me when I stepped ashore after them. 'Good-by,' he said.

"I hope you will have a fortunate stay here," I remarked. "Do you know how long you will be here?"

"That depends. We hope for a long time."

"Here Tweed interposed as if to cut us short, and took Hunt with him. 'I'm an obliging man, Captain Bryant,' he said. 'I'm sorry your voyage wasn't a longer one; but you'll be back here, and you may meet Uncle John Secor again. Good-bye!'

"One of the men called, 'Good-bye, sir!' and he said, 'Good-bye, boys; good-bye.' He walked up the beach, then, and we pushed off.

"I had seen my last of Bill Tweed. What happened to him after that, I only know from hearsay and the papers. The bank notes Hunt had given me were twenty fifty-dollar greenbacks.

"We entered Port Maria harbor next afternoon, and returned to New York. I kept my ears open for news of my passengers, but heard none. Murray never asked me anything about the passage when I got back, from which I concluded that he had already heard all about it from Hunt. I never heard directly from either him or Tweed again.

"I forgot to tell you that on the day we sighted Cape Mavi I forgot myself, and called him Mr. Tweed. He was eating a bit of biscuit and some Stilton cheese. He stopped, laid the biscuit down, and looked at me in a curious, sharp, half-frightened, half-angry way. Then he began eating again without making any remark.

"We had often talked about him as if he had been a third person. That evening our talk somehow drifted in the same groove, and I said, 'Well, for my part, I'd like to know the true story of the escape.'

"You're not the only one who would," said Tweed. "What is your opinion about it, any how?"

"I don't know as I have any. I do believe, though, that the Boss ever left the city."

"You are right; he never did."

"And I also believe his wife knew his hiding-place."

"There you are wrong. His wife never saw him after the afternoon of the day he left Ludlow street for the last time."

"But he saw her at his house."

"That is what you think, not what you know. Captain, it is my opinion that Tweed spent the whole time he was being looked for right in a crowd of people. He was in a house surrounded by carpenters and masons, by painters and bricklayers. He might, and he would, have often looked out of his window and see people who were hunting for him on cold trails passing below him in the street. If my assurance is worth anything to you, be assured of this: He never saw his wife from the time he left Ludlow street for New York until he was shot."

Well, well. Don't you think it is about supper time?"—N. Y. Sunday News.

Whales and Their Neighbors.

A student, on being asked by his examiner if he could give any information regarding the fishes, is said to have replied that "he knew them all, from the lamprey to the whale." While most persons would object to the idea of the lamprey being included in the class of fishes, there are not a few who might possibly agree with the student in his ideas of classification as regards the whale. Very frequently the latter animal is named a "fish." It swims about in the sea, and is in fact wholly aquatic in its habits. It is, moreover, fish-like in shape and appearance. It possesses structures, seen in fishes, and with this list of characters before the mental vision, it is hardly to be wondered at that popular zoology should have classified the whales with fishes, or that many persons, even in this enlightened age, will express some surprise on being told that the modern leviathan, so far from being a fish, is in reality a very close relation of their own. To begin with, fishes are cold-blooded animals; that is, their blood is colder than the water in which they swim. They breathe by gill-structures adapted for separating the oxygen gas from the water with which they are surrounded. And with this list of characters before the mental vision, it is hardly to be wondered at that popular zoology should have classified the whales with fishes, or that many persons, even in this enlightened age, will express some surprise on being told that the modern leviathan, so far from being a fish, is in reality a very close relation of their own. To begin with, fishes are cold-blooded animals; that is, their blood is colder than the water in which they swim. They breathe by gill-structures adapted for separating the oxygen gas from the water with which they are surrounded. And with this list of characters before the mental vision, it is hardly to be wondered at that popular zoology should have classified the whales with fishes, or that many persons, even in this enlightened age, will express some surprise on being told that the modern leviathan, so far from being a fish, is in reality a very close relation of their own. To begin with, fishes are cold-blooded animals; that is, their blood is colder than the water in which they swim. They breathe by gill-structures adapted for separating the oxygen gas from the water with which they are surrounded. And with this list of characters before the mental vision, it is hardly to be wondered at that popular zoology should have classified the whales with fishes, or that many persons, even in this enlightened age, will express some surprise on being told that the modern leviathan, so far from being a fish, is in reality a very close relation of their own. To begin with, fishes are cold-blooded animals; that is, their blood is colder than the water in which they swim. They breathe by gill-structures adapted for separating the oxygen gas from the water with which they are surrounded. And with this list of characters before the mental vision, it is hardly to be wondered at that popular zoology should have classified the whales with fishes, or that many persons, even in this enlightened age, will express some surprise on being told that the modern leviathan, so far from being a fish, is in reality a very close relation of their own. To begin with, fishes are cold-blooded animals; that is, their blood is colder than the water in which they swim. They breathe by gill-structures adapted for separating the oxygen gas from the water with which they are surrounded. And with this list of characters before the mental vision, it is hardly to be wondered at that popular zoology should have classified the whales with fishes, or that many persons, even in this enlightened age, will express some surprise on being told that the modern leviathan, so far from being a fish, is in reality a very close relation of their own. To begin with, fishes are cold-blooded animals; that is, their blood is colder than the water in which they swim. They breathe by gill-structures adapted for separating the oxygen gas from the water with which they are surrounded. And with this list of characters before the mental vision, it is hardly to be wondered at that popular zoology should have classified the whales with fishes, or that many persons, even in this enlightened age, will express some surprise on being told that the modern leviathan, so far from being a fish, is in reality a very close relation of their own. To begin with, fishes are cold-blooded animals; that is, their blood is colder than the water in which they swim. They breathe by gill-structures adapted for separating the oxygen gas from the water with which they are surrounded. And with this list of characters before the mental vision, it is hardly to be wondered at that popular zoology should have classified the whales with fishes, or that many persons, even in this enlightened age, will express some surprise on being told that the modern leviathan, so far from being a fish, is in reality a very close relation of their own. To begin with, fishes are cold-blooded animals; that is, their blood is colder than the water in which they swim. They breathe by gill-structures adapted for separating the oxygen gas from the water with which they are surrounded. And with this list of characters before the mental vision, it is hardly to be wondered at that popular zoology should have classified the whales with fishes, or that many persons, even in this enlightened age, will express some surprise on being told that the modern leviathan, so far from being a fish, is in reality a very close relation of their own. To begin with, fishes are cold-blooded animals; that is, their blood is colder than the water in which they swim. They breathe by gill-structures adapted for separating the oxygen gas from the water with which they are surrounded. And with this list of characters before the mental vision, it is hardly to be wondered at that popular zoology should have classified the whales with fishes, or that many persons, even in this enlightened age, will express some surprise on being told that the modern leviathan, so far from being a fish, is in reality a very close relation of their own. To begin with, fishes are cold-blooded animals; that is, their blood is colder than the water in which they swim. They breathe by gill-structures adapted for separating the oxygen gas from the water with which they are surrounded. And with this list of characters before the mental vision, it is hardly to be wondered at that popular zoology should have classified the whales with fishes, or that many persons, even in this enlightened age, will express some surprise on being told that the modern leviathan, so far from being a fish, is in reality a very close relation of their own. To begin with, fishes are cold-blooded animals; that is, their blood is colder than the water in which they swim. They breathe by gill-structures adapted for separating the oxygen gas from the water with which they are surrounded. And with this list of characters before the mental vision, it is hardly to be wondered at that popular zoology should have classified the whales with fishes, or that many persons, even in this enlightened age, will express some surprise on being told that the modern leviathan, so far from being a fish, is in reality a very close relation of their own. To begin with, fishes are cold-blooded animals; that is, their blood is colder than the water in which they swim. They breathe by gill-structures adapted for separating the oxygen gas from the water with which they are surrounded. And with this list of characters before the mental vision, it is hardly to be wondered at that popular zoology should have classified the whales with fishes, or that many persons, even in this enlightened age, will express some surprise on being told that the modern leviathan, so far from being a fish, is in reality a very close relation of their own. To begin with, fishes are cold-blooded animals; that is, their blood is colder than the water in which they swim. They breathe by gill-structures adapted for separating the oxygen gas from the water with which they are surrounded. And with this list of characters before the mental vision, it is hardly to be wondered at that popular zoology should have classified the whales with fishes, or that many persons, even in this enlightened age, will express some surprise on being told that the modern leviathan, so far from being a fish, is in reality a very close relation of their own. To begin with, fishes are cold-blooded animals; that is, their blood is colder than the water in which they swim. They breathe by gill-structures adapted for separating the oxygen gas from the water with which they are surrounded. And with this list of characters before the mental vision, it is hardly to be wondered at that popular zoology should have classified the whales with fishes, or that many persons, even in this enlightened age, will express some surprise on being told that the modern leviathan, so far from being a fish, is in reality a very close relation of their own. To begin with, fishes are cold-blooded animals; that is, their blood is colder than the water in which they swim. They breathe by gill-structures adapted for separating the oxygen gas from the water with which they are surrounded. And with this list of characters before the mental vision, it is hardly to be wondered at that popular zoology should have classified the whales with fishes, or that many persons, even in this enlightened age, will express some surprise on being told that the modern leviathan, so far from being a fish, is in reality a very close relation of their own. To begin with, fishes are cold-blooded animals; that is, their blood is colder than the water in which they swim. They breathe by gill-structures adapted for separating the oxygen gas from the water with which they are surrounded. And with this list of characters before the mental vision, it is hardly to be wondered at that popular zoology should have classified the whales with fishes, or that many persons, even in this enlightened age, will express some surprise on being told that the modern leviathan, so far from being a fish, is in reality a very close relation of their own. To begin with, fishes are cold-blooded animals; that is, their blood is colder than the water in which they swim. They breathe by gill-structures adapted for separating the oxygen gas from the water with which they are surrounded. And with this list of characters before the mental vision, it is hardly to be wondered at that popular zoology should have classified the whales with fishes, or that many persons, even in this enlightened age, will express some surprise on being told that the modern leviathan, so far from being a fish, is in reality a very close relation of their own. To begin with, fishes are cold-blooded animals; that is, their blood is colder than the water in which they swim. They breathe by gill-structures adapted for separating the oxygen gas from the water with which they are surrounded. And with this list of characters before the mental vision, it is hardly to be wondered at that popular zoology should have classified the whales with fishes, or that many persons, even in this enlightened age, will express some surprise on being told that the modern leviathan, so far from being a fish, is in reality a very close relation of their own. To begin with, fishes are cold-blooded animals; that is, their blood is colder than the water in which they swim. They breathe by gill-structures adapted for separating the oxygen gas from the water with which they are surrounded. And with this list of characters before the mental vision, it is hardly to be wondered at that popular zoology should have classified the whales with fishes, or that many persons, even in this enlightened age, will express some surprise on being told that the modern leviathan, so far from being a fish, is in reality a very close relation of their own. To begin with, fishes are cold-blooded animals; that is, their blood is colder than the water in which they swim. They breathe by gill-structures adapted for separating the oxygen gas from the water with which they are surrounded. And with this list of characters before the mental vision, it is hardly to be wondered at that popular zoology should have classified the whales with fishes, or that many persons, even in this enlightened age, will express some surprise on being told that the modern leviathan, so far from being a fish, is in reality a very close relation of their own. To begin with, fishes are cold-blooded animals; that is, their blood is colder than the water in which they swim. They breathe by gill-structures adapted for separating the oxygen gas from the water with which they are surrounded. And with this list of characters before the mental vision, it is hardly to be wondered at that popular zoology should have classified the whales with fishes, or that many persons, even in this enlightened age, will express some surprise on being told that the modern leviathan, so far from being a fish, is in reality a very close relation of their own. To begin with, fishes are cold-blooded animals; that is, their blood is colder than the water in which they swim. They breathe by gill-structures adapted for separating the oxygen gas from the water with which they are surrounded. And with this list of characters before the mental vision, it is hardly to be wondered at that popular zoology should have classified the whales with fishes, or that many persons, even in this enlightened age, will express some surprise on being told that the modern leviathan, so far from being a fish, is in reality a very close relation of their own. To begin with, fishes are cold-blooded animals; that is, their blood is colder than the water in which they swim. They breathe by gill-structures adapted for separating the oxygen gas from the water with which they are surrounded. And with this list of characters before the mental vision, it is hardly to be wondered at that popular zoology should have classified the whales with fishes, or that many persons, even in this enlightened age, will express some surprise on being told that the modern leviathan, so far from being a fish, is in reality a very close relation of their own. To begin with, fishes are cold-blooded animals; that is, their blood is colder than the water in which they swim. They breathe by gill-structures adapted for separating the oxygen gas from the water with which they are surrounded. And with this list of characters before the mental vision, it is hardly to be wondered at that popular zoology should have classified the whales with fishes, or that many persons, even in this enlightened age, will express some surprise on being told that the modern leviathan, so far from being a fish, is in reality a very close relation of their own. To begin with, fishes are cold-blooded animals; that is, their blood is colder than the water in which they swim. They breathe by gill-structures adapted for separating the oxygen gas from the water with which they are surrounded. And with this list of characters before the mental vision, it is hardly to be wondered at that popular zoology should have classified the whales with fishes, or that many persons, even in this enlightened age, will express some surprise on being told that the modern leviathan, so far from being a fish, is in reality a very close relation of their own. To begin with, fishes are cold-blooded animals; that is, their blood is colder than the water in which they swim. They breathe by gill-structures adapted for separating the oxygen gas from the water with which they are surrounded. And with this list of characters before the mental vision, it is hardly to be wondered at that popular zoology should have classified the whales with fishes, or that many persons, even in this enlightened age, will express some surprise on being told that the modern leviathan, so far from being a fish, is in reality a very close relation of their own. To begin with, fishes are cold-blooded animals; that is, their blood is colder than the water in which they swim. They breathe by gill-structures adapted for separating the oxygen gas from the water with which they are surrounded. And with this list of characters before the mental vision, it is hardly to be wondered at that popular zoology should have classified the whales with fishes, or that many persons, even in this enlightened age, will express some surprise on being told that the modern leviathan, so far from being a fish, is in reality a very close relation of their own. To begin with, fishes are cold-blooded animals; that is, their blood is colder than the water in which they swim. They breathe by gill-structures adapted for separating the oxygen gas from the water with which they are surrounded. And with this list of characters before the mental vision, it is hardly to be wondered at that popular zoology should have classified the whales with fishes, or that many persons, even in this enlightened age, will express some surprise on being told that the modern leviathan, so far from being a fish, is in reality a very close relation of their own. To begin with, fishes are cold-blooded animals; that is, their blood is colder than the water in which they swim. They breathe by gill-structures adapted for separating the oxygen gas from the water with which they are surrounded. And with this list of characters before the mental vision, it is hardly to be wondered at that popular zoology should have classified the whales with fishes, or that many persons, even in this enlightened age, will express some surprise on being told that the modern leviathan, so far from being a fish, is in reality a very close relation of their own. To begin with, fishes are cold-blooded animals; that is, their blood is colder than the water in which they swim. They breathe by gill-structures adapted for separating the oxygen gas from the water with which they are surrounded. And with this list of characters before the mental vision, it is hardly to be wondered at that popular zoology should have classified the whales with fishes, or that many persons, even in this enlightened age, will express some surprise on being told that the modern leviathan, so far from being a fish, is in reality a very close relation of their own. To begin with, fishes are cold-blooded animals; that is, their blood is colder than the water in which they swim. They breathe by gill-structures adapted for separating the oxygen gas from the water with which they are surrounded. And with this list of characters before the mental vision, it is hardly to be wondered at that popular zoology should have classified the whales with fishes, or that many persons, even in this enlightened age, will express some surprise on being told that the modern leviathan, so far from being a fish, is in reality a very close relation of their own. To begin with, fishes are cold-blooded animals; that is, their blood is colder than the water in which they swim. They breathe by gill-structures adapted for separating the oxygen gas from the water with which they are surrounded. And with this list of characters before the mental vision, it is hardly to be wondered at that popular zoology should have classified the whales with fishes, or that many persons, even in this enlightened age, will express some surprise on being told that the modern leviathan, so far from being a fish, is in reality a very close relation of their own. To begin with, fishes are cold-blooded animals; that is, their blood is colder than the water in which they swim. They breathe by gill-structures adapted for separating the oxygen gas from the water with which they are surrounded. And with this list of characters before the mental vision, it is hardly to be wondered at that popular zoology should have classified the whales with fishes, or that many persons, even in this enlightened age, will express some surprise on being told that the modern leviathan, so far from being a fish, is in reality a very close relation of their own. To begin with, fishes are cold-blooded animals; that is, their blood is colder than the water in which they swim. They breathe by gill-structures adapted for separating the oxygen gas from the water with which they are surrounded. And with this list of characters before the mental vision, it is hardly to be wondered at that popular zoology should have classified the whales with fishes, or that many persons, even in this enlightened age, will express some surprise on being told that the modern leviathan, so far from being a fish, is in reality a very close relation of their own. To begin with, fishes are cold-blooded animals; that is, their blood is colder than the water in which they swim. They breathe by gill-structures adapted for separating the oxygen gas from the water with which they are surrounded. And with this list of characters before the mental vision, it is hardly to be wondered at that popular zoology should have classified the whales with fishes, or that many persons, even in this enlightened age, will express some surprise on being told that the modern leviathan, so far from being a fish, is in reality a very close relation of their own. To begin with, fishes are cold-blooded animals; that is, their blood is colder than the water in which they swim. They breathe by gill-structures adapted for separating the oxygen gas from the water with which they are surrounded. And with this list of characters before the mental vision, it is hardly to be wondered at that popular zoology should have classified the whales with fishes, or that many persons, even in this enlightened age, will express some surprise on being told that the modern leviathan, so far from being a fish, is in reality a very close relation of their own. To begin with, fishes are cold-blooded animals; that is, their blood is colder than the water in which they swim. They breathe by gill-structures adapted for separating the oxygen gas from the water with which they are surrounded. And with this list of characters before the mental vision, it is hardly to be wondered at that popular zoology should have classified the whales with fishes, or that many persons, even in this enlightened age, will express some surprise on being told that the modern leviathan, so far from being a fish, is in reality a very close relation of their own. To begin with, fishes are cold-blooded animals; that is, their blood is colder than the water in which they swim. They breathe by gill-structures adapted for separating the oxygen gas from the water with which they are surrounded. And with this list of characters before the mental vision, it is hardly to be wondered at that popular zoology should have classified the whales with fishes, or that many persons, even in this enlightened age, will express some surprise on being told that the modern leviathan, so far from being a fish, is in reality a very close relation of their own. To begin with, fishes are cold-blooded animals; that is, their blood is colder than the water in which they swim. They breathe by gill-structures adapted for separating the oxygen gas from the water with which they are surrounded. And with this list of characters before the mental vision, it is hardly to be wondered at that popular zoology should have classified the whales with fishes, or that many persons, even in this enlightened age, will express some surprise on being told that the modern leviathan, so far from being a fish, is in reality a very close relation of their own. To begin with, fishes are cold-blooded animals; that is, their blood is colder than the water in which they swim. They breathe by gill-structures adapted for separating the oxygen gas from the water with which they are surrounded. And with this list of characters before the mental vision, it is hardly to be wondered at that popular zoology should have classified the whales with fishes, or that many persons, even in this enlightened age, will express some surprise on being told that the modern leviathan, so far from being a fish, is in reality a very close relation of their own. To begin with, fishes are cold-blooded animals; that is, their blood is colder than the water in which they swim. They breathe by gill-structures adapted for separating the oxygen gas from the water with which they are surrounded. And with this list of characters before the mental vision, it is hardly to be wondered at that popular zoology should have classified the whales with fishes, or that many persons, even in this enlightened age, will express some surprise on being told that the modern leviathan, so far from being a fish, is in reality a very close relation of their own. To begin with, fishes are cold-blooded animals; that is, their blood is colder than the water in which they swim. They breathe by gill-structures adapted for separating the oxygen gas from the water with which they are surrounded. And with this list of characters before the mental vision, it is hardly to be wondered at that popular zoology should have classified the whales with fishes, or that many persons, even in this enlightened age, will express some surprise on being told that the modern leviathan, so far from being a fish, is in reality a very close relation of their own. To begin with, fishes are cold-blooded animals; that is, their blood is colder than the water in which they swim. They breathe by gill-structures adapted for separating the oxygen gas from the water with which they are surrounded. And with this list of characters before the mental vision, it is hardly to be wondered at that popular zoology should have classified the whales with fishes, or that many persons, even in this enlightened age, will express some surprise on being told that the modern leviathan, so far from being a fish, is in reality a very close relation of their own. To begin with, fishes are cold-blooded animals; that is, their blood is colder than the water in which they swim. They breathe by gill-structures adapted for separating the oxygen gas from the water with which they are surrounded. And with this list of characters before the mental vision, it is hardly to be wondered at that popular zoology should have classified the whales with fishes, or that many persons, even in this enlightened age, will express some surprise on being told that the modern leviathan, so far from being a fish, is in reality a very close relation of their own. To begin with, fishes are cold-blooded animals; that is, their blood is colder than the water in which they swim. They breathe by gill-structures adapted for separating the oxygen gas from the water with which they are surrounded. And with this list of characters before the mental vision, it is hardly to be wondered at that popular zoology should have classified the whales with fishes, or that many persons, even in this enlightened age, will express some surprise on being told that the modern leviathan, so far from being a fish, is in reality a very close relation of their own. To begin with, fishes are cold-blooded animals; that is, their blood is colder than the water in which they swim. They breathe by gill-structures adapted for separating the oxygen gas from the water with which they are surrounded. And with this list of characters before the mental vision, it is hardly to be wondered at that popular zoology should have classified the whales with fishes, or that many persons, even in this enlightened age, will express some surprise on being told that the modern leviathan, so far from being a fish, is in reality a very close relation of their own. To begin with, fishes are cold-blooded animals; that is, their blood is colder than the water in which they swim. They breathe by gill-structures adapted for separating the oxygen gas from the water with which they are surrounded. And with this list of characters before the mental vision, it is hardly to be wondered at that popular zoology should have classified the whales with fishes, or that many persons, even in this enlightened age, will express some surprise on being told that the modern leviathan, so far from being a fish, is in reality a very close relation of their own. To begin with, fishes are cold-blooded animals; that is, their blood is colder than the water in which they swim. They breathe by gill-structures adapted for separating the oxygen gas from the water with which they are surrounded. And with this list of characters before the mental vision, it is hardly to be wondered at that popular zoology should have classified the whales with fishes, or that many persons, even in this enlightened age, will express some surprise on being told that the modern leviathan, so far from being a fish, is in reality a very close relation of their own. To begin with, fishes are cold-blooded animals; that is, their blood is colder than the water in which they swim. They breathe by gill-structures adapted for separating the oxygen gas from the water with which they are surrounded. And with this list of characters before the mental vision, it is hardly to be wondered at that popular zoology should have classified the whales with fishes, or that many persons, even in this enlightened age, will express some surprise on being told that the modern leviathan, so far from being a fish, is in reality a very close relation of their own. To begin with, fishes are cold-blooded animals; that is, their blood is colder than the water in which they swim. They breathe by gill-structures adapted for separating the oxygen gas from the water with which they are surrounded. And with this list of characters before the mental vision, it is hardly to be wondered at that popular zoology should have classified the whales with fishes, or that many persons, even in this enlightened age, will express some surprise on being told that the modern leviathan, so far from being a fish, is in reality a very close relation of their own. To begin with, fishes are cold-blooded animals; that is, their blood is colder than the water in which they swim. They breathe by gill-structures adapted for separating the oxygen gas from the water with which they are surrounded. And with this list of characters before the mental vision, it is hardly to be wondered at that popular zoology should have classified the whales with fishes, or that many persons, even in this enlightened age, will express some surprise on being told that the modern leviathan, so far from being a fish, is in reality a very close relation of their own. To begin with, fishes are cold-blooded animals; that is, their blood is colder than the water in which they swim. They breathe by gill-structures adapted for separating the oxygen gas from the water with which they are surrounded. And with this list of characters before the mental vision, it is hardly to be wondered at that popular zoology should have classified the whales with fishes, or that many persons, even in this enlightened age, will express some surprise on being told that the modern leviathan, so far from being a fish, is in reality a very close relation of their own. To begin with, fishes are cold-blooded animals; that is, their blood is colder than the water in which they swim. They breathe by gill-structures adapted for separating the oxygen gas from the water with which they are surrounded. And with this list of characters before the mental vision, it is hardly to be wondered at that popular zoology should have classified the whales with fishes, or that many persons, even in this enlightened age, will express some surprise on being told that the modern leviathan, so far from being a fish, is in reality a very close relation of their own. To begin with, fishes are cold-blooded animals; that is, their blood is colder than the water in which they swim. They breathe by gill-structures adapted for separating the oxygen gas from the water with which they are surrounded. And with this list of characters before the mental vision, it is hardly to be wondered at that popular zoology should have classified the whales with fishes, or that many persons, even in this enlightened age, will express some surprise on being told that the modern leviathan, so far from being a fish, is in reality a very close relation of their own. To begin with, fishes are cold-blooded animals; that is, their blood is colder than the water in which they swim. They breathe by gill-structures adapted for separating the oxygen gas from the water with which they are surrounded. And with this list of characters before the mental vision, it is hardly to be wondered at that popular zoology should have classified the whales with fishes, or that many persons, even in this enlightened age, will express some surprise on being told that the modern leviathan, so far from being a fish, is in reality a very close relation of their own. To begin with, fishes are cold-blooded animals; that is, their blood is colder than the water in which they swim. They breathe by gill-structures adapted for separating the oxygen gas from the water with which they are surrounded. And with this list of characters before the mental vision, it is hardly to be wondered at that popular zoology should have classified the whales with fishes, or that many persons, even in this enlightened age, will express some surprise on being told that the modern leviathan, so far from being a fish, is in reality a very close relation of their own. To begin with, fishes are cold-blooded animals; that is, their blood is colder than the water in which they swim. They breathe by gill-structures adapted for separating the oxygen gas from the water with which they are surrounded. And with this list of characters before the mental vision, it is hardly to be wondered at that popular zoology should have classified the whales with fishes, or that many persons, even in this enlightened age, will express some surprise on being told that the modern leviathan, so far from being a fish, is in reality a very close relation of their own. To begin with, fishes are cold-blooded animals; that is, their blood is colder than the water in which they swim. They breathe by gill-structures adapted for separating the oxygen gas from the water with which they are surrounded. And with this list of characters before the mental vision, it is hardly to be wondered at that popular zoology should have classified the whales with fishes, or that many persons, even in this enlightened age, will express some surprise on being told that the modern leviathan, so far from being a fish, is in reality a very close relation of their own. To begin with, fishes are cold-blooded animals; that is, their blood is colder than the water in which they swim. They breathe by gill-structures adapted for separating the oxygen gas from the water with which they are surrounded. And with this list of characters before the mental vision, it is hardly to be wondered at that popular zoology should have classified the whales with fishes, or that many persons, even in this enlightened age, will express some surprise on being told that the modern leviathan, so far from being a fish, is in reality a very close relation of their own. To begin with, fishes are cold-blooded animals; that is, their blood is colder than the water in which they swim. They breathe by gill-structures adapted for separating the oxygen gas from the water with which they are surrounded. And with this list of characters before the mental vision, it is hardly to be wondered at that popular zoology should have classified the whales with fishes, or that many persons, even in this enlightened age, will express some surprise on being told that the modern leviathan, so far from being a fish, is in reality a very close relation of their own. To begin with, fishes are cold-blooded animals; that is, their blood is colder than the water in which they swim. They breathe by gill-structures adapted for separating the oxygen gas from the water with which they are surrounded. And with this list of characters before the mental vision, it is hardly to be wondered at that popular zoology should have classified the whales with fishes, or that many persons, even in this enlightened age, will express some surprise on being told that the modern leviathan, so far from being a fish, is in reality a very close relation of their own. To begin with, fishes are cold-blooded animals; that is, their blood is colder than the water in which they swim. They breathe by gill-structures adapted for separating the oxygen gas from the water with which they are surrounded. And with this list of characters before the mental vision, it is hardly to be wondered at that popular zoology should have classified the whales with fishes, or that many persons, even in this enlightened age, will express some surprise on being told that the modern leviathan, so far from being a fish, is in reality a very close relation of their own. To begin with, fishes are cold-blooded animals; that is, their blood is colder than the water in which they swim. They breathe by gill-structures adapted for separating the oxygen gas from the water with which they are surrounded. And with this list of characters before the mental vision, it is hardly to be wondered at that popular zoology should have classified the whales with fishes, or that many persons, even in this enlightened age, will express some surprise on being told that the modern leviathan, so far from being a fish, is in reality a very close relation of their own. To begin with, fishes are cold-blooded animals; that is, their blood is colder than the water in which they swim. They breathe by gill-structures adapted for separating the oxygen gas from the water with which they are surrounded. And with this list of characters before the mental vision, it is hardly to be wondered at that popular zoology should have classified the whales with fishes, or that many persons, even in this enlightened age, will express some surprise on being told that the modern leviathan, so far from being a fish, is in reality a very close relation of their own. To begin with, fishes are cold-blooded animals; that is, their blood is colder than the water in which they swim. They breathe by gill-structures adapted for separating the oxygen gas from the water with which they are surrounded. And with this list of characters before the mental vision, it is hardly to be wondered at that popular zoology should have classified the whales with fishes, or that many persons, even in this enlightened age, will express some surprise on being told that the modern leviathan, so far from being a fish, is in reality a very close relation of their own. To begin with, fishes are cold-blooded animals; that is, their blood is colder than the water in which they swim. They breathe by gill-structures adapted for separating the oxygen gas from the water with which they are surrounded. And with this list of characters before the mental vision, it is hardly to be wondered at that popular zoology should have classified the whales with fishes, or that many persons, even in this enlightened age, will express some surprise on being told that the modern leviathan, so far from being a fish, is in reality a very close relation of their own. To begin with, fishes are cold-blooded animals; that is, their blood is colder than the water in which they swim. They breathe by gill-structures adapted for separating the oxygen gas from the water with which they are surrounded. And with this list of characters before the mental vision, it is hardly to be wondered at that popular zoology should have classified the whales with fishes, or that many persons, even in this enlightened age, will express some surprise on being told that the modern leviathan, so far from being a fish, is in reality a very close relation of their own. To begin with, fishes are cold-blooded animals; that is, their blood is colder than the water in which they swim. They breathe by gill-structures adapted for separating the oxygen gas from the water with which they are surrounded. And with this list of characters before the mental vision, it is hardly to be wondered at that popular zoology should have classified the whales with fishes, or that many persons, even in this enlightened age, will express some surprise on being told that the modern leviathan, so far from being a fish, is in reality a very close relation of their own. To

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.
ANNOUNCEMENTS.
Advertisements under this heading will be charged at the following rates: For the first insertion, 10 cents per line; for each subsequent insertion, 5 cents per line. For the first insertion, 10 cents per line; for each subsequent insertion, 5 cents per line. For the first insertion, 10 cents per line; for each subsequent insertion, 5 cents per line.

FOR CLERK CIRCUIT COURT.
To the Republicans of Garrett County:
I am again nominated, I shall appreciate the honor and thank you for the confidence you have placed in me. I am again nominated, I shall appreciate the honor and thank you for the confidence you have placed in me.

SHERIFFALTY.
To the Republicans of Garrett County:
I am again nominated, I shall appreciate the honor and thank you for the confidence you have placed in me. I am again nominated, I shall appreciate the honor and thank you for the confidence you have placed in me.

SURVEYOR.
To the Republicans of Garrett County:
I am again nominated, I shall appreciate the honor and thank you for the confidence you have placed in me. I am again nominated, I shall appreciate the honor and thank you for the confidence you have placed in me.

LIVERY STABLE.
THOMAS MARTIN
At the old stand, opposite the Post Office, is prepared to furnish on short notice.

HEADACHE PILLS
NEURALGIA
DR. J. DAILY.
From one to ten full sets of these pills, the most beautiful and substantial medicine ever offered for sale.

RESIDENT ARTIST
WESTERN PORT,
MARYLAND.
From one to ten full sets of these pills, the most beautiful and substantial medicine ever offered for sale.

PROFESSIONAL CARDS.
H. WHEELER COMBS,
ATTORNEY AT LAW,
OAKLAND, GARRETT CO., MD.

DR. W. F. FUNDENBERG
Late Resident Surgeon, New York
Eye and Ear Infirmary,
HAS LOCATED PERMANENTLY in the City of Washington, D.C.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.
COMMISSIONERS' MEETING.
OFFICE OF THE GARRETT COUNTY COMMISSIONERS,
OAKLAND, MD., June 17th, 1879.

Normal School.
OFFICE OF THE
GARRETT COUNTY COMMISSIONERS,
OAKLAND, MD., June 17th, 1879.

TRUSTEE'S SALE
OF VALUABLE
REAL ESTATE.
By virtue of a decree passed by the Circuit Court for Garrett County, in a case wherein T. E. Phipps and John T. Curran are complainants, and David Scott, Administrator, and others, are defendants, I will on

Military Lot No. 3141.
containing 38 acres, to be sold subject to the widow's dower, and part of a tract of land called

"The Youghiogheny Hills,"
containing 280 acres, more or less, which will be sold free from the widow's dower, and lands adjoining the lands of John Phipps, in Garrett County, and are fully described in the proceedings in the above case. The above property is improved by a

COMFORTABLE DWELLING
and necessary out-buildings, and a good portion thereof is in a fine state of cultivation. The land is well watered, and the soil is very rich. The property is improved by a

A. LOEWENSTEIN,
MERCHANT TAILOR,
OAKLAND, MD.
Respectfully announces to the citizens of Oakland and vicinity, that he has

NOW ON HAND
A large and complete assortment for Men's, Youth's and Boys' wear. Just notice the following prices:

OAKLAND
WOOLLEN FACTORY.
The subscriber is prepared to do all kinds of

CUSTOM WORK.
Roll Carding, Spinning and Weaving,
at short notice.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.
H. WHEELER COMBS,
REAL ESTATE AGENT,
OAKLAND, MD.

The following properties
have been placed in my hands
FOR SALE.
NO. 3.

New 2 Story House,
containing 8 rooms and a full bath, with a large front porch, and a full basement. The house is well built, and the land is very rich. The property is improved by a

FRAME HOUSE.
containing 10 rooms, with a full bath, and a large front porch, and a full basement. The house is well built, and the land is very rich. The property is improved by a

A Desirable Property in Oakland
FOR SALE.
Lot 100, improved by an

PATENTS.
To Inventors and Manufacturers.
ESTABLISHED 1855.
GILMORE SMITH & CO.
Solicitors of Patents & Attorneys at Law.

SHATZER & AULT
have recently removed to their new Furniture and Undertaking Rooms,
MAIN STREET, OAKLAND.

HOUSEHOLD FURNITURE
All of which is offered at the
LOWEST LIVING PRICES.

MEAT MARKET.
H. E. WOLFE,
Formerly of Cumberland, Md.

BUTCHERING BUSINESS
in a first-class manner,
FRESH BEEF, SHAM-ROCK, MUTTON, PORK, Bologna Sausage, Pork Sausage,
SAGE, LARD, &c., &c.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.
A. C. BROOKE,
GENERAL UNDERTAKER,
OAKLAND, MD.

Having a full line of
COFFINS, CASKETS & TRIMMINGS
always on hand, direct from the factory, I can furnish, at short notice, anything in this line.

VERY LOW PRICES FOR 1879:
Very Small Coffins, $2.50
Children's Coffins, $4.00 to $6.00
ADULT SIZES:
With the full Coffin, with Glass, $10.00 to $12.00
Black Walnut, 10 feet and 12 feet, $12.00 to $14.00
Black Walnut, 10 feet and 12 feet, $12.00 to $14.00

ROAD NOTICE.
NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, That the undersigned will make application to the Board of Public Works of Garrett County, for a road to be laid out from the first public road to the first public road, and from the first public road to the first public road.

ROAD NOTICE.
NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, That the undersigned will make application to the Board of Public Works of Garrett County, for a road to be laid out from the first public road to the first public road, and from the first public road to the first public road.

B. & O. R. R. Time-Table.
The following time table of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad went into effect on the 1st of May:

GOING WEST
No. 2, 5.10 A. M.
No. 4, 9.30 A. M.
No. 6, 1.30 P. M.
No. 8, 5.30 P. M.
Way
GOING EAST
No. 1, 12.40 A. M.
No. 3, 10.11 P. M.
No. 5, 12.21 P. M.
No. 7, 3.21 P. M.
Way

The fast trains, with the exception of those mentioned, make stoppages only at the First Class Stations. Tickets should always be procured before taking the cars, passengers saving thereby from 10 to 25 cents.

W. M. CLEMENTS,
Master of Transportation.
L. M. COLE,
General Ticket Agent

850 ACRES
-OF-
Good Land
For Sale Cheap.

This Land lies on the Hoopole Road, about six miles north east from Oakland, B. & O. R. R., and is generally covered with good timber. Would make several good farms. Will be sold in bulk or in small lots. Title good.

MISCELLANEOUS.
SUBSCRIBE FOR
"THE REPUBLICAN,"
AND AID IN THE CIRCULATION
-OF-
The Cheapest Newspaper
IN WESTERN MARYLAND.

ONLY
$1.50
PER YEAR
IN ADVANCE.

EVERY VARIETY
OF
JOB WORK
PROMPTLY EXECUTED.

We desire to call the attention of Merchants, Mechanics, and Business Men generally, to our extensive facilities for the prompt, speedy and accurate execution of

FIRST-CLASS
JOB PRINTING
We keep on hand, for printing purposes, an assortment of the best Paper, Envelopes, Cards, &c., and have one of best

JOB PRESSES
now in use, and the
ONLY ONE IN OAKLAND.
We have also a complete stock of

New Plain and Fancy Type, &c., of the latest styles, for all the different kinds of Job Work and can now fill all orders for

Plain and Fancy Printing
At the Lowest Rates.
Drop in and take a look at a

Printing Office,
YOU WILL BE
WELCOME AT ALL TIMES.

CHAS. H. WHETZELL,
Manufacturer of
WHITE PINE, HEMLOCK AND Cherry Lumber.

Also
HEMLOCK, WHITE AND YELLOW PINE SHINGLES.
Charges reasonable and satisfaction guaranteed to all customers.

COUNTY DIRECTORY.
CIRCUIT COURT.
Jury Terms—Second Monday of September and the First Monday of May.

Non-Jury Terms—First Monday of July and Third Monday of December.
Chief Judge—Hon. R. H. Alvey.
Associates—Hons. Wm. Motter and Geo. A. Pearro.

ORPHANS' COURT.
Meets every second and fourth Tuesday of each month.
Chief Judge—Joseph DeWitt.
Associates—A. J. Michels and Wm. Harvey.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS.
The regular sessions of the County Commissioners commence on the first Monday in January; the first Monday in April, being the appeal and transfer term; the first Monday in June, being the levy term; the first Monday in July, the term for appointing judges of election, and the first Monday in October.

SCHOOL COMMISSIONERS.
President—Wm. A. Brydon.
Commissioners—G. W. Delawder, Secretary and Treasurer—Dr. E. H. Bartlett.

JUSTICES OF THE PEACE.
District No. 1—J. H. Wilson and Henry Rasche.
District No. 2—Benj. Griffith.

LODGES.
A. F. & A. M.—Meet every first and third Thursday night.
I. O. O. F. No. 12—Meet every Monday night.

REGISTRARS OF VOTERS.
District No. 1 H. O. Hamill.
District No. 2 James H. Rush.
District No. 3 Isiah Fuller.

TOWN OF OAKLAND.
Burgess—G. W. Delawder.
Commissioners—Thos. Carr, David Little, John Helbig, Edmund Jamison.

A WEEK in your own town, and no capital risked. You can give the business a trial without expense. The business is so simple, that you can do it in your spare time. You can devote all your time or only your spare time to the business, and make good pay for every hour that you work. Send for a copy of the business, and make good pay for every hour that you work. Send for a copy of the business, and make good pay for every hour that you work.

THE REPUBLICAN.

OAKLAND, MD., SATURDAY, JULY 12, 1879.

NUMBER 20.

VOLUME 3.

OAKLAND BUSINESS GUIDE.

DRY GOODS, GROCERIES, &c.

D. E. OFFUTT,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Agricultural Machines, Musical Instruments,
Guns, Pistols, &c.

G. W. LEGGE,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Cor. Second & Oak sts.

D. H. LOAR,
ORIGINAL NEW YORK STORE,
General Merchandise, Watches, Clocks, Jewelry, &c.

I. W. STALNAKER,
Grocery and Provision Store,
Corner Third and Oak streets.

L. BUSH & SON,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Cor. Third & Oak sts.

J. A. GRANT,
Dry Goods, Notions & Groceries,
SPECIAL LINE OF TOBACCO.

DAVIS & TOWNSEND,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Agents Agricultural Machines,
Opposite Bailey's Park.

C. C. MICHAEL,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Solutions, Clocks, Confectionery, &c.,
Next to Coddington's Hotel.

RICHARDSON BROS.,
GROCERIES, CONFECTIONERIES,
Canned Goods, Fruit, &c.

HOTELS.

CODDINGTON'S HOTEL,
W. M. CODDINGTON, Prop'r,
Main St., Opposite Jackson's Billiard Saloon.

LIVERY STABLE.

THOMAS MARTIN,
Opposite Postoffice.

STOVES AND TINWARE.

G. A. SHIRER,
Oak Street, near Second.

PHYSICIANS.

DR. J. LEE MCCOMAS,
Office on Main Street.

DR. E. H. PARSONS,
offers his professional services
to the people of Oakland and vicinity.
Office in the old Offutt building,
3 S 3m.

PLASTERER.

JAMES ARNOLD,
Residence on Fourth Street.

BOOT AND SHOE MAKER.

W. M. WAGNER,
Shop Cor. First & Oak Sts.

GEO. F. LOUGHRIDGE,
Leave orders at Express office.

SURVEYORS.

J. B. BRANT,
Surveyor, Auctioneer and
Conveyancer,
Oakland, Garrett county, Md.

JOHN HARNED,
Address, Post Office.

JEWELER.

A. B. WOODCOCK,
In Wm. Simpson's Building,
Watches and Clocks Cleaned and Repaired.

MILLINERY AND FANCY GOODS.

MRS. M. E. DAVIS,
Cor. Oak & Second Sts.

M. L. SCOTT'S Baltimore Store,
Millinery, Gents' Furnishing
and Fancy Goods, and Shoes,
Main Street, Opposite Dr. McComas' office.

DRUGS AND MEDICINES.

GEO. C. STURGES,
Drugs, Medicines,
Perfumery, Toilet articles, Stationery,
Tobacco and Cigars, Alter St.

G. W. MERRILL,
Near Depot,
Pure Drugs, Medicines, Toilet Goods, Station-
ery, Cigars and Tobacco, French Candy,
Fruits, Fishing Tackle, &c. Physician's pre-
scriptions accurately compounded.

PAINTING & PAPER HANG- ING.

E. J. FRINGER,
House and Sign Painter,
Leave orders at Bush's Store.

S. V. B. WARD,
HOUSE AND SIGN PAINTER
Shop near Davis House.

BLACKSMITHS.

CHAS. SINCELL,
Liberty Street.

CONTRACTORS & BUILDERS.

JOHN M. JARBOE,
Carpenter, Contractor & Builder,
Residence on Liberty St. nearly opp. Depot.

P. A. CHISHOLM,
Carpenter, Contractor,
And Builder,
Residence on Cental street.

GEO. A. SPEDDEN,
Residence opp. School house.

JOSEPH M. CRIM,
Residence on Alder Street.

A. C. BROOKE,
Res. near Republican office.

CABINETMAKERS AND UN- DERTAKERS.

A. C. BROOKE,
Res. adjoining Gazette office.

JOHN SLATZER,
Shop on Second Street.

MEDICAL.

H. T.

HELMBOLD'S

COMPOUND

Fluid Extract

BUCHU.

PHARMACEUTICAL

A SPECIFIC REMEDY FOR ALL

DISEASES

OF THE

BLADDER & KIDNEYS.

For Debility, Loss of Memory, Impotence, Exhaustion or Business, Shortness of Breath, Troubled with Thoughts of Disease,
Dimness of Vision, Pain in the Back, Chest,
and Head, Rush of Blood to the Head, Pale Countenance, and Dry Skin.
If these symptoms are allowed to go on,
very frequently Kidney and Bladder disease follows. When the Constitution becomes debilitated it requires the aid of an invigorating
medicine to strengthen and tone up the system—which

"Helmbold's Buchu"

DOES IN EVERY CASE.

HELMBOLD'S BUCHU
IS UNEQUALED

By any remedy known. It is prescribed by
the most eminent physicians all over the
world.

Rheumatism,
Spermatorrhoea,
Neuralgia,
Nervousness,
Dyspepsia,
Indigestion,
Constipation,
Aches and Pains,
General Debility,
Kidney Diseases,
Liver Complaint,
Nervous Debility,
Epilepsy,
Head Troubles,
Paralysis,
General Ill Health,
Spinal Diseases,
Sciatica,
Deafness,
Decline,
Lumbago,
Catarrh,
Nervous Complaints,
Female Complaints, &c.

Headache, Pain in the Shoulders, Cough,
Dizziness, Sore Throat, Eruptions, Red
Taste in the Mouth, Expulsion of the Heart,
Pain in the region of the Kidneys, and a
thousand other painful symptoms, are the
offspring of Dyspepsia.

HELMBOLD'S BUCHU

Invigorates the Stomach.

And stimulates the torpid Liver, Bowels, and
Kidneys to healthy action, in cleansing the
blood of all impurities, and imparting new
life and vigor to the whole system.
A single trial will be quite sufficient to
convince the most hesitating of its valuable
remedial qualities.

Price $1 Per Bottle,

Or Six Bottles for $5.

Delivered to any address free from observa-
tion.

"Patients" may consult by letter, receiving
the same attention as by calling.
Competent Physicians attend to correspondence. All letters should be addressed to

H. T. HELMBOLD,

DRUGGIST AND CHEMIST,

Philadelphia, Pa.

CAUTION:

See that the private Pro-
prietary Stamp is on
each bottle.

SOLD EVERYWHERE.

my 10-1yr.

INTERNATIONAL BIBLE LESSONS.

SUNDAY, JULY 13, 1879.

THE SECURITY OF BELIEVERS.

GENERAL STATEMENT.

In the seventh chapter of Romans is described the wretched state of a soul under the law: in the eighth chapter the Gospel is introduced as effecting that which the law
failed to accomplish, bringing life and peace,
the adoption into God's family, comfort and hope, and the presence of the Holy Spirit.
The apostle exults in the thought that all things belong to God's great scheme of blessing for those who have accepted his call; that the path leads straight from grace on earth up to glory in heaven; that while God stands beside us we need not fear a world against us, that no power in earth or hell or heaven is mighty to come between us, and God's love shall prevail in us; and that all the opposition of our foes, visible and invisible, shall be vanquished in the complete triumph of our victorious souls.

ROMANS 8, 28-30.

Man's Power, 28-30.

28 And we know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose.

29 For whom he did foreknow, he also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of his Son, that he might be the first-born
among many brethren.

30 Moreover whom he did predestinate, them he called; them he also justified, them
he also glorified.

31 What shall we then say to these things?
If God be for us, who can be against us?

32 He that spared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all, how shall he not with him also freely give us all things?

33 Who shall lay any thing to the charge of God's elect? It is God that justifieth.

34 Who is he that condemneth? It is Christ that died, yea rather, that is risen again, who is even at the right hand of God, who maketh intercession for us.

35 Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? shall tribulation, or distress, or persecution, or famine, or nakedness, or peril, or sword?

36 As it is written, For thy sake we are killed all the day long; we are accounted as sheep for the slaughter.

37 Nay, in all these things we are more than conquerors, through him that loved us.

38 For I am persuaded, that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come,

39 Nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord.

HOME READINGS.

M. The security of believers. Rom. 8, 28-30.

T. The believer's refuge. Isa. 41, 1-16.

F. The believer's deliverer. Isa. 41, 1-16.

W. The believer's confidence. Isa. 25, 1-6.

Th. The believer's comfort. Num. 9, 15-23.

S. The believer's relationship. Rom. 8, 14-28.

S. The believer's inheritance. 1 John 3, 17-20.

GOLDEN TEXT.

If God be for us, who can be against us?
Rom. 8, 31.

LESSON HYMN C. M.

O God, our Father, in whose name
Our hope for years has come,
Our shelter from the stormy blast,
And our eternal home!

Under the shadow of thy throne
Still may we dwell secure,
Sufficient is thine arm alone,
And our defense is sure.

QUESTIONS ON THE OUTLINE.

1. THE BELIEVER CALLED, v. 28-30; Eph. 1, 4.
What does the apostle say "we know?"
To whom is this promise given?

2. THE BELIEVER JUSTIFIED, v. 30; 1 Cor. 1, 17.
How may we enjoy it? 1 Cor. 1, 17.
What is said of God's foreknowledge?

3. THE BELIEVER PREDESTINATED, v. 29; 1 John 1, 1.
What does "predestinate" mean? (Ans.:
"pre-arrange before.")

Does God overrule man's will in salvation? John 5, 40.

What is to be conformed to the image of Christ? Eph. 1, 4.

Is Christ our brother?
How is his brotherhood stated in Heb. 2, 11?

What shall be the privilege of the justified?
1 Cor. 6, 30.

2. THE BELIEVER JUSTIFIED, v. 30; 1 Cor. 1, 17.
What question is asked in the Golden
Text?

May we have God for us?
What has God done for us?

How is this stated in John 3, 16?
What will God give us with his Son?

Who are God's elect? (Ans.: Those who have believed on Christ.)

Where is Christ now?
Who saw him there? Acts 7, 55, 56.

What is his work in heaven?
What is an intercessor?

Does Christ intercede for us?
Who saw him there? Acts 7, 55, 56.

3. THE BELIEVER PREDESTINATED, v. 29; 1 John 1, 1.
What is said of the love of Christ?

What are some things that tend to separate us from his love?

Have they power to separate us?
Have we victory over these things?

Who gives us this victory?
Of what may we be persuaded? v. 28, 30.

Should we not, then, seek to enjoy this love?

Is there any excuse for those who do not possess it?

TEACHINGS OF THE LESSON.

Where in this lesson do we learn—
1. That nothing can harm those who love God?
2. That nothing is too great for those who belong to God? 3. That nothing can separate us from God?

WORDS WITH LITTLE FOLKS.

1. And times trust in God.
2. Try to be like the character of Christ.

3. Remember that the Saviour intercedes for you.

The God of Jacob is our refuge. Psal. 46, 1.
Doctrinal Suggestion: The foreknowl-edge of God.

He overrules and controls all things for their good. v. 28.

He sees and foreknows them, to the end of time, out of the world. v. 29.

He conforms them to the likeness of his Son, the perfect head of character. v. 30.

He recognizes them as just and righteous.
v. 30.

He gives them an inheritance in glory
together with him. v. 30.

He calls them by his name, and what he calls them he also sanctifies. v. 30.

He gives them all things, even the things which are not seen. v. 30.

He gives them the complete triumph over all the powers of evil. v. 30.

Insinuations Without Proof.

Senator Davis, of West Virginia,
has served at least one very useful purpose. He has been the means of discussing the weakness of one of the lines of attack contemplated in the Democratic plan of the next campaign. It is known that he has been collected for several years with a sort of monomania on the subject of Treasury accounts, and what he calls and in the Treasury Department.

Some years ago he thought he had discovered a discrepancy in the Treasury statements of about a hundred millions. In the parlance of the street he "went for it." It was soon made apparent to other people,
though he has failed through ignorance or obstinacy to see it, that the discrepancy was due to different methods or bookkeeping, easily explained, and that there was nothing upon which to found a charge or even a suspicion of official corruption or dishonesty. But he would not be convinced. He insisted that the Treasury had been plundered, and that a thorough investigation would disclose a condition of rotteness in the Department which would startle
the country and cover Republican administration with irretrievable disgrace and infamy. His own party took no stock in the vast suspicions
with which he entertained himself,
but a Republican Senate humored
him in the pursuit of what seemed a harmless hobby, and gave him the fullest authority, with all possible facilities to make a thorough overhauling of the Treasury Department and its accounts, and bring everything connected with it into what Mr. Marble eloquently calls "the keen bright sunlight of publicity."

It is with this investigation that he has chiefly concerned himself during almost the entire period of his public service. He has been in the Senate the counterpart of Glover in the House. He has not, it is true, con-vulsed the country with laughter to such an extent as Glover did, for he has not reached out in so many directions, nor pulled in so often the wrong fish, but in his way he has furnished a good deal of quiet amusement by his nervous anxiety, and the obstinate persistency with which he clung to his delusions.

Until within a few days there has been a prevailing belief among his colleagues that he was quiet sincere in his hobby, and that he did actually believe his charges against the Treasury Department were measurably true. He had a way of dropping mysterious hints about the work of his committee, and the things they had pretty nearly found out and would shortly astonish the world
with, that was very much in Glover's vein, and never failed to amuse the Senate; the more so because he seemed so deeply in earnest about the matter himself and no one else, even of his own party, attached the slightest importance to his investigation or its results. But it now turns out, through a running debate in the Senate last week brought on by his own eagerness and the indiscretion
of the impulsive Salsbury, that it was part of the Democratic plan to use charges which have not been substantiated, and assertions which cannot be proved, in their prosecution of the campaign of 1880. In a brief but very able and powerful speech in the Senate last Wednesday
Senator Windom contrasted the political, financial industrial condition of the country under Democratic and Republican rule. His array of facts and figures so started up Mr. Salsbury that that Senator ventured to attempt a reply, in which, after glorifying the Democracy and making the bold avowal that he was proud of every page of its history,
he proceeded to arraign the Republican party for corruption, extortion and robbery. To this loose expectation Mr. Windom answered with the statement that three years ago he asked the Senator from Delaware "in name a single individual, a single Republican official, whom the thirty-three Democratic investigating committees had proved to have stolen
one dollar from this Government.
He failed to do so at that time; he has had three years to think it over."
And said Mr. Windom, I repeat the question." This touched Senator Davis's hobby so closely—the Delaware Senator being stumped by it—
it brought him to his feet with his old charge of alterations in the statement of the public debt amounting to
"many millions." "I wish it were at liberty," he said, "to state at this time what has occurred, and what has been proved by Treasury officials."

This sort of insinuation has become a habit with Mr. Davis, and is ordinarily little regarded; but in this instance Mr. Windom proposed to bring him to book. He accordingly asked unanimous consent that Mr.

Davis be permitted to state anything that has been proved in the two years' investigation. Mr. Davis alone objected. He preferred to indulge in insinuations, without undertaking to prove or justify them. The most infamous charges had been made against members of the Republican party, and when the demand was made for a single specification the accusers slunk away under the cover of the secrecy of the committee room. In the discussion which followed, and which took a wide range,
other Democrats participated, and an evident purpose was manifested to sustain Senator Davis in withholding the official report and findings of the committee, while squirting out unauthorized and unofficial hints and insinuations for campaign purposes.

Senator Allison accordingly offered a resolution ordering that all the testimony taken by Mr. Davis's committee be printed for the use of the Senate. This resolution met the united opposition of Democratic Senators. Their plan is to take up and use the old worn-out and exploded
charges of the West Virginia Senator for campaign purposes, without permitting the public to know the facts or read the testimony upon which they are based. The Republican demand is that all the facts be made known and all the testimony published. Messrs. Windom and Allison made short work with the two or three feeble offers of specifications from Davis, Salsbury and Beck, and to that extent their guns are spiked; but the obvious plan is to attack Republican administration
with sly insinuation and bold, unsupported assertion, while refusing upon one technical plea and another to bring forward the testimony by which alone the truth can be ascertained. The debate has disclosed the dishonest purpose of the party and the utter insincerity of Senator Davis. He has made it plain that, whatever may have been his original motives, he is actuated now by nothing but a desire to make capital for his party, and that by no fair or honest method.—N. Y. Tribune.

"Democracy and Nothing but Democracy."

We have on our table the issue of the Okoloma, Mississippi, States for June 23rd. It is an unusually interesting number, because it puts its foot down square and ventilates its creed in an explicit and unmistakable platform, headed "Democracy and nothing but Democracy." The planks in its platform are enumerated one by one, and are set in double-headed type, as follows:

I. Wrench the Amendments from the Constitution and cast them into the lake that is said to burn with fire
and brimstone.

II. Make the States the Kings of this Republic, and let the Republic understand that it is nothing but a seaf and a slave.

III. Vindicate the right of Secession.

IV. Make treason odious by making odious traitors like Grant and Seward.

V. Glorify the grand, immortal patriots like Jefferson Davis, Stuart, Bardsdale and Lee.

VI. Make free schools, and all
New England principles, so-called,
simply infamous.

VII. The principle of a Confederacy; the abstract right of Secession;
Our Labor System—all these in the future will stand forth among those things which human liberty has defied.

VIII. Honor to Jefferson Davis—
Honor to the Southern Confederacy—
Honor to the Bonny Blue.

XI. The South and Southern principles must triumph, or civilization
must come to a standstill.

Through red hearts' blood, and glare of burning cities; through death that grinned at us with set teeth; through horrors and gloom of which we may not speak we have marched to see these principles triumph, and by the living God we will never surrender them until we witness their supreme vindication.

Every moment of our lives every every part of our body is wearing out and being built up anew. This work is accomplished by the blood,
but if the blood does not perform its work properly the system is poisoned. Cleanse the blood by the use of Dr. Bull's Baltimore Pills. It is less but efficient.

Adjournment of Congress.

The extra session of the Forty-sixth Congress terminated Wednesday. The experience which the country has had of this Congress justifies the belief that it was a nuisance very offensive to the people. It has been in session more than three months, at a cost to the people of more than a million dollars, and the whole session has been consumed in the passage of the appropriation bills,
a bill to prohibit the army from being used as a police force at elections, and a repeal of the jury laws. Without entering at this time into any extended discussion of the merits or demerits of the laws which the dominant party sought to repeal or nullify, we say that their action in wasting three months in the way they have had a flagrant violation of public duty and public welfare. They have made the Forty-sixth Congress
a stench in the nostrils of the people and they are glad to be rid of it. The Democrats who went into the extra session boastful and positive will return to their constituencies vanquished and humiliated. What the effect will be upon the party throughout the country, everyday prophets may foretell. It is manifest that on the financial subject the party is hopelessly divided. End as it may, the struggle will damage the party severely. It will leave irritation and a sourness that must be fatal to the influence many of the leaders, and will be followed by loss of confidence on the part of their followers.—Baltic Herald, Ind.

The extra session of Congress fails to be a crime only because it proves to be a blunder. That the Democratic originators of this fruitless and costly

The Republican.

JAS. A. HAYES, Publisher.
OAKLAND, GARRETT CO., MD.

THE WHIP-POOR-WILL.

Wings apple-blossoms, brushed with bloom,
Lead June's warm, sunny days with perfume,
And halcyon grows each perfect day,
And fields are sweet with new-sown hay,
Then mistle-bell, I hear thy note,
Up from the pasture-checkers light.

Whip-poor-will!
There are the hours to love and tend,
And autumn by thy accents wend,
What will be—what tender pain,
Recalls my youthful dreams again,
As floating down the shadowy years,
That old refrain from memory peers.

Whip-poor-will!
The garish day implies thee not,
But find in some dim, lonely spot,
When like a sad recluse dost wait,
The silver hours in vainly wait,
When every leaf and flower is flown,
And groves and glens are lone and drear.

Whip-poor-will!
Then, when the rain, voluptuous night,
Parts in the young moon's tender light,
And winds, and clouds, and shimmering streams,
Are stilled in her silent beams—
How thrills the lover's heart to hear
Thy loud, sweet, liquid, liquid, liquid.

Whip-poor-will!
Where comes the iterated phrase,
That to the wanderer's ear, like a sigh,
Half-tenderly, half-plaintive, seems
With vagueness of influence,
And, like a wailing voice, is heard,
Haunts the dim fields, we know not where.

Whip-poor-will!
—Henry S. Connelley, in Scribner for July.

A SKETCH IN A NARROW STREET.

It was so narrow, this little back street in the quaint, old-fashioned German town, that Hans Gottlieb could, if he had so wished, have shaken hands out of his window with his opposite neighbor.

The sun that shone so bravely elsewhere was seldom visible here; for the early morning a few golden gleams found their way in, and gave faint encouragement to the two or three flowers that blossomed in pots on the window-sill.

On such occasions Hans would pause in his work, watching full well what was coming—how the crimson opposite would be flung open, and a girl's voice, singing a little little German song would ring across the silent street. Hans would gaze, with a smile, at the figure, with dark French eyes, and black hair, drawn up under a white cap, a beautiful contrast, so Hans thought, to his comely, yellow-haired countrywoman. As soon as this vision appeared Hans would pause in his work and turn his eyes toward it; would wait till the watering of the flowers and the singing of the song were alike ended, and then would approach his window.

"Good morning," his neighbor would call across in that pretty foreign German that was so enchanting in his ears—"Good morning, Monsieur Gottlieb," and then with a nod and a smile the trim little figure would vanish into the dark shadows, and Hans return to his work.

But though life was too busy with these two, and almost different enough to him, even when one worked hard for it, so that neither could afford to idle away the minutes in talk, yet Hans as he worked, dreaming of the days when stone-carving should not mean daily bread, but honor and glory to those he loved, was pleasantly conscious all the time of a dark head bent over a table drawn close up to the window opposite—a table covered with many bright colored scraps of muslin and paper—which in the course, under those deft small hands, became summer flowers; at this short distance seeming to the looker-on the spoils of a June garden.

Thus they worked, these two, so far apart, abstaining from all conversation which might have made the days pass more quickly; but then at hour's idleness might mean gossip and chatter, so that even Rose Cordier, dearest as she loved the sound of her own voice, refrained from making use of it, except for an occasional song. But when the day was over, when the coolness in the little close street, and the shadowy gray of the strip of sky overhead, gave notice that the long summer day was drawing to an end, when the small room grew dark, then Rose would rise and open the door, to interchange greetings and gossip with the neighbor—both with the women sitting on their doorsteps, knitting in the peaceful twilight, their children playing about them; with the fathers returning from their work; with the young men loitering about smoking, for Rose had always a bright word and look for every man, woman and child she knew.

And they were all fond of her—of this little foreigner who had come among them four years ago with an old mother, since dead, and who earned her daily bread honestly among them. Then as it grew even darker, Hans Gottlieb would become aware that the day and its work were over, and would lay aside his chisel, and also seek what little fresh air there was at the door of his dwelling. He did not laugh or gossip with his neighbors, as did Rose Cordier; it was not his way, and this fact was quite recognized by the dealers in William street. Beyond a "Good evening, neighbor," they did not seek to disturb him in the enjoyment of his evening pipe, only occasionally Rose would step across and ask him what he was at work upon, or if he had a good order, and then poor Hans, flushing all over his fair face, would proceed to describe his work, his prospects, until Rose, with a pretty shrug of her shoulders, would tell him in her foreign German she did not understand him; he must speak slower, much slower; it was too late now, but to-morrow, yes to-morrow, he must try and explain it all again, for it was interesting, so interesting. But for now it must be good-night, "good-night to every one," and the slight, trim figure had disappeared, and the door was closed.

The neighbors, watching Hans as he strolled up and down the little street afterward, pipe in mouth, nodded and smiled to one another. "Ah, when there is enough for two over yonder, there will be a wedding!" such was the form the whispering took.

Even the hardest workers take a holiday now and again, and the feast of St.

John the Baptist is esteemed in Freidrichsburg the legitimate summer holiday of all its industrious inhabitants. The happy day is spent according to an old custom, all the village houses, three miles distant from the town, where a time-honored fair is held.

Lion-tamers, fat women, dwarfs, giants, all the hundred and one shows that are the rightful property of a fair are to be found there, and later on there is dancing under the soft evening sky, and after that, home early, so as to be up and about on the morrow, to work, if possible, harder than ever, to make up for the wasted day.

To Rose Cordier, with her quick French blood, her youth, her light-heartedness, this fête was one to which she looked forward for many weeks beforehand, and the little foreigner knew she was ever likely to want a cavalier, and this was looked upon as almost a sine qua non of the entertainment.

"Before we start," said Hans, suddenly, a little constraint apparent in his voice, "would you come into my atelier, mademoiselle? I have been working at something I should like to show you."

"Yes, truly I should like it. I have never been there yet. Let us go."

They turned back as she spoke, and he pushed open the door.

"See," he said, "it is not finished yet, but it is to be a wreath of roses."

He led her as he said these words to where on one side, out of the way of dust and dirt, it lay—the half-completed circle of curved flowers.

"It is pretty," she said, and then, "Is it an order? What will you get for it?"

"No, it is not an order," he said, a little sadly, "I have been doing it in the spare moments after my day's work."

"It is pretty," she repeated, touching with her small fingers the delicate curled leaves, which surely had the stamp of genius upon them; "but it wants something," she added, after a pause.

"What?" he inquired, eagerly. "I have looked at it so often that I cannot find out whether it is right or wrong."

"I know," she exclaimed, triumphantly. "Color! Ah, Monsieur, if you could but see the wreath of roses I made last week for the Graf von Ateldorf for a ball you would know what I mean. O"—with a little clasp of her hands—"it was perfect! Perfect as I have ever seen."

Her thoughts had quite wandered away from the delicate flowers before her; indeed, she did not remember them until they stood once more in the street, with the door closed behind her, when it came across her that she might have been rude.

"They are very pretty," she said softly, "but you see they are not finished yet. When they are, perhaps, you will know what I mean. I might try if you wish it, but when I made them I thought—the color swept into his face—"that you would like them."

"Yes, I should if you were rich enough to give presents, or if—Well, you will not mind my speaking the truth to you? You are rather a dreamer, are you not? This is a bad thing."

"Shaking her pretty head, she said, "I am a fortune, and money, you know, one must have. So take my advice—leave off carving things no one cares to buy, and only do what you can sell. You are not angry?"

"A angry," repeated Hans, "when you are so kind as to take an interest in me and wish me well! Why—"

But here they had reached the merry, laughing crowd, and the spot where the omnibuses were awaiting them, and the rest of the sentence had perforce to await completion at some future time.

And it was a sentence Hans had not intended to complete. Not yet. By and by, when there was a little more money, a fortune, and a home worthy of offering to a wife, then it would be time enough to finish that sentence.

But on this as on other occasions, it was a case of "man proposes," at least so far as Hans was concerned, for the long, joyful day over, and tired holiday-seekers, beginning to consider the quickest way home, he found himself under a soft, starry sky walking toward by the side of Rose Cordier.

"I would be a pleasure to walk," he had said, standing by the crowded omnibus, filled by drowsy crying children and weary mothers. "Are you tired, mademoiselle?"—after a second's pause—"No, I will come with you," she had replied, "it will save the sons."

So they started homeward together. And ever very long Hans found himself reverting to those unfinished words of the morning.

Love-making seemed so natural, so desirable under these circumstances, that it was difficult to think of waking up on the morrow to the hard day's work, and the knowledge that where it is so difficult to keep one, what would be done if there was yet another.

"It is selfish of me to ask you, Rose when I have nothing to offer, but I am young and strong, and willing to work, and I love you, Rose."

Hans stood still as he spoke, and his voice trembled as he clasped the girl's small hands in his.

Rose was moved too. The tears stood in her bright eyes, cheeks looked pale in the starlight.

"Yes, dear Hans," she said timidly, in that sweet foreign tongue he had learned to love, "but, you see—"

"Yes, I see. We could not live upon nothing. No, alas, no! But, Rose, the color flushing up into his face again as he said hesitatingly, "we might be engaged? Could you—oh, I know it is asking a great deal, but could you wait for me?"

"Ah, Hans, you must not think me unkind, but—it would be so long, and

There was no mistaking the girl's tones even if the words were a little vague.

"And there is Andre Leroux?"

"He is from my country," cried the girl quickly, blushing a bright rosy red. "It is natural, among strangers, I should like to see and talk to a countryman of my own."

"Yes, dear Rose, I am not blaming you. Do not think that. As you say, among strangers, it is pleasant to meet one who speaks your own language. It must be often lonely for you."

"Yes, Hans," Rose replied, brushing the tears out of her eyes. "If it were not for you, I should find the little street dull and sad since the poor mother died. And, ah," as they entered the said street, "here we are at home! How quickly we have come! Good night, Hans!"

She stretched out her hand as she spoke, and again Hans took it in his, and looked down at the pretty face. "It is such a pity," she said softly, "that you have to increase money."

"Such a pity," he echoed sadly, loosening her hand as he spoke.

"And you are not angry with me?" she went on.

"Angry? No, certainly not. Why, I see of course you were right. It is silly of me to ask you to wait; you might be an old woman before I had enough for us to marry on!"

"Yes, dear Hans, I would never do. I know you would agree with me when you thought it over. But you will still remain my friend?"

"Always your friend, Rose. It does not matter, you know, how poor a friend I am. I will be your friend for a few years, and then to fall asleep and dream of Andre Leroux; Hans to ponder over whether there was nothing to be done, nothing he could do, to better his position."

Each in different, more difficult in the prosaic light of day even, than when dreaming over it pipe in mouth, in the soft Summer evenings.

Carving the letters of a dead friend's name—more when painting them on common black wood, for the customers who sought out the little atelier of Hans Gottlieb were not often well-to-do—is not a swift road to a fortune.

And though he was not proud and did not boast, Hans was not without a little pride in the sight of the spruce French maker—for Andre's trade was the same as Rose's—sent a throb of pain to the great honest heart of Hans Gottlieb. But he did not complain, still even then the little heart of savings did not seem to increase much.

And oftener and oftener now, Hans noted a certain M. Andre Leroux come up the narrow street of an evening, to walk up and down in the twilight with his opposite neighbor.

Each in different, more difficult in the prosaic light of day even, than when dreaming over it pipe in mouth, in the soft Summer evenings.

Carving the letters of a dead friend's name—more when painting them on common black wood, for the customers who sought out the little atelier of Hans Gottlieb were not often well-to-do—is not a swift road to a fortune.

And though he was not proud and did not boast, Hans was not without a little pride in the sight of the spruce French maker—for Andre's trade was the same as Rose's—sent a throb of pain to the great honest heart of Hans Gottlieb. But he did not complain, still even then the little heart of savings did not seem to increase much.

And oftener and oftener now, Hans noted a certain M. Andre Leroux come up the narrow street of an evening, to walk up and down in the twilight with his opposite neighbor.

Each in different, more difficult in the prosaic light of day even, than when dreaming over it pipe in mouth, in the soft Summer evenings.

Carving the letters of a dead friend's name—more when painting them on common black wood, for the customers who sought out the little atelier of Hans Gottlieb were not often well-to-do—is not a swift road to a fortune.

And though he was not proud and did not boast, Hans was not without a little pride in the sight of the spruce French maker—for Andre's trade was the same as Rose's—sent a throb of pain to the great honest heart of Hans Gottlieb. But he did not complain, still even then the little heart of savings did not seem to increase much.

And oftener and oftener now, Hans noted a certain M. Andre Leroux come up the narrow street of an evening, to walk up and down in the twilight with his opposite neighbor.

Each in different, more difficult in the prosaic light of day even, than when dreaming over it pipe in mouth, in the soft Summer evenings.

Carving the letters of a dead friend's name—more when painting them on common black wood, for the customers who sought out the little atelier of Hans Gottlieb were not often well-to-do—is not a swift road to a fortune.

And though he was not proud and did not boast, Hans was not without a little pride in the sight of the spruce French maker—for Andre's trade was the same as Rose's—sent a throb of pain to the great honest heart of Hans Gottlieb. But he did not complain, still even then the little heart of savings did not seem to increase much.

And oftener and oftener now, Hans noted a certain M. Andre Leroux come up the narrow street of an evening, to walk up and down in the twilight with his opposite neighbor.

Each in different, more difficult in the prosaic light of day even, than when dreaming over it pipe in mouth, in the soft Summer evenings.

Carving the letters of a dead friend's name—more when painting them on common black wood, for the customers who sought out the little atelier of Hans Gottlieb were not often well-to-do—is not a swift road to a fortune.

And though he was not proud and did not boast, Hans was not without a little pride in the sight of the spruce French maker—for Andre's trade was the same as Rose's—sent a throb of pain to the great honest heart of Hans Gottlieb. But he did not complain, still even then the little heart of savings did not seem to increase much.

sieur Hans "God-speed," for in the old days before I was married, he was always a kind friend to me. And see also, what a beautiful present he has brought us!"

At his wife's words M. Andre stood up.

"Monsieur is amiable, most amiable! Any friend of Madam is dear to the heart of Andre Leroux! Let me wish you 'Bon Voyage' and much prosperity."

"Then there was a bid-farewell from Hans, a few tears from Rose, and Hans had departed, and the husband and wife were left alone.

"It is graceful, very graceful," said the Frenchman, lifting the parting gift of Hans. "One would scarcely have thought his great hands could have fashioned such a thing. When it grows dark, dear wife, if you fetch a nail and a piece of cord, I will myself attach it to the wall."

"It is pretty," said his wife. "I always thought so, but now, Andre, that I see it among all these red roses, I am sure that what I said of it at first is quite true—it wants color!"

"You have it exactly, my wife," replied M. Leroux, with fond appreciation of Rose's cleverness. "That is just what it needs—just then, we cannot have everything." And M. Andre's Rose returned with much satisfaction to the crimson roses before him.

A woman had surprised this couple, perhaps, if they could have seen on into coming years, if they could have listened to the words of a worldly-minded collector of the beauties of art.

"He only did two of them"—he was addressing some three or four eager listeners in a London ball-room—"one that he did for Levison, and which first made him famous. You never saw it? Well, it is a marvel! The curl of the leaves, the very dew on the fresh petals. It is wonderful. I would have given him anything he asked for one like it. But, poor fellow, as you know, he only just lived long enough to know he was famous."

"However, when I was last in Freidrichsburg, his native town, and striving to find out all I could about him—if he had done anything before he went to Rome—there in that wretched narrow street, as I was telling you before, I found this fac simile of his greatest work—a present to a sweetheart, I suppose. They had told me she knew him, that he used to live opposite her, so I called to see if I could glean anything about him, and there, hanging up on the wall, I saw that very wreath that had been haunting me for months!"

"How did you persuade her to part with it?"

"Ah, Lady Grace, that was not very difficult—honest English gold. Her eyes glistened at the sight of it! Very pretty eyes they were, too. She cried when I took it down, cried wept, but she was so kind, and her husband comforted her. 'See, my wife,' he said, 'I will make for thee a wreath of these lovely roses of just the same size!—did I say they were artificial-flower makers?'—and so she will not miss the other. And as to him, poor fellow, life is difficult, and perhaps he is well out of it."

"So madam dried her tears."

"Ah, that was lovely. I heard her say, as I carried my treasure away: 'and I like the colored ones best. And the money, you see, my friend, is far better; it will feed and clothe the children, whereas the wreath—we could only look at it!'"

"You are interested in it now, are you not, Lady Grace? You will all come and have tea in my rooms to-morrow afternoon, and see the new collection of plants. What a pity it was that he died so young!"—Temple Bar.

Xerxes and Esther—A Little Ancient History and Geography.

In the Old Testament the Book of Esther stands apart from all others. The reader is not able to place it in its proper historical relations without assistance from secular history. The story is strange and enchaining.

The Ahasuerus of Esther is now agreed by the best authorities to be none other than Xerxes.

After his disasters in war, Xerxes gave himself up to grief and luxury, and this agrees with the picture as drawn in Esther.

The capital of Ahasuerus is given as Sheshan, or Susa. The site of this city is a matter of much controversy, and not quite half way from the Gulf to the place. But Susa did not become the sole residence of the monarch. Sometimes in the middle of winter he sojourned for a while in Babylon, and he would naturally be in the place where the greatest splendor was to be seen and the most extravagant luxury indulged in. This may account for the curious fact that the Jews have been accustomed to regard Babylon as the residence of Ahasuerus the husband of Esther. They for a long time pointed out the tombs of Esther and Mordecai, also of Daniel and Cyrus.

In the midst of this city stood the grand palace. Herodotus described the palace as built of a series of seven walls the second within the first and rising above it, and so on, built in seven different colors. This description has been regarded as fabulous. But late excavations show that this mode of ornamentation prevailed at that time in a neighboring country. It was supposed that this form of structure and adornment was chosen with a view to place the city under the protection of the seven planets. The two uppermost walls were plated, one with silver and the other with gold. Says a recent writer: "On the lofty summit, overlooking all the rest, was the palace of the monarchs, containing the imperial treasures of vast amount. The beams of the palace were of silver; others were of cedar, strengthened with plates of gold. The palace was decorated with precious stones, and was furnished with utensils of inestimable value. The walls and ceilings of the rooms were all covered with ivory, silver, amber or gold. The throne was of pure gold, supported by four pillars richly set with precious stones. The King's bed was also of gold. Pythias, who, next to the King of Persia, was accounted the richest man in the world, presented to Darius a palm tree and vine of gold. The body and branches of this vine were enriched with jewels of great value, and the clusters of grapes were all precious stones. It hung over the King's head as he sat on his throne. At the head of his bed stood always a chest containing 5,000 talents (i. e. 5,000 times $24,309) which was called the King's bolster and another at his feet with 3,000 talents, and adjoining the King's palace were large gardens and parks stocked with all sorts of game for his diversion. Cyrus planted and cultivated one of these delicious gardens with his own hands, and here he lived and died at last, as did Daniel, who built a superb mausoleum for his tomb, in which the Persian Kings were afterwards buried. Alexander enriched these gardens with trees and plants from Greece.

The palace had 277 cooks—29 took care of the dishes, 17 who brought water, 70 who brought the wine, 40 employed about ointments, and 66 prepared garlands for use, and 300 women of the sweetest and most melodious voices were in constant attendance to divert the King in his leisure hours of rest, and lull him to sleep with their melody."

Tablets containing records of the deeds and character of Esther and Mordecai have been found in the ruins and translated.

One hundred and fifty years after the time of Esther, Alexander captured Ecbatana, and in a drunken frolic burned down the palace treasury, immense sums of gold, which he carried off. Diodorus Siculus, whose remaining works are valued because they contain matter otherwise lost, says Ecbatana was the richest city in the world, and that Alexander carried away 120,000 talents in gold. The spoil was so great that the neighboring countries were called upon to furnish mules and other beasts besides 3,000 camels to remove it.

The ruins of Susa are scarcely less interesting than those of Ecbatana. But the glory and grandeur of both are departed. They remain in ruins—a fit example showing the vanity of pomp and splendor. All that profane history tells of their corroboration the representations of the Book of Esther so far as the two sources of information cover the same ground.

What Puzzles the Doctors.

The Faculty of the Homoeopathic Medical College in this city is very much interested in a very singular case which has lately come under their care for treatment.

The immediate object of their endeavors is to restore to its natural place in the left side the heart of Lathrop G. Warford, which for two years has been doing inadequate duty in his right side.

Although the heart has been in its right place since the operation, the patient has not recovered, and the doctors are now endeavoring to correct this freak of disease when their skill was first invoked, the vital organs of the patient were found to be so seriously constituted that great relief has already been secured, and the patient, who was in a very precarious state, and strong hopes are entertained of his permanent cure ultimately.

The history of the case is as follows: In the winter of 1877, Warford, then a cashier in French's Hotel, contracted a cold, which never, to his knowledge, took the shape of active pleurisy, although its consequences indicate that pleuritic inflammation must have existed.

He was an active and strong man, and of twenty-three. Despite remedies the cold progressed, and his first medical adviser was of the opinion that he was going into rapid decline, and that his life was worth at most only a few months' existence. The treatment prescribed looked only toward mitigating his sufferings. Late in the spring of '77 he had become so weak that he was forced to give up business, and he spent his few remaining days, as he said, in his right side.

Dr. Waldo, of West Troy, who became his medical attendant, was much puzzled to account for many of the symptoms that accompany consumption. He sounded his patient's chest, and found the left lung was completely atrophied and was doing no duty whatever.

During his investigations he was dumfounded to find the young man's heart beating in his right side. Warford himself was unconscious of the shifting of the organ. He had never, during his life, suffered any discomfort from it, but always, therefore, when he had occasion to notice it, he had suspected it on the left side, where other folks' hearts hang. No change of position had been reported in the medical experiences of physicians, and Dr. Waldo was greatly puzzled to account for the case.

The patient was able to lie in any position, whereas, in other dropsical cases, only particular positions are found tolerable by the afflicted. The disease also manifested itself in bloated sacs under the eyes, in swelling of the extremities and in a peculiar opaque pallor, and all these symptoms were absent in Warford's case.

Dr. McLean, of West Troy, one of the most eminent practitioners in Central New York, was called in consultation.

Warford had then become so enfeebled that the physicians thought his tenure of life worth the risk of an operation to disclose the source of disease. They, with one consent, agreed that the chances were largely in favor of his recovery, and the operation was performed, his strength recovered somewhat within the next few days, and they decided to risk the operation. By this time the doctors had reached the conclusion that he was suffering from deep-seated pleurisy, and driving the heart to its new home on the right side. They had also been able to locate the immediate seat of the disease. Just two years ago, Drs. McLean and Waldo performed the first operation.

Warford was so feeble at the time that they were afraid to administer anesthetics, so, after fortifying him with sundry doses of brandy, they began to cut.

The primary incision was made between the fifth and sixth ribs, about eight inches from the spine, on the left side. A rubber tube, in an exhaustible receiver, was inserted, and through this nearly eight pints of purulent serous matter were discharged. The patient was almost instantly relieved of the oppressed, labored respiration, and within twenty-four hours was up and around the house, weak, but hopeful. His strength returned rapidly, and the physicians came to the conclusion that, despite the double labor thrown upon his right lung, he was free from active disease in those organs. The heart, however, showed no disposition to return to its natural place.

Within a few weeks Warford grew worse again, and it became apparent that there was another effusion of dropsical matter upon the thorax. They suffered it to proceed until his respiration became seriously interfered with again, when they renewed the tapping process. In the six weeks since the first tapping nearly seven pints of the purulent fluid had collected and been ejected. From that second tapping until now Warford's general health has been improving. His system has responded with increasing activity to the remedies used and the necessity for tapping has decreased.

He has undergone six tapplings, all told, the last of which was done in March. Altogether thirty-nine pints of the dropsical fluid have been drawn from him. The improvement may be seen in the circumstance that only four and a half pints were drawn off by the two last operations, although they were made three months apart.

The patient has returned to this city and is about engaging in active business. Drs. Dowling and Holmuth, who have assumed charge of his case, say that they discover indications of air forcing itself into the atrophied lung again, and are hopeful that it may be encouraged to resume duty. If it does so, the heart may be induced to swing back to its natural place. They are about persuaded of the propriety of introducing some inflammatory agent into the seat of the disease at the next tapping, hoping that, by bringing about active inflammation, they will be able to permanently cure the diseased part. This done, they profess to see no reason why Warford may not again be a sound man, with two lungs doing active duty, and a heart in its right place. The only similar case in the medical records is that of a contortionist reported in the English medical journals a few months since.

He was referred to, for bringing about active inflammation, they will be able to permanently cure the diseased part. This done, they profess to see no reason why Warford may not again be a sound man, with two lungs doing active duty, and a heart in its right place. The only similar case in the medical records is that of a contortionist reported in the English medical journals a few months since.

He was referred to, for bringing about active inflammation, they will be able to permanently cure the diseased part. This done, they profess to see no reason why Warford may not again be a sound man, with two lungs doing active duty, and a heart in its right place. The only similar case in the medical records is that of a contortionist reported in the English medical journals a few months since.

He was referred to, for bringing about active inflammation, they will be able to permanently cure the diseased part. This done, they profess to see no reason why Warford may not again be a sound man, with two lungs doing active duty, and a heart in its right place. The only similar case in the medical records is that of a contortionist reported in the English medical journals a few months since.

He was referred to, for bringing about active inflammation, they will be able to permanently cure the diseased part. This done, they profess to see no reason why Warford may not again be a sound man, with two lungs doing active duty, and a heart in its right place. The only similar case in the medical records is that of a contortionist reported in the English medical journals a few months since.

He was referred to, for bringing about active inflammation, they will be able to permanently cure the diseased part. This done, they profess to see no reason why Warford may not again be a sound man, with two lungs doing active duty, and a heart in its right place. The only similar case in the medical records is that of a contortionist reported in the English medical journals a few months since.

He was referred to, for bringing about active inflammation, they will be able to permanently cure the diseased part. This done, they profess to see no reason why Warford may not again be a sound man, with two lungs doing active duty, and a heart in its right place. The only similar case in the medical records is that of a contortionist reported in the English medical journals a few months since.

He was referred to, for bringing about active inflammation, they will be able to permanently cure the diseased part. This done, they profess to see no reason why Warford may not again be a sound man, with two lungs doing active duty, and a heart in its right place. The only similar case in the medical records is that of a contortionist reported in the English medical journals a few months since.

He was referred to, for bringing about active inflammation, they will be able to permanently cure the diseased part. This done, they profess to see no reason why Warford may not again be a sound man, with two lungs doing active duty, and a heart in its right place. The only similar case in the medical records is that of a contortionist reported in the English medical journals a few months since.

He was referred to, for bringing about active inflammation, they will be able to permanently cure the diseased part. This done, they profess to see no reason why Warford may not again be a sound man, with two lungs doing active duty, and a heart in its right place. The only similar case in the medical records is that of a contortionist reported in the English medical journals a few months since.

He was referred to, for bringing about active inflammation, they will be able to permanently cure the diseased part. This done, they profess to see no reason why Warford may not again be a sound man, with two lungs doing active duty, and a heart in its right place. The only similar case in the medical records is that of a contortionist reported in the English medical journals a few months since.

He was referred to, for bringing about active inflammation, they will be able to permanently cure the diseased part. This done, they profess to see no reason why Warford may not again be a sound man, with two lungs doing active duty, and a heart in its right place. The only similar case in the medical records is that of a contortionist reported in the English medical journals a few months since.

He was referred to, for bringing about active inflammation, they will be able to permanently cure the diseased part. This done, they profess to see no reason why Warford may not again be a sound man, with two lungs doing active duty, and a heart in its right place. The only similar case in the medical records is that of a contortionist reported in the English medical journals a few months since.

The Republican.

JAS. A. HAYDEN, Publisher.
OAKLAND, GARRETT CO., MD.

AT THE OLD FARM.

Yes, 'tis true. The hills are closed, and the front door stands with ease.
Dimly seen by only one—viewless, soundless, to the rest.
Only one discerned the arrow ere its death-pang
pierced his breast.

Why, they say he kissed his wife? She was sitting in the door.
With her patient, work-worn hands folded, for the day was over.
And the twilight wind stirred softly, tapped the
bliss on the pane.
While he lay down, slowly, slowly, toward
the door of the old farm.

"Ruth," he said, and touched her brow, gently as a lover might.
Stunned and kneeling her, sitting there. She was struck with sudden fright.
"Ah! what is it, John?" she cried. "Do you think I'm going to die?"
"No," he answered; "no, dear wife. If 'tis any one but I."

Fell ten years or more have passed since he'd given her a word.
Thoughtful, feeling like, enquiring. She could source believe she was Rightly now. Their talk, you see, was most part,
about the farm.

Butter, eggs, the new Alderney, making hay; they meant no harm—
Kindly, honest, Christian folk, both the deacon
and his wife.
Only somehow they had lost the romance out of life.

And the love which they began with, like a flower growing, the more they Struggled on, half-faded, half-buried, in the strife for worldly needs.

Well, the night came on again. All the usual chore were done.
And they went to bed as usual; rising always
with the sun.
'Twas not worth while, burning candles, and at midnight, to a call.
Woke the sleepers. One was taken, one was left and that was all.

Louy told me of the kiss. On her way to meet the choir.
She had slipped down Aunt Ruth, she and Neigle-bor Brown's desire.
They were not surprised this morning when they heard that he was dead.

But he must have had a warning was what our Louvise said.
That I think the real love, the true love that never dies.
Once, two lives have known it, wakened
these sleeping skies.

And (will be a comfort, sweet, in her lonely
time to be.
That before he went, he spoke in the "dear wife"
tenderly.
—Margaret H. Singler, in Youth's Companion.

A MARRIAGE OF AFFECTION.

Sir Hercules Cumberbatch, K. C. B., was an old man, judged by the family
Bible, the almanac and the Army List;
yet seen at a little distance or by candle
light he wore a certain look of youth.
No doubt his toilet was a long elaborate process, and his valet was an artist in his way—almost a genius, indeed. The result was so far successful that when the veteran had been duly bejeweled and dyed, powdered and padded, buckled and strapped together,
and generally stuccoed, so to say, with finesse, his aspect almost suggested that he was younger than his son Joshua Cumberbatch, and but a trifle older than his grandson Charles.

Joshua Cumberbatch was a city man of the firm of Cumberbatch, Cropp & Cossor, of Great St. Helen's, Bishopgate, East India merchants and agents,
and city men always look their age, if,
indeed, they do not usually look to be older than they really are. Joshua's hair was white as snow, his forehead was furrowed, his shoulders were round, his back was bowed, and his waistcoat protruded greedily. He really cared nothing about his appearance; dressed untidily, wearing thicksoled square-toed boots, with ample accommodation for the worst of corns.

He habitually thrust his hands deep into his trouser pockets, to the ruin of his cravat, and as he walked he rattled his half-pence or jingled his keys together. His son, Charles Cumberbatch, was one of the youths who pass from infancy to adolescence almost at a bound. As a schoolboy he had, of course, smoked cigars, but he had also developed whiskers. There had been a brief period during which he had worn a boy's jacket and turned over his top a huge white linen collar;
but he had very soon assumed coats with tails and tied cravats round his neck; a cadet at Woolwich, he looked like a Captain, while his moustache
would have done credit even to a Major.
His expression was serious and his face careworn.

Sir Hercules and his son were dining together in the strangers' room of a certain military club in Pall Mall. Sir Hercules was, of course, the host, and was in a simple but comfortable environment. Sir Hercules could, when he listed, exhibit much taste and cunning in the ordering of a dinner and was gifted with nice judgment concerning wines. But he felt that the occasion demanded no exertion or display of that sort. Joshua had often avowed that he did not in the least care what he ate or what he drank. So his parent regaled him with cheap claret and the joint.

"Well, and what is this business of Charles's?" demanded Sir Hercules.
"Some scrape, I suppose. Boys will be boys, you know; and boys will get into scrapes."
"Well, he's no longer a boy; at any rate he consens himself a man."
"They all do that. A love affair, eh?"
"He talks of marriage."
"That's more serious. The young fool! Who is she? Do I know her?" She's respectable, I suppose."

"Ah, he's a prejudiced witness! The young fool!" Sir Hercules repeated.
"He is not absolutely a fool," observed Joshua Cumberbatch, with an air of defending his son. "He's really been a very good boy; very steady, not at all extravagant, although, of course,
his expenses at Woolwich have been considerable. But, no doubt, he's too young to think of marrying. It's absurd! It's out of the question."
"You've not seen the woman—the lady?"

"No. She's a Miss Mashiter."
"Don't think I know the name."
"Most people know it. Have you never heard of Mashiter's marmalade
and mixed pickles?"
"Bless my soul, yes! Do you mean that she's one of those Mashiter's?"
Then she has money, I believe.

She is the only daughter of old Mash-iter, who made the business. He's been dead for some years. The thing is now carried on as a limited company. I don't suppose she's got anything to do with it now, except, perhaps, as a shareholder."

"Well, it may not be such a bad thing for Charles."

"He's very young. I don't think he ought to marry yet."

"We were all young once, Joshua—at least, I was. It's a complaint we outgrow. I don't think you'll do any good interfering. I wouldn't let pride stand in the way. It doesn't do in these times to be too particular; and pride has its price always. If this girl has really got money and is otherwise im-objectionable I don't see why Master Charles shouldn't marry her if he wants to very badly. He might do worse."

Mashiter's having been in trade? People will talk, no doubt. Let them. The money won't smell of pickles or be sticky with marmalade."

"I don't object to trade," said Joshua. "I'm a merchant myself, and it would be absurd for me to be taking up notions of pride upon such a subject. We're a good family, as good as most for that matter, still, in these times, pedigree doesn't count for much."

"No," remarked Sir Hercules. "It's only the insurance companies that are curious nowadays on that subject: to find out whether one's progenitors died of consumption or of any disease tending to shorten life, not out of any respect for ancestry."

"But I've a father's duty to perform."

"Just so." Not that Sir Hercules had been very heedful in times past of his own duties as a parent.

"The boy has no mother. I feel bound to look after him more particularly than I otherwise should. I have to consider what will be best for his happiness, and rule my own conduct accordingly."

"Just so," Sir Hercules replied.
Then, after a pause, he inquired:
"When did Charles pick up—I mean meet this Miss Mashiter?"

"Some time that her horse ran away
with her in the park—a hard-mouthed brute she never ought to have mounted.
As I understood Charles was just in time to stop him and so to prevent an accident."

"Quite a providential affair," said Sir Hercules, a skeptical grin greatly increasing and deepening the wrinkles that scored and intersected his face in every direction. "But things will happen like that sometimes, especially in novels. She was very grateful, of course."

"She so expressed herself; but she was not hurt, only a little frightened."

"And she asked him to call upon her that she might thank him for the injury that she might have rendered her?"

"Well, I think he asked if he might call to inquire if she had completely recovered—if she felt no ill-effects from her alarm."

"Just so; the result would be the same. And she lives—may one ask?"

"Harley street, Cavendish square."

"Well, that sounds decent, at any rate," said Sir Hercules, cautiously.
"And you're going to see her?"

"See her by all means; that can't do any harm, you know. Altogether the thing does not justify any uneasiness that I see. I was afraid of something very serious, worse than you first hinted at—namely, that she was a girl of that kind of thing."

"O, but Charles's quite above that.
I had no apprehension on that score.
He's been very carefully brought up,
and he has always shown himself to be so particularly steady."

"Yes; but sometimes those particularly steady fellows do such particularly stupid things. They're so serious over their folly. However, it isn't in his favor, but it's in his favor."

"A woman with money; so far it sounds reasonable enough. If he must marry, there's a good deal to be said for his choosing a rich wife. However, you'll see her, and tell me about your visit. I should like to know the result."

"You shall know the result."
"I forget whether you smoke? Ah, you limit yourself to one cigar after dinner. Prudent fellow! I never could dimur in any respect. This is the limit to the smoking room."

They sat and smoked for some time in the vast chamber set apart by the club committee to the uses of tobacco and its devotees. Little more was said, however, though Charles Cumberbatch's
love of Miss Mashiter.

Joshua Cumberbatch duly called in Harley street, and found himself in the presence of Miss Mashiter. At a first glance he decided that she was rather an insignificant looking young woman.
"What can Charles see in her?" he asked himself. She was now of statue, and her dress was of a fashionable monotone of dull drab or faded fawn.

She entered the room in a calm,
quiet, almost humble way, holding Mr.
Cumberbatch's card in her right hand
and gently tapping it against the fingers of her left hand.

"Charles's papa, I presume?" she said, with an interrogative air and a very sweet smile. Further, Mr. Cumberbatch noted that her hands were exquisitely small, white and shapely—
with slender tapering fingers and pink nails of filbert form—and that her voice was very sweet, her articulation silvery clear.

"I am so pleased to see you, Mr.
Cumberbatch. Please take this easy chair. Charles and I are such dear friends that I feel I know you already.
I have heard so much of you from him."

By this time Joshua Cumberbatch had decided that there was considerable justification for Charles's proceedings; that Miss Mashiter was indeed a very pretty little woman, and that her dress fitted her remarkably well, amply expressing the symmetrical contours of a perfectly graceful

figure. And then her eyes! They were dark gray of hue, and of very pleasing quality. Mr. Cumberbatch felt quite riddled by glances as keen and bright
as rapier blades.

"You know who I am, of course?"
she continued. "I am Madeline Mashiter. I live alone here. At least I have a sort of duenna—an aunt who is almost bedridden, and who is stone deaf.
The world said that I needed the protection of an old woman. So I sent for Aunt Jane. She's very stupid, but a dear old thing all the same; and we get on very well together. I am my own mistress, of course. This was my father's house, he died in the room immediately over this; and he left me all his money. I am a lone orphan, in fact."

But I think I can take care of myself."
Mr. Cumberbatch began to be of opinion that Miss Mashiter could certainly take care of herself.

"You know how my father made his money? Everybody knows, and so I don't attempt to disguise the fact in any way. I owe fortune to marmalade and mixed pickles. I am not in the least ashamed of it. I live very comfortably. I have everything I want, and the best of everything. But, of course, I am not extravagant. I know the value of money. I was taught that a very early period of my existence. I like to have my money's worth. I keep the servants in strict order, and see myself to the housekeeping accounts. I don't allow any one to cheat me."

After a pause, during which she surveyed Mr. Cumberbatch acutely, she resumed.

"I should like you to understand me, Mr. Cumberbatch. I dare say, I'm not what would be considered generally a lady. I don't in the least care about that. I know I'm not what's called 'in society,' and I don't want to be. I've not been to Court, and I am not going.
Royalty can do without me, I dare say,
and I know that I can do without royalty. You know, of course, how Charley and I became acquainted, so I need not go into that. Like a novel, wasn't it? As a dear boy is Charles, and I've grown quite fond of him. He's rather stupid at times; but, then, I think, most men are stupid. He's good looking enough, and his hair's always nicely brushed, and he dresses beautifully. As it came about somehow that he was engaged. I hardly know how it happened; but Charles seemed to wish it, and I did not so much object. And now you've called, I suppose, Mr.
Cumberbatch, to say, 'Take her, you grandchild; bless you, my children, both; just as they do on the stage.' And she laughed merrily and prettily."

Mr. Cumberbatch was certainly surprised. Miss Mashiter's tone so different from what he had expected her to be.

"Charles should consider himself very fortunate," he said, "that he was able to serve you in any way. Miss Mashiter, I am sure, will be able to do for me of course that he should love
you. Where, indeed," demanded Mr.
Cumberbatch, with some wonder at his own warmth, "where, indeed, could he find one more beautiful, more attractive altogether?"

"It's very kind of you to say so, Mr.
Cumberbatch," observed Miss Mashiter calmly.

"But the prudence of the step he has taken is more open to question.
He's very young; he's still but a boy."

"He does not look like a boy," interposed Miss Mashiter.

"I can produce his certificate of birth if necessary. By a wave of her hand Miss Mashiter signified that such formal evidence was not required.
"He is really not of age," resumed
Mr. Cumberbatch; "he's only learning his profession, and he is entirely without means of his own."

"He counts, of course, upon your providing him with a sufficient income."

"He miscalculates. My money is invested in my business as a limited company. I am sure, by a wave of her hand, for his pay as a subaltern of artillery will be very small. But if he thinks that I can settle upon him any amount of importance, he is much mistaken. He will have what I leave behind me, but that's all, and until that event happens—"

"Please don't speak of it, Mr. Cumberbatch, and don't let us think of anything so dreadful. It quite makes me shiver all over."

"My dear Miss Mashiter, but I thought it best to speak plainly.
Like you, I wish to be understood. I am a plain man of business."

"I am much obliged to you, Mr.
Cumberbatch, for saying so. I should like all my money was settled upon myself."

"That would be the proper course
under the circumstances."

"I would not give any man power to spend my money. I'll keep that in my own hands always."

"Certainly."

"And, of course, its very much against Charles that he is young, and,
in point of fact, so poor."

"Will you doubt he is both young and poor?"

"But—you haven't told me of this,
because you don't like the idea of my being your daughter-in-law?"

"My dear young lady, of what are you thinking? I should be delighted to call you daughter-in-law."

"Will you kiss me, Mr. Cumberbatch, as though I really were your daughter-in-law?"

He was about to touch her forehead
gently and paternally with his lips;
but as she seemed to raise her mouth toward him with an air of expecting to be kissed there, why, he kissed her there. Her eyes sparkled—they usually sparkled; otherwise she was quite cool and calm and collected. As for
Mr. Cumberbatch, he fairly blushed, the crimson of his cheeks being deepened by contrast with the whiteness of his cheeks.

"You see," she said meditatively,
"a woman in my situation really needs
a husband to help and advise her, and comfort her. I'm really very friendless; and I thought it would be very nice to have Charles always near me—
he would have been some one to lean upon at any rate. You are not surprised at my wishing to marry him?"

"Not at all. I think it a very reasonable and natural sort of thing."

"Thank you so much. And you'll come and see me again, won't you dear
Mr. Cumberbatch—you who were so nearly being my papa? You'll come again, and you'll come soon?"

"My dear Miss Mashiter, and he had taken upon himself no second spouse.
He had altogether retired from active service—in his day he had been a distinguished officer of cavalry, playing a brilliant part in several notable engagements—and he now led the life of a retired veteran, with a taste for fashion,
dress, club dinners and gossip and a harmless desire to look as young as he possibly could. He enjoyed himself in his own way. When his health permitted he ambled a little upon a trustworthy hack in the park; but his legs were not what they had been, and he did not trust himself to walk much—he was content to enter to and from his club and his lodgings; and those journeys were not accomplished without effort."

He was no doubt a selfish old gentleman, and was greatly occupied with considering his own welfare and comfort. Still, his manner was good nature, and he rather liked his grandson Charles Cumberbatch.

"I was in the morning, and he was sitting wrapped in an Oriental cloak, reading a book, sipping an early cup of tea—he breakfasted at an early hour, he enjoyed the stimulus and support of a cup of tea during the pauses of his toilet—when a visitor was announced—
Mr. Charles Cumberbatch."

"What's brought you here, youngster?" inquired the old gentleman.

"Have you heard about the Government?" Charles asked excitedly.

"What's he gone and been and done?"

"He talks of getting married again!"

"The deuce, he does! But I don't see what business it is of mine, Charley. Of course I don't want any more grandchildren; but then I don't want any great-grandchildren either. Still, you're going to be married, and why shouldn't he? Live and let live, you know, Charley."

"That's just it. I call it an infernal shame! You really ought to be a minister of state, and to keep the refugees in their new relation, Lady Cumberbatch."

"There was a settlement, I suppose,"
said Joshua Cumberbatch. "May I ask
so much?"

"Certainly there was a settlement,"
replied Sir Hercules. "Her every half-penny is settled upon herself. What of that? What does it matter how a wife's money is settled when husband
and wife love each other as we do?"

"Well, you know, Charley, when
women throw you over all you can do
is to pick yourself up again and walk
off again in an opposite direction."

"This is what she writes to me."
And Charles produced a letter in a
large, bold hand, with a gilded monogram in the corner of the paper. He
read aloud:

"DEAR CHARLEY—So sorry, but it
would never do. You're a nice boy,
and I'm really fond of you; but you're
very young to think of marrying, and
I'm afraid you can't afford it. So
there's an end of it; and please don't say another word to me about it. You can send me back my letters; I've
burned yours."

"You've got to be a little memento
of you. And we'll always be dear friends, you know, Charley. What a charming man your papa is! I like
him very much. Yours,
"MADAME MASHTER."

"Well, there's no mistake about the letter, at any rate," observed Sir Her-
cules. "I am bound to say Miss Mashiter expresses herself very clearly. But I don't see what I can do for you, Char-
ley. I can't make Miss Mashiter marry if she don't want to. I am sorry
for you; of course. I think it's a hard case, especially as she's got money."

"What more can I do?"

"Could you do anything to prevent the Governor from making such a fool of himself, sir?"

"Well, you know, Charley, your father's age. He's his own master.
He's entitled to make a fool of himself
if he likes. He's old enough to know
his own mind."

The young man passed the room in a rage. He stamped, he swore with vexation and the tears stood in his eyes.
"Don't excite yourself, old chap," said Sir Hercules, who was sitting in his armchair, "no good my telling you that there are plenty of other women in the world, because, of course, you want this particular woman. But you can't have her, Charley. That seems plain. It's vexatious, but you'll get over it."

"But to think of my being thrown over for an old fogey like the Governor!"

"Well, he's your own father, Charley, and he's my son; but that's of less importance."

"Can you do anything, sir, to hinder
this marriage?—disgraceful, I call it!" Sir Hercules shook his head. "I might see the lady," he said, after a pause, "although I don't know what good that can do. Is she pretty?"

"I claim her simply beautiful!" exclaimed Charles, ardently.

"I'll certainly see her, said Sir Hercules. "I'll make a point of seeing her.
In fact it's my duty to call upon her, as she's so young, and become a member of the Cumberbatch family; my daughter-in-law—your stepmother, Charley."

Not long afterward there appeared in the Times newspaper, under the head of "Marriages," the following advertisement:

"On the 21st inst., at St. George's, Hanover Square, Sir Hercules Cumberbatch, K. C. B., to Madeline, only daughter of the late Humphrey Mashiter, of Harley street, Cavendish Square, and also of High Holborn. No cards."

Who'd have thought that your grandfather could have been such a fool!" commented Joshua Cumberbatch, angrily.

"He's not been the only fool in the case, I think, sir," said Charles, sardonically.

"At the time of life, too?"

"Yes; he's old enough to know better, certainly."

"He must be mad!"

"If he is, sir, depend upon it his wife
will look him up."

The happy pair had departed to Paris
for their honeymoon.

"I was certainly deceived in that woman," observed Joshua Cum-
berbatch.

"I was deceived, too," added his son.
"Perhaps it will be my grandfather's turn next."

Upon the return to town of Sir Hercules and his bride they hastened to invite their relatives to a family dinner in Harley street.

"Well, Joshua; well, Charley!" cried
the bridegroom. "How do both? glad to see you. You don't look particularly well, either of you. You should try a little change. Welcome to the paternal—the grand-paternal roof!" He was delightfully young and airy. "As fresh as paint," as he truthfully described himself to be.

"So glad you were able to come, both of you!" said Lady Cumberbatch.
"These friendly family parties are so nice!" She squeezed the hands of both father and son.

"Don't look so black, Charley. I never could say 'no' and when you asked, and afterward your father, and after that Sir Hercules, what was I to do? How could I refuse? At any rate, I've been so far true; I've married into the family. I am a Cumberbatch, and it is now your duty to love me—as your grandmother."

"You count upon being a young widow, I suppose," Charles said, sulkily.

Well, in the ordinary course of nature, Sir Hercules—she stopped and added, "Not but what he's a dear old thing and I quite adore him."

"I'm sure I hope he may live a thousand years," said Charley.

"Don't be spiteful. But in any case,
you know, Charley, you can't marry
your grandmother!"

Then came the announcement, "Dinner is served."

Over the wine Sir Hercules informed his son and grandson that the married state was a very happy state,
and counselled them to take unto themselves wives at the earliest possible opportunity.

"O, one wife apiece, sir, I suppose," said Charley, impudently.

Sir Hercules observed that he thought they would find one wife apiece sufficient, and they proposed that they should fill their new relation, Lady Cum-
berbatch.

"There was a settlement, I suppose,"
said Joshua Cumberbatch. "May I ask
so much?"

"Certainly there was a settlement,"
replied Sir Hercules. "Her every half-
penny is settled upon herself. What of
that? What does it matter how a
wife's money is settled when husband
and wife love each other as we do?"

"Well, you know, Charley, when
women throw you over all you can do
is to pick yourself up again and walk
off again in an opposite direction."

"This is what she writes to me."
And Charles produced a letter in a
large, bold hand, with a gilded monogram in the corner of the paper. He
read aloud:

"DEAR CHARLEY—So sorry, but it
would never do. You're a nice boy,
and I'm really fond of you; but you're
very young to think of marrying, and
I'm afraid you can't afford it. So
there's an end of it; and please don't
say another word to me about it. You can send me back my letters; I've
burned yours."

"You've got to be a little memento
of you. And we'll always be dear
friends, you know, Charley. What a charming man your papa is! I like
him very much. Yours,
"MADAME MASHTER."

"Well, there's no mistake about the
letter, at any rate," observed Sir Her-
cules. "I am bound to say Miss Mas-
hiter expresses herself very clearly. But I don't see what I can do for you, Char-
ley. I can't make Miss Mashiter marry if she don't want to. I am sorry
for you; of course. I think it's a hard
case, especially as she's got money."

"What more can I do?"

"Could you do anything to prevent the Governor from making such a
fool of himself, sir?"

"Well, you know, Charley, your father's age. He's his own master.
He's entitled to make a fool of himself
if he likes. He's old enough to know
his own mind."

THE REPUBLICAN.

OAKLAND, MARYLAND.

JAS. A. HAYDEN,
Editor and Proprietor.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.
One copy, one year, $1.50
Six months, .85
Three months, .45
INvariably in advance.

TERMS OF ADVERTISING.
First insertion, $1 per square of 8 lines,
50 cents per square for each additional insertion.
Special contracts for advertising longer
than three months.

Correspondents must enclose full name and
address, not necessarily for publication, but
as a private guarantee of good faith. Rejected
communications will not be returned.

SATURDAY, JULY 12, 1879.

What a wretched swindle it was for Congress to vote a month's extra pay to its already over-salaried employees!

The Democrats did not end the special session as jubilantly as they commenced it, but, like the boy who was kicked by the mule, they know
more than they did before.

Congress voted $125 to each member to pay for his "stationery" for the extra session. This would buy for each M. C. at least 25,000 envelopes, to be used in three months
—or 300 letters a day. Expense to the public treasury about $50,000.
"Reform."

Even the New York Sun, chief among all the Democratic organs, is moved to sum up the result of the contest in Congress in this wise:
"The end and net result of the extra session is that the Democracy are covered with disgrace, while glory is shed upon Hayes. What a disgusting business!"

The Democratic officeholders in Baltimore city have been heavily assessed by the city campaign committee—those receiving $500 to $900, 1 per cent. of their yearly income; $900
to $1,500, 1 1/2 per cent.; $1,500 to $2,000, 2 per cent.; $2,000 to $3,000, 3 per cent.; and over $3,000 4 per cent.
The grumbling of the taxed is both loud and deep.

The only point on which the Ohio
Democratic platform is able to criticize John Sherman's financial policy
is in the increase of the bonded debt.
From last December to last May the bonded debt has been increased $143,000,000, and the changes will be rung on this by every Democratic speaker from now till the funding operations are completed, the increase being due to the issue of 48 before the 11 came in. When the latter are all taken up the decrease of the debt in the last 11 years from its highest point in 1865 will amount to $583,- 000,000. At the same rate the entire debt would be paid off before the 1 per cent. bonds fall due.

Two of the Democrats that engineered "the Mississippi plan" of carrying elections in 1875 have fallen out, and one of them, Dixon, has peached, squealed, or otherwise betrayed the conspiracy. He explains how the vote of Yazoo County was changed from 2,199 Republican and 638 Democratic in 1872, to 2 Republican and 4,911 Democratic in 1875. He helped to stuff the ballot-boxes himself, but he indignantly denies having appropriated the money found on the corpses of Patterson, the Republican member of the Legislature, after they had killed him, and alleges that it was turned into the Democratic campaign fund, from which $3,000
were paid to stuff the ballot-boxes.
This was in accordance with the current Democratic theory of "free elections."

The New York Herald says grain
will not be so high this year as it was in 1875 because of the needs of our own people, but it will certainly be sufficient to make producers and carriers reasonably happy. One hundred million dollars' worth will be wanted in France, as the Ministry already declares, because of a bad year in that country; and one of the explanations given in the British House of Commons of the distress
in England now felt is that the year has been a very bad one with the farmers. Throughout Europe there has been all summer unfavorable weather, and as this is the real source of the trouble in England and France,
the same trouble, as deficient harvest, though we do not now actually learn the fact, will perhaps be found to have been experienced as widely
as the common cause has prevailed.
Our year, on the contrary, will be an extremely good one; as the greatest part of the deficiency in Western Europe will certainly be made up from this side we shall be able to send to the people beyond the sea all they need without such a drain upon our resources as to make grain
dear for our own people.

GRANTVILLE, June 30th, 1879.

ED. REPUBLICAN:—I have been for some time, watching the edifying (?) controversy between the two Democratic organs of our county,
with a degree of amusement and satisfaction only possible under existing circumstances, to a truly Republican breast—a satisfaction, however,
which has been somewhat unpleasantly seasoned by the recognition of a fact which has forced itself upon me after a careful weekly scanning of your columns, viz: that you, in your personal magnanimity, were failing to make use of the evident weakness, confusion and disorganization in the ranks of our opponents for the benefit of the party which your paper represents. Therefore I was very glad to see your editorial columns so well filled in your issue of the 21st inst., by "Facts vs. Cheek," and, am not sorry to see in the Herald the really amusing reply which your "double-shotted broadside" has elicited. While recognizing the fact that this article is an editorial answer to an editorial, and that you,
with right and truth strengthening your arm, will need no backing in the little political skirmish which seems to have begun, I am strongly tempted to take up my pen and give to your columns as briefly as possible
the views of a Republican who is not a politician. That the pen indicting it is swung by a truly Democratic mind, (according to the modern and political acceptance of the word,) I there can be no reasonable doubt, for while the writer says so repeatedly
"I acknowledge," "I grant,"
"I admit," "I charge," "I assert," he does not seem to regard it as necessary to say in one single instance "We prove." This deliberate mode of unproven assertion "is a sort of epidemic for which Democrats seem to have a peculiar affinity," as the editorial columns of the Herald
states in regard to "wrangling" and "contention." While these assertions, charges, &c., may have some weight
with the satellites of the Herald,
I think the Republicans and Southern Democratic will demand
some better ground for implicit belief and acceptance than the unproven
assertion of the editor of the Herald.

Not forgetting that it is your prerogative to answer their assertions,
and not doubting that you will do so
to the perfect satisfaction of our people, I should still like to make a few counter assertions; for to my unsophisticated and unpolitical vision it would seem well to deal in something more specific than the mere declamation with which our Democratic friends have become so familiar. The Democratic politician of the present day seems to regard it as only necessary to cry "stealing," "fraud,"
"corruption," "taxation" and "want"
and point at the Republican party,
thus very creditably emulating the example of the street arab, who shouted vociferously in the ears of a credulous old man, "Mike picked up a dime you dropped and shinned it";
see, there he goes. "I'll catch him
for you," and off he flies, frantically grasping in his sleeve the good, fat
pocket book that he has abstracted
from the pocket of the innocent old fellow who, though he does not see Mike, firmly believes that his self-appointed detective is on his track.
This is about the position of the Democratic party; and, unfortunately, the old fellows who stand around and implicitly believe in their "Mike"
though they do not see him, and calmly wait for the one who has cried loudest "I'll catch him for you," to bring him down, are not hard to find. When the time-honored one-eyed old stager, Sammie, entered the lists of our national political race course, it will be remembered that he did so with a great flourish of trumpets, crying, "Re-form! reform! See how I have reduced your taxes dragging my administration as Governor!"
And as usual, many credulous ones
stood round—saw, heard and believed without one question—when in truth New York had been labouring under a burden of debt since the close of the war, during which heavy loans had been secured for the purpose of paying bounties. At the beginning of the administration of John
A. Dix, (the Republican Governor who preceded Samuel J. Tilden,) the debt amounted to $15,000,000, and he,
during his administration, reduced it to $700,000. This twenty-six twentysevenths of this burden of principal and interest was lifted from the shoulders of the State; and when Sammie took his seat the taxes were somewhat, if not proportionally reduced, and he appropriated the credit and sang his own praises to the tune of reform and reduced taxes. But the trading, thinking, reasoning
men, who make up the rank and file of the Republican party, are not to be blinded by these blustering outcries of reform, these enormous promises of relief, these high-sounding charges and assertions. They look into the past and present of the Democratic party and say, "By their works ye shall know them." They see that the few honest, loyal Democrats who have existed, are a thing of the past;

that those who could not consent to fall into line behind the same leaders who leveled their guns at the life of our nation 18 years ago, must leave
the party, for they are its chosen leaders. They see that to-day the very men whom the Government
then paid us for shooting at—who rendered necessary the expenditure of $1,000,000,000 and the sacrifice of thousands of precious lives—are our Congressmen. "Four Senators only who now serve us were Union soldiers, while twenty were in the rebel army. Not a solitary man from all the South who stood loyally by the Government, with his life in his hand, comes as a Representative."
And why? Because the Southern States are carried by the Democracy,
while we know that in at least half of the 13 States that rebelled, the Union voters are in the majority.
And these men stand in our legislative halls, not as repentant prodigals,
but as rebels still, and their mouth-pieces proclaim the self-same revolutionary sentiments that but a few years ago our land sacrificed its brightest jewels to suppress. Listen to the sentiments of Col. Breckenridge, which elicited uproarious applause from a concourse of people at Louisville. "A Republic of States can be preserved only on the principles on which the Confederacy was founded;" and further on, "I say my hand upon my heart and lift my eyes to God, and in the name of this assembly avow that this homage is in honor of martyrs to liberty, who died for the right and gave their lives in defence of the truth." This over the graves of the rebel dead.

And let us take a word or two from the mouth-piece of the Southern Democracy, the Mississippi
Southern States:

"Hayes must surrender or he must be starved out, if it knocks the country into giblets. Better this—a thousand fold better this—than to permit
the Federal hordes to interfere with free elections when it lies in our power to prevent it."

"Free elections," meaning of course,
liberty to return a big Democratic majority. But hear the States speak
again:

"This Union is just as hateful to us to-day, just as abhorrent and just as unnatural as it was in 1861; but we have come back to stay, and what is more, we have come back to rule.
Why? Because the Southern people and their sympathizers in the North constitute 230,000 majority of the population of the United States.
This majority will be swelled to 1, 200,000 when we have disfranchised
the negroes. And we propose to disfranchise the negroes. So it will be well for you of the minority to talk less and in a lower key. The next time you lay so much as your little finger on the South, the red blood of our fallen heroes will be revenged in a manner that will teach the people of Massachusetts that there is indeed a God in Israel."

And these are a few of the outpourings of the Solid South upon which the Democrats of the North lean with such unctious and depend with such security.

Now our opponents will howl that we are waving the bloody shirt. Yes,
if this is the bloody shirt we do wave
it we shake it out in full view of the many, in whose minds the memory of past sacrifices for the preservation of our country is ever fresh; and while the graves of our fallen heroes are still green in our land and their loss is still felt in our hearts, we do not propose to forget the object for which they were called "to sacrifice
a thousand times more terrible than that of Juggernaut." Of course the Democracy howl and hold up their hands at the mention of the bloody shirt, and cry out, "Let the old wounds heal," and we say "Yes," but wounds never heal until the gangrene is killed, and this old sore is with a poison more deadly than the wound.

Their position is very like that of an unfortunate pupil in an old time school in which the monitors were elected by vote. This youth—whom we will call Jefferson, in whom the spirit of rebellion was always rife, had caused the old Professor a deal of trouble, and on one occasion he was caught bringing home a large number of the weaker minded and more excitable of his schoolmates from an egg stealing expedition. This was reported to the master, and was regarded by him as a proceeding that would disgrace and bring destruction
on his institution; accordingly the leader and his associates were severely reprimanded. That night while the old master and his faithful followers (who had been too honorable to disgrace themselves or the institution by a participation in Jefferson's doubtful proceeding,) were leaving the school house they were mercilessly egged by the rebels, with the proceeds of their disgraceful expedition. "Now," said the old master, "these boys want me to expel them, but for no good; they belong to my school and there's good among them; only a few hot headed ones are responsible, and they need to be dragged into good behavior." The next day he flogged them accord-
-

ly. Time went on and the old spirit of rebellion was not openly shown,
and when the day for the quarterly
election of members arrived, ambition prompted Jefferson to ask the old master to nominate him for the position. "Far," said he to his followers, "I can depend on you to stick to me, and if I can get a few votes from these other fellows I'll show them who'll be monitor and who'll report bad conduct." When the Professor took the platform and nominated Jefferson as a candidate
the faithful ones rose to a boy and pointing the finger of scorn at the applicant cried out in a voice of thunder, "Eggs!" The embryo politician grew red with indignation, and poking his fist into his eye howled out, "Now I think that's pretty rough. How can they expect me to get any votes if they keep shouting eggs?" They might say anything but that and I would n't mind."

And thus the Democratic party stands with its fist in its eye, metaphorically, and howls at every mention of what it recognizes to be its weakest point.

And now, Mr. Editor, I must beg pardon for having occupied so much space in this my first effort, but the views of every true Republican will be of consequence in the coming contest, and we must not be content with merely voting, so I say with the Herald, "Go on brother Hayden, touch the old things up again;" we can stand it if they can.

Yours, &c.,

BROWN.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

(Special Correspondence to The Republican.)

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 8, 1879.

Congress having gone home and left the last case without an official exponent, the Democrats are busy explaining the grand fizzle called the extra session. It is a difficult job.

The Confederates came together big with threats of starving the Government to terms, and they went away
content with "starving" the U. S.
marshals only, and they will not be starved, since the President must keep those officials employed and Congress must in future provide for them. All they did was simply to embarrass those marshals who cannot afford to work and wait for their pay at a future period. If the Democratic party is satisfied with this slender outcome, the Republican party ought to be. But it will turn out that the country is far from being satisfied, as the coming elections will show.

I should not forget to mention again
the significant fact that the Democrats entirely dropped the chief subject of their soliloquy, the U. S. election supervisors, finding that the country was in favor of retaining them. In fact the whole Democratic ground was substantially abandoned,
thus showing that the extra session
was a mischievous intrusion to create political disturbance.

In connection with Presidential gossip, a story is told in this city which is interesting, and confirms what I have said of the friendship felt for one candidate. The story goes that a few days before Congress adjourned, Senator Conkling entertained at dinner, at Wornley's, a dozen or more prominent Republican leaders, chiefly warm friends of General Grant, but who believes the ex-President will not again be a candidate. The New York Senator asked each of his guests who would be the strongest candidate in that case; that is who would poll the full Republican vote and at the same time not incite the antagonism of the other aspiring candidates. Nobody volunteered to name any person who could fill the bill. Senator Conkling said:
"I have a candidate; it is William Wardlaw, of Minnesota. He could not poll the full vote of the party,
would not make enemies among the leaders if nominated, and would come to the nominating convention with the solid strength of the Northwest in his support." This story is plausible from the fact that Senator Conkling himself is not a candidate, and would probably like to lead a popular movement towards some other man,
since he believes his friend General
Grant is off the course.

The movement for a National Fair
as a presumption in Washington is going well. The sum of $15,000 has been subscribed as a beginning, and the prospect is good.

LOCAN.

A reform in the present method of conducting Congressional contests is greatly needed. As things are now managed, the country is subjected to a heavy tax every time a "chain-
and" chooses to contest an opponent's seat. The spofford-Kellogg contest, for instance, will, it is said, cost about $10,000. The only substantial result achieved by this investigation was to develop a remarkable outgrowth of phenomenal lying, and for this the people are called upon to pay $10,000! It is needless to say that this system offers a premium to rascality and that no good purpose whatever is subserved by it. The costs of all contests, except in penitentiaries, should be borne either by the contestants themselves or by the public parties whose interests may be involved in the issue. Such a rule,
if enforced, would save the country
a good deal of scandal and expense.

The Democratic Failure.

They have not prohibited the employment of the army to enforce the election law. The acts 1792, 1795 and 1861 are still the law of the land.
Under that law Washington employed the army to enforce the revenue laws in Pennsylvania; Jefferson to break up the Burr conspiracy in 1806;
Jackson to enforce the revenue laws
in South Carolina; Pierce to enforce the national laws in Kansas; Buchanan to "keep the peace at the polls"
in Washington; Lincoln to enforce the supreme law of the land in a number of Southern States. In virtue of the same law, the present Executive may employ any part or all of the land and naval forces to enforce the national election law in New York, in San Francisco, in New Orleans, or anywhere else within the bounds of the national dominion.
The proposition to repeal this time honored law of the nation, in its application to the enforcement of the national election law, by an act forbidding any employment of military force for that purpose, utterly failed.
The clause passed in its stead, declaring that the army shall not be employed as a police at elections, is meaningless verbiage—a mere re-enactment of what was and always has been the law of this country. As a military force, the army, or any part of it the Executive may think necessary, may be employed now to enforce the election law by the same constitutional authority that the army was employed by Washington,
Jefferson, Jackson, Polk, Pierce,
Buchanan and Lincoln to enforce other national laws. On this part of their programme the Bourbon blan-
ders have gained nothing but the unprofitable notoriety of enemies of a law to protect the ballot-box against free fraud and lawless violence.—
Chicago Times, Ind. Dem.

The Maine Republicans have nominated Hon. D. F. Davis for government. The platform declares the Union to be a "nation," not a confederacy,
and that the national government is supreme on all subjects lodged with it by the constitution; that it is the right and duty to protect the citizen
in all his legal rights, including that of the ballot; condemn as revolutionary the attempt of the Democratic party in Congress to force the Executive to consent to the repeal of laws made to protect the citizen in these rights; approves the Presidential vetoes; protests against the reopening, by Democratic leaders, of exciting and sectional issues settled
by the victory of the national arms;
endorses the Republican financial policy; opposes an irredeemable paper currency as the worst curse that can be inflicted upon a nation, and sustains temperance and prohibition principles.

It is regarded as a good joke to be enjoyed by the country (and paid for by the taxpayers) that a Democratic Congress forced an extra session which has cost about one million of dollars, and the net result is that they have got the President to sign a bill
against the use of troops at the polls
as a police force. When it is further known that he has opposed such use
all the time, never having employed them that way, and never intending to, and never contending that he had a right to, the attitude of the Democrats is very ridiculous, and they will be not upon their trumps next fall to answer the question as to these matters which will naturally suggest themselves. Stump speakers who are going to Ohio for the Republicans say that of all the weak points in a party whose cause has been illustrated by blunders, this last is about the largest, and will be made to serve with excellent effect there this summer and fall.

The Vicksburg Herald ought to be able to do a world of good to the Southern people when it talks to them
in this plain fashion: "Many Southern Democrats, on account of foolish sentiment and prejudice, are the abject slaves of the Northern Democracy. These Southern Democrats are known as Bourbons. Opposition to the North, opposition to the
"uligger," opposition to education,
opposition to progress, and opposition to peace on earth and good will toward men, are their watchwords.
This fettered, they have sold themselves body and soul to the Northern Democrats, who snub them whenever it is their interest to do so. This sort of thing can't last. The Bourbons may for a time deceive the body of the Southern people, but the day
is rapidly coming when every state South will look to her own interest
regardless of sentiment or prejudice."

It is the only medicine I would give to my baby, a mother said, speaking of Dr. Bull's Baby Syrup.
At all drug stores, 25 cents.

The reported discovery of a boy supposed to be Charley Ross, in Canada, was a heartless hoax.

PRESIDENT HAYES AND THE PARTY.

WASHINGTON, July 3.—The remarkable good feeling which manifested itself between the members of the two parties on the adjournment of Congress showed that both sides
were conscious that there was not,
after all, much at stake in the hung and bitter struggle of the extra session, and that the three months and a half were spent, not in saving the country or destroying its liberties,
but in maneuvering for political position. The Democrats have gone home apparently in as good spirits as the Republicans. They whisper to each other, "At any rate we have kept the party together;" while the Republicans wink at each other and say, with a quiet chuckle, "Well, we have managed to reunite our party once more." But neither side is confident of the future, and both are anxiously looking for the result of the fall elections to indicate what the people think.

The President has, it is generally admitted, been the greatest and perhaps the only real gainer by the tedious extra session. It has made him a force in his party. The Administration has become in the last three months the head of the party,
and though there are still vigorous mildewers like Blaine and Conkling,
who stir up a perpetual revolt against the President they put into the White House, Mr. Hayes has now the great body of Republican representatives standing by him, and it must be said that he has never overestimated the character and weight of the senatorial opposition to him. He frequently says that a quarrel between a President and the leaders of his party in the Senate is the normal condition of American politics. It has never alarmed him, and it will not hereafter inconvenience him even. There are already strains which show that the anti-Administration Republican leaders in the Senate have carried their colleagues further than they will ever carry them hereafter in opposition to the President. There is a growing impression among the Republicans that Mr. Hayes is a remarkably cool hand; patient, wary, not capable of searing; a shrewd and long-headed politician, and a far wiser and safer party leader than the irate senators who have vainly battled against him
so often.

These Republicans who are without an afterthought and simply desires of the success of their party are going home with greatly increased confidence in Mr. Hayes, and the faith that he is on the whole the best leader for them, particularly when elections are at hand. The factions opposition of Republican Senators has lost them both influence and ac-tiveness of late. Mr. Conkling tried in vain to get the New York delegation in the House to vote against the Army bill. Mr. Chandler met with the same ill success with the Michigan delegation. Gen. Garfield, who was understood to represent the President, easily beat them both and knows it.

Marriage Licenses.

Marriage Licenses were granted to the following parties during the month of June:

H. A. Schaffer and Rebecca A.
Roth.
Jas. Carey and Ada F. Blocher.
Daniel E. Beckman and Sarah A.
Lehr.
Geo. W. Dunham and Laura B.
Collins.

Roll of Honor.

The following persons have paid
us on account of subscription, advertising, &c., since our last report:

Rev. Jacob Lyall, Henry Warrick,
Geo. F. Fitch, Gilford Miller,
Samuel Lavett, Thos. Goldington,
M. E. Plummer, E. L. Miller & Co.,
S. E. Shiner, Jacob Schwartzendruber,
Wm. Groves, Hon. Geo. W. Wilson,
W. H. Friend.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

Trustee's Sale OF VALUABLE REAL ESTATE.

By virtue of a decree of the Circuit Court
for Allegany county, sitting as a Court of Equity, the undersigned, Trustee, will offer for sale, AT BLOOMINGTON, IN FRONT OF WILLIAM MOODY'S STORE,

On Wednesday, the 13th day of August, 1879,

AT 10 O'CLOCK, A. M.,

All the valuable real estate commonly called

Walnut Bottom,

containing about 750 acres of land, more or less, situate in Carroll county, about three miles from Bloomington, one mile from North Branch of the Potomac, and joining the lands of Messrs. Roman, Burnard and Sewall's heirs.

The improvements consist of

TWO LOG DWELLINGS,

Apple Orchard and about 120 acres in fine
state of cultivation; the residue, or unimproved land, is heavily covered with valuable timber.

From surrounding indications the whole
tract is supposed to overlay large veins of
coal; the growing crops reserved from sale,
are the third cash crop of nine or ten years.

TERMS OF SALE, as prescribed by this decree are: One-third cash on day of sale or ratification thereof; the balance in two equal
payments in twelve and twenty-four months,
with interest from day of sale, to be secured
by note of the purchaser with approved security.

WM. BRACE,
Trustee.

7 12 41

LOCAL NEWS.

—Summer visitors are not coming in so rapidly as was expected earlier in the season.

—Our farmers are now engaged cutting their wheat, which promises an average crop.

—Mr. I. W. Stainaker will take Mexican or trade dollars and allow 100 cents for them.

—200 sacks G. A. Salt for sale at Wm. P. Totten's Cheap Cash Store, Oakland, Md.

—Mrs. Wagner and son, and Mrs. Pickenpaugh and daughter, of Morgantown, W. Va., are visiting at Mr. A. G. Sturgiss'.

—The rains of the past week have improved the appearance of corn, oats, potatoes, and garden vegetables very much. A good crop of oats and an extraordinary yield of corn is expected.

—Died—July 6th, 1879, at the residence of her daughter, Mrs. M. A. Price, Pittsburgh, Pa., Mrs. Almira Wineoff, consort of the late Rev. Jesse Wineoff, in the 68th year of her age.

—The Orphans' Court was in session Tuesday, but no business of general interest was transacted, except the filing of the first and final account of Henry Warnick, administrator of the estate of Kessiah Warnick, deceased.

—Dr. W. F. Funderberg, Oculist, and Aurist, from Cumberland, Md., is now, stopping at the "Davis House," where all those suffering from diseases of the eye, ear, nose and throat can consult him every day in the week, excepting on Saturdays and Sundays. All consultations free. Hours, 9 A. M. to 4 P. M.

—Mr. Maurice A. Healey, a well known citizen, and recently president of the Pennsylvania railroad in Maryland, died at his residence on Washington street at 4:30 o'clock yesterday morning. He had been dangerously ill since Friday last of an affection of the brain and nervous system, and his life was despaired of since Sunday. He became unconscious several days ago and remained so up to the time of his death. —Cumbeled News, Wednesday.

Church Services—Sunday.

M. E. Church—Preaching morning and evening.

Band of Hope and Good Templars.

The Band of Hope and Good Templars will hold a joint meeting in the M. E. Church Thursday evening next. The programme will be furnished by the Good Templars. The exercises will be interesting. All are invited.

Lutheran Conference.

The Joint Conference of the Ev. Lutheran Synods of Maryland and Virginia met in the Oakland Ev. Lutheran Church Tuesday evening, and are still in session at the time of going to press (Thursday morning.) We expect to publish the proceedings in full in our next issue.

Circuit Court.

The July term of the circuit court, was convened Monday morning at 10 o'clock, Judges Peare and Motter on the Bench. The term lasted less than two hours, the time being occupied in calling the docket, making entries, &c. Mr. W. A. Bailey was examined and admitted to the Bar.

Election of Officers.

Officers of Sheelid Lodge No. 122, I. O. O. F. to serve for the ensuing term, were elected and installed Monday night, as follows:

Noble Grand—G. W. Legge, Vice Grand—G. A. Spedden, Rec. Sec'y—J. A. Hynson, Per. Sec'y—W. H. Tower.

Real Estate Transfers.

The following is a list of real estate transfers filed for record in the office of W. H. Tower, Clerk of the Circuit Court for Garrett county, for the week ending July 10:

James Harden and wife to Leonard Shatzer, part of a tract of land containing 5 acres and 42 perches; $131.50.

Rhoda Duckworth and Henry H. Duckworth to Jonas Whitefell, part of Broad's Farm, containing 150 acres; $270.

Base Ball.

On Saturday, the 5th inst., the "Independent" Base Ball Club, of this place, went to Deer Park to play the "Modoc" club, of the latter village. After considerable delay the game was called at 11 o'clock, and finished at 5. The game was witnessed by a considerable number of spectators from Oakland and Deer Park. The umpire was Mr. George Lee, who gave his decisions in a fair and impartial manner throughout. The following is the score by innings:

Innings.	1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9	Total.
Independent.	2	1	1	0	1	1	1	1	1	10.
Modoc.	0	0	0	1	0	1	1	1	1	5.

The Fourth.

There was no marked celebration nor outburst of patriotism in Oakland on the Fourth. Business was generally suspended. Bunting was displayed from the liberty poles, the Oakland Cornet Band played a few national and patriotic airs, and the juvenile portion of our population amused themselves by firing toy pistols, fire crackers and the like. A few small pic-nics were held near town, but generally it was a dull day.

Travels in Classic and Bible Lands.

F. S. De Hass, D. D., late U. S. Consul at Jerusalem, will lecture on Classic and Bible Lands, in the Memorial Church, Oakland, Friday evening, 11th inst., at 8 o'clock. This lecture describes the remains of historic Rome; the faded glory of Grecian art; late discoveries of Dr. Schliemann at Mycenae and Troy; unrivaled Temple of Diana at Ephesus; ruins of Sardis and Baalbec; Damascus, the oldest city in the world; Palestine and her holy places; Garden of Eden and other places of sacred interest.

Painfully Injured.

We learn by a private letter that on the 3d inst., Edward Shank, son of Mr. Henry Shank, of this county, was severely injured at Dunbar, Pa., while loading coke. His nose was broken, his right arm bruised, his upper jaw fractured, and his eyes injured to some extent. He is now at his brother-in-law's, at Dunbar, has the best of medical aid and is rapidly recovering.

Rev. O. C. Miller was painfully injured, Monday last, by falling from the scaffolding of the new church being erected in Westernport. He fell a distance of fifteen feet, striking the joists below. Fortunately no bones were broken or internal injuries sustained. He was brought home the same day and placed in the care of Dr. J. Lee McComas, and is now rapidly recovering.

Dead Body Found.

We learn from a gentleman who came from Portland Monday, that the dead body of a man supposed to be a peddler, was found about 2 miles from that place, on the Kingwood road, on Friday last. The body was found in a dark hollow, in some laurel bushes, and had a bullet wound in the temple or forehead. A pistol, with an empty chamber, and the rest loaded, was found by the body. On his person was a note, stating that he intended to kill himself. An inquest was held, and a verdict rendered that he came to his death by his own hand, but some being dissatisfied with the verdict, a second meeting of the jury was held, the result of which we did not learn. Several of the people of Portland remember seeing him there some time ago. It is supposed by some that he was murdered and that the note was placed there as a blind, while others think it a case of suicide.

Reorganization of the Literary.

Saturday evening last, in pursuance of a report of a special committee, the character of the exercises at the Literary was changed, and an organization, based upon the plan of the House of Delegates of the State was effected. Mr. H. Wheeler (ombs was elected Chairman pro tem. Permanent officers were then elected as follows:

Speaker—Thos. J. Peddicord. Clerk—Ed. H. Stiebel. Sergeant at Arms—F. A. Thayer. The assignment of counties was then made as follows, the names of all the counties being placed in a hat, and the members being assigned to each as it was drawn forth: 1st. Legislature District of Baltimore city, G. W. Merrill; 2d, Jas. D. Hamill; 3d, E. H. Sineell; Calvert county, C. H. Low; Baltimore county, T. J. Peddicord; Charles, H. W. Combs; Wicomico, E. Z. Tower; Montgomery, J. S. Doveconon; Anne Arundel, W. M. Arnold; Dorchester, H. Allen; Carroll, Miss L. A. Thayer; Washington, G. T. Porter; Harford, F. A. Thayer; Allegany, T. J. Mitchell; St. Mary's, W. P. Townsend; Cecil, N. B. Wayn; Frederick, W. H. Tower; Kent, W. S. Wolf; Garrett, A. J. Harne; Prince Anne's, A. B. Woodcock; Prince George, Miss Ella; Howard, J. Clagett Peddicord; Worcester, G. H. Fritchard; Somerset, Mrs. W. P. Totten; Carroll, Dr. J. Lee McComas.

The Speaker gave notice that the committee appointments would be assigned at next meeting, after which the House adjourned.

We think this a good change. To say the least it will be some lifting out of the usual run, and as the members all seem to favor this change, will no doubt be successful. Several have expressed their intention to join as soon as they get in working order. It is to be hoped that all will take part and render the exercises instructive to themselves and interesting to those who may attend.

Suicide.

James Davis, residing at Mt Zion, near Swanton, this county, committed Suicide on the morning of the 4th of July, by hanging himself. The particulars that we have been able to glean from conversation with persons living in the neighborhood are as follows:

The deceased has been in ill health for about a year and was at times very despondent. On the morning of the 4th, about 10 o'clock, he went up stairs in his house and requested his daughter, (who was sleeping, having been sitting up with her sick mother during the previous night,) to go down stairs and prepare dinner. She noticed that he had a log chain in his hand, and asked him what he intended doing. He told her that he was going to stop some leaks in the roof, and asked her to bring him a bench from the room below. She brought the bench and went down stairs and commenced preparing dinner, but being overcome by drowsiness, add down and fell asleep. She thinks she awoke in about half an hour, and not hearing sounds from above went up to see what her father was doing, when she found him hanging by the neck to the chain, which had been fastened to a rafter. Fearing the effect upon her sick mother, she did not let her know what had occurred, but went to the nearest neighbor and summoned assistance, but when the assistance came they found life extinct. The body was taken down when it was found that the hands had evidently been tied together with a strip of hickory bark, but in the death struggles the left hand had become unloosed, the bark remaining around the right hand. Appearances indicated that he had stood upon the bench and fastened one end of the chain around a rafter and the other end around his neck, then with the aid of his teeth had tied his hands, and then kicked the bench from under his feet.

It is supposed by those present that the deceased had tied his hands after adjusting the chain, fearing that he might repeat his rash design, and by the aid of his disengaged hands, release himself. Deceased was about 49 years of age, and leaves a wife and five children.

The "Pulham" Expedition.

As our own Correspondent has reached the river's bank, and a had having been ordered, a hurried consultation was held among the Generals, and it was determined to throw out a strong skirmishing force at once with a view to finding out the enemy's whereabouts and feeling their strength. Gannymede, who had been sent on a reconnaissance, returned with information that he had seen signs that led him to believe we were in close proximity to the "Scaly Tribe," at which announcement the cheeks of both Gen. Tytus and Col. Swan perceptibly paled, and the nervous working of their facial muscles intimated much inward emotion, whether of joy or fear it was impossible to tell, but from their subsequent behavior it was evidently "mixed." The plan of action arranged was as follows: General Wardwell would accompany the invading forces, whilst General Swan would hold the main body in reserve, keep open our front and rear, and endeavor, if possible, to open communication with "Port Deakins," some miles distant in our immediate front, at which point we hoped to establish our base of operations. Gen. Wardwell's forces consisted of Tytus' brigade of "Gum boat coers," Col. Davis' Swan's battalion of "Three of a kind," Gannymede's "Supply and Sucker" Corps, and the Wardwell "Fast Waders." Swan's battalion was at once thrown across upon the left bank of the Cheat, and had hardly gotten into position when a band of "Scalys" attacked him and endeavored to cut off his supplies; Col. Swan succeeded, however, after a desperate struggle in capturing their chief, having performed which, he sent a telephone dispatch to Gen. Wardwell, to know what he should do with him. That sagacious officer suggested that he take him ashore, which feat the Colonel accomplished and turned him over to Corporal Gannymede, who bound him securely with a heupen cord. Gannymede's heart rejoiced within him at this first "meat in the bag," and so greatly were his "cannibalistic" feelings aroused that it was with much difficulty he was prevented from devouring the poor "scalys" on the spot. Hungrier and more vicious appetites, however, prevailed, and the prisoner was retained for a worse fate. Gen. Tytus having now gotten his "Gum boat coers" on the ground to be occupied by him, viz: the right bank, and the "Fast Waders" having the center, the entire command was put in motion, the "Sucker Corps" being thrown to the front and then hastily withdrawn, hoping thereby to allure the wary "scalys" from their lurking places.

The "Sucker Corps," however, was hardly equal to the occasion; their long march, and that, too, without proper refreshment, had greatly unfitted them for this dangerous and active service, and many of them were unflattered and seduced by the enemy from their secret hiding places, they themselves escaping without injury. Gen. Tytus, however, sustaining himself nobly in a hand to hand conflict, succeeded in placing "hors du combat" a noted brave of the "blackbas" tribe, though in the action he lost his "sucker," and Gannymede was forced to recross the river with his whole train, to furnish a fresh supply. Col. Swan having forced the "wading," now descended rapidly by way of the centre, full upon the enemy's middle host, and whilst gallantly pressing forward to success and victory, was suddenly checked in his headlong career by the vigorous onslaught of an unseen though not ineffect foe. Death or capture, or even both, seemed inevitable. The whole army was stricken dumb with consternation and apprehension; but the brave Colonel, though losing all else, did not lose his voice. Throwing away his arms and looking above for aid, he shouted with stentorian though somewhat hysterical voice, "somethings got me! somethings got me!" and with strides that would have put to blush the greatest efforts of the "Fast Waders," he struck for the banks "whereon the wild thyme grows," and having reached them he was so rejoiced that he felt in his pockets to see if he was safe, and finding that "twaseven so, he maketh his heart glad and fortifieth his courage with a meek drop of the rectangle, and amid the loud plaudits of his companions in rods again rushes boldly into the forest of the rays of the setting sun, crying wildly "how far is it to where we stop to-night."

After this sad adventure the spirits of the command being somewhat depressed, we massed our forces and endeavored by a forced march to reach the main body, but General Swan having heard the loud and discordant cries of his offspring thought it would not do to risk the demolition of the entire Swan race, and pushed on as fast as the jaded cavalry could speed toward safety, assistance and Port Deakins. Gen. Wardwell finding he could not effect a junction with the main body resolved to cut his way through, and moving Tytus and his "Gums" upon his close right, with Col. Swan's "Three of a kind" protecting the rear, the march down the river was resumed. Two more desperate engagements ensued between the "scalys" and the "Fast Waders" and the "Gums," in both of which the enemy were worsted, and Gannymede was again made happy in the possession of fresh victims. Night having now set in we began to think of quarters. Luckily we were struck a friend and ally who directed us by a near route to Port Deakins, informing us that the main body had already reached that haven. Pushing on rapidly we soon came in sight of the welcome battlements and heard the sweet strains of life like music, and at the same time caught a glimpse of the officers and their ladies, whirling in the dreamy waltz. Words cannot express the joyful meeting between the Swan's father and son. Indeed, the former was so elated that he at once treated the latter to a bolt of the Milwaukie Green Seal, with the privilege of Gannymede of sucking the cork. Gen. Swan informed us that it was with some difficulty that Col. Deakins, the Commandant, had agreed to entertain us as the garrison was already crowded to its utmost capacity, which was limited, owing to relations then in progress. All having been amicably arranged, Gannymede was ordered to have the prisoners spitted and placed before us for supper. In the meantime a full ration of "rectangle" was served up to all, including the garrison, who, having been out of the services of a commissary by reason of Preston county by-laws, were much exhilarated by its "pleasant addressments."

Gannymede soon announced supper, to which we paid our most dutiful respects, treating our prisoners with all the honors of war, generally observed among their class and kind. Supper being over all was soon busied and confusion in preparing for the night attack; and although the entire force had been on most severe duty during the day, there was not a haggard in the ranks, one not all being eager and ready for the fray. Whilst Gens. Swan and Tytus made ready the fire ships, harpoons, javelins and gags, Gen. Wardwell and Col. Swan, having secured the aid of Admiral Forber, and the brigantine "Open Bottom," put out a force of pickets, hoping to pick up some stragglers during the night. This done they returned to the Port where they found all in readiness, and two guides to show us the enemy's position, and who also were to aid in working the fire ships. The Gens. having closely inspected the commands and found all prepared, the column was put in motion and marched swiftly and silently away thro' the black and shadowy night. The march was long, the way was rough, but our spirits were high and our courage strong. Arriving at Island Point we forded the river and proceeded by a short route through the brush, briars and snakes to Dry Fork Neck, which was to be the starting point of this en de guerre. Here the column was halted, the arms distributed, each man posted as to his duty and urged to be valiant. Again the rectangle was sent around, and every heart was fired and every arm was nerved to strike, eye to strike hand; to strike for homes would have indeed been in order, but as these are not revolutionary times we must not anticipate an act indulged in long before the action was over, by Gens. Swan and Tytus, and even by Gannymede, which latter act was much deplored by the commanding officer, as it has a demoralizing effect upon an already discouraged army. But to proceed with the "gagging." It was the intention of the General to use only the harpoon and javelin during the night, and to lasso such of the enemy as escaped upon the ensuing day. Positions were taken in line, the fire ships were lighted and the valiant army began to seek their prey. Stealthily they creep along the shore, arms raised high in air, ready to descend with unerring aim upon the unconscious foe.

Such a free and warlike array, gentle reader, I trust you may never be shocked by witnessing. Upon the extreme left is Deakins' swartly face, peering with anxious eye upon the river's bed; next on his right, with stern and revengeful mien, the younger Swan moves by eager and cruel hand to plunge his harpoon into the victim's quivering flesh and laugh to see the red blood flow; close following in his wake looms the stalwart Wardwell's form with ready iron poised in air, thus to make sure of murder's work; then intervenes between these warriors bold a brilliant fire ship, blazing with such illuminating power as to reveal unto the eye the hidden mysteries of the deep. But see! what form is that juts out beneath the fire ship's prow, which crouches like "Bertram's in the brake," strikes terror to the beholder's eye! See the wide distended nostril, the gleaming of those basilisk eyes, the fierce, demonic visage distorted with impatience and balled rage! See with what cat like tread he moves, how the glaring eyes peer around each rock and rift, as if to seek the largest out. O, scaly denizen of the deep! flee! and flee thou fast! no striding youth is on thy trail, no lady's hand that iron wield's! no, no, thy old "familiar Gannymede" that doth pursue; he of the muscle firm and hard, that does from "h-I to Peru jerk."

"Steady men!" comes the cry along the line; "double back, the enemy has gotten to the rear." "Hold hard," cries Col. Swan, "I see it now, steady there;" and swift as light the deadly dart cuts through the water and is buried with a thud. Simultaneously with the thud the tall bearer of the light slip leaps out of the water screaming, "great heavens, man, you gipped my toes off." This misfortune calls for a halt. Upon examination it is found that the man is correct; the Colonel in his eagerness, has mistaken the toe of the man's boot for the fish's head. Luckily the boot was tough and the gig not very sharp, and the man is found to have only his great toe dislocated. A ration of rectangle soon cures this, and we again move on. Three hours have now elapsed and no enemy has yet appeared to gladden our hearts except one tiny infant two inches in length, which has stuck between the prongs of General Wardwell's gig. Gens. Swan and Tytus have deserted and fearing bears in the jungle have taken as a defence the fiery Gannymede. For the last hour he had been less fiery than usual, his eye had lost its glazing, his step is not so tiger like. On the whole we are inclined to think that "Gannymede" has shot his bolt, for this day and night at least. Four pale and mournful faces still gaze with hopeful expectation along the river banks. They trip over rough bushes, fall upon hard rocks, slip down in swift waters, but still with relentless purpose they wend their way. They gaze into each nook and corner and slowly, like the ruthless avengers they are, creep on their way. At last they reach the line of pickets. No enemy have they seen. There remains but one post to be relieved, the General's own body guard. Slowly it is approached. An alarm is heard in the deadly click of the reel, and the presence of an enemy is known. Cautious now, men and we have it. Steadily an immense object comes through the water looking white and ghastly by the torch's light. Crash goes Wardwell's iron through his bones; he is hauled aboard the brigantine "Open Bottom" and there by the midnight torches pale and dismal glimmering was beheaded by those ruthless "Ka Klux." Snap-and-go-fetich! the great turtle of the deep.

PROSBURG, MD., July 8, 1879.

Mr. EDITOR:—The natal day of our great and glorious country was celebrated here by the Sunday Schools of the different denominations holding picnics. The Prosburg land also held a picnic. They were dressed in their new uniform, and looked very neat in their plumed hats and brass buttons. F. C. Beall, Esq., one of Prosburg's young and enterprising merchants, displayed from the windows of his mammoth store several flags of different nations. Conspicuously waving among them was our own "Star Spangled Banner," the flag of Great Britain, the banner of dear Erin and others.

Last Saturday the Odd Fellows' Opera House was again offered for sale, but I do not know whether a sale was effected or not. The Opera House is a large three-story brick. The first floor is made into store rooms, the second is the Opera and the third is used for the meetings of various lodges. Its original cost was over $40,000, and has proved an elephant on the hands of its owners. All the rest of their property in town, consisting of their old hall and a large cemetery, has been sold to pay for its erection. One principal cause of failure of the Opera House is that its location is not favorable to business.

T. F. McCordell, Esq., of Cumberland, seems to be the choice of the Democracy of this district for Clerk of the Court of Appeals. Mr. McCordell was for sometime after the death of "poor Lloyd Clary," the editor of the Cumberland Times, which he, I am told, edited with great ability, and during his journalistic career made many friends, who are now desirous of testifying their appreciation of him, by honoring him with one of the most important offices within the gift of the people of Maryland.

The death of Maurice A. Healey, Esq., a prominent lawyer of Cumberland, has cast a gloom over this entire community in which he had many friends who deeply lament his untimely demise. About two weeks ago he was visiting here as the guest of Capt. Nelson Beall, and was at that time apparently in good health. He was a public spirited citizen and his many services to the public are well known to your readers. He was ever active in lending aid to and promoting enterprises that would tend to develop his native county. To him more than to any other man is the credit due of having the Pennsylvania railroad in Maryland as a competitive line against the Baltimore & Ohio road. Indeed can I not say that his death is a loss not only to his relatives and sorrowing friends, but to the general public?

Dr. De Hass, late U. S. Consul at Jerusalem, gave a lecture in the M. E. Church yesterday evening on "Barred Cities of the Old World." He gave a brief but very fine sketch of Herculaneum, Pompeii, Thebes, Nineveh and other famous old cities. He also gave a short description of Jerusalem and the modes of travel in the Oriental world. He said that Thebes never had a hundred gates, and that these gates belonged to the magnificent temples which adorned that city, thus refuting a time-honored belief. He furthermore described the Pyramids of Egypt and told us something about its religion. The Dr. will conclude his lecture this evening and has promised to show his collection of rare curiosities. He is a very fine speaker and it is worth a quarter to hear him.

Dr. Townsend and lady celebrate their silver wedding to-day. Their house has been open all day for the reception of friends, and to-night a very enjoyable time is expected to be had.

An hour ago the pealing bells of St. Michael's Church gave the alarm of fire. In a moment the whole town was in an uproar. In a few moments the pealing ceased and word was brought that the fire was out and the meat roasted. The fire broke out in a smoke-house back of Hitehins' Bros. store. The damage was slight. Quiet is again restored and we are now ready for the next excitement.

NELLIE GRAY.

County Commissioners Proceedings.

Commissioners met Monday last. All present.

Gillead Miller filed road account; which was approved.

Examiners' report of public road from Mineral Spring to Morgantown road was filed.

W. H. Tower filed bond for amt. levied for court expenses, which was approved by the Board.

The only other business of inter st. transacted was the appointment of judges of election. The first name in every instance is that of the return judges:

District No. 1—John Riley, Sr.; Daniel Wilson, Chas. T. West. District No. 2—Thomas H. Cappett, John M. Miller, Lucian Frazee. District No. 3—Ed. J. Miller Wm. Chapman, August Bonig. District No. 4—Henry Warnick, Thomas Garvey, David Michaels. District No. 5—Emanuel Custer, Jacob Beckett, Geo. Schlossnagle. District No. 6—Jacob H. Fyell, Henry Shires, Sr. Jeremiah H. Enlow. District No. 7—Wilson Proctor, Geo. L. Bosly, John A. Delawder. District No. 8—John G. C. Riley, Henry A. Sanders, Henry Thompson. District No. 9—Francis Graham, Jacob McKenzie, Samuel Johnson.

THE REPUBLICAN.

VOLUME 3.

OAKLAND, MD., SATURDAY, JULY 19, 1879.

NUMBER 21.

OAKLAND BUSINESS GUIDE.

DRY GOODS, GROCERIES, etc.

D. E. OFFUTT,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Agricultural Machines, Musical Instruments,
Guns, Pistols, etc.

G. W. LEGGIE,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Cor. Second & Oak Sts.

D. H. LOAR,
ORIGINAL NEW YORK STORE,
General Merchandise, Watches, Clocks, Jew-
elry, etc.

L. W. STAINAKER,
Grocery and Provision Store,
Corner Third and Oak Street.

L. BUSH & SON,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Cor. Third & Oak Sts.

J. GRANT,
DRY GOODS, Groceries,
SPECIAL LINE OF TOBACCO.

DAVIS & TOWNSEND,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Agents Agricultural Machines,
Opposite Valley's Park.

C. C. MICHAEL,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Notions, Clocks, Confectionery, etc.,
Next to Coddington's Hotel.

RICHARDSON BROS.,
GROCERIES, CONFECTIONERIES,
Canned Goods, Fruit, etc.

HOTELS.

CODDINGTON'S HOTEL,
W. M. CODDINGTON, Proprietor,
Main St., Opposite Janison's Billiard Saloon.

LIVERY STABLE.

THOMAS MARTIN,
Opposite Postoffice.

STOVES AND TINWARE.

G. A. SHIRER,
Oak Street, near Second.

PHYSICIANS.

DR. J. LEE MCCOMAS,
Office on Main Street.

DR. E. H. PARSONS,
offers his professional services
to the people of Oakland and vicinity.
Office in the old Oltutt building, 38 1/2 St.

PLASTERER.

JAMES ARNOLD,
Residence on Fourth Street.

BOOT AND SHOE MAKER.
W. M. WAGNER,
Shop Cor. First & Oak Sts.

GEO. F. LOUGHRIDGE,
Leave orders at Express Office.

SURVEYORS.

J. B. BRANT,
Surveyor, Auctioneer and
Conveyancer,
Oakland, Garrett county, Md.

JOHN HARNED,
Address, Post Office.

JEWELER.

A. B. WOODCOCK,
In Wm. Simons' Building,
Watches and Clocks Cleaned and Repaired.

MILLINERY AND FANCY GOODS.

MRS. M. E. DAVIS,
Cor. Oak & Second Sts.

M. L. SCOTT'S Baltimore Store,
Millinery, Gents' Furnishing,
And Fancy Goods and Shoes.
Main Street, Opposite Dr. McComas' Office.

DRUGS AND MEDICINES.

GEO. C. STURGEON,
Drugs, Medicines,
Perfumery, Toilet Articles, Stationery,
Tobacco and Cigars.

G. W. MERRILL,
Near Depot,
Pure Drugs, Medicines, Toilet Goods, Station-
ery, Perfumery, and Tobacco, French Family, Fruits, Fishing Tackle, &c. Physician's pre-
scriptions accurately compounded.

PAINTING & PAPER HANG-
ING.

E. J. FRINGER,
House and Sign Painter,
Leave orders at Bush's Store.

S. V. B. WARD,
HOUSE AND SIGN PAINTER
Shop near Davis House.

BLACKSMITHS.

CHAS. SINCELLA,
Liberty Street.

CONTRACTORS & BUILDERS.

JOHN M. JARBOE,
Carpenter, Contractor & Builder,
Residence on Liberty St. nearly oppo. Depot.

P. A. CHISHOLM,
Carpenter, Contractor,
And Refitter,
Residence on Centre Street.

GEO. A. SPEDDEN,
Residence opp. School house.

JOSEPH M. CRIM,
Residence on Alder Street.

A. C. BROOKE,
Res. near Republican office.

CABINETMAKERS AND UN-DERTAKERS.

A. C. BROOKE,
Res. adjoining Gazette office.

JOHN SHATZEL,
Shop on Second Street.

H. T.

HELMBOLD'S

COMPOUND

Fluid Extract

BUCHU.

PHARMACEUTICAL

A SPECIFIC REMEDY FOR ALL DISEASES

OF THE

BLADDER & KIDNEYS.

For Debility, Loss of Memory, Indisposi-
tion to Exertion or Business, Shortness of
Breath, Troubled with Thoughts of Disease,
Impurity of Vision, Pain in the Back, Head,
and Head, Rash of Blood to the Head, Pale Countenance, and Dry Skin.

If these symptoms are allowed to go on,
very frequently Eclipses of the Sun and Moon follow. When the constitution becomes affected it requires the aid of an invigorating
medicine to strengthen and tone up the system—which

"Helmhold's Buchu"

DOES IN EVERY CASE.

HELMBOLD'S BUCHU

IS UNEQUALED

By any remedy known. It is prescribed by
the most eminent physicians all over the
world, in

Rheumatism,
Spermatorrhoea,
Neuralgia,
Nervousness,
Dyspepsia,
Indigestion,
Constipation,
Aches and Pains,
General Debility,
Kidney Diseases,
Liver Complaint,
Nervous Debility,
Epilepsy,
Head Troubles,
Paralysis,
General Ill Health,

Spinal Diseases,
Sciatica,
Deafness,
Decline,
Lameness,
Catarrh,
Nervous Complaints,
Female Complaints, &c.

Headache, Pain in the Shoulders, Cough,
Pneumonia, Sore Throat, Eruptions, Bad
Taste in the Mouth, Impurity of the Blood,
Pain in the region of the Kidneys, and a
thousand other painful symptoms are the disorders of Dyspepsia.

HELMBOLD'S BUCHU

Invigorates the Stomach.

And stimulates the torpid Liver, Bowels, and
Kidneys to healthy action, in cleansing the
blood of all impurities, and imparting new
life and vigor to the whole system.
A single trial will be quite sufficient to
convince the most hesitating of its valuable
remedial qualities.

Price $1 Per Bottle,

Or Six Bottles for $5.

Delivered to any address free from observa-
tion.

"Patients" may consult by letter, receiving
the same attention as by calling.
Competent Physicians attend to correspondents. All letters should be addressed to

H. T. HELMBOLD,

DRUGGIST AND CHEMIST,

Philadelphia, Pa.

CAUTION!
See that the private Pro-
prietary Stamp is on
each bottle.

SOLD EVERYWHERE.
my 10-1yr.

INTERNATIONAL BIBLE LESSONS.

SUNDAY, JULY 20, 1879.

CHRISTIAN LOVE.

GENERAL STATEMENT.

The Apostle Paul has been writing to the Corinthian Church of the varied endowments which the Holy Ghost bestows upon believers—the gifts of prophecy, of tongues of ministry, and of instruction in the Church.
He urges them to aspire after the best and highest privileges, and then points out the one grace, that central virtue of Christianity,
pure and holy love, to which all disciples
must attain, and which outshines all other endowments. He begins by holding it in contrast with other gifts and graces, showing by the comparison that without love all other elements of religion are of no worth. (1 Cor.
13.) Then he presents its varied characteristics and its supreme excellence. (v. 4-7)
Its permanence in the Church is next considered, with the transitory nature of other gifts. (v. 8-12) He sums up in one terse sentence (v. 13) the three great elements of Christian character, and proclaims love as the chief of them all.

1 Cor. 13, 1-13.

Memory Verse, 4-8.

1. Though I speak with the tongues of men and of angels, and have not charity, I am become as sounding brass, or a tinkling cymbal.

2. And though I have the gift of prophecy, and understand all mysteries, and all knowledge, and though I have all faith, so that I could remove mountains, and have not charity, I am nothing.

3. And though I bestow all my goods to feed the poor, and though I give my body to be burned, and have not charity, it profiteth
me nothing.

4. Charity suffereth long, and is kind; charity envieth not; charity vaunteth not itself,
is not puffed up.

5. It doth not behave itself unseemly, seeketh not her own, is not easily provoked, thinketh
no evil.

6. It becometh not in indignity, but rejoiceth
in the truth.

7. It beareth all things, believeth all things, hath all things, endureth all things.

8. Charity never faileth; whether there be prophecies, they shall fail; whether there be tongues, they shall cease; whether there be knowledge, it shall vanish away.

9. For we know in part, and we prophesy in part.

10. But when that which is perfect is come,
then that which is in part shall be done away.

11. When I was a child, I spoke as a child,
I understood as a child, I thought as a child;
but when I became a man, I put away childish
things.

12. For now we see through a glass darkly, but then face to face; now I know in part; but then shall I know even as also I am known.

13. And now abideth faith, hope, charity, these three; but the greatest of these is charity.

HOME READINGS.

M. Christian Love, 1 Cor. 13, 1-13.
Th. The great commandment, Matt. 23, 37-40.
Lu. Illustrated, Luke 10, 25-27.
T. Endowed, 1 John 3, 9-21.
F. Commanded, 1 John 1, 7-21.
S. Reward, Matt. 23, 31-36.
S. Taught by Christ, Luke 6, 27-36.

GOAL OF THE LESSON.

And now abideth faith, hope, charity, these
three; but the greatest of these is charity.
1 Cor. 13, 13.

LESSON HYMN C. M.

Our God is love and all his saints
His image bear below:
The heart with love is kind and inspired,
With love to men will glow.
Heirs of the same immortal bliss,
Our hopes and fears the same,
With hearts of love our hearts unite,
With mutual love we frame.

QUESTIONS ON THE OUTLINE.

1. THE SEED OF CHARITY, v. 13; 1 Tim. 1.
2. What is charity as named in this lesson?
(ASS: Love.) What is compared with it?
v. 1, 7. What was the gift of tongues? v. 8. As?
Power to speak other languages. Why is it of less value than love? v. 8. What are mentioned in comparison with charity in v.
27. Are these desirable? Why is love more to be desired? What are compared with it in v. 32? What encouragement do believers derive from this? v. 32. Can there be giving without true charity? In what spirit should we give to others?

THE WORK OF CHARITY, v. 17; 1 John 3.

18. What five times are suited charity in v.
12? What does each one mean? What four statements are made in v. 32? What is the command in 1 Tim. 4, 8? In what does true charity consist? What cause of rejoicing is named in 2 John 17? What is said of charity in relation to "all things"? Where bestow this love upon us? How may we obtain it?

THE FRUIT OF CHARITY, v. 13; 1 John 3.

3, 1, 2. What did v. 8 show the worth of charity? Have "tongues" and "prophecies" passed away from the Church? What difference between the partial and the perfect is given in 1 Tim. 4, 8? What difference between childhood and manhood in v. 12? Should we grow in mind and character, as well as in body? What is said of the present state in
v. 12? How is this stated in 2 Cor. 5, 7? What shall be our state hereafter? What three graces are abiding? Which of these is greatest?

TEACHINGS OF THE LESSON.

Where in this lesson do we learn—
1. Love is the most important grace? 2. Love is the enduring grace? 3. Love is the crowning grace?

WORDS WITH LITTLE FOLKS.

1. Try to be patient. 2. Try to think no evil of others. 3. Try to have true charity toward all.

DOCTRINAL SUGGESTIONS.—Love to God and man.

1. The most eloquent utterances of preachers are of no avail unless love is spirit them.
v. 1.

ADDITIONAL PRACTICAL LESSONS.

1. The clearest understanding and the widest teaching of divine things have been lost to the world by the loss of love.
v. 2.

CAUTION!

1. Liberty in giving, which proceeds from any other motive than love to God's cause, may help its object, but it is of no avail
to the giver. v. 5.

THE LOVE WHICH INSPIRES PATIENCE WITH OUR BETTERMENT, v. 4.

6. While other things pass away, the grace of love remains ever with Christ's Church. v. 8.

THE LOVE WHICH INSPIRES PATIENCE WITH OUR BETTERMENT, v. 4.

7. While other traits of our Christian life pass away, the grace of love will only be more pure and perfect.

The Crops at Home and Abroad.

Even the stars in their courses fought against Sisera, and the late spring and the heavy rains in England, France and Spain, and the drought, hail and grasshoppers in Russia, seem to be fighting against the repudiation in the United States.
It is not an extravagance to say that the recent news from Europe may have an important effect upon the political and industrial future of this country. Year after year, Providence has blessed this land with beautiful crops, and each year the foreign demand has been so swollen
by the failure of crops abroad,
that the American producer has found a market for his surplus. This year, however, the West has promised us a large surplus of wheat as was realized from the unprecedented yield of 1878. Some anxiety has been felt, not unnatu-rally, lest the foreign markets should be unprepared to take so large a surplus a second year in succession, and many anticipated serious disaster in consequence of the excess of our riches. But the news from abroad indicates that, however large our surplus may prove, Europe will probably want it all.

According to these advices the prospect in England, France, Germany, Spain, Italy and Hungary is exceedingly unfavorable, on account of the unpropitious weather. The crops are late in development, and the grain has been swamped by water or choked by weeds to such an extent that it is thought "nothing short of a miracle can give Europe abundant harvests this season." Remembering that Europe, even with abundant harvests, requires from this country many millions of bushels of wheat, and that the deficiency in home supply seems to be steadily increasing, even when the yield is excellent, because continued low prices and failure to realize profits have led thousands of farmers to abandon the cultivation of wheat, we may readily infer that the quantity to be required,
if the crops turn out badly in so many countries at once, will be very large. According to Odessa advices the condition of the crops in Southern Russia has hardly ever been as bad as at present. It is asserted that, in the neighborhood of Odessa and in the Governments of Bessarabia, Klerson, Poltava, Ekaterinoslav,
Baku, Simlitslavopoli and Katalits,
"the grain which was left by drought and hail is now being annihilated by frightful swarms of grasshoppers and corn-beetles." In Italy the injury to crops appears to be mainly in the northern portion, but the deficiency
in France is expected to be unprecedented, and the weather reports in Great Britain continue most unfavorable.

If these accounts are even approximately correct, the demand upon this country will be far greater than it ever has been. It is worth noting that the latest cable dispatches mention as a reason for the comparative steadiness of prices in Mark Lane, the general reliance upon abundant supplies from America.
From September 1 to June 28 the exports of wheat from this city, Baltimore, Philadelphia and Boston amounted to 83,638,851 bushels, of which 46,477,000 went to the Continent and 37,161,851 to Great Britain;
and the exports of flour from the same ports amounted to 4,451,165 barrels. About 105,000,000 bushels of wheat, against 73,000,000 bushels during the previous year, had gone abroad from these ports alone, and the exports from the Pacific Coast have also been large. The official returns show that the quantity exported during the ten months ending April 30 was 101,889,321 bushels of wheat and 4,713,718 barrels of flour, in all about 128,603,039 bushels, and the exports in May and June have been remarkably large, amounting for the seven Atlantic ports alone to 17,651,397 bushels and 668,400 barrels.
Thus the known exports within twelve months have been about 118, 855,308 bushels of wheat, besides the quantity exported within the past two months from the Pacific Coast and the minor Atlantic ports. But the prospect is that a still larger supply will be required from us during the next twelve months, for the condition of foreign crops is more unfavorable than it was at this date last year, and the stores abroad are much more nearly exhausted.

The financial and industrial effect
of another season of bountiful crops
and enormous foreign demand can hardly be over-estimated. It will be felt in every branch of trade and manufactures, and will stimulate to renewed effort the great army of producers who have recently taken new farms in the Far West. Debts by the thousand will be paid. Families by the hundred thousand will be encouraged to more liberal purchases

of the products of our factories.
Working men and women by the million will feel the effect in better employment and improved circumstances. But the political effect will be not less salutary. The reaction against the sound and honest policy of the Republican party has been due, in large measure, to the prostration of industry and trade. When men are out of employment, when business suffers, there are thousands in every State who blame the Government. At such a time heresies of the wildest kind spread like a prairie fire, and reckless demagogues find hearers and followers. The Greenback fever has been mainly a product of the hard times. The spirit of repudiation begins to fade wherever industry and business are more prosperous. If we have another season of splendid crops and eager markets, there will be a startling revolution in public opinion, in those very States where Democratic and Greenback heresies have had most power. It is quite within the range of possibilities that the bad weather and the grasshoppers in Europe, and the favoring weather and beautiful crops in this country, may have a decisive influence upon the next Presidential election, and upon the political future of this country for many years.—N. Y. Tribune.

A Democratic Flurry.

A Washington special of July 10th says: The Democrats who hold places in the various departments are very much agitated over the report that they are all to be dismissed from office, and the Bourbon leaders are making loud threats of what will be done at the Capitol end of Washington if the report proves true. Of course, nobody expects that there will be any wholesale dismissal of the hundreds of Democratic clerks in office here, although it is generally understood that the system of appointing Democrats to office will be given a quietus for the next year or two, since in all future appointments preference will be given to those who served in the Union army.
But the amusing part of the scare is the fit-for-fall threats of the Democrats, that if their friends are turned out of the departments every Republican will be discharged from the capitol. This is ludicrous on the fact that with the exception of perhaps two or three Republicans who have been retained for special reasons, they have all been already discharged. A number of the old employees were kept on the Senate and House rolls, but there were armless and legless men who had fought for the Union, and whom the Democrats
did not dare discharge from office.
On the other hand, the departments,
and particularly the Interior and Postoffice Departments are crowded with Democratic appointees, who make no secret of their politics. The paramount duty of Democratic Congressmen, and especially those from the South, in the last year has been to get somebody appointed in one of the departments, so that now there is now scarcely a member or Senator who does not stand charged with one or more appointments, and usually a great many more than one, in the departments.

The New York World publishes a list of persons killed and wounded
by the use of fire-arms and fireworks on the Fourth of July. It fills an entire column, though each casualty is narrated in the briefest style, and is doubtless very incomplete. There are eighteen fatalities, not including
Mr. Seymour, and the wounded sum up 167, many of which are so serious that they will, probably result in death. It is truly said that if a complete list could be made the casualties
would be found to equal that of a very respectable South American battle. The enforcement of the law in Baltimore spared our citizens from the usual number of accidents, while in New York there were twenty fires and in Philadelphia fourteen, that could be directly traced to the peculiar American method of celebrating Independence day.

It has at last leaked out that the true reason why Democratic Congressmen rushed the quinine duty renewal through Congress was that they hoped larger doses would prevent them from shaking so about the results of the fall elections.

The Music of Mississippi from the Harp of Okolona.

From the Okolona, (Miss.) States, July 2, 1879.

O, the Fourth of July—1st—ly—ly—ly—

O, the Fourth of July is a lie,
Since the murdering, plundering Yankee band,
Swooped down, like demons with blade and brand,
To conquer and crush our lovely land;
And threaten us all with an iron hand,
And deny the glorious right and grand
To a Sovereign State its own command,
While they shouted the Tory cry.

Read our paper this week, carefully, prayerfully—aye, swearfully, if you must—but read it Messrs. Yun-kees, and see the sentiments with which we salute the Fourth of July since the American flag became a festering eye-sore, the American eagle
a carrion crow, and the American Union a lie spewed from the pits of perdition.

We don't believe in the Fourth of July or any other kind of a lie.
We don't, Captain!

We have always thought, and we think yet, that if Lincoln had been taken from the White House at the breaking out of the war, and hung in chains, it would have been the heavenliest blessing that ever befell
any country in any century.

Yes,—and another thing we want to whisper in your ear while holding it: If President Davis wants to go to the United States Senate he will go with a huzza that will ring over the continent like a regiment of thunder claps.

We want you and your Northern Democrats (of misbegotten political pedigree) to understand, understand,
now and here, once for all, that no
Southern man will insult the memory of the immortal slain by taunting the rag of the Republic over them;

A rag which they hated with a heavenly hatred;
A rag which they spilled the blood of life itself in fighting on sea and shore;

A rag filthy all over with the spots
and blotches of Radical leprosy;

A rag that has been 7 lie, a cheat
and a mockery since 1861;

A rag whose stars are darkened with disgrace and whose stripes are less honorable than a convict's uniform.

It was royally right, Sir Post and Tribune, it was royally right we say, that the Stars and Bars should wave
its bright and beautiful folds over
"the dead who died for it."

Its stars are as clear and luminous
as the planets that shine in the crystal vaults of heaven.

Its stripes are as spotless as the lillies of our Southern savannas.

It symbolizes the highest, the purest,
the holiest patriotism of the human heart, and it is therefore a fit type of the high, the pure, the holy patriotism of the heroes who fought and fell for it.

Keep your star-spangled swindle
for your traitor dead who died while murdering our people and stealing our property.

Keep it for them, we say,
We will have none of it.

No!

THE REPUBLICAN.

OAKLAND, MARYLAND.

JAS. A. HAYDEN,
Editor and Proprietor.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.
One copy, one year, $1.00
Six months, .60
Three months, .35
Invariably in advance.

TERMS OF ADVERTISING.
First insertion, $1 per square of 8 lines;
30 cents per square for each additional insertion. Special contracts for advertising longer
than three months.

Correspondents must enclose full name and
address, not necessarily for publication, but
as a private guarantee of good faith. Rejected
communications will not be returned.

SATURDAY, JULY 19, 1879.

The Republican Committee met in Baltimore Tuesday and decided to call a State Convention to meet on the 12th of September, to nominate candidates for State offices.

At the municipal election in Annapolis Monday the Republicans elected the Mayor, City Councilor and a majority of the Aldermen. It is said that numbers of Democrats openly voted the Republican ticket. This is the first test of the public feeling since the outbreak in the Democratic ranks in Baltimore, and clearly shows the drift of things.

Who will say that the extra session of Congress was worth a million of dollars to the country? That is what it cost. Who will deny that the Democratic party was responsible for the extra session? The conclusion is irresistible that a party guilty of such gross blunders—even if there were no more serious charges to be brought against it—is not fit to run the government. This we believe will be the verdict of the people when they next come to pass their judgment.

Bombast.

The Herald being out of ammunition last week, loaded its galling guns with blank cartridges and gave us a broadside. It promises to spike our batteries for all time to come this week. When its ammunition arrives—in the shape of far-fetched, unreliable statistics—it will no doubt attempt with these to fulfill its promises. We do not feel any alarm, however, and will venture the prediction that it will ignore the issue (local politics) of this controversy, and deal in high-sounding, glittering generalities. We took issue with the Herald upon its claims that this country was Democratic, and fondly hoped that it would discuss this matter so that through the columns of the county papers the voters of Garrett county might realize the true political situation. But our hopes seem doomed. Garrett county politics is a field too narrow for the genius of the Herald to waste its time on. Its theory is that the voters of Garrett county will be content with claims and assertions; it discounts the intelligence of our citizens by trying to impose these unsupported claims upon them. Once more we cry to you, "Oh! most wonderful digressor, 'come back.' " Thou art drifting in to a sea the depths whereof thou knowest not; thou hast left the harbor of safety and art courting a storm that will prove thy destruction; thou hast better heed the friendly call and come back ere it is too late.

The Political Assessments.

However large may be the beam in the Bourbon eye, it is extraordinary how utterly oblivious Democrats are to it while gazing at the mote in their neighbors'. Democratic editors everywhere are now crying out against "political assessments," characterizing them by the worst of names, and yet the time is not so far past that living men fail to remember that the theory of "political assessments" like that of "to the victors belong the spoils," was of Democratic origin, and practiced up to the time of Buchanan. There are citizens of Washington who well remember that the Constitution of that city often published the names of delinquents, and demanded their removal from office, which was generally done. No one but a Democrat was permitted to hold office, nor unless he subscribed liberally to the election fund. But this is not all. The Democrats only a short time ago set up a great howl because one or two Interior Department clerks were allowed to volunteer their services to the Republican Congressional Committee. Now the Democrats are doing the very thing which, for the sake of buncombe, they so much condemned. Not only are Democratic employees at the capital assisting night and day on the work of flooding the country with Democratic documents, but the Democratic Congressional Committee itself occupies a room in the capitol which is lighted up by gas paid for out of the government funds, and cleared by men hired at the capitol. In his view of the case, the Democrats may as well let this issue slide out of the catalogue prepared for the stump.

During the five years preceding the war, two of which were years of great commercial depression throughout the country, a Democratic Congress with a Democratic executive, increased the national debt from less than $29,000,000 to more than $90,000,000 and decreased the cash in the Treasury from more than $18,000,000 to less than $3,000,000. The extra session showed marked tendencies in the direction indicated by the above figures. Huge appropriations and no taxes is the watchword of the Democracy.

Senator Lamar, who has but recently returned to Washington from a visit to the South, stated to a friend a few days since that the people of his State were beginning to be troubled by the negro exodus. As soon as quiet is restored to one neighborhood, he said, the excitement begins to rage somewhere else. The farmers are the only white people thus far who suffer from it, although there is no telling what would be the result in the long run. The Senator did not speak as lightly of the subject as some of his Democratic colleagues are wont to do, and it was clearly evident from his manners and what he did say that the Southern people are beginning to realize the dangers of the exodus movement. Neither Senator Lamar, nor anybody else, however, can suggest any way to stop the flight. What the colored people want the whites refuse to give.

The hollow sham of the bill presented recently in Congress by Robert M. McLane, of this State, to prevent assessment of Federal officeholders for partisan purposes, is so apparent that we are surprised to see the Democrats attempt any defense of the measure. As these are very few Federal officeholders of the Democratic persuasion in the country, the bill does not affect them in the least. Amendments were offered to include officeholders under State governments, but was promptly rejected by the Democrats. If they had really been honest in their proposition to defend those holding offices from assessments, they would have been willing to include all officeholders. In Maryland it is notorious that every man who holds any office, from Governor down to the lowest office in his gift, is regularly and liberally assessed, in proportion to his salary, to carry on Democratic campaigns in every county and district. But they were not willing that the measure should apply to any case except Republicans. The Republican members very properly opposed this one-sided, clap-net Democratic bill.—Baltimore Old Fellow.

The fire-belching editor of the Oklahoma States has been giving his views about the popularity of his utterances in Mississippi. He declares that the "brain and weight of the Mississippi press" coincide with him. "Half-breed sheets, edited by the cowards and camp followers, liars and forgers" in the party have condemned him, but "the sound, substantial Democratic editors, North and South, who understand the principles and purposes of our party, are with us to a man." To give the public a clearer idea of the "principles and purposes of our party," the editor added: "By the way, I consider a bastard Democrat and a reconstructed rebel the meanest things that crawl. I can respect a Radical who is sincere in his convictions, no matter how much I may hate and loathe his teachings, but I spit upon, I trample under my very feet with scorn and contempt the sneaking, pitiful, whining spavined who professes to be a Democrat, and who at the same time fawns on the Radicals, and barks and snarls and yelps at Democrats like Colonel Harper and myself, who are bearing the burden and heat of the day." The man who says this was greeted with wild cheers by the assembled editors of Mississippi, and the same editors who applauded Jefferson Davis's declaration that he had never seen a reconstructed Southern woman, will undoubtedly applaud the kindred sentiment that a "reconstructed rebel is the meanest thing that crawls."

Mr. Dana says though the heavens should fall, yet he would not come out for Grant. Well, no. That is wise, Mr. Dana. You'd better stay in. Keep as close to the far end of the hole as you can. If Grant wants you he will drag you out quick enough. It's a way he has.

No, Mr. Lamar, it may not be a "backdown," but there is a thundering sight bigger strain on the breeching than there is on collar, all the same.

Confident Republican journals in New York say that the national campaign of 1880 will be decided next November in that State by a Republican majority of 50,000.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

Special Correspondence to The Republican.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 15, 1879.

Secretary Sherman has gone on a northern tour, partly official and partly missionary. He will visit the chief points of revenue collection in the Eastern States, following his official observations with a financial-political speech under the auspices of the Republicans in Portland, as I have before mentioned. He will also extend his visit to social calls upon Senators Blaine, Hamlin, and others, and finally perhaps he may call upon the eminent gentlemen who will assemble in Saratoga on the 6th of August, for a three days convention, promotional of financial management and legislation. That assembly will be the annual convention of the Bankers' Association, and at this time it is expected to develop matters of great importance in national finance as well as in private banking. The triumph of the resumption policy of the present administration, no less than the refunding scheme of Secretary Sherman, are topics for congratulation by all honest men, whatever may have been their previous views, and this convention will be the means of enlightening those who have heretofore struggled in the dark in the labyrinth of finance. It will demonstrate for one thing beyond a doubt that a banking system such as ours is the friend and not the foe of the industrial classes, and that wherever there is a chance for improvement so as to conform to the new and changing demands of the country, the bankers will be found ready to co-operate.

Speaking of this matter reminds me that the Treasury Department, under the direction of Assistant Secretary French, has been sifting and proposing to issue many documents of interest to the public. These are complete refutations of Greenback Democratic heresies, and they illustrate at once the economical tendency of the Republican party and the purpose it has in view to give the people all the currency that the business of the country demand. The interest charge to the Government has been reduced by the Secretary's policy from $91,000,000 to $83,000,000, a saving of $8,000,000 annually. But besides saving in this way, the Republican administration has inaugurated a policy in enforcing the revenue laws that result in large direct gains. Thus the collections on kid gloves alone in New York have improved many thousands of dollars monthly because of the exposure of under-valuation frauds. The increase on sugars is still more marked, more than half a million dollars having been saved in six months by the exposure and conviction of coloring frauds practiced by importers at one port. Other leaks are about to be stopped and within a few weeks the Treasury Department will be able to show a character for efficiency unequalled by any other Department of the kind in the world. If the Greenback-Democrats can make headway against these facts in the campaigns this summer they are welcome to their success.

The Sunday Chronicle here, which is supposed to represent Gen. Grant's best friends, says that he will not return home until next year some time after the national conventions have been held, and that he will not allow himself to be used as a Presidential candidate. This, many persons say, accounts for Senator Conkling's and other Grant men's nomination of Senator Windom as their candidate. That Senator is a warm friend of Gen. Grant and has no enemies in the party. Stranger things have happened than would be the gratification of Minnesota's ambition for a Presidential candidate.

A new organization with headquarters here, called the Soldiers' and Sailors' Advisory Association. Its objects are to promote the interests of the classes named in the matter of official preferment, pensions, &c. R. A. Dimmick is Chairman of the resident Advisory Committee.

LOGAN.

The report of the Commissioner of Pensions shows that during the past year nearly 1,500 doubtful pension cases have been examined, and out of these upwards of a thousand were found to be more or less fraudulent. The result of these investigations was that over a half million of dollars was saved to the government at a cost of less than $36,000. Frauds in the Pension office have been, at least in popular belief, so frequent and enormous that many have wished all pensions done away with. Such a course as that would, of course, have been a hundred fold more unjust than the paying of a fraudulent pension with each true claim. But the amount paid annually by the government is enormous, and will be greatly increased during the next few years by the payment of pension arrears, and on this account the average taxpayer will rejoice to know that the fraudulent pension claimers are being rooted out. All that the taxpayers want to be assured of is that their money reaches the loyal hands for whom it was intended.

While the Democratic majority in Congress, by failing to make provision for the pay of United States marshals, laid serious impediments in the way of the execution of all laws of the United States, they at the same time put the executive in a position that might compel him to use the troops, when otherwise a strong force of deputy marshals would be sufficient. Inasmuch as the employment of the troops to sustain the authority of the government is a special object of aversion with the Democratic majority, it is rather amusing that by their legislation they should have increased the possibility of such an occurrence. By a series of acts, beginning with 1792, "when-ever, by reason of unlawful obstructions, combinations or assemblages of persons, or rebellion against the government of the United States, it shall become impracticable in the judgment of the President to enforce by the ordinary course of judicial proceedings the laws of the United States within any state or territory, it shall be lawful for the President to call forth the militia of any and all the states and to employ such parts of land and naval forces of the United States as he may deem necessary to enforce the faithful execution of the laws of the United States." General Washington had to call out the troops to put down the whiskey rebellion in Pennsylvania, and if the moon-shiners of the Southern States presume upon the attempt of the Democrats to obstruct the execution of the laws, they may be surprised by the gleam of bayonets in their mountain fastness.

WHAT MR. MOODY IS DOING.—The most successful Monday night converts' experience meeting held since Mr. Moody went away was held last night at the rooms of the Young Men's Christian Association, led by Mr. E. W. Bliss. A prayer of thanksgiving for the many divine blessings enjoyed by all in the meeting, made by Gen. John S. Berry, moved all present to feelings of deep piety. Mr. Benjamin W. Jenkins, who has just returned from a trip through New England, told of a visit he had made to Mr. Moody at his home, Northfield, Mass., and brought a pleasant message from him to all the converts. Among the many interesting things he told about Mr. Moody was that he was bronzed and strong and hearty from out-door work on his little farm. He is especially fond of raising poultry, and is studying out illustrations for sermons from among the fowls and birds. Every arrangement in his house is subservient to religion, and his dining room is constructed so as to be made available for a religious meeting once a week. He has a Bible class of young men whom he teaches, and occasionally he preaches in small churches in the neighboring country, but as a general thing he does not engage much in public religious meetings.—Balto. American.

That the crops in England will be very short is now admitted by the best authorities on the subject in that country, so that the demand from there will be unusually large. France, which generally has grain to export, will also be a large buyer, and short crops are reported from Southern Europe. The prospects are that the demand will be extraordinary, and this country will reap the benefit. Our immense exports of breadstuffs in 1874 took the edge off the panic, and by the same agency we were lifted from the paper money slough on the hard ground of specie payments. "It is an ill wind that blows nobody good."

TELEGRAPHIC.

III DEGREE IN CHARLESTON.—CHARLESTON, S. C., July 13.—The unprecedented heated spell which began here last Wednesday culminated on Saturday with the most intense heat that has been experienced in this city in the memory of the oldest inhabitant. The thermometer at 2 p. m. reached 111 degrees, and over a hundred cases of sunstroke—sixteen of which have proved fatal—have been reported.

THE DEMOCRATIC DARK OUTLOOK.—WASHINGTON, July 13.—Democratic politicians hereabouts are growing restless over the manner in which the Ohio campaign is being managed. They are beginning to talk their real sentiments more freely than they did at first, and are secretly admitting among themselves that the Ewing bark is not likely to have such smooth sailing as could be desired by a cautious pilot. Indeed, the sanguine expectations of the Republicans, their harmonious working and unceasing energy, together with the obstinate refusal of the stalwart Greenbackers to support Ewing and the threatened desertion of the German and other honest money Democrats, all greatly disturb the friends of Messrs. Ewing and Rice, and render them exceedingly anxious for campaign to begin at once and be carried on vigorously to the end. There is a growing belief among these perturbed men of wisdom that whatever may have been the alliance of ex-Chairman Thompson, his devotion to the Democracy would have made him use all of his vast experience and wire pulling powers in the State of Ohio for the election of the Democratic ticket, and that his removal from the committee, therefore, was ill-advised, from which we are to expect that if the Democrats are defeated this fall, as they must certainly will be, Colonel Thompson will stand quietly by and feign to chuckle while his friends shout to the defeated candidates, "I told you so!" Be this as it may, however, Democratic leaders are urging prompt and move vigorous action. They seem unable to wait until the date when Ewing proposes to fire his first gun in the campaign, but want it fired "immediately, if not sooner." They even object to Ewing going to Maine and are willing to let that state take care of itself and have their standard-bearer go to Ohio at once, plant his colors and stay there. It is not improbable, therefore, that Ewing, although he has promised to talk against Secretary Sherman in Maine, may yet conclude to allay the fears of his benchmen by joining his camp immediately.

GEN. EWING TROUBLED.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 10.—The friends of Gen. Ewing are somewhat disturbed at the meeting of the State Central Committee of the National Greenback party at Columbus, Ohio, yesterday. They openly admit that if the fiery and determined resolution there adopted is to be adhered to Ewing's chances will be lessened, if not entirely killed. The hope of the Democrats up to this time has been to win over occasionally some prominent Greenbacker, and in the end to make Ewing and Foster the only two real competitors for the gubernatorial chair. But the action of the Greenbackers yesterday in reading out of the party the Toledo bolters and other advocates of Ewing, as well as their declaration of confidence in the ability and integrity of their own candidates, and their resolution to stand by the whole Greenback ticket has completely demoralized the Bourbons. Ewing's friends now say that their chieftain, in order to make sure of the German Democratic votes, will hedge on the financial question, and let the Greenbackers go their way. Indeed, the hard-money Democrats feign to be well satisfied with the action of the Greenback committee, for the reason, they say, that it will show to Ewing that his main hope lies in the Democratic party, and the best way to fight the battle will be on strict party lines, and not on finance. On the other hand, Foster's friends are jubilant over the situation, and say that if the Greenbackers really mean to stand by their resolution of yesterday Ewing may as well throw up the sponge at once. Be this as it may, the opinion is becoming stronger every day that the Republicans will, without regard to the Greenbackers, carry the State by from twenty to thirty thousand majority.

ADDITIONAL LOCAL NEWS.

Serenade and Supper.

The members of the Oakland corner Band were handsomely entertained on Saturday evening last, at the Glades Hotel, by its very popular, genial and hospitable proprietor, John Dailey, Esq. About 10 o'clock p. m., the band played several popular pieces of music on the lawn in front of the building and were then invited in to partake of the refreshments prepared for them. They all showed their appreciation of Mr. Dailey's kindness by the manner in which they disposed of the delicacies placed before them, and kept employed Baker Banks and his corps of assistants, all of whom sustained their reputation as efficient and obliging waiters. After discoursing more good music, and being highly complimented by Mrs. Gen. Crook and other ladies present, the members returned to their homes with feelings of pleasure over the evening's entertainment.

An Alleged Illegal Detention Case.

At Cumberland, Md., on Saturday last, Constable W. F. Porter, of that city, arrested on the charge of having obtained through misrepresentation the custody of Hermina Hillman, aged 16 years, the daughter of a German woman, with the intention of taking her to the House of the good Shepherd, country to the wishes of the mother, was discharged by Justice Kling, by advice of the State's attorney, the evidence not being deemed sufficient to warrant carrying the case over. It is claimed that the mother had signed a paper presented by the constable, but she not reading English did not know its purport. She thought it was to get the girl out of the almshouse, to which she had fled to escape from the bad treatment of her father.

On the same day, at Cumberland, the girl, Hermina Hillman, was brought before Judge Pearre on a writ of habeas corpus and released from the custody of Constable Porter. In delivering the decision Judge Pearre took occasion to make some pointed remarks, reproving the course taken by some constables in cases similar to the one under consideration. He said persons arrested under circumstances likely to send them to a reformatory institution should have a full, fair and public trial, and care should be taken to instruct ignorant persons as to the proceedings taken, giving them an opportunity to exercise their rights in the premises. He said it was a well-known fact that certain constables were in the habit of arresting persons on a slender representation of thimsy facts, take them before a magistrate, and in a short time start with them for one of the reformatory institutions of the State, simply with the obvious motive of securing the costs. Judge Pearre further said that the eyes of the taxpayers and citizens of the county, as well as those of the executive officers, were fixed upon these officials, and that if they ventured within the pale of the law summary justice would be dealt to them.

FROSTBURG, MD., July 15, 1879.

THE REPUBLICAN.—Last Saturday evening as the good people of Frostburg were about retiring the most delightful music was heard. Instead of proceeding to their chambers they carried; those who had previously been lulled to sleep awake from their slumbers. Dressing hastily they made their appearance at the windows, on the balconies and wherever they thought their ear could catch the delicate strains of the sweet music wafted to them by the gentle zephyrs ever stirring in this little city. After listening sometime to the sweet music, made still sweeter by the time, the hour for retiring, the occasion Saturday night when every one was in good humor over the prospect of a day's rest on the morrow and the scene the large crowd in the street gathered around the band and the innumerable stars twinkling in the cloudless sky, it gradually, as the band moving from place to place became inaudible in the distance. The members of the band were all dressed in uniform, with plumes in their caps and what is more, were all fine looking men. The band which furnished this charming music was the Excelsior, of Locomotion, whether they were returning from Cumberland. One or two of them remained over night in town, and they report that they had a very enjoyable trip down the canal during their stay in Cumberland.

The colored people of this neighborhood held a bash meeting on the "Centennial picnic ground" last Sunday. It was well attended, and some of the attendants were white people. Sermons were delivered by the different colored divines of the neighborhood.

It is reported that Mr. John McCulloh will shortly take a trip to Europe, for the benefit of his health principally, but also for pleasure.

Rev. V. F. Schmitt, rector of St. Michael's church, left yesterday for Bedford where he purposes spending a few days. This is, I believe, the first time he has been away since his return from Europe last September. A little child of Rev. C. Stewart, Rector of St. John's church was, while playing with a playmate, dangerously cut with a knife. The cut was accidental and the child is now rapidly recovering.

Yesterday Miss Linnie Mobilized was taken suddenly ill with heart disease. Doctor Ravenscroft was promptly on hand, and she is now to the delight of her friends convalescent.

The Presbyterians will hold a festival in the Odd-Fellow's Opera House this week.

Garrett county must be a great lumber region. Every day numerous wagons pass down loaded with lumber of every kind. In reply to the question whence it comes, the rote answer is, "Garrett county and plenty more up there, too."

Dan's Rock, or Big Rock by which it is more generally known, is the great resort of visitors at this place. It is an immense rock crowning the summit of the Alleghenies and from which several States, so they say, and towns innumerable can be seen. Parties are making excursions to it every day.

The lecture season seems to have closed here; at least there is none advertised to come off soon.

Dr. Jas. M. Porter, one of the oldest physicians of the county, and President of the Allegheny county Medical Society was so ill to-day that he was not able to leave his room. Main street last Saturday evening was the scene of quite an excitement. On either side of the pavement could be seen crowds of men and boys wending their way to the Centennial Grove to witness the grand pulling match between the married and unmarried men. The married men proved the victors.

NELLIE GRAY.

LOCAL NEWS.

—Cantaloupes are in market.
—Capt. Stoy has been here again, instructing the Band boys.
—D. E. Offutt is having the finishing touches put to his store room.
—A. A. Perry, Esq., was in Oakland from Sunday till Wednesday.
—Mr. J. W. Sturgiss, of Marietta, Ohio, is visiting his brother in Oakland.

—Mr. James Bell is making improvements to his residence on Alder street.
—Miss Hattie Hagans, of Morgantown, W. Va., is stopping at W. H. Hagans.

—Mr. Theo. Bush is adding a large dining room and kitchen to the Everstein House.
—Mr. John Dailey has added an excellent billiard table to the already attractive Glades Hotel.

—Mr. Lloyd H. Bell, who has been in the West for the past year, returned to Oakland last week.

—Mr. Wm. Combs, one of our most aged citizens, is quite ill at his residence on Main street.

—Misses Ella and Mollie Peddicord left Oakland Friday night for a visit in Howard county, this State.

—Mrs. E. E. Ison and son Wiley left Oakland Wednesday for a trip to Ocean Grove and other points.

—Mr. Jas. S. Johnson is having a foundation laid, preparatory to moving his house.

—Two new turbine water wheels were put in Mr. Ryan's grist mill in Oakland this week.

—Fifty persons were admitted into full membership in the M. E. Church, Cumberland, Sunday last.

—200 sacks G. A. Salt for sale at Wm. P. Totten's Cheap Cash Store, Oakland, Md. a26-1f.

—Mrs. Rebecca Worthington, mother-in-law of Judge Geo. A. Pearce, died on Saturday evening at Cumberland.

—A violent wind and rain storm visited this section Friday evening of last week. Some damage was done the growing crops.

—Gen. B. F. Kelley and wife arrived in Oakland Monday. After a visit to Cumberland and Washington city, they will spend some time here.

—The railroads centering at Cumberland have offered liberal rates to those who may attend the proposed soldiers' reunion at Cumberland.

—The Baltimore and Ohio railroad is now sending empty grain cars west attached to the fast freight lines, so as to meet the rush of the grain trade to Baltimore.

—Our young friend Chas. Whetzel has again met with misfortune in the partial destruction by fire of his saw mill, on Muddy creek, which occurred Wednesday last.

—Died—On the 12th inst., near the Red House, this county, Archibald Chisholm, aged 83 years and 5 months. He was born in Scotland. A large concourse of relatives and friends followed his remains to the grave.

—Died—In Oakland Sunday afternoon, July 13th 1879, Mrs. Maria Smouse, aged 64 years, 7 months and 30 days. The remains were interred in the Old-Fellows Cemetery Tuesday, after services in the Lutheran church, conducted by Revs. Miller and Cupp.

—Prof. D. A. Woodward, of the Art Department of the Maryland Institute, who has been spending his vacation at the Everstein House, returned to Baltimore Tuesday. The Professor made many friends here who regret his departure, and will extend a cordial welcome to him should he return. He was delighted with the climate of Oakland.

As will be seen in our new advertisements Dr. G. H. Hocking has located at Deer Park. We are glad to know that our sister town has a physician and hope the citizens will give the Doctor a liberal support. He is a native of Allegany county, and a graduate of Maryland University, a gentleman of culture and affable manners. We wish him well.

—Mr. Sandy Carner, mail-carrier between Frostburg and Grantsville, while carrying the mail, met with a serious accident on Saturday last. He was driving in a small wagon, when his horse took fright. The reins broke and he jumped out to catch the horse when he became entangled in the reins, and was dragged a hundred yards before he released himself. Though no bones were broken, he was very badly bruised.—Cumberland Times.

—An effort is being made to secure a lease of ten acres of ground on the summit of Dan's mountain, including the celebrated Dan's Rock. The new road to the mines will run to the base of the peak, and from there to the summit the ascent will be made easy. It is proposed to erect a substantial building on the rock, which covers about an acre, of ground, and make it a summer resort. The peak is nearly 3,000 feet above the sea, and overlooks the Alleghenies within a range of 100 miles, and presents a finer view than that of the celebrated White Mountains. From the rock the city of Cumberland, Frostburg, Mount Savage, Lonaconing, and other places can be plainly seen. The mountain belongs to Dr. Samuel P. Smith, of this city, and other members of his family, and is valuable on account of the coal deposits in it, which have not yet been fully developed, although the sample of coal is of the best quality.—Cumberland Cor. Batta. American

—Dr. W. F. Fundenberg, Oculist, and Aurist, from Cumberland, Md., is at the "Davis House," where all those suffering from diseases of the eye, ear, nose and throat can consult him. All consultations free. Hours 9 A. M. to 1 P. M. jy19.

Church Services—Sunday.
M. E. Church—Preaching in the morning by Rev. Mr. Cupp, and in the evening by Rev. B. Ison.

Lutheran Church—Preaching in the evening at 8 o'clock, by Rev. O. C. Miller.

Postponed.
Owing to the business engagements of the author the conclusion of the "Pullman Expedition" will not appear until next week.

New Signs.
Mr. Carr of the Browning House, Mr. Everstein of the Everstein House, and Mr. Loewenstein, merchant tailor, have erected handsome signs within the last few days.

Grand Pic-Nic.
On the 21st of this month a pic-nic will be held on the Granger picnic ground, near the Red House, and all who take an interest in innocent recreation are respectfully invited. A variety of amusements will be provided. Refreshments furnished at a reasonable rate.

Crops in Garrett.
The news comes to us from every section of the county that the wheat crop now being gathered is the largest ever raised in the county, notwithstanding some damage by the late frosts. The indications at present are that the corn, oats and potato crops will be far above the average.

Good Wheat.
We received a few specimen heads of wheat, raised this season by Mr. G. W. Michael, residing near Bloomington, this county, which are the largest and finest we have ever seen. Garrett is destined at no very distant day to be the champion wheat county of the State.

Beware of Bogus Sewing Machines.
The undersigned, with headquarters at Oakland, is the only authorized agent in Garrett county for the genuine Singer Sewing Machine. If any other person in the county is selling the Singer, they must necessarily be bogus machines, as the company employs not more than one agent in each county.

I. W. SLOANER.

Wreck on the B. & O. R. R.
A wreck occurred on the railroad Tuesday night, about a mile east of Oakland, in which a locomotive, a caboose and four freight cars were badly used up. Three of the cars were loaded with wheat, one half of which will be lost, and the other car with sheep, about thirty of which were killed. The flagman's light going out caused the run-in.

Surgical Operation.
Yesterday morning Dr. W. F. Fundenberg, the well known oculist and aurist of this city, removed the right eye from Christopher Eisel, aged 70 years, from Mt. Savage. The operation was performed with his usual skill and success. The patient returned home on the afternoon train, much pleased with the operation. Three years ago the sight of the eye was entirely lost from an injury received whilst getting out fire-clay; lately it became painful and was beginning to affect the good eye, hence the necessity of the operation.—Cumberland Times.

OAKLAND, Md., July 15th, 1879.

MR. EDITOR:—You will please give notice that Rev. E. English, who is employed as a Missionary by the Maryland Sunday School Union, is now canvassing Garrett county for the purpose of organizing schools where needed and assisting by counsel, addresses, &c., those who desire such assistance. As he may not be able to visit every school in the county, it would be well for those Superintendents and others who especially desire his visit to make it known. This may be done by dropping a card to me, as I will be kept posted as to the whereabouts of Mr. English, and will notify him of such requests.

J. M. DAVIS,
County Vice President.

New Law Firm.

We call the attention of our readers to the card of Messrs. Cox & Combs, on another page. The senior member of the firm, Mr. Cox, has long been a successful practitioner at the Allegany county bar. The junior, Mr. Combs, though not so long at the bar, will, we predict, rise to an enviable position in the profession. Mr. Combs has spent the most of his life in this community and is well known as a gentleman of character and integrity. Any one intrusting business to the new firm will, we are sure, find it promptly attended to. We bespeak for them a liberal patronage.

Real Estate Transfers.
The following is a list of real estate transfers filed for record in the office of W. H. Tower, Clerk of the Circuit Court for Garrett county, for the week ending July 17:

Anthony Luman and wife to Board of county School Commissioners of Garrett county, part of Lot No. 74, containing 1 acre of land; $12.

Wilson Procter and wife to William D. Burton, part of Lots No. 119 and 120 in Wilson's addition to the town of Oakland; $200.

Wilson Procter and wife to Mary E. Burton, part of Lots No. 119 and 120 in Wilson's addition to the town of Oakland; $200.

Lutheran Conference Meeting.
Our late meeting of the joint Conference of the Maryland and Virginia Synods at Oakland, was in every sense a good and profitable meeting. Notwithstanding the affliction of Bro. Miller, which prevented him from mingling with us and deprived our Conference of his wise counsel and energetic co-operation, yet our programme was well carried out, and our meeting was both pleasant and profitable. Out of the nine clerical brethren composing our conference seven were present. But only three of the changes were represented by lay delegates. We were favored with the presence and co-operation of four visiting brethren of sister denominations who contributed not a little to the interest of the occasion. The preaching, the discussion, and the addresses were all in harmony with the object of our Conference, and were well calculated to encourage and edify the people. On Wednesday evening we had an unusually interesting discussion on "What constitutes a christian home." The brethren expressed their views freely and ably, and though there seemed shades of difference of opinion, yet it was evident that all were alive to the importance of the subject, and sound in their views upon it. The points brought out were mainly these, viz: A home organized on christian principles, and governed in a christian spirit, where christian worship, discipline, and culture combine to suppress that which is wicked and wrong, and foster that which is good and noble; and where the moral and religious tendency is heavenward; a home that is characterized by regenerated hearts and sanctified lives, is the christian home. I believe all agreed that this is the ideal, and we could neither have good society nor good government. Another point made was, that all that is wicked, abnormal, and dangerous, either in church or State can only be removed where we have proper christian homes.

The reports on the state of religion were rather favorable, and evinced a commendable zeal on the part of the brethren in their pastoral work.

The last evening was devoted to Sunday School work. Rev. E. English made a very able address on the origin and progress of the work, which was full of practical hints and suggestions. Rev. Dr. De Hass made the concluding address, on facts gathered from the Holy Land, which was highly appreciated.

On Friday morning we took our departure from the saints of Oakland, and the delightful scenery of their mountain home. This is the second time we have enjoyed the kind and large-hearted hospitality of the dear people of Bro. Miller's charge. We all like to go to Oakland, not only because it is so near heaven in altitude, but mainly because of the christian homes, and christian hearts which are ever open to us. Long and lovingly shall we think of our meeting at Oakland.

J. W. LAKE,
Secretary.

A Trip to Garrett County.
The following account of a trip through Garrett county, is taken from the Woodberry News, edited by Mr. Frank L. Morling, who took a prominent part in the Sunday School Convention at Accident:

On Thursday, June 19th, we took the 9:45 P. M. train on the B. & O. R. R., for a trip to Oakland, and on through a portion of Garrett County to attend the third annual Sunday School convention for Garrett county, which was held at Accident, in said county. After reaching the depot, the going sounded, and in company with our good Bro. Wm. A. Baker, State Superintendent of the Maryland S. S. Union, we were tripping it over the rail at a lively rate. This road is now in splendid condition and rides as smooth and nice as a cradle. Being night we had no opportunity to view the grand and magnificent scenery that abounds along the line of this great national route to the West. The splendid management of this road guarantees safety, comfort and speed to its patrons.

When we left home the weather was quite oppressive. After a pleasant chat of an hour or two we reclined in our chairs and were soon in the arms of (as Mrs. P. says) morphia.

By one o'clock we were ascending the grade of the mountains, and were awakened by the chilliness of the atmosphere, and had to take to our coats which we were fortunate to bring along. By three o'clock in the morning we were in Cumberland. It was then so cold that the conductor had to order fire. About four o'clock day was breaking, and we had a fine morning view of the mountains in all their magnificent grandeur, which was greatly enhanced by a glorious sunrise. Nothing can surpass the mountain scenery along the line of this road, as the iron horse ploughs his way up the steep mountain side, and view after view is passed in review. Dead, indeed, must be the soul that does not become enraptured and filled with delight at the grand panorama passing before him. As we passed on up we saw trees of all kinds, in all stages of life, which combined with the grey rocks, formed a pleasing contrast to the eye. Just before reaching Oakland, which is the summit, we passed a number of beautiful farms, which seemed to be in a high state of cultivation, but somewhat backward owing to the late frosts and the drought then prevailing.

About 6 A. M. we rolled into the depot at Oakland, and were met by our young Bro. Charley Davis, who escorted us to the hospitable home of Bro. J. M. Davis, where we were cordially welcomed by Bro. D. H. Good wife and the rest of his family.

At Bro. Davis' we met Bro. McMillen, of Accident. After a hearty breakfast, for which our appetites had been nicely whetted by the ride and the pure mountain air, we were invited to take a seat in Bro. McMillen's new and commodious carryall which was drawn by a pair of splendid bays. Our party consisted of Bros. McMillen, T. J. Peddicord, H. P. Tasker, editor of the Oakland Herald, B. G. Richardson, Wm. A. Baker and myself. The morning was a grand one, and the ride a delightful one. En route we passed a number of beautiful farms. A more beautiful and fertile country we have rarely if ever seen. The farmers are a well to do and thrifty class, having their farms in good order and under full cultivation. Being what is known as mountain meadows, about one-third grade, interspersed with timber land, it is admitted to be the best grazing portion of our State. The county is only partially settled, and offers superior advantages for grazing and general farming. We know of no section of our State offering so many superior advantages to our Eastern friends who want to seek new homes. We think if those who wander westward seeking new homes would only stop and prospect in Garrett, they would be more than satisfied. The mountain glades are admirably adapted to sheep raising. Those who are engaged in it produce the famous mountain mutton so much sought after in our market. Immense forests of timber cover large portions of the county, embracing pine, oak, maple, and hard wood, which would give employment to a large number of lumber men, and which if properly pursued, would prove a source of great wealth.

Among the farming products are wheat, corn, oats, rye, buckwheat, potatoes, wool and butter. Grass grows naturally on the glades, and timothy and clover in abundance follow cultivation. Large numbers of cattle are fed by the farmers. Owing to the almost unprecedented drought the crops this year will be very short and a number of farmers will have to sell off their stock; but this is a circumstance that rarely occurs. Large quantities of butter are packed and shipped to the Eastern market.

After a delightful ride of twenty miles through this charming county, (passing the famous McHenry spring, which is a large body of pure spring water boiling up through quicksand, the bottom of which has never been sounded), we reached the pleasant village of Accident, where the Garrett county Third Annual Sunday School convention was to be held. The land around it is mostly cleared and is very fertile. At this point we were the guests of our good Bro. Dr. E. H. Glodfely and estimable lady, who made our visit so pleasant that we shall ever remember it with great pleasure. We also made the acquaintance of and enjoyed christian fellowship with Bro. Eli McMillen and family, Bros. J. W. and Aaron Boyer, Wm. Hinebaugh, Dr. Spelcher, and others of Accident, F. W. Yager, D. H. Friend, G. H. Snapp, M. A. Salt, N. L. Baumgardner, Chas. Price, Rev. J. J. Young, of Grantsville, A. C. Hamill, the Misses Waggoner, of Grantsville, and many others whose friendship we shall ever prize.

On Sunday morning, we, in company with others of the convention, attended the Tunker church and listened to an able sermon on the Resurrection by Rev. S. H. Bashor, of Ashland, Ohio. It was a rich treat to us. After the sermon we made the acquaintance of the brother, and found him to be the warm hearted christian friend and brother that his sermon indicated him to be. Bro. B., for whom we have formed a warm attachment, is the editor of a church paper, a journal of great merit devoted to the interests of the Tunker brotherhood. We felt sad when the hour came for us to part from the dear brethren and sisters of this part of the Lord's vineyard. At night we attended a bible reading conducted by Bro. Wm. A. Baker, and which was participated in by a number of the brethren. The subject of the lesson was "From the Cross to the Crown." The meeting was one of great interest, as were all the sessions of the convention, the results of which must be the building up of the Master's kingdom and an increased interest in the Sunday School cause.

After a refreshing night's rest and a good breakfast with dear brother and sister Glodfely, we bade adieu to the many kind friends in this part of the county, and though we may never meet these same good people together again the impressions made upon us will be as lasting as life. By 7 o'clock Monday morning, June 22d, we were on our way back to Oakland. The ride was a grand one and the scenery equal to any thing we have ever seen. As we wound our way up the mountain side and looked back down upon the lovely valley with its farm houses and well cultivated fields, we had to gaze and admire. It seemed to us as though we could never be content to have the scene of grandeur shut out from our gaze. If some of our landscape artists want a subject to transfer to canvass that will captivate the world they can find it along the line that we traveled. After a glorious ride of twenty miles we were safely landed at one of our Oakland homes—the house of Bro. J. M. Davis, one of God's noblemen. We spent the time whilst here in visiting our many friends. We spent a pleasant evening with Bro. J. W. Veitch and lady, with whom we had on a former visit spent some happy days. In the evening we attended another Sunday meeting in the M. E. Church, where we had a delightful service of song and praise. The meeting was participated in by Brethren J. M. Davis, B. Ison, T. J. Peddicord, Wm. A. Baker, Townshend and others, and was one of much interest. On Tuesday we spent the day among our former friends, among whom were Miss Ella Ison, Bros. Merrill, Sturgis, Shatzer, O. C. Miller and lady, Bros. Townshend & Sons, Osborn and others, and the afternoon with Bro. Hiram P. Tasker and lady, where we were entertained, as we were everywhere, in true old fashioned Maryland style. On Tuesday evening we attended another Sunday School meeting in the M. E. Church which was full of interest. The singing was excellent, and much good, we think, will result from these union meetings in the Sabbath School cause. On Wednesday morning we called on a number of kind friends, among whom were Bro. James A. Hayden, editor and proprietor of the Oakland REPUBLICAN, Hiram P. Tasker, editor of the Oakland Democrat, and Bro. Smith of the Oakland Democrat—three number one papers. The citizens of Garrett may congratulate themselves upon their press, for it is second to none in the State, and it is doing a good work in building up the county. We also spent a part of the morning with Bro. & Sister Peddicord and their family, which visit we enjoyed very much.

OAKLAND.

Oakland is a very pleasant place to visit and has many attractions. It is 238 miles from Baltimore, and is on the summit plateau of the Allegheny mountains 2800 feet above tide water. The air is pure and healthy. The nights are always comfortable. The neighboring streams abound with trout, and the mountain with game of all descriptions. The splendid Oakland Hotel, built and run by the B. & O. R. R. for the accommodation of summer visitors, is beautifully located here, and is filled in summer with visitors from all parts of the world. A large number of visitors are also accommodated in private boarding houses, and some have their own houses which they occupy during the summer. During the height of the season Oakland is a very attractive place, and is now one of the best known summer resorts in this country.

Wednesday afternoon we bade farewell to our many and much loved friends with many regrets, and we took our way to Cumberland to take part in the proceedings of the Allegheny County Sunday School Convention.

If your skin is yellow, or if you are troubled with Pimples and Boils, cleanse your blood with Dr. Bull's Baltimore Pills. Price only 25 cents.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

S. A. COX, H. WHEELER COBURN, COX & COMBS, ATTORNEYS AT LAW, SOLICITORS IN CHANCERY, Office, Alder street, Oakland, Garrett county, Maryland.

Will practice in all the Courts of Maryland and adjoining counties of West Virginia, and the United States Circuit Courts. Jy19-y.

DR. G. H. HOCKING.
Offers his professional services to the citizens of Deer Park and vicinity. Office, Deer Park. 7 21

25 Mixed cards, snow flake, repp, damask, morning glory, basket and plaid, for 10 cents. Address, The American Star, Bloomington, Garrett county, Md.

COMMISSIONERS' MEETING.

OFFICE OF THE GARRETT COUNTY COMMISSIONERS, OAKLAND, MD., July 17th, 1879.

Notice is hereby given that the County Commissioners of Garrett county will meet at their office in Oakland.

On Wednesday, Aug. 6th, 1879, for the transaction of business.

W. H. HAGANS, Clerk. 7 19 3

Sheriff's Sale.

By virtue of a writ of fieri facias issued out of the Circuit Court for Garrett county, at the suit of Thomas Browning et al., against the goods and chattels, lands and tenements of Charles H. Whetzel and Samuel Tents (said writ of fieri facias being No. 1, Indulgent to September Term, 1879, of said county, and to said Charles H. Whetzel and Samuel Tents, said writ of fieri facias being No. 1, Indulgent to said Charles H. Whetzel and Samuel Tents, in and to the following property, to-wit:

One Steam Engine and Saw Mill, one brown mare, one four-horse wagon, two crosscut saws, three axes, one lot saws and tools. Also all that tract, piece or parcel of land situate, lying and being in said Garrett county, adjoining lands of Thomas Browning and others, it being the same tract of land which was conveyed to the said Charles H. Whetzel and Samuel Tents by deed of said Charles H. Whetzel and Samuel Tents, dated March 20th, 1871, and recorded in Liber W. H. T. No. 1, folio 382, &c., one of the land records of Garrett county, to which said deed reference is hereby made for a full and particular description of said land.

And I hereby give notice that on MONDAY, August 11th, 1879, at the hour of 3 o'clock P. M., in front of the Court House in Oakland, Md., I will offer for sale, at public auction, to the highest bidder for cash, the property aforesaid, to satisfy said writ of fieri facias.

THOS. CODDINGTON, Sheriff. 7 19 4

Ready-Made CLOTHING.

The undersigned would inform the citizens of Oakland and vicinity, that he has on hand a large assortment of which he will sell very cheap for cash.

Ready-Made Clothing,

Gents Furnishing Goods;

in great variety, and at prices to suit the times.

Suits Made to Order

In the most fashionable manner. Orders by mail promptly attended to.

All work WARRANTED to give entire satisfaction.

A. LOEWENSTEIN, Oakland, Md. a6-1y

Road Examiners' Notice.

Notice is hereby given;

That the undersigned, appointed by the County Commissioners of Garrett county, to view the lands through which the road petitioned for by Joseph Paugh, John M. Eichelmeier, A. J. Wernick and others, to pass a road to lead from a point on the Frankville and North Branch road, near Joseph Paugh's, and running through lands of Joseph Paugh, John M. Eichelmeier and others, to intersect the Bloomington and Grantsville road near the corner of John C. Brant's pasture fence, and should be located, will meet on the premises on Wednesday, August 20th, 1879, and to determine whether the public convenience requires the said location of said petitioned road, and if so, to locate the same, and perform their duty in the premises.

D. J. BEVIE, JOS. A. TITTEL, WM. STARRLESS, Examiners. 7 19 5

Trustee's Sale

OF VALUABLE REAL ESTATE.

By virtue of a decree of the Circuit Court for Allegany county, sitting as a Court of Equity, the undersigned, Trustee, do hereby offer for sale, at public auction, in front of WILLIAM MOODY'S STORE,

On Wednesday, the 13th day of August, 1879, at 10 O'CLOCK, A. M., All that valuable real estate commonly called containing about 750 acres of land, more or less, situate in Garrett county, about three miles from Bloomington, one mile from North Branch of the Potomac, and adjoining the lands of Messrs. Ransom, Ransom and Swann's heirs.

Walnut Bottom,

The improvements consist of

TWO LOG DWELLINGS,

Apple Orchard and about 120 acres in line state of cultivation; the residue, or unimproved land, is heavily covered with valuable timber.

From surrounding indications the whole tract is supposed to overlay large veins of coal; the growing crops reserved from sale.

TERMS OF SALE, as prescribed by this decree are: One-third cash on day of sale or ratification thereof, the balance in two equal payments in twelve and twenty-four months, with interest from day of sale, to be secured by note of the purchaser with approved security.

WM. BRACE, Trustee. 7 12 11

RELIGIOUS AND EDUCATIONAL.

A compulsory education bill failed to pass the Illinois Legislature.

In May and June of 1880 an exhibition of ecclesiastical art will be held in London.

A colored Methodist church in Abbeville, S. C., gave $1,200 last year for charitable purposes.

Lutherans of Central Illinois, in Synod assembled, have just told their ministers not to baptize a candidate under any circumstances by immersion.

On a recent Sunday evening 1,200 persons in St. John's Roman Catholic Church, Rochester, Minn., stood up and repeated, after Father Turner, a solemn pledge of abstinence from all intoxicating drinks for one year.

The civil authorities of Austria are energetically suppressing Protestant worship in the Empire Mission churches in Prague, Vienna, and elsewhere, and Bible readings have been suspended under threat of fines and imprisonment.

The colored school teachers of Louisville complain that while they do the same work and submit to the same examination as the white teachers, their salaries are scaled much lower—in some cases amounting to a mere pittance.

A Presbyterian minister in Colorado has within a year organized two churches, built one house of worship and a parsonage, bought a church organ, established two Sunday Schools and three prayer meetings, taught three catechism classes, and supplied six preaching stations.

The National Baptist gathering at Chautauqua Lake this year, being the second one, will begin on July 22nd and continue nine days. Professor W. F. Sweeney of Newark, N. J., being the general conductor of it. The Rev. Dr. Thomas Armitage will preach the sermon on Sunday, July 26.

The parable of the Prodigal Son has been printed in the Mexican language at the Methodist Mission press, being the second issue in that language from any Protestant press, the American Tract Society having issued the first tract in that language some years ago.

Not far from the Amer's palace in Cabul there is and long has been an American church in which Christian worship has been permitted undisturbed through the many civil changes and disturbances that have taken place in that city. The number of the Christians was formerly considerable, but at present there are not more than twelve.

On week days of late they have been worshipping according to the Persian version of the English Prayer Book.

The past year has been an unfortunate one for the Old Catholics. They have lost one of their leading men—Professor Huber—who was Dr. Dollinger's assistant in writing the famous "Janus Letters," and Professors Reusch, Langen and Menzel, of Bonn, have deserted Bishop Reinken, who was compelled to get a priest in Baden to assist him. The two theological students who were retained all Winter have returned to the Church of Rome at the very moment when it was hoped to put them at work.

Stony Point--The Story of the Storming of the Fastness of the Hudson by Maj. Anthony Wayne.

The time fixed for the assault was the night of the 15th of July. Starting from Stony Point, at noon on this date, Wayne and his 1,200 infantry took the line of march over roads and paths so excessively bad and narrow that it was eight o'clock in the evening before the van reached the vicinity of the enemy's position. Compelled to pass over high mountains, across deep morasses and through difficult ravines, the column was stretched out the greater part of the way in a single file, and only covered its formation at the final halt. The point where they stopped was near the house of one Springsteel, a mile and a half from the British works, and there Wayne made his last dispositions for the assault.

First he went forward with his principal officers and reconnoitered the approaches to the fort. Returning, he divided his force into two storming columns--so far modifying Washington's plan, which proposed but one such column--and arranged all details. It is interesting to note that one of the last things the bold soldier sat down to do was to write a letter to a friend, expressing his emotions on the eve of the desperate work he supposed he had in hand and to request that the education of his children be provided for. "I am called to sup," he wrote, "but where to breakfast? Either with the enemies' lines in triumph, or in my own work."

The plan was finally decided upon to be advanced simultaneously, on the right and left, and break through into the works from nearly opposite points. His right column, which Wayne made the strongest, was composed of Fehrig's Virginia men, then Mel's Connecticut, with Hall's Massachusetts following. The left consisted of the Pennsylvanians and Marylanders, under Butler, and Marford's North Carolinians in the rear. The first instructions to the corps were pointed and imperative. Both columns were to move to the assault with unloaded muskets and do the work with the bayonet alone. If any man should attempt to load his piece on the way, he was to be put to death on the spot. The utmost silence was to be observed until the parapet of the main work was gained, when all, as they entered, were to shout the watchword of the night, "The fort's our own!"

To distinguish them from the enemy in the darkness of the night, every soldier and officer was ordered to fix a piece of white paper in "the most conspicuous part of his hat or cap." That the main bodies might meet with as few obstacles as possible in their forward course, each one was to be preceded by a "forlorn hope," which was to act as a surprise party; and still in front of this were to be placed twenty volunteers, under a determined officer, who were to cut away the abatis.

For the right column the "forlorn hope" consisted of 150 men, under the gallant De Fleury, and the advance guard of twenty, under Lieutenant Knox, of the Ninth Pennsylvania; for the left column Major Steward led the one party, and Lieutenant Gibbons, of the Sixth Pennsylvania, the other. These officers had been assigned to those posts of honor either by lot or because of their previous knowledge of the ground. Finally, all things arranged, the whole body moved forward, at half-past eleven o'clock at night, with a steadiness and determination that augured nothing but success.

As in the case of all military exploits where victory depends upon precision and rapidity, the assault which now occurred was accomplished in a remarkably brief space of time. Three-quarters of an hour after midnight, and all was over. Even Cesar's condensed dispatch would have been too long to announce the result. The light infantry came, and conquered. They "saw" nothing; it was dark.

Twelve o'clock was the time for the actual charge to begin. To reach the Point within assaulting distance it was necessary to cross the intervening marsh as quickly as possible. Here there was an unexpected obstacle in the overflow of the tide, and twenty minutes were lost--valuable time just then, but fortunately not a fatal loss. As the two columns neared the enemy, Marford and his North Carolinians, by previous instructions, took positions directly in front of the British works, and opened a rapid and continuous fire, for the purpose of drawing attention to themselves while the storming parties moved silently on the right and left. This ruse contributed to the night's success. Immediately there is hot work in progress.

The hoped-for surprise is out of the question, for the enemy's pickets have given the alarm. In ten minutes every man of the garrison is up, completely dressed, and at his proper station. If the fort is to be taken now, only two features of the assault remain--a mighty courage and resolution seem to urge on the American infantry with an irresistible momentum. The valiant Wayne, determined to share the perils as well as the glories of the enterprise, leads the right column spear in hand.

Not a man falters as they approach the two formidable lines of abatis which stretched across the Point in front of the main works, the fire from the enemy's batteries becoming "terrible, and incessant." Although on account of the darkness much of its effect is lost, men nevertheless here and there begin to fall in the ranks of the light infantry. Lieutenant Regnier, but English lieutenant, is bravely fighting at the head of his battalion; he is wounded in the thigh. Capt. Ezra Seiden, of Lyme, a handsome young officer fresh from Yale College at the opening of the war, but now a veteran of four campaigns, and belonging to Col. Starr's First Connecticut, receives a well-aimed fatal wound in his side. Though weak from loss of blood, he makes his way into the fort. A shot breaks the standard of Mel's Regiment, but English lieutenant Speer tears the colors off, whips them round his arm, and keeps charging on. Out of twenty of one of the advance parties seventeen are either killed or wounded. But on, on, the two columns go, mowed down by the enemy's fire, but on, on, they are rocky, even precipitous. It takes time to open a passage through the obstructions, and men continue to fall. At the second abatis Wayne receives a flesh-wound in the head. Thinking it fatal at the moment, he calls on his two aides, Captains Fishbourn and Archer, to carry him along that he may die in the fort. In five minutes more the work is done. The head of the right column reaches the foot of the fort first, and the first man in it is De Fleury. "The fort's our own!" he shouts, and then strikes the enemy's colors with his own hands. Right after him, spreading along and climbing over the parapet, follow the Virginia boys and the main column. Lieutenant Knox is the second man in. Sergeant Baker, of Virginia, wounded four times during the assault, is the third. Sergeant Speer, from the same State, is the fourth, with two wounds. Wounded twice also is Sergeant Dunlap, of Pennsylvania, the fifth man over the works.

The rest came swarming in. On the other side the left column appears at nearly the same time. "The fort's our own!" the fort's our own!" resounds from every quarter. The Americans dash in among the astonished British, and among the bayonet with terrible energy, driving them into the corners of the work, and compelling their instant surrender. "U. P. Johnston, in Harper's Magazine for July.

A Scrap of California History.

In the year 1844, when the Californians were fighting hard to gain their independence and the Republic of Mexico was rife with rebellion, Micholoreno, with a small force of liberated convicts, was sent to reduce the Californians to subjection. After a series of skirmishes with various results the forces met on the plains of San Fernando. The native Californians under Gen. Jose Castro, numbered over 2,000 men, the twenty pieces of ordnance worked by foreign gunners. They had taken up a position on a hill, and were well protected by a strongly built fortification of stone. The Mexican force consisted of the small command of Micholoreno, a company of eighty-five Indians, untrained by General Sutter, trained at New Helvetia and commanded by Major Rufus and Lieutenant Torre, and a rifle corps formed by the foreigners, who elected Captain Ghent as Captain, and four pieces of artillery. The whole force would not exceed 640 men. The Mexican force marched steadily and undisturbed until they approached to within 800 yards of the Californian fortifications. Unprotected, and exposed to the fire within short range, the defeat of the Mexicans seemed certain. They had come to a stand on the bank of a deep gulch, and brought their four pieces of ordnance to the front. The fight commenced in earnest. The well-directed fire of the Mexican gunners, who were whites and had seen some military service, made deadly havoc among the Californians. For the purpose of getting a better position for the infantry, a small detachment of rifles was sent down the gulch. When some two or three miles distant from the forces, they unexpectedly met a company of foreigners from Los Angeles, and unhappily they were captured. However, the firing continued, the Mexicans doing good execution. The Californians fired recklessly and failed, not a shot taking effect. It has been reported that the artillerymen were under the influence of liquor. When the capture was reported, General Sutter with two or three scouts was sent to determine the truth, as doubts were entertained but that it might be a mistake, when luckless Sutter was added to the number of captives. Night came on and found the forces hotly contesting the field. The Mexicans determined to retire, and moved to a hill not far distant and bivouacked on the very top, commanding a full view of the plains at each corner. All was quiet until about three o'clock in the morning, when a sound like that of distant thunder was heard. All was commotion, and the company was soon under arms and formed for a desperate defense. The Californians had gathered immense herds of horses on the plains and completely surrounded the encampment, intending to drive them over the camps and either kill or roast the Mexicans. In order to frighten and enrage the animals, they fired several volleys at them. The little company stood ready, and when the horses had approached near enough they emptied their muskets, and the artillery poured in such a volley of grape and canister among them that thousands were slain, and to very late years bones of the horses could be seen on the ground. The next morning peace was declared, and Micholoreno was ordered back to Mexico. --Sonoma Index.

A Pioneer's Big Lift.

An old pioneer was hugging the historic stone in Judge Knox's court room last evening, and, as is usual with the old-timers who visit that temple of justice, he was recounting the tale of his life. Though poor now, he had as a matter of course, been once rich.

"I was a leading citizen of Muckelamy Hill in '32," he said. "In them days I was in the dust-bowl business. I had my sign out, 'See Compa Ore Agui'--upstairs, you know, and all that sort of thing. I tell you, it takes a smart man to get along in that 'ere trade. Jenkins & Co. was the boss at it when I first went into it at Muckelamy Hill, but it wasn't six months afore I'd took half their trade away. I had to hustle to do it. You see the boys was all anxious to do well, and the first that offered the coin made the rifle. Jenkins & Co. was pretty high-toned, and used to wait every night for that man to go down the hill to the express office and bring up money in a handcart. I saw my chance and used to be on hand when the stage came in an 'first shillings in the morning, when the driver threwed it off. Nick Monkins was the driver in them days. He was afterwards killed by road agents. Many's the time Nick's showed me down my sack with a clean skin, and I'd be a good deal richer than I was."

"How much did you say you packed up the first night?" asked Judge Knox's clerk.

"Four hundred thousand, other than less," replied the pioneer with melancholy pride.

"See here," said the clerk, figuring rapidly, "gold's worth $18 an ounce, and there's twelve ounces to the pound, and that makes 216. Now, 216 into 400,000 leaves something over 1,851 pounds--pretty nearly a ton. How far up the hill did you carry that did you say?"

The old pioneer looked at the clerk with fixed content for a moment, and then merely saying, "You're a plucked Johnny-Come-Lately, that's what you are!" arose and left the court-room. --Virginia (New) Chronicle.

Paper Hanging.

Paper-hanging is quite a modern invention, after all that is in the way of wall-paper. In the East wall-paper had been known from time immemorial; but it was only toward the end of the seventeenth century that they were brought from China, imported into England and gradually made popular.

France took hold of the idea and perfected it, and has hitherto produced the best, while Germany and Belgium have given the cheapest papers; but England has lately come to rival France.

There is now a vast variety to choose from everywhere; mounting from the rough kitchen fourpenny paper that, put on wrong side out, when its pattern is slightly stamped presents a uniform gray surface like something a great deal more expensive and where the pattern is heavily stamped, presents a damascened gray surface, to those elaborate in art and material, whose use in a single room requires an expenditure of a small fortune. There are the common satin-faced ones, the gilded, silvered, and bronzed grounds, embossed gilt and mica, imitation of silks and velvets, and stamped velvets; there are some like delicate muslin embossed in chain stitch and lined with color, at six dollars a roll and upwards; others like the dark old embossed Spanish leathers, battened to the wall, from nine to twelve dollars a roll, according to the present prices; there are thick Japanese papers where the black ground riots in fantastic assemblage of all rich colors where a gold ground carries birds and where a gold ground carries birds and where a gold ground carries birds and where a gold ground carries birds.

GRAEFENBERG Vegetable PILLS

Are the mildest ever known, they cure HEADACHE, BILIOUSNESS, LIVER COMPLAINT and INDIGESTION. No griping or nausea. These PILLS

Tone up the system and restore health to those suffering from general debility and nervousness. Sold by all Druggists, 25c. per box.

CLOVER THRESHERS. SEND FOR CATALOGUE. S350 A MONTH--Agents Wanted--35 best selling articles in the world, one sample free. Address: J. H. Chapman, 60 West 4th St., New York, N. Y.

AGENTS, $2,000 A YEAR for 1 county. Add J. H. Chapman, 60 West 4th St., New York, N. Y.

AGRICULTURAL AND DOMESTIC.

Parasites on rose bushes may be destroyed by sprinkling freely with rather weak tobacco water.

A cloth dipped in a solution of amyl nitrite, one part in one hundred of water, and hung up in foul air, quickly destroys bad odors.

Ice Cream.--Whip a quart of fresh, thick cream, sweetening it after it is whipped with six ounces of powdered sugar; put it into a freezer and work it until it is frozen.

Do not have flannel or woolen dishrags, as they retain the grease, and so keep putting it on instead of taking it off. Old towels are the best for this purpose, and they should be washed and boiled as regularly as the napkins and towels themselves.

New Potatoes.--Knead an ounce of butter with the juice of half a lemon, white pepper and salt to taste, and a small quantity of parsley freed from moisture and finely minced. Put this on a hot dish and cook it in a quantity of plainly boiled new potatoes.

Lemon and Orange Water Ice.--Rub a lump of sugar over the rind of a lemon until it has absorbed all the oil. Put it into a bowl with the juice of four lemons, four times as much water, or more if it seems too strong in flavor, sweeten it to taste with clarified sugar, strain it through a lawn sieve and freeze it as you would ice cream. Orange ice is made in the same way.

Do not let your pastures run down until they will produce nothing but weeds and scrubby bushes. Scatter some wood ashes, or bonedust, or compost on the grazing lands and the rich grasses will grow with such luxuriance as to choke out the weeds, and there will be no need of expending $50 to $60 to reflect an acre of exhausted pasture.

Keep your horse stables dark in summer and you will save many a bushel of oats and a great percentage on your blacksmith's bill. Hang up cloths before the windows if they have no blinds. If horses are obliged to stand in the sun, they will sweat and stamp and worry constantly to keep off flies they not only loosen their shoes, but injure their feet by straining the cords. A cheap stable blanket will protect the body of the horse.

Rice-water for invalids.--Take four ounces of rice, and wash carefully in three waters; in a skillet put a quart of water and boil it; put in the rice and boil until the rice is in a perfect pulp; then strain carefully, and put on the fire again, adding white sugar to taste, a small piece of cinnamon, or if preferred, a little grated nutmeg; skim if necessary, and strain again; when cold.

Codfish Balls.--Two pounds boneless fish, soaked and boiled over night, and well beaten before breakfast; boil twelve or fifteen good-sized potatoes; mash them very smooth, with milk, and a large tablespoonful butter; beat in the codfish; add one egg; if not soft enough, add a little more milk; make a cake and fry. The secret of good fish-cakes is to have the potatoes fresh boiled, and beaten very light.

Starch for Collars.--Mix very gradually one tablespoonful of white starch with half a pint of cold water, about the size of the tip of a finger in hot water; when cold stir it into the starch, put the collars into the starch, rub them up and down in it, squeeze them and press them in a cloth; smooth them out with a soft piece of linen and iron immediately, first with a flat iron, then with a polishing iron.

Truth is Mighty.

At the little heaven aid in the measure of time, all leaves so truth gains; it overcomes all doubt and disbelief. When Dr. Pierce, of Buffalo, N. Y., announced that his Kidney Prescription would positively cure the many diseases and weaknesses peculiar to women, some doubted, and continued to follow the harsh and caustic local treatment. But the mighty truth gradually became acknowledged. Thousands of ladies who had been afflicted with the most distressing and dangerous diseases of the female system, and who were ready to give up all hope, were cured by the use of his medicine. So sanguine is Dr. Pierce of its power to cure, that he has never through druggists under a positive guarantee.

Free-21 Portraits. Free.

Notions Light is the title of a new Pamphlet of 12 pages. It contains the biography of all the Presidents of the United States from Washington to James Monroe (12 in all), engraved expressly for this work; also 12 portraits of Canadian notabilities. Monarch Life will be sent to any address, by mail, on receipt of 25 cents. H. R. STEVENS, Boston, Mass.

We congratulate Messrs. Wheeler, Finley & Co. of New Orleans, La., upon their happy idea of giving to the public information of the contents of Dr. H. C. Pierce's "The Kidney Prescription," which of late has gained such well-deserved popularity among the people. As far as we know, this is the only proprietary remedy for the cure of Catarrh and Fever, the composition of which is not kept a secret. For sale by all Druggists.

GILBERT'S CORN STARCH--manufactured at Buffalo, N. Y.--is the mildest and most effective remedy in the world. Why? Because, being pure, less is required for household purposes. It possesses a tendency of favoring the cure of many other stomachs.

Always insist on having the Sterling Brand Powder, made by Smith & Carter, Cleveland, O., because it is superior in strength and is always right. See your grocer.

Crow Jackson's Best Sweet Navy Tobacco.

GRAEFENBERG Vegetable PILLS

Are the mildest ever known, they cure HEADACHE, BILIOUSNESS, LIVER COMPLAINT and INDIGESTION. No griping or nausea. These PILLS

Tone up the system and restore health to those suffering from general debility and nervousness. Sold by all Druggists, 25c. per box.

CLOVER THRESHERS. SEND FOR CATALOGUE. S350 A MONTH--Agents Wanted--35 best selling articles in the world, one sample free. Address: J. H. Chapman, 60 West 4th St., New York, N. Y.

AGENTS, $2,000 A YEAR for 1 county. Add J. H. Chapman, 60 West 4th St., New York, N. Y.

DR. CLARK'S JOHNSON'S Indian Blood Syrup.

LABORATORY, 77 W. 3d St., New York City.

THE BEST REMEDY KNOWN TO MAN!

Dr. Clark Johnson, having associated himself with Mr. John Johnson, an eminent chemist, has discovered a new and powerful remedy for the treatment of the various diseases of the blood.

The discovery of Mr. Johnson being similar to that of Mrs. Clark Johnson and son, of Washington County, Iowa, in the case of a small child, who was afflicted with the various diseases of the blood, and who was cured by the use of the same medicine.

It is a powerful remedy for the treatment of the various diseases of the blood, and is sold by all druggists.

It is a powerful remedy for the treatment of the various diseases of the blood, and is sold by all druggists.

It is a powerful remedy for the treatment of the various diseases of the blood, and is sold by all druggists.

It is a powerful remedy for the treatment of the various diseases of the blood, and is sold by all druggists.

It is a powerful remedy for the treatment of the various diseases of the blood, and is sold by all druggists.

It is a powerful remedy for the treatment of the various diseases of the blood, and is sold by all druggists.

It is a powerful remedy for the treatment of the various diseases of the blood, and is sold by all druggists.

It is a powerful remedy for the treatment of the various diseases of the blood, and is sold by all druggists.

It is a powerful remedy for the treatment of the various diseases of the blood, and is sold by all druggists.

It is a powerful remedy for the treatment of the various diseases of the blood, and is sold by all druggists.

It is a powerful remedy for the treatment of the various diseases of the blood, and is sold by all druggists.

It is a powerful remedy for the treatment of the various diseases of the blood, and is sold by all druggists.

It is a powerful remedy for the treatment of the various diseases of the blood, and is sold by all druggists.

It is a powerful remedy for the treatment of the various diseases of the blood, and is sold by all druggists.

It is a powerful remedy for the treatment of the various diseases of the blood, and is sold by all druggists.

It is a powerful remedy for the treatment of the various diseases of the blood, and is sold by all druggists.

It is a powerful remedy for the treatment of the various diseases of the blood, and is sold by all druggists.

It is a powerful remedy for the treatment of the various diseases of the blood, and is sold by all druggists.

It is a powerful remedy for the treatment of the various diseases of the blood, and is sold by all druggists.

It is a powerful remedy for the treatment of the various diseases of the blood, and is sold by all druggists.

It is a powerful remedy for the treatment of the various diseases of the blood, and is sold by all druggists.

It is a powerful remedy for the treatment of the various diseases of the blood, and is sold by all druggists.

It is a powerful remedy for the treatment of the various diseases of the blood, and is sold by all druggists.

It is a powerful remedy for the treatment of the various diseases of the blood, and is sold by all druggists.

It is a powerful remedy for the treatment of the various diseases of the blood, and is sold by all druggists.

It is a powerful remedy for the treatment of the various diseases of the blood, and is sold by all druggists.

It is a powerful remedy for the treatment of the various diseases of the blood, and is sold by all druggists.

It is a powerful remedy for the treatment of the various diseases of the blood, and is sold by all druggists.

The only 25 Cent AGUE REMEDY IN THE WORLD.

A safe and reliable substitute for Quinine. The best known remedy for all diseases caused by Malarial Poisoning, being a preventive as well as a certain cure for

FEVER and AGUE, CHILLS & FEVER

Dumb Ague, Ague Cake, Remittent, Intermittent Fevers, Kidney Disease, Liver and Bowel Complaints, Dyspepsia and General Debility; the best general Tonic for Debilitated Systems. Price, 25 cents per box. Sold by all Druggists in this town. Mailed on receipt of price by DUNDAS DICK & CO., 35 Wooster Street, New York. Explanatory book mailed FREE on application.

MAKE YOUR OWN CHROMO PHOTOGRAPHS BY THE NEW METHOD OF Photo-Enamel Painting.

The difficulties of spotting, etc., overcome.

Any person can, in two hours, produce from a photograph an ENAMELED CHROMO, which will last for years, and will be more permanent than by the old method. Send for catalogue, and you will see the result of this new and improved process, sent on receipt of 25 cents.

E. E. PRATT, 79 Jackson St., Chicago, Ill.

THE ADAMS & WESTLAKE Improved Wire Gauge, Saw, Expander, etc., etc.

The only wire made with wire gauge inside the rope. The only wire made with wire gauge inside the rope. The only wire made with wire gauge inside the rope.

The only wire made with wire gauge inside the rope. The only wire made with wire gauge inside the rope. The only wire made with wire gauge inside the rope.

The only wire made with wire gauge inside the rope. The only wire made with wire gauge inside the rope. The only wire made with wire gauge inside the rope.

The only wire made with wire gauge inside the rope. The only wire made with wire gauge inside the rope. The only wire made with wire gauge inside the rope.

The only wire made with wire gauge inside the rope. The only wire made with wire gauge inside the rope. The only wire made with wire gauge inside the rope.

The only wire made with wire gauge inside the rope. The only wire made with wire gauge inside the rope. The only wire made with wire gauge inside the rope.

The only wire made with wire gauge inside the rope. The only wire made with wire gauge inside the rope. The only wire made with wire gauge inside the rope.

The only wire made with wire gauge inside the rope. The only wire made with wire gauge inside the rope. The only wire made with wire gauge inside the rope.

The only wire made with wire gauge inside the rope. The only wire made with wire gauge inside the rope. The only wire made with wire gauge inside the rope.

The only wire made with wire gauge inside the rope. The only wire made with wire gauge inside the rope. The only wire made with wire gauge inside the rope.

The only wire made with wire gauge inside the rope. The only wire made with wire gauge inside the rope. The only wire made with wire gauge inside the rope.

The only wire made with wire gauge inside the rope. The only wire made with wire gauge inside the rope. The only wire made with wire gauge inside the rope.

The only wire made with wire gauge inside the rope. The only wire made with wire gauge inside the rope. The only wire made with wire gauge inside the rope.

The only wire made with wire gauge inside the rope. The only wire made with wire gauge inside the rope. The only wire made with wire gauge inside the rope.

The only wire made with wire gauge inside the rope. The only wire made with wire gauge inside the rope. The only wire made with wire gauge inside the rope.

The only wire made with wire gauge inside the rope. The only wire made with wire gauge inside the rope. The only wire made with wire gauge inside the rope.

The only wire made with wire gauge inside the rope. The only wire made with wire gauge inside the rope. The only wire made with wire gauge inside the rope.

The only wire made with wire gauge inside the rope. The only wire made with wire gauge inside the rope. The only wire made with wire gauge inside the rope.

The only wire made with wire gauge inside the rope. The only wire made with wire gauge inside the rope. The only wire made with wire gauge inside the rope.

The only wire made with wire gauge inside the rope. The only wire made with wire gauge inside the rope. The only wire made with wire gauge inside the rope.

The only wire made with wire gauge inside the rope. The only wire made with wire gauge inside the rope. The only wire made with wire gauge inside the rope.

The only wire made with wire gauge inside the rope. The only wire made with wire gauge inside the rope. The only wire made with wire gauge inside the rope.

The only wire made with wire gauge inside the rope. The only wire made with wire gauge inside the rope. The only wire made with wire gauge inside the rope.

The only wire made with wire gauge inside the rope. The only wire made with wire gauge inside the rope. The only wire made with wire gauge inside the rope.

THE REPUBLICAN.

VOLUME 3.

OAKLAND, MD., SATURDAY, JULY 26, 1879.

NUMBER 22

OAKLAND BUSINESS GUIDE.

DRY GOODS, GROCERIES, etc.

D. E. OFFUTT,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Agricultural Machines, Musical Instruments,
Guns, Pistols, etc.

G. W. LEGUE,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Cor. Second & Oak Sts.

D. H. LOAR,
ORIGINAL NEW YORK STORE,
General Merchandise, Watches, Clocks, Jew-
elry, etc.

I. W. STALNAKER,
Grocery and Provision Store,
Corner Third and Oak Streets.

L. BUSH & SON,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Cor. Third & Oak Sts.

J. A. GRANT,
Dry Goods, Notions & Groceries,
SPECIAL LINE OF TOBACCO.

DAVIS & TOWNSEND,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Agents Agricultural Machines,
Opposite Bailey's Park.

C. C. MICHAEL,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Notions, Clocks, Confectionery, etc., Next to Collingwood's Hotel.

RICHARDSON BROS.,
GROCERIES, CONFECTIONERIES,
Canned Goods, Fruit, etc.

HOTELS.

CODDINGTON'S HOTEL,
W. M. CODDINGTON, Proprietor,
Main St., opposite Jackson's Billiard Saloon.

LIVERY STABLE.

THOMAS MARTIN,
Opposite Postoffice.

STOVES AND TINWARE.

G. A. SHIRER,
Oak Street, near Second.

PHYSICIANS.

DR. J. LEE MCCLAM,
Office on Main Street.

DR. E. H. PARSONS,
offers his professional services
to the people of Oakland and vicinity.
Office in the old Ottum building,
3 S. 3rd.

PLASTERER.

JAMES ARNOLD,
Residence on Fourth Street.

BOOT AND SHOE MAKER.

W. M. WAGNER,
Shop Cor. First & Oak Sts.

GEO. F. LOUGHRIDGE,
Leave orders at Express office.

SURVEYORS.

J. B. BRANT,
Surveyor, Auctioneer and
Conveyancer.

JOHN HARNED,
Address, Post Office.

JEWELER.

A. B. WOODOCK,
In Wm. Sumner's Building,
Watches and Clocks Cleaned and Repaired.

MILLINERY AND FANCY GOODS.

MRS. M. E. DAVIS,
Cor. Oak & Second Sts.

M. L. SCOTT'S Baltimore Store,
Millinery, Gents' Furnishing
and Fancy Goods, and Shoes,
Main Street, opposite Dr. McClellan's office.

DRUGS AND MEDICINES.

GEO. C. STURGEON,
Pharmacy, Toilet Articles, Stationery,
Tobacco and Cigars.

G. W. MERRILL,
Pure Drugs, Medicines, Toilet Goods, Station-
ery, Cigars and Tobacco, French Candy,
Fruit, Fishing Tackle, &c. Physician's prescriptions accurately compounded.

PAINTING & PAPER HANG- ING.

E. J. FRINGER,
House and Sign Painter,
And Paper Hanger.

S. V. B. WARD,
HOUSE AND SIGN PAINTER
Shop near Davis House.

BLACKSMITHS.

CHAS. SINCELL,
Liberty Street.

CONTRACTORS & BUILDERS.

JOHN M. JARBOE,
Carpenter, Contractor & Builder,
Residence on Liberty St., nearly opp. Depot.

P. A. CHISHOLM,
Carpenter, Contractor,
And Builder.

GEO. A. SPEDDEN,
Residence opp. School house.

JOSEPH M. CRIM,
Residence on Alder Street.

A. C. BROOKE,
Res. near Republican office.

CABINETMAKERS AND UN- DERTAKERS.

A. C. BROOKE,
Res. adjoining Gazette office.

JOHN SHATZER,
Shop on Second Street.

MEDICAL.

H. T.

HELMBOLD'S

COMPOUND

Fluid Extract

BUCHU.

PHARMACEUTICAL

A SPECIFIC REMEDY FOR ALL

DISEASES

OF THE

BLADDER & KIDNEYS.

For Debility, Loss of Memory, Indisposi-
tion to Exertion or Business, Shortness of
Breath, Troubled with Thoughts of Disease,
Impress of Vision, Pain in the Back, Chest,
and Head, Rush of Blood to the Head, Pale Countenance, and Dry Skin.

If these symptoms are allowed to go on,
very frequently Eminent Fits and Consumption follow. When the Circulation becomes affected it requires the aid of an invigorating
medicine to strengthen and tone up the system—such

"Helmhold's Buchu"

DOES IN EVERY CASE.

HELMBOLD'S BUCHU

IS UNEQUALED

By its most eminent known. It is prescribed by the most eminent physicians all over the
world.

Rheumatism,
Spermatorrhea,
Neuralgia,
Nervousness,
Dyspepsia,
Indigestion,
Constipation,
Aches and Pains,

General Debility,
Kidney Diseases,
Liver Complaint,
Nervous Debility,
Epilepsy,
Head Troubles,
Paralysis,
General Ill Health,

Spinal Diseases,
Sciatica,
Brachitis,
Neclitis,
Lumbago,
Catarrh,
Nervous Complaints,
Female Complaints, &c.

Headache, Pain in the Shoulders, Cough,
Bizziness, Sour Stomach, Empthosis, Bad
Taste in the Mouth, Retention of the Urine,
Pain in the region of the Kidneys, and a
thousand other painful symptoms, are the indications of Dyspepsia.

HELMBOLD'S BUCHU

Invigorates the Stomach.

And stimulates the torpid Liver, Bowels, and
Kidneys to healthy action, in cleansing the
blood of all impurities, and imparting new
life and vigor to the whole system.

A single trial will be quite sufficient to
convince the most hesitating of its valuable
remedial qualities.

HELMBOLD'S BUCHU

Invigorates the Stomach.

And stimulates the torpid Liver, Bowels, and
Kidneys to healthy action, in cleansing the
blood of all impurities, and imparting new
life and vigor to the whole system.

A single trial will be quite sufficient to
convince the most hesitating of its valuable
remedial qualities.

HELMBOLD'S BUCHU

Invigorates the Stomach.

And stimulates the torpid Liver, Bowels, and
Kidneys to healthy action, in cleansing the
blood of all impurities, and imparting new
life and vigor to the whole system.

A single trial will be quite sufficient to
convince the most hesitating of its valuable
remedial qualities.

HELMBOLD'S BUCHU

Invigorates the Stomach.

And stimulates the torpid Liver, Bowels, and
Kidneys to healthy action, in cleansing the
blood of all impurities, and imparting new
life and vigor to the whole system.

A single trial will be quite sufficient to
convince the most hesitating of its valuable
remedial qualities.

HELMBOLD'S BUCHU

Invigorates the Stomach.

And stimulates the torpid Liver, Bowels, and
Kidneys to healthy action, in cleansing the
blood of all impurities, and imparting new
life and vigor to the whole system.

A single trial will be quite sufficient to
convince the most hesitating of its valuable
remedial qualities.

HELMBOLD'S BUCHU

Invigorates the Stomach.

And stimulates the torpid Liver, Bowels, and
Kidneys to healthy action, in cleansing the
blood of all impurities, and imparting new
life and vigor to the whole system.

A single trial will be quite sufficient to
convince the most hesitating of its valuable
remedial qualities.

HELMBOLD'S BUCHU

Invigorates the Stomach.

And stimulates the torpid Liver, Bowels, and
Kidneys to healthy action, in cleansing the
blood of all impurities, and imparting new
life and vigor to the whole system.

A single trial will be quite sufficient to
convince the most hesitating of its valuable
remedial qualities.

HELMBOLD'S BUCHU

Invigorates the Stomach.

And stimulates the torpid Liver, Bowels, and
Kidneys to healthy action, in cleansing the
blood of all impurities, and imparting new
life and vigor to the whole system.

A single trial will be quite sufficient to
convince the most hesitating of its valuable
remedial qualities.

HELMBOLD'S BUCHU

Invigorates the Stomach.

INTERNATIONAL BIBLE LESSONS.

SECOND, JULY 27, 1879.
VICTORY OVER DEATH.

GENERAL STATEMENT.

In this wonderful chapter the curtain of the hereafter is lifted, and we are permitted to look upon the mysteries of the eternal state. Its theme is the resurrection, a doctrine which rests upon God's word only, and is without proof except from the pages of holy writ. The apostle discusses the general subject under four divisions: first, the evidences of a resurrection, (ver. 1-11); secondly, the resurrection body, (ver. 12-17); thirdly, the condition of saints before the time of their Lord's appearance, (ver. 18-23); fourthly, the practical and present application of the doctrine, (ver. 24-28). The last two topics are treated upon in our lesson. The living saints shall be changed into the likeness of their risen Lord, while those that sleep in him shall break forth from their graves at his summons, clothed in immortality. Both shall be changed into the likeness of his glorious body, and we shall all be changed.

1 Cor. 15, 50-54.

50 Now this I say, brethren, that flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God; neither doth corruption inherit incorruption.

51 Behold, I show you a mystery; We shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed.

52 In a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump; for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed.

53 For this corruptible must put on immortality, and this mortal must put on immortality.

54 So when this corruptible shall have put on immortality, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory.

55 O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?

56 The sting of death is sin; and the strength of sin is the law.

57 But thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ.

58 Therefore, my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labor is not in vain in the Lord.

HOME READINGS.

1. Victory over death, 1 Cor. 15, 50-54.

2. Christ's resurrection, John 20, 1-18.

3. Christ at Nain, Luke 7, 11-18.

4. Christ at Bethany, John 11, 17-38.

5. Christ at the grave, John 11, 37-40.

6. Christ the first-fruits, 1 Cor. 15, 1-36.

7. The first resurrection, Rev. 20, 1-6.

GOLDEN TEXT.

Jesus said unto me, I am the resurrection, and the life: he that believeth in me, though he shall die, yet shall he live, Rev. 20, 13.

LESSON HYMN 75.

Lives and death, and resurrection;
Where, O death, is thy sting?
Once he died our souls to save;
Whom thy sleep should have held,
None saw where Christ has risen,
Eden our exalted head;
Made like him, like him we rise;
Ours the cross, the grave, the skies.

QUESTIONS ON THE OUTLINE.

1. The change, ver. 50-54; Phil. 3, 21.

2. What is here meant by flesh and blood?

3. What is said of our human bodies?

4. Why is it so? John 6, 63.

5. What mystery does the apostle speak of?

6. What change is here referred to?

7. What is the result of this change?

8. What is the result of this change?

9. What is the result of this change?

10. What is the result of this change?

11. What is the result of this change?

12. What is the result of this change?

13. What is the result of this change?

14. What is the result of this change?

15. What is the result of this change?

16. What is the result of this change?

17. What is the result of this change?

18. What is the result of this change?

19. What is the result of this change?

20. What is the result of this change?

21. What is the result of this change?

22. What is the result of this change?

A Review of the Work of Resumption

PHILADELPHIA, July 14.—Hon. John Sherman, Secretary of the Treasury, accompanied by his secretary and the reception committee of the Maritime Exchange, left the Continental Hotel shortly before noon to-day, and proceeded to the Walnut street wharf, where they boarded the revenue cutter Hamilton, and started on a tour of inspection of the Delaware river and harbor.

They were attended by a large party of invited guests, including many railroad and bank presidents, Mayor Stokely and collector Taiton, and other city and federal officials. Former, O'Neill and Bingham. The Hamilton steamed down the river as an officer, and is also going to return she will leave this port with the secretary upon an official cruise in the East.

After the party, which numbered about sixty, had partaken of refreshments, Mr. Wm. Brockie, President of the Maritime Exchange, called a meeting and introduced Secretary Sherman, who said:

"Gentlemen—I did not expect when I received your kind invitation that I would be called upon to make a speech, and I do not understand that my friends here desire me to make a speech, but I will commence by returning thanks for the pleasure that I have enjoyed in inspecting the shores of the Delaware and witnessing the immense progress and growth of this great city of Philadelphia. It presents a combination of trade and commerce that I know of in no other city in this country, but as those points are quite familiar to you, I will not enlarge upon them. In regard to the resumption experiment, my friend has paid me compliments that are entirely exaggerated. I do not desire any commendations. A year or two ago I thought I was a great deal too much abused by a great many things I don't deserve. So I held a pretty fair balance. I had an idea when I assumed the office I now hold that it would be a good thing to get back to the resumption of specie payments. They say I am pretty stubborn about principles. I hold to them, and I will carry out what I begin. I never had any doubt about the ability to resume—none at all. A great many men—some of these, no doubt, who hear me—thought it was not a wise undertaking to attempt to make the vast volume of our paper currency equal to gold; that we did not have the law on our side, the power to bring it about, and the determination to do. The result has been happy and beneficial to all classes of honest and industrious men, as well as to those who labor as well as those who spend money—all are benefited by a stable currency such as we have to-day. Now, gentlemen, I think I have said all that I wish to say, and what I begin. I never had any doubt about the ability to resume—none at all. A great many men—some of these, no doubt, who hear me—thought it was not a wise undertaking to attempt to make the vast volume of our paper currency equal to gold; that we did not have the law on our side, the power to bring it about, and the determination to do. The result has been happy and beneficial to all classes of honest and industrious men, as well as to those who labor as well as those who spend money—all are benefited by a stable currency such as we have to-day. Now, gentlemen, I think I have said all that I wish to say, and what I begin. I never had any doubt about the ability to resume—none at all. A great many men—some of these, no doubt, who hear me—thought it was not a wise undertaking to attempt to make the vast volume of our paper currency equal to gold; that we did not have the law on our side, the power to bring it about, and the determination to do. The result has been happy and beneficial to all classes of honest and industrious men, as well as to those who labor as well as those who spend money—all are benefited by a stable currency such as we have to-day. Now, gentlemen, I think I have said all that I wish to say, and what I begin. I never had any doubt about the ability to resume—none at all. A great many men—some of these, no doubt, who hear me—thought it was not a wise undertaking to attempt to make the vast volume of our paper currency equal to gold; that we did not have the law on our side, the power to bring it about, and the determination to do. The result has been happy and beneficial to all classes of honest and industrious men, as well as to those who labor as well as those who spend money—all are benefited by a stable currency such as we have to-day. Now, gentlemen, I think I have said all that I wish to say, and what I begin. I never had any doubt about the ability to resume—none at all. A great many men—some of these, no doubt, who hear me—thought it was not a wise undertaking to attempt to make the vast volume of our paper currency equal to gold; that we did not have the law on our side, the power to bring it about, and the determination to do. The result has been happy and beneficial to all classes of honest and industrious men, as well as to those who labor as well as those who spend money—all are benefited by a stable currency such as we have to-day. Now, gentlemen, I think I have said all that I wish to say, and what I begin. I never had any doubt about the ability to resume—none at all. A great many men—some of these, no doubt, who hear me—thought it was not a wise undertaking to attempt to make the vast volume of our paper currency equal to gold; that we did not have the law on our side, the power to bring it about, and the determination to do. The result has been happy and beneficial to all classes of honest and industrious men, as well as to those who labor as well as those who spend money—all are benefited by a stable currency such as we have to-day. Now, gentlemen, I think I have said all that I wish to say, and what I begin. I never had any doubt about the ability to resume—none at all. A great many men—some of these, no doubt, who hear me—thought it was not a wise undertaking to attempt to make the vast volume of our paper currency equal to gold; that we did not have the law on our side, the power to bring it about, and the determination to do. The result has been happy and beneficial to all classes of honest and industrious men, as well as to those who labor as well as those who spend money—all are benefited by a stable currency such as we have to-day. Now, gentlemen, I think I have said all that I wish to say, and what I begin. I never had any doubt about the ability to resume—none at all. A great many men—some of these, no doubt, who hear me—thought it was not a wise undertaking to attempt to make the vast volume of our paper currency equal to gold; that we did not have the law on our side, the power to bring it about, and the determination to do. The result has been happy and beneficial to all classes of honest and industrious men, as well as to those who labor as well as those who spend money—all are benefited by a stable currency such as we have to-day. Now, gentlemen, I think I have said all that I wish to say, and what I begin. I never had any doubt about the ability to resume—none at all. A great many men—some of these, no doubt, who hear me—thought it was not a wise undertaking to attempt to make the vast volume of our paper currency equal to gold; that we did not have the law on our side, the power to bring it about, and the determination to do. The result has been happy and beneficial to all classes of honest and industrious men, as well as to those who labor as well as those who spend money—all are benefited by a stable currency such as we have to-day. Now, gentlemen, I think I have said all that I wish to say, and what I begin. I never had any doubt about the ability to resume—none at all. A great many men—some of these, no doubt, who hear me—thought it was not a wise undertaking to attempt to make the vast volume of our paper currency equal to gold; that we did not have the law on our side, the power to bring it about, and the determination to do. The result has been happy and beneficial to all classes of honest and industrious men, as well as to those who labor as well as those who spend money—all are benefited by a stable currency such as we have to-day. Now, gentlemen, I think I have said all that I wish to say, and what I begin. I never had any doubt about the ability to resume—none at all. A great many men—some of these, no doubt, who hear me—thought it was not a wise undertaking to attempt to make the vast volume of our paper currency equal to gold; that we did not have the law on our side, the power to bring it about, and the determination to do. The result has been happy and beneficial to all classes of honest and industrious men, as well as to those who labor as well as those who spend money—all are benefited by a stable currency such as we have to-day. Now, gentlemen, I think I have said all that I wish to say, and what I begin. I never had any doubt about the ability to resume—none at all. A great many men—some of these, no doubt, who hear me—thought it was not a wise undertaking to attempt to make the vast volume of our paper currency equal to gold; that we did not have the law on our side, the power to bring it about, and the determination to do. The result has been happy and beneficial to all classes of honest and industrious men, as well as to those who labor as well as those who spend money—all are benefited by a stable currency such as we have to-day. Now, gentlemen, I think I have said all that I wish to say, and what I begin. I never had any doubt about the ability to resume—none at all. A great many men—some of these, no doubt, who hear me—thought it was not a wise undertaking to attempt to make the vast volume of our paper currency equal to gold; that we did not have the law on our side, the power to bring it about, and the determination to do. The result has been happy and beneficial to all classes of honest and industrious men, as well as to those who labor as well as those who spend money—all are benefited by a stable currency such as we have to-day. Now, gentlemen, I think I have said all that I wish to say, and what I begin. I never had any doubt about the ability to resume—none at all. A great many men—some of these, no doubt, who hear me—thought it was not a wise undertaking to attempt to make the vast volume of our paper currency equal to gold; that we did not have the law on our side, the power to bring it about, and the determination to do. The result has been happy and beneficial to all classes of honest and industrious men, as well as to those who labor as well as those who spend money—all are benefited by a stable currency such as we have to-day. Now, gentlemen, I think I have said all that I wish to say, and what I begin. I never had any doubt about the ability to resume—none at all. A great many men—some of these, no doubt, who hear me—thought it was not a wise undertaking to attempt to make the vast volume of our paper currency equal to gold; that we did not have the law on our side, the power to bring it about, and the determination to do. The result has been happy and beneficial to all classes of honest and industrious men, as well as to those who labor as well as those who spend money—all are benefited by a stable currency such as we have to-day. Now, gentlemen, I think I have said all that I wish to say, and what I begin. I never had any doubt about the ability to resume—none at all. A great many men—some of these, no doubt, who hear me—thought it was not a wise undertaking to attempt to make the vast volume of our paper currency equal to gold; that we did not have the law on our side, the power to bring it about, and the determination to do. The result has been happy and beneficial to all classes of honest and industrious men, as well as to those who labor as well as those who spend money—all are benefited by a stable currency such as we have to-day. Now, gentlemen, I think I have said all that I wish to say, and what I begin. I never had any doubt about the ability to resume—none at all. A great many men—some of these, no doubt, who hear me—thought it was not a wise undertaking to attempt to make the vast volume of our paper currency equal to gold; that we did not have the law on our side, the power to bring it about, and the determination to do. The result has been happy and beneficial to all classes of honest and industrious men, as well as to those who labor as well as those who spend money—all are benefited by a stable currency such as we have to-day. Now, gentlemen, I think I have said all that I wish to say, and what I begin. I never had any doubt about the ability to resume—none at all. A great many men—some of these, no doubt, who hear me—thought it was not a wise undertaking to attempt to make the vast volume of our paper currency equal to gold; that we did not have the law on our side, the power to bring it about, and the determination to do. The result has been happy and beneficial to all classes of honest and industrious men, as well as to those who labor as well as those who spend money—all are benefited by a stable currency such as we have to-day. Now, gentlemen, I think I have said all that I wish to say, and what I begin. I never had any doubt about the ability to resume—none at all. A great many men—some of these, no doubt, who hear me—thought it was not a wise undertaking to attempt to make the vast volume of our paper currency equal to gold; that we did not have the law on our side, the power to bring it about, and the determination to do. The result has been happy and beneficial to all classes of honest and industrious men, as well as to those who labor as well as those who spend money—all are benefited by a stable currency such as we have to-day. Now, gentlemen, I think I have said all that I wish to say, and what I begin. I never had any doubt about the ability to resume—none at all. A great many men—some of these, no doubt, who hear me—thought it was not a wise undertaking to attempt to make the vast volume of our paper currency equal to gold; that we did not have the law on our side, the power to bring it about, and the determination to do. The result has been happy and beneficial to all classes of honest and industrious men, as well as to those who labor as well as those who spend money—all are benefited by a stable currency such as we have to-day. Now, gentlemen, I think I have said all that I wish to say, and what I begin. I never had any doubt about the ability to resume—none at all. A great many men—some of these, no doubt, who hear me—thought it was not a wise undertaking to attempt to make the vast volume of our paper currency equal to gold; that we did not have the law on our side, the power to bring it about, and the determination to do. The result has been happy and beneficial to all classes of honest and industrious men, as well as to those who labor as well as those who spend money—all are benefited by a stable currency such as we have to-day. Now, gentlemen, I think I have said all that I wish to say, and what I begin. I never had any doubt about the ability to resume—none at all. A great many men—some of these, no doubt, who hear me—thought it was not a wise undertaking to attempt to make the vast volume of our paper currency equal to gold; that we did not have the law on our side, the power to bring it about, and the determination to do. The result has been happy and beneficial to all classes of honest and industrious men, as well as to those who labor as well as those who spend money—all are benefited by a stable currency such as we have to-day. Now, gentlemen, I think I have said all that I wish to say, and what I begin. I never had any doubt about the ability to resume—none at all. A great many men—some of these, no doubt, who hear me—thought it was not a wise undertaking to attempt to make the vast volume of our paper currency equal to gold; that we did not have the law on our side, the power to bring it about, and the determination to do. The result has been happy and beneficial to all classes of honest and industrious men, as well as to those who labor as well as those who spend money—all are benefited by a stable currency

The Republican.

JAS. A. HAYDEN, Publisher.

OAKLAND, GARRITT CO., MD.

LITTLE BARBARA.

Pretty Barbara, ripe and red,
With sweet small mouth like the bees alight,
And full of pearly honey-dew;
So pretty a thing, I dare not swear,
As the art of the ribbon that ties her hair,
Or the buckle that binds her shoe.
So like her each trinket she has to wear,
It seems just as if it grew.
Like a rose in its petals and pollen-dew,
That wears its beauty because it must,
And something like Barbara, too.

As she dips her small tin bucket in
The little fountain of woven glass,
Like webs that the spiders weave and spin
To hang on the shining blades of grass,
A face as bright and happy as hers,
In the nets of the silken gossamers,
Looks out of the water, and smiles and dips,
As if it was happy to hold within it
The soft curls that ring the top of her head,
And like and exerts her just for a minute,
In the arms of the dappled, smooth and still,
For it goes and softly turns the mill.

For life to her in the honey-dew
Is nothing yet but the way-side spring,
Between the upper and under line,
That makes a fiction of every thing,
As perfectly like as it grows.
And she is so happy to see within it
The shape of her soul sweet set in a minute,
And now in the color of a rose.
So know that the marvelous shadows mean
The simple mirror that shows
But now in the color of a rose.
And now like the water's smooth copse,
In hearts that hold her out to the mill.
As we go and softly turn the mill.
—Will. Wallace Hurns, in Harper's Magazine for August.

MASTERED BY PASSION.

"I admit that Ruth is quick-tempered, and that she often says things she does not mean."
It was Hannah Cleaves who spoke, and she was defending her young and pretty cousin, who had been not quite two years the wife of Charles Gray.
"Still," said Susan Adams, another cousin, "I must say that she is much to blame. Her husband is one of the kindest and best of men, and I know that she often makes him unhappy. She might do differently if she would."
"I am not," said Hannah, "returning Hannah. She is not to blame for the disposition which was born in her. She cannot help her own nature. No two of us are exactly alike in all our feelings, and we are all apt to act about as we feel. It is unfortunate that some people are diseased; but I cannot say that those are to blame who have inherited their disease from their ancestors. And so it is with our disposition."
"But," suggested Susan, "that person who has inherited a disease which works mischief not only to herself, but all around her, is certainly to blame if she does not make any exertion to get rid of it."
"Ah," cried Hannah, "but there are diseases which cannot be got rid of, and I say that cousin Ruth cannot be blamed for her feelings, because they come in spite of her; and when they have come she cannot hide them."
Aunt Annie Dinsmore laid her knitting-work aside, and gravely shook her head.
"Hannah," she said, with deep solemnity, "you may at some time be a mother; and when that time comes, let me urge you not to teach your children the doctrine you have been upholding here."
Aunt Annie was such a good, kind woman, and she loved us all so well, and did so much for our happiness, that even Hannah Cleaves was respectfully silent beneath the gentle reproof.
"A little while ago," our aunt went on, "you were speaking of wildful people. Now, I admire strong self-will when it is bent in the right direction. The noblest of God's children are those who have strong wills. The Christian martyrs were extremely self-willed. Self-will is a beautiful force when it is made to uphold virtue and goodness. So cultivate self-will as much as you please, but make it subservient to right. I fear the trouble with Ruth Gray is that she has no self-will. What you call self-will in her is only perverseness and inconsistency. She exercises no will at all, but is the creature of circumstance, suffering herself to be swayed to and fro by every gust of passion that sweeps across her path."
The girls made no reply, and presently Aunt Annie resumed:
"You admit that Ruth is quick-tempered, and that she often says things that she does not mean; and you say that she cannot help her feelings, and consequently, that she is not to blame for acting as those feelings dictate. My dear girls, this is all wrong. I suppose I am talking to girls of sense and judgment, and not to mere machines that have no independence of thought and action. We are all of us subject to failings, and she is the best woman who best overcomes her failings. Real virtue consists in conquering evil. The true saint is he who has fought the good fight, and won the victory. The whole sum and substance of all that is good, and true, and virtuous in life may be stated in one short, simple sentence—we can if we will!"
When Aunt Annie laid her knitting-work upon the table, and folded her hands in her lap, we knew she had something of interest to say to us, for she was not a woman who talked for the sake of talking.
"I tell you, girls," she said, "we can if we will. If we will do right, we can do right. She who practically denies this casts aside the very foundation of virtuous character, and erects her structure of life upon a base of sand. I am going to tell you a story of my own life. You call me good; and I think I am good to you. At all events, I try to be so. But my goodness of temper came to me through a mighty effort of will, as you shall see. When I was young I was more perverse than your cousin Ruth ever was. My temper was quick and high; I was subject to fits of despondency that made all around me miserable; and I excused myself upon the plea that such was my nature—I could not help it. When I became the wife of Jacob Dinsmore I was very happy, and I thought myself very fortunate, for I knew that I won for a husband one of the best young men in the town. Your uncle Jacob was then just what he is now—kind, generous, loving, forbearing and faithful to a fault. For the first six months of our married life I did not allow my bad temper to show itself much; but at length my honeymoon waned, and my old feelings began to manifest themselves. I became, in short, just what was before I was married. People called me self-willed; but I had no self-will. I did not will to be cross and petulant. I was cross and petulant because I had no will to be otherwise. Sometimes I had sudden feelings, and I had no will to overcome them. The slightest thing that crossed me found me so entirely devoid of will that it swayed me at its pleasure. At the end of two years there was more of misery than of happiness in my home, and I could not hide from myself the fact that I was the cause of it all; and yet I tried to convince myself that I was not to blame. When my mother talked with me I declared that I could not help it, and when my husband ventured to allude to the subject, I flew into a passion. I could not bear a childing from him. In fact, his very kindness and gentleness sometimes fretted me, and when he offered to point out to me my errors, it seemed as though he were preaching to me, and I would not listen.

"Girls, I tell you truly when I tell you that I have never once ever been firmly fixed in the habit of ill-feeling that I was at that time; and I did certainly believe that I could not help it."
"Some time before we were married, there had been a volunteer artillery company in our town, and as Jack was the only commissioned officer living in the town itself, he took charge of the property which belonged to the corps, and thus retaining control of the two handsome cannon. One royal birthday the townspeople raised money for a celebration of the occasion, and, among other things, a royal salute was to be fired in the morning, at noon, and at sundown, of which my husband was to have charge.
"During the day I received an invitation to join some friends in a sail upon the river; and as I could not very well go to the landing alone, I asked Jacob to go with me. He said it would interfere with other duties, and he could not go. I asked him if he thought the firing of the salute was of more importance than the making of his plans for his wife; and when he had failed me at that argument, I asked him why he could not let some one else take charge of the cannon. He answered me calmly and candidly that he dared not trust the gun in other hands. He was the only one who understood how to properly handle it, and he felt obliged to attend to it. He told me how many accidents had happened through mistakes of inexperienced and careless persons, and he could not feel right to neglect the duty he had promised to perform.
"That was in the afternoon. At six o'clock it was time for me to start for the landing place, if I meant to go; but I would not go unless my husband went. He had sent for a carriage to take me down, but I would not use it. I shrank away in a fit of the sulks, and so remained until it came time for Jacob to go away with the gun. As he was passing on his hat my temper burst forth into a wild flame, and his calm answers only maddened me. At length I pushed him beyond the bounds of human endurance, and he turned upon me more sternly than he had ever before done. He did not speak angrily, but he spoke as an offended parent might have spoken on to an offending child.
"I stood completely aghast, and I cannot tell you all the wicked things I said.
"Annie," he said to me, as he stood near the door, "it might have been better for both of us if we had never met. I answered him hotly and passionately, that I hoped we might never meet again. 'If you were dead,' said I, 'I should be happier than I am now!'
"No, no, Annie, you do not mean that," he replied to me.
And I declared that I did mean it, and he went away as I said those words.
"My dear girls, do you think such words could ever have come from my heart, and I do not know to what wild and wicked results of language a course of unbridled license will lead. If, when Ruth Gray is angrily disputing with her husband, some stern and wise writer could take down her words just as they fall from her lips, and should afterward show them to her, she would honestly declare that she never, never spoke such things. And so, when many mothers are fretted and annoyed by their children, could they hear themselves as others hear them, they would be shocked beyond measure. When passion becomes our master we are blind as well as insane, and the first not in what is in our hearts, but rather in the loving adversary the first foot-hold."
"My husband went away and left me alone, and when he had gone, I sat down and cried till I was tired. By and by I heard the report of the cannon, and I thought, suppose some accident should happen to Jacob! Suppose he should be killed! Suppose they should bring him home dead! As these thoughts came to me, I remembered what a good, kind husband he had been, and I also remembered how cruel and unjust I had been. Again and again came the booming report of cannon, and at each report the dread grew stronger and stronger upon me. O, what would I have then given could I have recalled the wicked words I had spoken! But they had gone forth, and I must abide the results. Heavier and heavier grew the weight upon my heart, until at length I thought I should go crazy if Jacob did not soon return. My crime loomed up before me darkly and threateningly, and it seemed to me that my husband's death was to be my punishment. O, when would the firing cease, and when would my husband come home, that I might fall upon his neck, and ask his pardon for all the wickedness I had done!
"The firing ceased at length, but instead of hopefulness, the dread became heavier and more heavy. I was hunting for my bonnet, intending to go out and meet my husband, when I heard heavy feet in the garden. The cloud settled down and the thunder crash had come. Men came in and told me not to be frightened—my husband was hurt, but they hoped not seriously. Perhaps they thought I was crazy; they did not know that my heart was frozen, and that the fount of emotion brought my husband in upon a wild boat, and I saw that his limbs were limp and lifeless, that his face was like marble, and that there was blood upon the board—blood trickling down upon the floor! And I heard them talk; they told me that he had been run over by the heavy gun-carriage—that in coming down the hill from where the salute had been fired, men and boys, in wild confusion, had seized the trail-ropes, and that my husband, in attempting to prevent the rush, had been knocked down and run over.

"Two doctors came. I heard them talk of a broken leg, of broken ribs, and of other injuries, and during all this time I was as one in a horrid dream, unable to move or to speak, and almost suffocating. By-and-by I heard one of the doctors say that he would live, and then I sank down senseless. When I came to myself it was at night, and one of the neighbors sat at my bedside.
"I told them I wished to see my husband, but I was informed that he was asleep and that I must not disturb him. In the morning I went to him, and he put up his well worn and drew me down upon the pillow and kissed me. And he told me not to worry myself; he was badly hurt, but if I would nurse him and love him, he would soon get well.
"Love him! O, my soul, how strongly I felt then—how strong in my love, and in my determination to be a true and faithful wife. I could not see her, and I could not see her spectacles and wiped her eyes, and presently she added:
"Girls, that was forty years ago, and from that day to this I have not spoken one cross word to my husband. My nature is not changed at all; but I have gained control of my will and bent it in the right direction; and when once I found how much pure joy there was in doing right, it came very easy to do it."
"Ah! here comes your uncle Jacob, now. See how good he looks. You can see his gray hairs, and note the wrinkles upon his brow; but to me he is as young as ever, and I know that our love was never more fresh and fervent than it is now."
Just then Uncle Jacob came in; and when, an hour later, we saw him and Aunt Annie in the garden together, picking flowers like two young lovers.
"Ah! here comes your uncle Jacob, now. See how good he looks. You can see his gray hairs, and note the wrinkles upon his brow; but to me he is as young as ever, and I know that our love was never more fresh and fervent than it is now."
Just then Uncle Jacob came in; and when, an hour later, we saw him and Aunt Annie in the garden together, picking flowers like two young lovers.
"Ah! here comes your uncle Jacob, now. See how good he looks. You can see his gray hairs, and note the wrinkles upon his brow; but to me he is as young as ever, and I know that our love was never more fresh and fervent than it is now."
Just then Uncle Jacob came in; and when, an hour later, we saw him and Aunt Annie in the garden together, picking flowers like two young lovers.

A Boy's Thoughtless Act that Cost a Young Woman Her Life.

The body of Miss Jessie E. Dunbar lay in the parlor of her mother's cottage in Matteawan village this noon, prepared for burial. Her shroud and position had been arranged in the coffin so as to conceal the scars on her person; but the unusual color and swollen lips prevented the complete concealment of the cause of her death.
About five o'clock yesterday afternoon Miss Dunbar, in company with a friend, Miss Ida Horton of Fishkill, started for a walk through a grove in the suburbs of the town, known as "at the foot of the Fishkill Mountains, and the Matteawan Creek runs through it. All day a throng of curiosity seekers have visited it, and until late in the evening traces of the accident. The road through the wood runs parallel with the creek. A few rods from the entrance to the wood a rock juts out into the stream, and a party of seven or eight boys, whose ages range from twelve to seventeen years, had planted a miniature cannon, and with it and firecrackers, they were continuing the celebration of the Fourth. As the boys, Albert Evans, at the instigation of Samuel Chatfield, ran toward them and threw a firecracker after them. Neither of the young women took any notice of it, and Miss Horton, who was in the lead, went on her way, and the boys Evans, who was near by, ran to her, and, before he had reached her, he had consumed nearly all her clothing, which fell from her in pieces as she ran. The boys called to her to run into the creek, which was about a hundred feet distant. Miss Horton ran back to a house near the entrance to the grove, with the intention, she said, of getting something with which to smother the flames. Meanwhile, her own dress was doing her best with her jacket, but almost as soon as he had thrown it about Miss Dunbar she fell unconscious. She had in her frozy run nearly back to the spot where the boys were at play. All the time the rapid motion fanned the fire into a flame, and Miss Dunbar had not run half a dozen rods before she was completely enveloped in fire. Elias Greer, who was near by, ran to her, and, before he had reached her, he had consumed nearly all her clothing, which fell from her in pieces as she ran. The boys called to her to run into the creek, which was about a hundred feet distant. Miss Horton ran back to a house near the entrance to the grove, with the intention, she said, of getting something with which to smother the flames. Meanwhile, her own dress was doing her best with her jacket, but almost as soon as he had thrown it about Miss Dunbar she fell unconscious. She had in her frozy run nearly back to the spot where the boys were at play. All the time the rapid motion fanned the fire into a flame, and Miss Dunbar had not run half a dozen rods before she was completely enveloped in fire. Elias Greer, who was near by, ran to her, and, before he had reached her, he had consumed nearly all her clothing, which fell from her in pieces as she ran. The boys called to her to run into the creek, which was about a hundred feet distant. Miss Horton ran back to a house near the entrance to the grove, with the intention, she said, of getting something with which to smother the flames. Meanwhile, her own dress was doing her best with her jacket, but almost as soon as he had thrown it about Miss Dunbar she fell unconscious. She had in her frozy run nearly back to the spot where the boys were at play. All the time the rapid motion fanned the fire into a flame, and Miss Dunbar had not run half a dozen rods before she was completely enveloped in fire. Elias Greer, who was near by, ran to her, and, before he had reached her, he had consumed nearly all her clothing, which fell from her in pieces as she ran. The boys called to her to run into the creek, which was about a hundred feet distant. Miss Horton ran back to a house near the entrance to the grove, with the intention, she said, of getting something with which to smother the flames. Meanwhile, her own dress was doing her best with her jacket, but almost as soon as he had thrown it about Miss Dunbar she fell unconscious. She had in her frozy run nearly back to the spot where the boys were at play. All the time the rapid motion fanned the fire into a flame, and Miss Dunbar had not run half a dozen rods before she was completely enveloped in fire. Elias Greer, who was near by, ran to her, and, before he had reached her, he had consumed nearly all her clothing, which fell from her in pieces as she ran. The boys called to her to run into the creek, which was about a hundred feet distant. Miss Horton ran back to a house near the entrance to the grove, with the intention, she said, of getting something with which to smother the flames. Meanwhile, her own dress was doing her best with her jacket, but almost as soon as he had thrown it about Miss Dunbar she fell unconscious. She had in her frozy run nearly back to the spot where the boys were at play. All the time the rapid motion fanned the fire into a flame, and Miss Dunbar had not run half a dozen rods before she was completely enveloped in fire. Elias Greer, who was near by, ran to her, and, before he had reached her, he had consumed nearly all her clothing, which fell from her in pieces as she ran. The boys called to her to run into the creek, which was about a hundred feet distant. Miss Horton ran back to a house near the entrance to the grove, with the intention, she said, of getting something with which to smother the flames. Meanwhile, her own dress was doing her best with her jacket, but almost as soon as he had thrown it about Miss Dunbar she fell unconscious. She had in her frozy run nearly back to the spot where the boys were at play. All the time the rapid motion fanned the fire into a flame, and Miss Dunbar had not run half a dozen rods before she was completely enveloped in fire. Elias Greer, who was near by, ran to her, and, before he had reached her, he had consumed nearly all her clothing, which fell from her in pieces as she ran. The boys called to her to run into the creek, which was about a hundred feet distant. Miss Horton ran back to a house near the entrance to the grove, with the intention, she said, of getting something with which to smother the flames. Meanwhile, her own dress was doing her best with her jacket, but almost as soon as he had thrown it about Miss Dunbar she fell unconscious. She had in her frozy run nearly back to the spot where the boys were at play. All the time the rapid motion fanned the fire into a flame, and Miss Dunbar had not run half a dozen rods before she was completely enveloped in fire. Elias Greer, who was near by, ran to her, and, before he had reached her, he had consumed nearly all her clothing, which fell from her in pieces as she ran. The boys called to her to run into the creek, which was about a hundred feet distant. Miss Horton ran back to a house near the entrance to the grove, with the intention, she said, of getting something with which to smother the flames. Meanwhile, her own dress was doing her best with her jacket, but almost as soon as he had thrown it about Miss Dunbar she fell unconscious. She had in her frozy run nearly back to the spot where the boys were at play. All the time the rapid motion fanned the fire into a flame, and Miss Dunbar had not run half a dozen rods before she was completely enveloped in fire. Elias Greer, who was near by, ran to her, and, before he had reached her, he had consumed nearly all her clothing, which fell from her in pieces as she ran. The boys called to her to run into the creek, which was about a hundred feet distant. Miss Horton ran back to a house near the entrance to the grove, with the intention, she said, of getting something with which to smother the flames. Meanwhile, her own dress was doing her best with her jacket, but almost as soon as he had thrown it about Miss Dunbar she fell unconscious. She had in her frozy run nearly back to the spot where the boys were at play. All the time the rapid motion fanned the fire into a flame, and Miss Dunbar had not run half a dozen rods before she was completely enveloped in fire. Elias Greer, who was near by, ran to her, and, before he had reached her, he had consumed nearly all her clothing, which fell from her in pieces as she ran. The boys called to her to run into the creek, which was about a hundred feet distant. Miss Horton ran back to a house near the entrance to the grove, with the intention, she said, of getting something with which to smother the flames. Meanwhile, her own dress was doing her best with her jacket, but almost as soon as he had thrown it about Miss Dunbar she fell unconscious. She had in her frozy run nearly back to the spot where the boys were at play. All the time the rapid motion fanned the fire into a flame, and Miss Dunbar had not run half a dozen rods before she was completely enveloped in fire. Elias Greer, who was near by, ran to her, and, before he had reached her, he had consumed nearly all her clothing, which fell from her in pieces as she ran. The boys called to her to run into the creek, which was about a hundred feet distant. Miss Horton ran back to a house near the entrance to the grove, with the intention, she said, of getting something with which to smother the flames. Meanwhile, her own dress was doing her best with her jacket, but almost as soon as he had thrown it about Miss Dunbar she fell unconscious. She had in her frozy run nearly back to the spot where the boys were at play. All the time the rapid motion fanned the fire into a flame, and Miss Dunbar had not run half a dozen rods before she was completely enveloped in fire. Elias Greer, who was near by, ran to her, and, before he had reached her, he had consumed nearly all her clothing, which fell from her in pieces as she ran. The boys called to her to run into the creek, which was about a hundred feet distant. Miss Horton ran back to a house near the entrance to the grove, with the intention, she said, of getting something with which to smother the flames. Meanwhile, her own dress was doing her best with her jacket, but almost as soon as he had thrown it about Miss Dunbar she fell unconscious. She had in her frozy run nearly back to the spot where the boys were at play. All the time the rapid motion fanned the fire into a flame, and Miss Dunbar had not run half a dozen rods before she was completely enveloped in fire. Elias Greer, who was near by, ran to her, and, before he had reached her, he had consumed nearly all her clothing, which fell from her in pieces as she ran. The boys called to her to run into the creek, which was about a hundred feet distant. Miss Horton ran back to a house near the entrance to the grove, with the intention, she said, of getting something with which to smother the flames. Meanwhile, her own dress was doing her best with her jacket, but almost as soon as he had thrown it about Miss Dunbar she fell unconscious. She had in her frozy run nearly back to the spot where the boys were at play. All the time the rapid motion fanned the fire into a flame, and Miss Dunbar had not run half a dozen rods before she was completely enveloped in fire. Elias Greer, who was near by, ran to her, and, before he had reached her, he had consumed nearly all her clothing, which fell from her in pieces as she ran. The boys called to her to run into the creek, which was about a hundred feet distant. Miss Horton ran back to a house near the entrance to the grove, with the intention, she said, of getting something with which to smother the flames. Meanwhile, her own dress was doing her best with her jacket, but almost as soon as he had thrown it about Miss Dunbar she fell unconscious. She had in her frozy run nearly back to the spot where the boys were at play. All the time the rapid motion fanned the fire into a flame, and Miss Dunbar had not run half a dozen rods before she was completely enveloped in fire. Elias Greer, who was near by, ran to her, and, before he had reached her, he had consumed nearly all her clothing, which fell from her in pieces as she ran. The boys called to her to run into the creek, which was about a hundred feet distant. Miss Horton ran back to a house near the entrance to the grove, with the intention, she said, of getting something with which to smother the flames. Meanwhile, her own dress was doing her best with her jacket, but almost as soon as he had thrown it about Miss Dunbar she fell unconscious. She had in her frozy run nearly back to the spot where the boys were at play. All the time the rapid motion fanned the fire into a flame, and Miss Dunbar had not run half a dozen rods before she was completely enveloped in fire. Elias Greer, who was near by, ran to her, and, before he had reached her, he had consumed nearly all her clothing, which fell from her in pieces as she ran. The boys called to her to run into the creek, which was about a hundred feet distant. Miss Horton ran back to a house near the entrance to the grove, with the intention, she said, of getting something with which to smother the flames. Meanwhile, her own dress was doing her best with her jacket, but almost as soon as he had thrown it about Miss Dunbar she fell unconscious. She had in her frozy run nearly back to the spot where the boys were at play. All the time the rapid motion fanned the fire into a flame, and Miss Dunbar had not run half a dozen rods before she was completely enveloped in fire. Elias Greer, who was near by, ran to her, and, before he had reached her, he had consumed nearly all her clothing, which fell from her in pieces as she ran. The boys called to her to run into the creek, which was about a hundred feet distant. Miss Horton ran back to a house near the entrance to the grove, with the intention, she said, of getting something with which to smother the flames. Meanwhile, her own dress was doing her best with her jacket, but almost as soon as he had thrown it about Miss Dunbar she fell unconscious. She had in her frozy run nearly back to the spot where the boys were at play. All the time the rapid motion fanned the fire into a flame, and Miss Dunbar had not run half a dozen rods before she was completely enveloped in fire. Elias Greer, who was near by, ran to her, and, before he had reached her, he had consumed nearly all her clothing, which fell from her in pieces as she ran. The boys called to her to run into the creek, which was about a hundred feet distant. Miss Horton ran back to a house near the entrance to the grove, with the intention, she said, of getting something with which to smother the flames. Meanwhile, her own dress was doing her best with her jacket, but almost as soon as he had thrown it about Miss Dunbar she fell unconscious. She had in her frozy run nearly back to the spot where the boys were at play. All the time the rapid motion fanned the fire into a flame, and Miss Dunbar had not run half a dozen rods before she was completely enveloped in fire. Elias Greer, who was near by, ran to her, and, before he had reached her, he had consumed nearly all her clothing, which fell from her in pieces as she ran. The boys called to her to run into the creek, which was about a hundred feet distant. Miss Horton ran back to a house near the entrance to the grove, with the intention, she said, of getting something with which to smother the flames. Meanwhile, her own dress was doing her best with her jacket, but almost as soon as he had thrown it about Miss Dunbar she fell unconscious. She had in her frozy run nearly back to the spot where the boys were at play. All the time the rapid motion fanned the fire into a flame, and Miss Dunbar had not run half a dozen rods before she was completely enveloped in fire. Elias Greer, who was near by, ran to her, and, before he had reached her, he had consumed nearly all her clothing, which fell from her in pieces as she ran. The boys called to her to run into the creek, which was about a hundred feet distant. Miss Horton ran back to a house near the entrance to the grove, with the intention, she said, of getting something with which to smother the flames. Meanwhile, her own dress was doing her best with her jacket, but almost as soon as he had thrown it about Miss Dunbar she fell unconscious. She had in her frozy run nearly back to the spot where the boys were at play. All the time the rapid motion fanned the fire into a flame, and Miss Dunbar had not run half a dozen rods before she was completely enveloped in fire. Elias Greer, who was near by, ran to her, and, before he had reached her, he had consumed nearly all her clothing, which fell from her in pieces as she ran. The boys called to her to run into the creek, which was about a hundred feet distant. Miss Horton ran back to a house near the entrance to the grove, with the intention, she said, of getting something with which to smother the flames. Meanwhile, her own dress was doing her best with her jacket, but almost as soon as he had thrown it about Miss Dunbar she fell unconscious. She had in her frozy run nearly back to the spot where the boys were at play. All the time the rapid motion fanned the fire into a flame, and Miss Dunbar had not run half a dozen rods before she was completely enveloped in fire. Elias Greer, who was near by, ran to her, and, before he had reached her, he had consumed nearly all her clothing, which fell from her in pieces as she ran. The boys called to her to run into the creek, which was about a hundred feet distant. Miss Horton ran back to a house near the entrance to the grove, with the intention, she said, of getting something with which to smother the flames. Meanwhile, her own dress was doing her best with her jacket, but almost as soon as he had thrown it about Miss Dunbar she fell unconscious. She had in her frozy run nearly back to the spot where the boys were at play. All the time the rapid motion fanned the fire into a flame, and Miss Dunbar had not run half a dozen rods before she was completely enveloped in fire. Elias Greer, who was near by, ran to her, and, before he had reached her, he had consumed nearly all her clothing, which fell from her in pieces as she ran. The boys called to her to run into the creek, which was about a hundred feet distant. Miss Horton ran back to a house near the entrance to the grove, with the intention, she said, of getting something with which to smother the flames. Meanwhile, her own dress was doing her best with her jacket, but almost as soon as he had thrown it about Miss Dunbar she fell unconscious. She had in her frozy run nearly back to the spot where the boys were at play. All the time the rapid motion fanned the fire into a flame, and Miss Dunbar had not run half a dozen rods before she was completely enveloped in fire. Elias Greer, who was near by, ran to her, and, before he had reached her, he had consumed nearly all her clothing, which fell from her in pieces as she ran. The boys called to her to run into the creek, which was about a hundred feet distant. Miss Horton ran back to a house near the entrance to the grove, with the intention, she said, of getting something with which to smother the flames. Meanwhile, her own dress was doing her best with her jacket, but almost as soon as he had thrown it about Miss Dunbar she fell unconscious. She had in her frozy run nearly back to the spot where the boys were at play. All the time the rapid motion fanned the fire into a flame, and Miss Dunbar had not run half a dozen rods before she was completely enveloped in fire. Elias Greer, who was near by, ran to her, and, before he had reached her, he had consumed nearly all her clothing, which fell from her in pieces as she ran. The boys called to her to run into the creek, which was about a hundred feet distant. Miss Horton ran back to a house near the entrance to the grove, with the intention, she said, of getting something with which to smother the flames. Meanwhile, her own dress was doing her best with her jacket, but almost as soon as he had thrown it about Miss Dunbar she fell unconscious. She had in her frozy run nearly back to the spot where the boys were at play. All the time the rapid motion fanned the fire into a flame, and Miss Dunbar had not run half a dozen rods before she was completely enveloped in fire. Elias Greer, who was near by, ran to her, and, before he had reached her, he had consumed nearly all her clothing, which fell from her in pieces as she ran. The boys called to her to run into the creek, which was about a hundred feet distant. Miss Horton ran back to a house near the entrance to the grove, with the intention, she said, of getting something with which to smother the flames. Meanwhile, her own dress was doing her best with her jacket, but almost as soon as he had thrown it about Miss Dunbar she fell unconscious. She had in her frozy run nearly back to the spot where the boys were at play. All the time the rapid motion fanned the fire into a flame, and Miss Dunbar had not run half a dozen rods before she was completely enveloped in fire. Elias Greer, who was near by, ran to her, and, before he had reached her, he had consumed nearly all her clothing, which fell from her in pieces as she ran. The boys called to her to run into the creek, which was about a hundred feet distant. Miss Horton ran back to a house near the entrance to the grove, with the intention, she said, of getting something with which to smother the flames. Meanwhile, her own dress was doing her best with her jacket, but almost as soon as he had thrown it about Miss Dunbar she fell unconscious. She had in her frozy run nearly back to the spot where the boys were at play. All the time the rapid motion fanned the fire into a flame, and Miss Dunbar had not run half a dozen rods before she was completely enveloped in fire. Elias Greer, who was near by, ran to her, and, before he had reached her, he had consumed nearly all her clothing, which fell from her in pieces as she ran. The boys called to her to run into the creek, which was about a hundred feet distant. Miss Horton ran back to a house near the entrance to the grove, with the intention, she said, of getting something with which to smother the flames. Meanwhile, her own dress was doing her best with her jacket, but almost as soon as he had thrown it about Miss Dunbar she fell unconscious. She had in her frozy run nearly back to the spot where the boys were at play. All the time the rapid motion fanned the fire into a flame, and Miss Dunbar had not run half a dozen rods before she was completely enveloped in fire. Elias Greer, who was near by, ran to her, and, before he had reached her, he had consumed nearly all her clothing, which fell from her in pieces as she ran. The boys called to her to run into the creek, which was about a hundred feet distant. Miss Horton ran back to a house near the entrance to the grove, with the intention, she said, of getting something with which to smother the flames. Meanwhile, her own dress was doing her best with her jacket, but almost as soon as he had thrown it about Miss Dunbar she fell unconscious. She had in her frozy run nearly back to the spot where the boys were at play. All the time the rapid motion fanned the fire into a flame, and Miss Dunbar had not run half a dozen rods before she was completely enveloped in fire. Elias Greer, who was near by, ran to her, and, before he had reached her, he had consumed nearly all her clothing, which fell from her in pieces as she ran. The boys called to her to run into the creek, which was about a hundred feet distant. Miss Horton ran back to a house near the entrance to the grove, with the intention, she said, of getting something with which to smother the flames. Meanwhile, her own dress was doing her best with her jacket, but almost as soon as he had thrown it about Miss Dunbar she fell unconscious. She had in her frozy run nearly back to the spot where the boys were at play. All the time the rapid motion fanned the fire into a flame, and Miss Dunbar had not run half a dozen rods before she was completely enveloped in fire. Elias Greer, who was near by, ran to her, and, before he had reached her, he had consumed nearly all her clothing, which fell from her in pieces as she ran. The boys called to her to run into the creek, which was about a hundred feet distant. Miss Horton ran back to a house near the entrance to the grove, with the intention, she said, of getting something with which to smother the flames. Meanwhile, her own dress was doing her best with her jacket, but almost as soon as he had thrown it about Miss Dunbar she fell unconscious. She had in her frozy run nearly back to the spot where the boys were at play. All the time the rapid motion fanned the fire into a flame, and Miss Dunbar had not run half a dozen rods before she was completely enveloped in fire. Elias Greer, who was near by, ran to her, and, before he had reached her, he had consumed nearly all her clothing, which fell from her in pieces as she ran. The boys called to her to run into the creek, which was about a hundred feet distant. Miss Horton ran back to a house near the entrance to the grove, with the intention, she said, of getting something with which to smother the flames. Meanwhile, her own dress was doing her best with her jacket, but almost as soon as he had thrown it about Miss Dunbar she fell unconscious. She had in her frozy run nearly back to the spot where the boys were at play. All the time the rapid motion fanned the fire into a flame, and Miss Dunbar had not run half a dozen rods before she was completely enveloped in fire. Elias Greer, who was near by, ran to her, and, before he had reached her, he had consumed nearly all her clothing, which fell from her in pieces as she ran. The boys called to her to run into the creek, which was about a hundred feet distant. Miss Horton ran back to a house near the entrance to the grove, with the intention, she said, of getting something with which to smother the flames. Meanwhile, her own dress was doing her best with her jacket, but almost as soon as he had thrown it about Miss Dunbar she fell unconscious. She had in her frozy run nearly back to the spot where the boys were at play. All the time the rapid motion fanned the fire into a flame, and Miss Dunbar had not run half a dozen rods before she was completely enveloped in fire. Elias Greer, who was near by, ran to her, and, before he had reached her, he had consumed nearly all her clothing, which fell from her in pieces as she ran. The boys called to her to run into the creek, which was about a hundred feet distant. Miss Horton ran back to a house near the entrance to the grove, with the intention, she said, of getting something with which to smother the flames. Meanwhile, her own dress was doing her best with her jacket, but almost as soon as he had thrown it about Miss Dunbar she fell unconscious. She had in her frozy run nearly back to the spot where the boys were at play. All the time the rapid motion fanned the fire into a flame, and Miss Dunbar had not run half a dozen rods before she was completely enveloped in fire. Elias Greer, who was near by, ran to her, and, before he had reached her, he had consumed nearly all her clothing, which fell from her in pieces as she ran. The boys called to her to run into the creek, which was about a hundred feet distant. Miss Horton ran back to a house near the entrance to the grove, with the intention, she said, of getting something with which to smother the flames. Meanwhile, her own dress was doing her best with her jacket, but almost as soon as he had thrown it about Miss Dunbar she fell unconscious. She had in her frozy run nearly back to the spot where the boys were at play. All the time the rapid motion fanned the fire into a flame, and Miss Dunbar had not run half a dozen rods before she was completely enveloped in fire. Elias Greer, who was near by, ran to her, and, before he had reached her, he had consumed nearly all her clothing, which fell from her in pieces as she ran. The boys called to her to run into the creek, which was about a hundred feet distant. Miss Horton ran back to a house near the entrance to the grove, with the intention, she said, of getting something with which to smother the flames. Meanwhile, her own dress was doing her best with her jacket, but almost as soon as he had thrown it about Miss Dunbar she fell unconscious. She had in her frozy run nearly back to the spot where the boys were at play. All the time the rapid motion fanned the fire into a flame, and Miss Dunbar had not run half a dozen rods before she was completely enveloped in fire. Elias Greer, who was near by, ran to her, and, before he had reached her, he had consumed nearly all her clothing, which fell from her in pieces as she ran. The boys called to her to run into the creek, which was about a hundred feet distant. Miss Horton ran back to a house near the entrance to the grove, with the intention, she said, of getting something with which to smother the flames. Meanwhile, her own dress was doing her best with her jacket, but almost as soon as he had thrown it about Miss Dunbar she fell unconscious. She had in her frozy run nearly back to the spot where the boys were at play. All the time the rapid motion fanned the fire into a flame, and Miss Dunbar had not run half a dozen rods before she was completely enveloped in fire. Elias Greer, who was near by, ran to her, and, before he had reached her, he had consumed nearly all her clothing, which fell from her in pieces as she ran. The boys called to her to run into the creek, which was about a hundred feet distant. Miss Horton ran back to a house near the entrance to the grove, with the intention, she said, of getting something with which to smother the flames. Meanwhile, her own dress was doing her best with her jacket, but almost as soon as he had thrown it about Miss Dunbar she fell unconscious. She had in her frozy run nearly back to the spot where the boys were at play. All the time the rapid motion fanned the fire into a flame, and Miss Dunbar had not run half a dozen rods before she was completely enveloped in fire. Elias Greer, who was near by, ran to her, and, before he had reached her, he had consumed nearly all her clothing, which fell from her in pieces as she ran. The boys called to her to run into the creek, which was about a hundred feet distant. Miss Horton ran back to a house near the entrance to the grove, with the intention, she said, of getting something with which to smother the flames. Meanwhile, her own dress was doing her best with her jacket, but almost as soon as he had thrown it about Miss Dunbar she fell unconscious. She had in her frozy run nearly back to the spot where the boys were at play. All the time the rapid motion fanned the fire into a flame, and Miss Dunbar had not run half a dozen rods before she was completely enveloped in fire. Elias Greer, who was near by, ran to her, and, before he had reached her, he had consumed nearly all her clothing, which fell from her in pieces as she ran. The boys called to her to run into the creek, which was about a hundred feet distant. Miss Horton ran back to a house near the entrance to the grove, with the intention, she said, of getting something with which to smother the flames. Meanwhile, her own dress was doing her best with her jacket, but almost as soon as he had thrown it about Miss Dunbar she fell unconscious. She had in her frozy run nearly back to the spot where the boys were at play. All the time the rapid motion fanned the fire into a flame, and Miss Dunbar had not run half a dozen rods before she was completely enveloped in fire. Elias Greer, who was near by, ran to her, and, before he had reached her, he had consumed nearly all her clothing, which fell from her in pieces as she ran. The boys called to her to run into the creek, which was about a hundred feet distant. Miss Horton ran back to a house near the entrance to the grove, with the intention, she said, of getting something with which to smother the flames. Meanwhile, her own dress was doing her best with her jacket, but almost as soon as he had thrown it about Miss Dunbar she fell unconscious. She had in her frozy run nearly back to the spot where the boys were at play. All the time the rapid motion fanned the fire into a flame, and Miss Dunbar had not run half a dozen rods before she was completely enveloped in fire. Elias Greer, who was near by, ran to her, and, before he had reached her, he had consumed nearly all her clothing, which fell from her in pieces as she ran. The boys called to her to run into the creek, which was about a hundred feet distant. Miss Horton ran back to a house near the entrance to the grove, with the intention, she said, of getting something with which to smother the flames. Meanwhile, her own dress was doing her best with her jacket, but almost as soon as he had thrown it about Miss Dunbar she fell unconscious. She had in her frozy run nearly back to the spot where the boys were at play. All the time the rapid motion fanned the fire into a flame, and Miss Dunbar had not run half a dozen rods before she was completely enveloped in fire. Elias Greer, who was near by, ran to her, and, before he had reached her, he had consumed nearly all her clothing, which fell from her in pieces as she ran. The boys called to her to run into the creek, which was about a hundred feet distant. Miss Horton ran back to a house near the entrance to the grove, with the intention, she said, of getting something with which to smother the flames. Meanwhile, her own dress was doing her best with her jacket, but almost as soon as he had thrown it about Miss Dunbar she fell unconscious. She had in her frozy run nearly back to the spot where the boys were at play. All the time the rapid motion fanned the fire into a flame, and Miss Dunbar had not run half a dozen rods before she was completely enveloped in fire. Elias Greer, who was near by, ran to her, and, before he had reached her, he had consumed nearly all her clothing, which fell from her in pieces as she ran. The boys called to her to run into the creek, which was about a hundred feet distant. Miss Horton ran back to a house near the entrance to the grove, with the intention, she said, of getting something with which to smother the flames. Meanwhile, her own dress was doing her best with her jacket, but almost as soon as he had thrown it about Miss Dunbar she fell unconscious. She had in her frozy run nearly back to the spot where the boys were at play. All the time the rapid motion fanned the fire into a flame, and Miss Dunbar had not run half a dozen rods before she was completely enveloped in fire. Elias Greer, who was near by, ran to her, and, before he had reached her, he had consumed nearly all her clothing, which fell from her in pieces as she ran. The boys called to her to run into the creek, which was about a hundred feet distant. Miss Horton ran back to a house near the entrance to the grove, with the intention, she said, of getting something with which to smother the flames. Meanwhile, her own dress was doing her best with her jacket, but almost as soon as he had thrown it about Miss Dunbar she fell unconscious. She had in her frozy run nearly back to the spot where the boys were at play. All the time the rapid motion fanned the fire into a flame, and Miss Dunbar had not run half a dozen rods before she was completely enveloped in fire. Elias Greer, who was near by, ran to her, and, before he had reached her, he had consumed nearly all her clothing, which fell from her in pieces as she ran. The boys called to her to run into the creek, which was about a hundred feet distant. Miss Horton ran back to a house near the entrance to the grove, with the intention, she said, of getting something with which to smother the flames. Meanwhile, her own dress was doing her best with her jacket, but almost as soon as he had thrown it about Miss Dunbar she fell unconscious. She had in her frozy run nearly back to the spot where the boys were at play. All the time the rapid motion fanned the fire into a flame, and Miss Dunbar had not run half a dozen rods before she was completely enveloped in fire. Elias Greer, who was near by, ran to her, and, before he had reached her, he had consumed nearly all her clothing, which fell from her in pieces as she ran. The boys called to her to run into the creek, which was about a hundred feet distant. Miss Horton ran back to a house near the entrance to the grove, with the intention, she said, of getting something with

THE REPUBLICAN.

OAKLAND, MARYLAND.

JAS. A. HAYDEN,
Editor and Proprietor.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.
One copy, one year, $1.50
Six months, .75
(Singularly in advance.)

TERMS OF ADVERTISING.
First insertion, 25 cents per square of 10 lines;
subsequent insertions, 15 cents per square. Special contracts for advertising longer than three months.

Correspondents must enclose full name and address, and, necessarily, for publication, but as a private guarantee of good faith. Reported
communications will not be returned.

SATURDAY, JULY 26, 1879.

For that We Still Live, "O Lord Make Us Truly Thankful."

Didst thou, oh mighty goun of the Herold, permit thy compassionate pity to influence thee and stay
the destruction that thou hadst promised should overtake us, or do we owe the avoidance of this dire calamity, and our present existence, to the kindly care of the God of the weak?
Perchance the arrival of the Grand Mogul of Maryland Democracy—the Deity whom thou dost all so much adore—the great William T., like whom there never was another, didst
so occupy thy mind and attention that thou couldst not spare the time to carry thy dreaded threat into execution; if so, then are we led to exclaim "tis an ill wind that blows not anybody good," and are again "truly thankful" that the great and adorable William T., of the tribe of Hamilton, deemed it advisable for the good of his health that he should in our midst for a few fleeting hours.

When we predicted that you would meet, with far-fetched statistics, our charge that all the investigating committees appointed by the Brigadier Congress, had failed to discover the misapplication of Government funds by Republican officials, we did not think they would be quite so far-fetched as to go beyond the time of Democratic accession to power in the House and assume to your party the credit of frauds and peculations discovered, and made known, and punished by the Grant administration. We have no excuse to offer for Belknap and the like; it is the misfortune of all parties, composed as they are of weak and frail humanity, to have some corrupt men
in their midst; but, when our administrations and our efforts brought to light those discoveries, we think it a little ungenerous in you, oh, mighty
one, these discoveries as your own.
They might pass for historical facts a century hence, but in this day and age our recollection serves us too well
to be cheated in that way.

Since the House has been in the power of the Democrats committee
after committee has been appointed to investigate the accounts of Republican officers and if they had discovered any defalcations, embezzlement or misapplication of public funds you would not have been reduced to the necessity of relabelling
the Belknap, Babcock and St. Louis whiskey ring frauds that were investigated, and the punishment therefor inflicted, by Republican administrations.

We were not aware that the expenses of a session of Congress consisted solely of the salaries of its members.
Take the items of printing, mileage,
committee expenses, attendance of witnesses before investigating committees, gas, (of which there was an enormous amount wasted during this session) the salaries of committee clerks and the army of attaches, to which add extra compensation, and do a little figuring in your statistic hordaling and we think you will change
your line of argument. (?)

We warned you in the start to confine yourselves more closely to facts
respecting Garrett county politics, else you would bring grief to some of your friends. You heeded not our warning, and have entailed upon the cyclopean head of the Canal Ring a useless expenditure of time and money. Ho, the pure and adored Gorman, believing the truth of your statement that Garrett county was Democratic and wishing to assure the success of his Senatorial aspirations
by designating who shall represent Garrett county in the next Legislature, has engaged several rooms at the Deer Park Hotel, and will sejourn there until he has everything cut and dried for the Democratic nominating convention. We are sorry that you have misled the Honorable gentleman from the Canal Ring, for we can assure him that the delegates from Garrett county will not cast their votes
for him for United States Senator.

Some people may have wondered why the Pennsylvania Democratic platform does not demand the abolition of the national banks. The explanation is that the candidate for state treasurer is cashier of a bank.

Hon. Bodd S. Ford, State Senator from Queen Anne's county, was drowned at Ocean City Sunday.

There are in the vaults of the sub-treasury at Baltimore 700,000 standard dollars, weighing twenty tons.
The lack of demand for them indicates that too much silver is alloted for the needs of business. The "oven-lids," as brokers call the silver dollars, will hereafter be paid out in exchange for fractional silver.

The Prohibitionists of Iowa threaten to nominate a full State ticket,
and claim that they will poll at least 30,000 votes for it this fall. This is a wild assertion, but, whatever number of votes they may cast, what good will it do the temperance cause,
and what harm will it do the Democratic party, the avowed enemies of prohibition?

Weaver, the Iowa Greenback Congressman, has prophesied financial ruin so persistently that he is known as "Calamity" Weaver. His latest reported utterance is a wish for the destruction of "every grain of wheat
in Iowa," since the greater the crop failures the better the prospect for the success of his party. The boom of prosperity means political death
to these fellows.

The Democrats are now having four new doors cut in the galleries of the House of Representatives, ostensibly for the purpose of improving the ventilation of the hall. The real object of the plan, however, is suspected to be to make four more places for Democratic office-seekers. The idea is entirely novel, and is said to have been conceived by an unlucky applicant, who, when told that the places were all filled, suggested that it would be easy to give him a place
by making another door, requiring another messenger.

Alexander H. Stephens is out in a card. The Savannah News attributed to Mr. Stephens the sentiment that "in the next campaign all other issues on the Democratic side would have to subordinate themselves to one which shall stand preminent—that of State rights." Writing to the Augustus News, Mr. Stephens says that his whole course has been "directly adverse to such a position."
He believes that the "great and all-absorbing issues now before the country are the financial, currency, tariff, internal revenue and taxation questions."

The business failures throughout the United States during the quarter
terminating on July 1st, 1879, marking an improvement in business in general. The actual number of failures during the quarter thorough-out the country was 1,534. The total amount of liabilities represented by these 1,534 failures was $22,695,725.
There were 2,370 failures for the corresponding quarter of 1878, with a total liability of $18,753,340. The decreases as compared with the second quarter of last year is, therefore, 936 in the number of failures,
and over $26,000,000 in liabilities.

Why should Greenback fanatics wish to tamper with the Government finances, in view of the fact that the present condition of the Treasury is exceptionally healthy? Why, except that now, as always, their ideas are merely visionary? According to the last Treasury statement, the receipts
for the past fiscal year have been $9-500,000 more than Mr. Sherman's estimate. The customs receipts have increased $1,500,000, a fact which proves that the people feel themselves at last to be in such a healthy condition that they can afford to purchase abroad. It must be remembered also that the Government has paid out during the year, in addition to ordinary payments, $5,500,000 for fishery award, 5,500,000 for pensions, and $1,500,000 for the improvement of the mouth of the Mississippi. If the financial tinkers will only let the currency question alone for awhile, matters will adjust themselves to the satisfaction of debtors and creditors
both.

When a Democrat is particularly hard pressed for defence of his party
he takes refuge in bluster about what will be done at the next session of Congress. The extra session was merely a skirmish, he says; the real battle will come this Fall. The real battle will come this Fall, but it will be in advance of the meeting of Congress. It will come in October and November, and the people will take a hand in it. What the outcome will be every shrewd observer can tell
now. Indeed the conservative portion of the Democratic party is looking upon the certain defeat of it as the only possible hope of success for next year. When Congress comes together in December it is likely that the Democratic majority will have had all the "battle" it cares for, and will be in a mood for better behavior.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

(Special correspondence to The Republican.)

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 22, 1879.

The promises of Democratic states men last winter and spring touching the rights of Republicans at the South are being violated with their old spirit of illiberality. The persecution of Swails in South Carolina is but a sample. In North Carolina already the repressive work has began, and in fact it is under way
wherever the Republicans show a disposition to take part in public affairs. All is peaceful and freedom prevails so long as nobody asserts his Republicanism, but the moment
equal rights begin to be asserted then the bulldozers put their old system in operation. The professions of the Confederate leaders go for nothing against the facts reported from the South daily. The South is to be kept solid by fraud and violence, and the North cannot forget this.

Secretary Sherman's speeches are the best presentations of the national financial policy yet put forth, and will have a wide influence in behalf of Republican management. It is not to be wondered at, therefore, that the Democrats howl very sorely over the fact that the Secretary is utilizing his spare time in spreading this information. The plain truth hurts the Greenback-Democrats worse than though it were vanished up for campaign purposes, and it is getting to be an axiom that Secretary Sherman's regular monthly reports and letters of response to inquiries are solid chunks of campaign lumber.
The Republican party is growing strong under his sturdy system.

One by one the armies and legions soldiers are kicked out of the Congressional offices. Not satisfied with the expulsion of Wilson from the Sergeant-at-Arms office in the Senate,
the Confederates have dropped a cripple in the House to give place to a rebel. This malicious persecution of Union soldiers has given rise to a feeling among Republicans that the Democrats holding comfortable places in the Departments ought to be displaced. Why shouldn't they be forced to give their places to the soldiers who are turned out at the capital.

The yellow fever alarm is having its effect in Washington, since its terrors have increased in the Southwest. I believe there is little cause for fear, for Washington is very healthy now.

General Walker, Superintendent of the Census, expresses the opinion that the coming enumeration of the population will show an increase of $9,400,000, or 48,300,000. The largest increase will be found in Kansas, Missouri, Texas, Minnesota and Nebraska and some of the Territories. General Walker says, with regard to the reported preparations of Southern Democratic leaders to falsify the returns for the sake of securing a political advantage for that section, that such a scheme could only be successful through a conspiracy between a very large number of agents of the Census Bureau. Of that he entertains no fears. The most complete and comprehensive preparations are being made to secure accuracy in the statistics to be taken with regard to the various industries of the country.

LOGAN.

Gubernatorial Candidates.

Among the names already mentioned as suitable for the nomination
at the Convention of the 12th of September, are those of Hon. Lloyd Lowndes, Jr., of Allegheny; Hon.
Stockett Mathews and Samuel Shoemaker, of Baltimore. It is now high time to discuss the merits and qualifications of persons suitable for a high distinction. The Democrats seem disposed to nominate Hon. Wm. T.
Hamilton, of Washington county, but there are many in the party who think Mr. H. is showing too much affection for the Ring that has so long and so remorselessly controlled and abused their organization, and their votes cannot be counted upon. A good opponent will make Continental William's path to the Executive Mansion by no means sure or easy.—
Frederick Examiner.

There are now two independent Democratic parties in Baltimore.
One of them has already placed a ticket in the field and the other will most likely follow suit. If the Republicans and temperance men should each nominate there will be five tickets in the field—out of which number enough good men out to be found to fill the offices.

TELEGRAPHIC.

INCREASE IN REVENUE RECEIPTS.

WASHINGTON, July 18.—The reports for the fiscal year received from collectors by the commissioner of internal revenue invariably show an increase in the revenue. A report received to-day from Revenue Agent Chapman, of the Sixth North Carolina district, where there has been almost continually more or less trouble with illicit distillers, shows that during the year 395 distilleries have been seized, the net amount of money recovered to the United States therefrom being in the aggregate more than $85,000. The collections from this district for the year are stated to be $347,650, being an increase over those of the previous year of $85,371.

This increase, the department claims, is due to the rigid enforcement of the laws.

RAPID DECLINE IN WHEAT.

CHICAGO, July 19.—There has been considerable excitement during the past week in consequence of a rapid and unchecked decline in grain and provisions on "Change. The favorable crop reports, rumors that the combination which has held wheat
up for a few months past were selling out, and the expectation of an outbreak of yellow fever in the Southern cities, have combined to depress prices. The cash decline on wheat has amounted to about 14 cents
during the week, the lowest sales being made to-day, when on call wheat sold for July option at 86½. There were rumors of failures, but so far as is known they were only temporary embarrassments, and all of the firms interested are expected to continue business on Monday. The clearings to-day were larger by a million and a-half bushels than usual, on account of heavy deliveries of wheat by the combination. The total deliveries made by them were 1,700,000 bushels
here and 800,000 bushels in Milwaukee. It is understood that they are rapidly getting out of the deal, and the culmination of the break will come Monday, if it has not already been reached.

POLK'S VINDICATION.

WASHINGTON, July 19.—In reference to the charge of inefficiency that is now being revived by the Democrats against ex-Doorkeeper Polk on account of his vigorous letter rebuking the Democracy for its blunders
in its extra session of Congress, Col.
Polk says that the only inefficiency
as was his appointment of more employes in his department of the House than was authorized by the written law, but that he only followed precedents in what he did; that he did not have as many extra men
as the preceding Congress, the Forty-fourth, nor were the expenses of the doorkeeper's department under him
as much by $20 per day as they were in the House of the Forty-fourth Congress, which was also Democratic;
that while he never appointed more than ten per cent. of his force in excess of the number he was entitled to under the law, the Sergeant-at-Arms and Clerk of the House violated the law at the same time in the same way, and at the last session of Congress the Sergeant-at-Arms had sixty per cent. more force than he was entitled to. The House paid him out of the contingent fund without opposition.

MR. RAMSEY TO BE SECRETARY OF WAR.

WASHINGTON, July 18.—From information obtained at the executive mansion to-day there is no doubt of the correctness of the assertion heretofore published in regard to the successor of Secretary McCrary, Ex-Senator Ramsey, of Minnesota, has been tendered the Office of Secretary of War and has accepted. The change will not occur, however, until the present Secretary retires from his present position to fill the office made vacant by the resignation of Judge Dillon of the Eighth United States judicial circuit.

ARRIVAL OF RUSSIAN EMIGRANTS.

QUARANTINE, STATES ISLAND,
July 20.—The steamship Mosel, from Bremen, which arrived here to-day,
has over six hundred steerage passengers, the most of whom are Russians. The Russians alone represent a capital of over $100,000. Among them are sixty families having two hundred and thirteen children. They are a remarkably fine-looking party.

VANDERBILT BEATEN BY GARRETT AND SCOTT.

NEW YORK, July 22.—A special
from Pittsburgh to a morning paper says: "Wm. H. Vanderbilt was apparently beaten here yesterday in one of his new schemes by John W.
Garrett and Tom Scott. Shortly after 12 o'clock yesterday morning two parties of workmen, one from the Baltimore and Ohio and the other from the Pennsylvania railroad, started to build a connection between these two roads on Fry street, in this city. The men did not go to work until after midnight, but one or two outsiders knew of the intended movement. One of the street commissioners was aroused and went to the chief of police for assistance, when a squad of forty men went to the spot and stopped the work. Shortly after word was received from City Solicitor Bigelow that it was all right, and the work should be allowed to go on.
The police surrendered their prisoners, and by 8 o'clock the connection between the two roads was an accomplished fact.

THE NEGRO EXODUS.

ST. LOUIS, July 20.—Several weeks ago the president of the Western Sanitary commission, James E.
Yeatman, undertook the temporary relief of negro refugees arriving here from the South. The old Eagle foundry, near the landing, was fitted up with bunks and cooking facilities,
and those who came from below
found a haven until such time as they could get away to Kansas or find homes in or about St. Louis. Last evening this refuge was closed. There were about one hundred refugees still stopping there, and they moved their baggage to the levee and camped for the night. To-day these and a hundred others who came up on the City of Alton left on the Kinney for Kansas. Later the Grand Tower arrived with a party from Bolivar, Mississippi. There was no place provided for them, and they are camping on the wharf. Mr. Yeatman says the closing of the refuge was necessitated by failing funds. He undertook the work thinking that the exodus would be of short duration, and that those who did come could be relieved at a comparatively small expense. It was purely a work of philanthropy with him. Instead of falling off, he says the exodus continues as strong as ever, and there is no prospect of its stopping. He has expended over six thousand dollars
in simply giving temporary relief.
He has no more means at hand to continue the work, and has appealed to the city authorities in vain. He says an effort will be made to inform the negroes of the South who may be contemplating emigration that they must not expect any help at St.
Louis.

YELLOW FEVER.

MEMPHIS, July 19.—It is impossible to conceive of more general consternation than now reigns in this city. Each new case of the pestilence increases the panic, and the inhabitants are fleeing in dread from the scoons they are powerless to encounter. Seven new cases have occurred to-day, though only one up to this hour has resulted fatally.

Doctors no longer attempt to disguise the appalling fact that yellow fever has set in with its wanted virulence. One prominent physician asserted this afternoon that at least fifty people are down with the pestilence. The effect on business is most paralyzing. Merchants have closed their stores and made arrangements
to open in some less infected districts.
While other persons engaged in several branches of commerce and industry, have deemed it more expedient to suspend indefinitely and lie off to some healthy locality.
Without relief is afforded either by abatement of the sickness or such sanitary considerations as may restore confidence to the terror-stricken citizens, who vividly recall the ravages caused by the pestilential visitation last year, Memphis will soon be depopulated—a veritable city of the dead.

A citizens relief committee will doubtless be organized on Monday and suggest some plan whereby those poor people, who have no means,
can be sent to a place of safety. The Government will doubtless be called upon to aid the committee, by furnishing tents and supplies. It is the purpose of those in authority to de-populate the city, if such a thing can be accomplished, but it is feared the task is impossible, as there are hundreds who will not go and cannot be driven away, preferring to remain and take the chances of death. If free rations are served them. Next week will decide this matter and there will doubtless be witnessed the scenes of last year.

MEMPHIS, July 21.—Yesterday was a very despondent Sunday. The square, where have been gathered so often the many children of Memphis, was entirely deserted, and at the street corners could be seen, gathered in small crowds, those who had been affected last year, discussing the probabilities of the coming three months,
but all agreeing that the fever could not do great harm—for only a small number remains of those who never had it—and believing in the theory that those having had it once cannot have it twice. Certainly, very little food remains for the fever to work upon. A dispatch received reports that Louisville is enduring medical examinations the same as at Memphis. Another says that Nashville will enforce examination in a few days. Selma has not yet quarantined.

HONORS TO GEN. GRANT.

SAN FRANCISCO, July 17.—The steamer City of Peking brings news
from Hong Kong to the 26th of June.
General Grant on his arrival at Tien Tsin was greeted by an address from the foreign residents delivered by the chairman of the municipal council. On May 30 a grand banquet was given by the Chinese authorities in honor of the distinguished visitor, in the principal native temple. The vicerey of Chihli, the commander
in-chief and grand secretary, Li Hong Chang, presided. No such attentions were ever before bestowed upon any foreigner at Peking. Gen.

Grant during his stay occupied quarters at the American Legation. Calls were exchanged between him and Prince Kung, a long interview taking place at Isung Li Yamen, in which many important public questions were discussed. He was also largely entertained by the highest native officials and by distinguished foreigners. The General left Peking on June 10 for Tien Tsin, where he held a second extended conference with Li Hong Chang, who is unquestionably the foremost and most powerful subject in the empire.

YOKOHAMA, June 29.—General
Grant arrived at Nagasaki June 21
on the Richmond, accompanied by the Ashelet, the latter bringing Judge Denny, the United States consul at Tien Tsin, and other friends from China. No formal demonstration was made by foreign residents,
further than an address of welcome
by a committee of 13, chosen to represent all alien nationalities there.
Frequent entertainments were given by the Chinese. Owing to the prevalence of the cholera at Hioa and vicinity the original arrangements were changed. The party will come direct to Yokohama and Tokio. They are expected here on the 4th of July.
Extensive preparations have been made for the reception of General Grant and although the guest of the nation separate complimentary demonstrations are proposed. By imperial decree his reception is to be in all respects identical with what would be accorded the reigning monarch of any European country. The conduct of the British admiral, Chates, is severely criticised. This officer left Hong Kong immediately before General Grant's arrival there; did the same thing at Shanghai, and now suddenly starts on a pleasure trip from Yokohama. His action is understood to be in consequence of his unwillingness to give a salute of 21 guns. The British minister indorses his action by accompanying him on the present cruise. Governor Hennessy, of Hong Kong, who is now visiting Japan, strongly disapproves
the proceeding and is understood to have urgently remonstrated against
it.

SUPPLYING CAMPAIGN DOCUMENTS.

WASHINGTON, July 18.—The Democratic Congressional Committee
here is sorely perplexed over the difficulty it experiences in endeavoring to satisfy the various elements of the Democratic party. The committee has a full assortment of all kinds of documents, embodying a great variety of conflicting principles, and as these documents are furnished to State and county committees upon request as at so much per pound, and the committee here would thrive and pay well upon a business basis, inasmuch as all of its stock in trade sells well in different localities. But, politically speaking, the committee is very near a failure. If one county chairman or member of Congress orders a few thousand hard money speeches for distribution, before the documents are all sent there comes to the committee spirited letters from the inflationist members of the Democratic brotherhood, protesting against the distribution of such matter, and declaring that the party can only win upon a greenback basis. On the other hand, when greenback speeches are sent out the anti-greenback Democrats are equally as vigorous in their opposition to the issue of such heretical documents, so that between the two factions the committee scarcely knows what to do. And it can do nothing except to supply speeches as they are ordered, leaving to the local politicians and party leaders the responsibility of their judicious distribution. After frequent consultations the Solons of the party, just before the adjournment of the last session of Congress, felt pretty certain of their ability to lay out such ingenious plans to would ensure an advantageous distribution of documents.
Their debates on the Silver bill would do for some parts of Maine
and Ohio, and later in the season
they proposed to widely circulate in the other New England States and New York the speeches made by the handful of honest Democrats in the House. However successful the plan may prove when the campaign opens fairly in all the States, about which the Democrats have very little thought at present. They will be happy enough if they can manage the Ohio
and Maine campaigns without disrupting the party in those States on the financial issue. The experience of the Republican Congressional Committee is entirely different. The lines of its party are clearly drawn,
and there is but one set of principles
upon which the issues of the approaching campaigns will be fought.
So far as the speeches of Republican senators or members are concerned,
there is not a single one that need be withheld from circulation. The harmonious working of the committee,
therefore, contrasts greatly with the demoralizing influence which the Democratic committee seems to be exercising over its own party.

A Few Wishing Customs.

In whatever grade of society or position of prosperity we are placed, we still have for something better, and as mankind is never in this world perfectly happy, we find ourselves constantly wishing for some future blessedness superlative to that we at present enjoy. Consequently a host of futile customs to meet this want are practiced among the vulgar, who believe in their efficacy, and many of them are even patronized by the educated. In the west of England "wishing wells" are very plentiful, and young damsels longing for married felicity offer up the following petition:

A husband, St. Catherine;
A lambent one, St. Catherine;
A rich one, St. Catherine;
A nice one, St. Catherine;
And soon, St. Catherine.

At Abbotbury they used to go on a certain day in the year to the Norman chapel of St. Catherine at Milton Abbey and make the same prayer. It is somewhat singular that on the Continent this saint should be considered the special patroness of spinsters. At Holywell, or St. Winifred's Well, in North Wales, those who are not satisfied with their circumstances, in life must find the wishing stone, which is two feet below the water, and while kissing it make the necessary wish. In Penmaen's "History of Whiteford Parish" we find an account of the Walsingham Wells. They were formerly supposed to cure ailments of the head and stomach, but as this idea is now exploded, the superstitions in the district still believe them to be able to accomplish human desires. There is a stone between the two wells upon which the suppliant must kneel with his bare right knee; he can then reach both wells, which he is required to do with his hands, and to take as much water as they will hold, and drink it. The wish formed during this operation will be gratified in the ensuing twelve months; and if this fail, it is put down to incredulity.

A peculiar method of divination is practiced near Kirkcubrecht, Banff, at the fountain of St. Michael. There wives go to know if their husbands will get well, and girls for their sweethearts. The sacred guardian is personated by a fly, which skims over the surface of the water, and is supposed to believe them to be able to accomplish human desires. There is a stone between the two wells upon which the suppliant must kneel with his bare right knee; he can then reach both wells, which he is required to do with his hands, and to take as much water as they will hold, and drink it. The wish formed during this operation will be gratified in the ensuing twelve months; and if this fail, it is put down to incredulity.

A peculiar method of divination is practiced near Kirkcubrecht, Banff, at the fountain of St. Michael. There wives go to know if their husbands will get well, and girls for their sweethearts. The sacred guardian is personated by a fly, which skims over the surface of the water, and is supposed to believe them to be able to accomplish human desires. There is a stone between the two wells upon which the suppliant must kneel with his bare right knee; he can then reach both wells, which he is required to do with his hands, and to take as much water as they will hold, and drink it. The wish formed during this operation will be gratified in the ensuing twelve months; and if this fail, it is put down to incredulity.

As soon as the Danish village girls hear this bird, they kiss their hand, and ask: "Cuckoo, cuckoo! when shall I be married?" Among the Swedes, too, the girls exclaim:

"Cuckoo, cuckoo, tell me,
Up in the tree, true and free,
How many years I must live and go unmarried."

Superstitions in connection with the appearance of the moon are very numerous. It generally presides over lovers' wishes. In Devonshire the young people as soon as they see the first new moon after midsummer, go to a stile, turn their backs to it, and say:

All hail, new moon! all hail to thee!
I prithee, good moon, reveal to me
This night who shall my true love be—
Who is he, and what he wears,
And what he does all month and years.

A curious custom exists in Cornwall of gathering the club-moss, which is considered good for all diseases of the eye. Hunt, in his "Popular Romances of the West of England," says the gathering is regarded as a mystery, and if any ventures to write the secret, the virtues of the moss will be of no more use to him. The third day of the moon, when it is seen for the first time, they show it the knife with which the moss is to be cut, and repeat:

As Christ healed the issue of blood,
Do thou cut what thou cuttest for good.

At sunset, having carefully washed the hands, he is to be cut kneeling, wrapped in a cloth, and boiled in water from the nearest spring; this may be used as a fomentation, or the moss made into an ointment with butter made from a new cow's milk. Vallancey tells us that the Irish, on seeing the new moon, knelt down, repeated the Lord's Prayer, and then said, "May thou leave us as safe as thou hast found us!" Aubrey says, speaking of old English manners, the women sit astride a gate or stile the first night of the new moon, saying, "A fine moon, God bless her!" Halliwell, in his "Popular Rhymes," speaks of the peculiar divination practiced during harvest-moon. When going to bed, put under your pillow a prayer-book open at the words in the matrimonial service:

"With this ring I thee wed;" place on it a key, a ring, a flower, a sprig of willow, a small heart-ake, a crust of bread, and these cards: a ten of clubs, nine of hearts, and the aces of spades and diamonds. Wrap these in a muslin or gauze handkerchief, and on getting into bed cross your hands and say:

Luna, every woman's friend,
To me thy goodness condescend;
Let me this night in vision see
Emblems of my destiny.

If you dream of storms, it portends trouble; a calm after it, so your fate will be; the ring or ace of diamonds, marriage; bread, industry; cake, prosperity; flowers, joy; willow, treachery; in love, spades; death, diamonds; riches, clubs; a foreign land; keys, conscience, power and plenty; birds, many children; and geese, you will marry more than one.

Some legends become, by time-honored custom, the wishing places of lovers, such as the well-known gate at Grasmere, it being the popular belief that any wish formed there will be fulfilled. A beautiful view of the lake has been long before that, an additional charm. Wordsworth has made it the subject of one of his touching poems. The old gate is, however, replaced by one now covered with initials in the real English style.

Nihilism--Origin of the Name.

The following is condensed from an article on Nihilism by a Russian Nihilist, published in the July number of the North American Review:

The word Nihilism originated in 1863 in a novel by Turgenieff, "Fathers and Sons," but long before that, this social ferment had been brewing to the no small uneasiness of the conservative classes. Turgenieff gave it the name that has clung to it ever since, and which has been applied to almost everything out of the usual order of events. A man or woman not going to church on Sunday were called Nihilists. A man with a beard or long hair; a woman with short hair; a particular cut; any one wearing blue spectacles; any one who spoke of the Czar in a manner not especially reverential—all these were sneered at as Nihilists; and a Novgorod official actually issued an order prohibiting all ladies from wearing short black woolen dresses, blue glasses and short hair. Every originality or eccentricity was stigmatized as Nihilism. But the contempt with which Nihilism was looked upon gradually changed; after Karakozoff's attack on the Emperor, in 1866, it crystallized into a more definite, earnest and alarming shape. It was no longer a fad to be derided, but an actuality to be dealt with by government. Since 1866 the Russian Government has regularly every year attempted to exterminate Nihilism.

Trials followed in quick succession, and hundreds of young men and women were sent to Siberia, and thousands have been banished without trial. And after every wholesale banishment, the Minister of Police reported to the Czar that Nihilism had at last through his (the Minister's) exertions, been torn out by the roots from the blessed soil of Holy Russia. And every year he had to begin anew his tedious work. At the close of the Russo-Turkish war Nihilism assumed a gigantic proportion; the present system of government, long confined within the borders of Russia, but became an international matter. The word Nihilist now comprises all the revolutionary elements of the present political and social order of things in Russia. In this broad sense every intelligent Russian may be called a Nihilist, for every intelligent and well-educated Russian citizen is a natural foe of the present system of government, and takes a more or less active part in the movement to overthrow it. In this powerful arm of discontent are the Liberals, mostly recruited from the noble families of the Empire and some of the staunch aristocrats and conservatives, who are trying to obtain an aristocratic constitution. Some of the highest military functionaries secretly support the movement. The present Czar is not a conspirator, but a great national revolution; and if all who take any part in it are to be termed Nihilists, then all Russia—or the better educated part of it—is Nihilistic.

The usual definition of Nihilism—viz: that it seeks to destroy all religion, morality, property, etc., is absurd, as it is unjust. Nihilism is simply Russian Socialism, and as such stands ahead of all other parties. It seeks to destroy Russia's body politic, with its attendant minor social diseases. They recognize nothing in the social and political life created by the Czar's rule. In this sense they are Nihilists, and pride themselves on the name given them by their bitterest enemies. Nihilism is opposed to a monopoly of landed property among a few families of the nobility, and to the invasion of the peasant and unproductive to the proprietor. Nihilism seeks to bring the social and political institutions back into the old normal historical channel out of which it has been violently driven by the monarch and the despotism of the Monarchs and their Christian successors, the Czars of Moscow. The important fact must not be forgotten that before the rise of the Czar, the Russian people had already attained a high degree of development, and assumed characteristic National forms. Decentralization and communal property of the land were the chief features of this building civilization. Russia was divided into a great number of principalities, at the head of each of which stood a Prince elected by the people and subject to the constant control of the Vetchy, or National Assembly. The township and village communities of each principality enjoyed an almost unlimited self-government in all local affairs. Many cities in Northern Russia formed independent Republics, and attained a high degree of culture and prosperity. All these germs of powerful political and industrial development were killed by the Czars; the liberty of the free cities was drowned in oceans of blood; the peasants, who had till the sixteenth century been freemen, were enslaved and given to the nobles as a compensation for the loss of their aristocratic privileges. Russia was converted into a jail and slave market, in which the only master and the only free man was the Czar—the knout and torture chamber the only law. This state of things has remained essentially the same; the outward forms have changed with the times, but the spirit, the essence of Czardom is the same as three centuries ago. The Russians never submitted passively to the tyranny of the Czars; it has been a struggle between the people and the Czar since the sixteenth century. Peasant riots, always bearing the same motto on their flags, have taken place throughout every reign since Catherine II. They were especially frequent under the rule of that "maniac of despotism," Nicholas I., and their repression particularly brutal. The Russian peasant saw nothing good in the liberal, nothing but the slave owner, and hated and distrusted him. The best minds among the educated classes were aware of this, and therefore directed all their efforts toward the abolition of slavery. They accomplished their purpose in 1861 by forcing upon the Government the Emancipation act. However insufficient this was for the welfare of the peasant it had one important result; it threw down the barriers, and gave the educated classes an opportunity of mingling with the people without any distrust and antagonism; and it opened up to the lower classes the possibility of acquiring that knowledge which is the only effective power in all great national movements.

The emancipation was the first step towards mingling these two currents of discontent, and uniting them into one powerful stream. The result of this first step was the birth of Nihilism. Sons of peasants and representatives of other poor classes plunged the high schools and universities almost to the exclusion of the young generation of aristocrats, who preferred to confine themselves to a few privileged "noble" schools, such as the St. Petersburg Lyceum and the St. Petersburg University, and a few exclusively destructive; on the contrary, the social purpose is to lead Russia back into the old channel of its normal growth in accordance with the precepts and social forms elaborated in Western Europe. The best minds of all classes are to be found among the Nihilists. What astounds foreigners is the great number from noble families who are now Nihilists. But this is easily explained. Russia, for centuries has not had a closely organized aristocratic class, bound together by traditions of glory and honor; they became a servile class, slavishly devoted to the Czars through self-interest. It is this, therefore, that has caused the Nihilists to have their own class and enthusiastically support the radical doctrines of the people. There is an erroneous opinion that brute force is the Alpha and Omega of Nihilism; that its aim is to overthrow the present system of government by force. All the different sections of the party are not subjected to any central controlling power, but are organized on federative principles, and acknowledge only one ruling doctrine—that the people must be free.

The small Jacobin fraction of Nihilists, whose organ is the Nabat (Tocsin), published in Geneva, has been known for its uncompromising hostility to all the serious and influential organs of Russian socialism. The Czar might still avert the horrors of revolution by granting the people freedom of speech, person and conscience, and by allowing the free press to be free. But he has lost upon the country. But he remains dead to the teachings of common sense and history. When public speech is stifled and the inmost thoughts of the citizen are tried into a barbarous system of espionage, then the time has come for the dagger and pistol to speak. Russian anarchy has thrown out all disguise of liberalism and assumed its true shape—an executioner's sword, and a guillotine with blood. But all the Draconian measures of the Russian government are powerless to arrest the revolution. The Nihilists are not to be deterred from their purpose by struggle with him for his little swallows, how to the like heroes for the cause to which they have devoted their lives.

"What Dreams May Come."

DeQuincey describes the magnifying of real and common things, the feeling of tremendous despondency, the indescribable prolongation of time and extension of space—these are the chief features of his dream. All these may characterize the dreams of fever, and with a most singular counterfeiting of system and actuality. A sick man, for instance, lies in bed, and half-waking, he thinks he is passing through a narrow alley, and he feels himself arise, pass through the door of his chamber and enter the corridor. At once the bare walls stretch out in endless and changing vistas; he walks beneath Grecian columns, and in the distance he sees a crowd of inscrutable sphinxes, and the massive desolations of Tadmor or Babel, through the ruins of Aztec temples, under the stunted caves of Elephantia, and for the changes of vision are inconceivable as they are immense—along narrow alleys shut in by lofty warehouses, or sometimes through avenues of palms, or groves of pine; all nature and all architecture in a fantasmagoric procession with him for his little swallows, how to the like heroes for the cause to which they have devoted their lives.

The grotesque and horrible mingle oddly in such derangements of the sleeping brain. The same dreamer found himself climbing with much labor up a precipitous mountain, accompanied by a very beautiful lady with whom he had a casual acquaintance in real life. There was a joyous tumult of hundreds of people on the top of this mountain, and it appeared that they were erecting a monument to some person unknown. The lady proposed to help, and did so by the simple means of breaking out from the ledge a fragment of several tons weight and, in the most natural way, tossing it to the top of the mountain, where it immediately fell in a shower of sparks. He followed the lady's example with equal success, and this indeed seemed the fit and proper method of building monuments. In a moment the lady, the merry crowd, the mountain, were not, and the first awful trump of the day of judgment was sounding; the skies were a livid, ashen hue, and limned upon their vault, in place of sun or stars, which had fled away, were gigantic figures of human and bestial shapes, and all the land was crowded with men and women and children, some screaming, some dumb and white with dismay, a few serene and happy, and some curious, and noting down the phenomena and the incidents attending them. This was the dreamer's part, and as the figures shifted every now and then, and by some kaleidoscopic trick, he strove to organize a corps of organization, to regard each quarter of the heavens. There was nothing stranger, as the dreamer remembers this astonishing scene, than the curious irrelevance of the common-place houses and barns and churches; the people were about as he would have expected.

But swifter than a weaver's shuttle this scene, too, vanished, and the dreamer was in a great theater, packed tier above tier with human beings, who were witnessing a series of tableaux vivants. There was announced as the closing picture, "The Equality of Man." The stage was read for a palace interior, and from a stately portal, in the blaze of many lights, there stepped a wildly consorted pair, arm in arm. One was a woman of unearthly beauty, robed with consummate elegance, adorned with jewels, and with the mien of a sovereign. Her companion, upon whose arm she leaned, was a woman also—a colossal negress of the most hideous African type. As the two appeared, the lady turned her splendid face upon the black, and leered; the other grinned; and the house broke into tempestuous laughter—from pit to roof, one horrible rush and din of laughter. Even while they laughed the lady's face fell away into the expression of the grave, and all her garments and adornments were filthy rags, and the negro mask became a grinning skull—"the equality of man"—and the chorus of the theater became a vast chorus of hisses and cries of anger. The dreamer awoke with that sight and those sounds thrilling every nerve, and "cried aloud."—Sauter, in Springfield Republican.

Farming in a Great Swamp.

When the Erie Railway was being constructed, the engineers encountered a vast morass in the town of Chester, four miles east of Goshen. It covered nearly 500 acres, and was filled with treacherous quagmires and springs that were almost bottomless. It was a fountain of mud, and the roadbed of the railway across this great swamp, required the driving of piles to the depth of 100 feet, and the use of hundreds of thousands of loads of stone and dirt. The building of the road was a great outlay of money than any five miles of the road between Piermont and Jersey City. The tract of swamp was not considered worth the nominal tax collected from its owners, and for twenty years after the road was built remained in its noisome condition, the home of malaria and deadly fevers.

Twenty years ago a farmer conceived the idea of draining a portion of the swamp, and he succeeded. By ditching, he reclaimed sixty acres. The first acre he bought cost him $1. When it was found that the draining left as a soil the finest black mud, composed almost entirely of mud, he advanced the price advanced to $17 an acre. After the sixty acres were reclaimed, the price still further increased, until to-day as high as $1,000 has been paid for the reclaimed land. The value of the land is owing to its extraordinary adaptability to the culture of onions. A crop of 800 bushels of onions to the acre is raised, and for twenty years after the road was built remained in its noisome condition, the home of malaria and deadly fevers.

There are 17,000 acres of swamp-land in the Wallkill Valley which will eventually be converted into this mud soil, which is the best in the world for growing onions. The land after draining is filled with the slightest labor. Onion seed is sown by a hand-drill, and the greatest labor is in keeping down the weeds after the plant begins to grow. This work is done by boys and men in the growing season on their hands and knees between the onion rows, pulling up the weeds that the rich soil calls rapidly into existence. The weed is a regular skill and art, as the soil is so loose that there is constant danger of tearing up the young and tender plants by their roots or removing their covering of earth. The red onion is the variety grown most successfully, as the dark neck gives the white onion a dirty hue which injures its marketable value. When the onion tops are at the height of their growth, their odor fills the air for great distances around.—N. Y. World.

The Bank of France has an invisible photographic studio behind the cashier's desk, whence likeness can, at a signal from the latter, be taken. The camera is much used, too, in the examination of documents. An erasure is often obvious in the photograph of a document which is not seen in the document itself.

BLUE fishing, says the Norristown Herald, has commenced at Long Branch, in the Schuylkill River. Along scores of fishermen go out in the morning and return in the evening looking mighty "blue," and with an empty fish basket. And that is what may be called "blue" fishing.

A TOWN in Western New York, says Andrews' Bazar, has a woman undertaker. She complains bitterly of the fickleness of the opposite sex. She says she used to be quite a belle, and had scores of admirers who declared they were willing "to die for her," but since she commenced business not one has been as good as his word.

Our Young Folks.

GRANDPA AND BABY.

On the lawn, one summer's day,
I left my baby boy to play,
And smiled to hear his cheerful shout,
And laugh to see him ring in out,
The arches of the grand old trees.
Then die away upon the breeze,
While all the playful fellows stirred
To merry bands and laughing words.

But when I missed the cheerful noise,
Nor heard the sound of prattling voice,<
I rose, and to the window hast,
And looking thence, this vision met—
O Memory! though thy name be vain,
Point, point that picture ever again.

The western sun his glory threw
Along the sword of emerald hue;
Save where, prelude to playful frolic,
Some cool, green shadow nestled down,
And idly shifting with the sun,
Crest slowly eastward, one by one.

Beneath the elm tree's waving crest,
Where birdlings tossed in downy nest,
Where alternate sun and shade,
Like changing facets skipped and played,
The old arm chair, secure and good,
With wicker-work in its sturdy stand;
And in its cushion, broad and deep,
Grandpa and baby fast asleep.

On rounded cheek and golden head,
The slumbering sun his radiance shed,
While on the grandpa's silver crown
Shone dimly down the golden sun;
And then in benediction, fell
On both, and wrapped them in its spell.

The breeze, in faint, growing hold,
Lowed the rings of slumbering gold;
On baby's head, then with the gray
On grandpa's head, began to play.
In the worn palm, securely pressed,
The little dimpled hand found rest;
The other clasped a withered brow,
And grandpa and baby fast asleep.

Fixed was the look of content
On the worn face, a trifle bent;
And forward drooped, to rest the chin
On baby's forehead, as with him
While on the collar of his coat,
The gray and gold together met.

Such tinting one might vainly seek
To set on baby's lip and cheek,
But thin and pale that other one,
Which clung to grandpa's cheek and bone,
And so the evening shadows fell,
And deep grew, but all was well.

And tossed about in watery air,
While white, wan shadows came and bare,
Upon the lawn, all white with snow;
But never more to wake them so,
On garden walk or grassy lawn,
Max I, in vision fair behold.

That little hand, with crown of gold,
Nor e'er more, on summer day,
Nor e'er more, on winter day,
Anod the drowsy, drifted snow,
The silver hand, and gold, he low:
O Memory! point that scene again.

O Memory! point that scene again,
That day when baby and I were slain,
That day when baby and I were slain,
That day when baby and I were slain,
That day when baby and I were slain,
That day when baby and I were slain.

STEALING MELONS.

Grant was born some time after the fall of Vicksburg. His "mamma" boasts that she saw "General Grant once," but there is an opinion current among the neighborhood that she is to be taken for her imagination when she tells what she has seen in her wanderings.

I am inclined to think that her account of her meeting with that General, who is now so famous, is a little vague, after all, is to say the least, rather apocryphal. Grant's great name has, Sir Peter Chillingworth to the contrary, notwithstanding, had no effect on his tract and making it little vague character. He is a simple, little, vagabond, and in a small way, a thief.

Mr. Henry, on whose place this young hopeful lives, turning the corner of the house one morning, saw Grant a little way ahead of him, with a tin bucket in his hand. Grant saw him at once, darted under the house, and then came out without the bucket.

This roused Mr. Henry's suspicion. He called to mind many instances in which he had caught Grant pilfering, and came here, you young rascal!" he cried.

"What has I done?" asked Grant, with an injured air.

"That's just what I want to know! What has I done?" Grant said.

"I haven't got no bucket," sullenly.

"But you had one a moment ago."

"Dead, Mr. Henry, you is 'staken! I didn't hab no bucket."

"Do you think I'm blind? Go under that log at once, and bring me that bucket."

Very slowly, Grant crept under the house, when, getting behind a pillar, and as he thought, out of sight, he emptied the contents of the bucket on the ground.

An exclamation from Mr. Henry told him this piece of strategy had failed, and much crestfallen, he "scoped" the sugar bucket into the bucket, and came out. On being taxed with his rascality, he exclaimed:

"I 'clar 'fo goodness, Mr. Henry, I haint stole nuffin!"

"Where did you get this sugar, then?"

"I didn't 'tend fer ter stole it, Mr. Henry. I was just gwine ter borry it, till I 'd sell dem water-millions and pay yer."

"Perhaps you will borrow my water-millions, too?" Mr. Henry said indignantly. Grant assumed an injured look.

"You's spilla' my repertishun by such talk as that," he said.

"I ain't never koted me a stealin' nuffin, I 'd so long ter be a thief, I think."

"Nothing except this sugar and a good many other things," Mr. Henry answered, angrily, and he added, sternly, "It won't be good for you if I catch you in my melons."

Grant retreated to the quarter, muttering, "Mus' think I's nigger! Let 'im know I don't 'long ter 'im! 'Twen't be good fer me! Umph! Wut kla 'e do ter me? Jest kase 'e's white, thinks 'im do ter things I'd jist like ter see 'im lay his han' on me!"

"What yer grumblin' 'bout now?" demanded Hannah, who was standing, with arms akimbo, in her cabin door.

"What has been, an' what am de matter wif yer?"

"Mr. Henry's been busin' me," said Grant, sullenly. "Talkin' 'bout my stealin' his ole water-millions."

"Why didn't yer talk back ter 'im? I don't 'bieve yer's got de keridge of a chicken. Yer orter be 'shamed of yer-self ter stan' an' let a good-fer-nuffin white man talk ter yer dat way."

At nine o'clock that night, Grant stole from his mamma's door. Getting clear of the quarter, he crept along, following the angle of the rail fence, and thus keeping himself in the shadows.

He heard a noise. What was it? A man's tread, or only the rustling of some animal in the grass? Grant crouched close against the fence and listened. The sound, whatever it was, was hushed, and reassured, he resumed his way.

How still everything was, and the moonlight, how beautiful. The stars twinkled in the calm blue of the summer sky, and the soft night wind was heavy with the fragrance of honey-suckle and mimosa.

Grant glided on, now and then muttering to himself, almost inaudibly, "It's mos' dere now! Golly! won't Mr. Henry be mad when he fin's dem whoppers gone? He'll spect me, too! but kin I prove it? Lemme see! Lemme see! I 'd tote more'n one of dese whoppers. Golly, dough, of I eats one, den I kin tote two, one in my stomach, an' one in my han's!"

And Grant almost choked with laughter over his plan for deceiving the rightful owner of "dese whoppers."

He climbed the rail fence in the dense shadows of a magnolia tree, and dropping softly on the other side, found himself among the vines. Grant stooped over one of the largest in the patch.

"Dese yer water-millions is mos' ous temptin'," he said. "Mster been a big watermillin, like dis yer, dat tempted Ebel. Golly! nough to tempt Ebel hisself! Lemme see! I don't 'bieve I 'd tote more'n one of dese whoppers. Golly, dough, of I eats one, den I kin tote two, one in my stomach, an' one in my han's!"

Having reached this conclusion, Grant raised the melon as high as he could, then threw it to the ground. The melon broke, and he proceeded to gorge himself. He was so absorbed that he started and yelled when a hand was fiercely imbedded in his wool.

"Hush your yelling! Do you want to wake the dead?" exclaimed a hollow voice. Grant began to shiver. He screwed himself round until he caught a glimpse of his captor. The thing was tall, and clothed in white, but what startled Grant most was that it seemed to carry its head, not on its shoulders, but under its arm. Grant was certain that it was a ghost. Again it demanded, "Do you want to wake the dead?"

"O, no, sah," Grant faltered.

"You're stealing melons. Do you know where the wicked go when they are dead?" and the ghost clutched him by the throat.

"O Jemsa! lemme go! lemme go!" cried Grant. "I'll never take de melons again! Lemme go!"

"Start, then!" said the ghost, in a solemn voice. "If I catch you here again, you'll wish you'd never born!" and the ghost gave him a kick that knocked him down.

When Grant scrambled to his feet, and cast a breathless look round, the figure was nowhere to be seen. This sudden disappearance was awful. He paused a moment, with his jaw dropped, and his knees trembling, and then he was tumbling headlong over the fence, and scrambling toward the quarter. He avoided the fence corners just as much as he had said in his heart of heart, for in fact, he only felt safe in the lightest path he could find. From every tree and patch of shade he expected that white figure to start. When he reached his mamma's door he was in a wretched condition.

"What's der matter wif yer?" Hannah demanded, when she had drawn him in and shut the door.

"Did Mr. Henry ketch yer?" "What skeered yer?" "Did a dog git arter you, honey?"

"No," Grant stammered; "no; de 'goses got arter me!"

"Well, I never!"

"'Goses, whar was dey?"

"What dey do ter yer, chile?" was chorussed on all sides.

Grant related his adventure to several wondering listeners, and when he had finished, an old woman remarked: "I tellers told you dat de field was haunted, and now you see hit is. Der was a bat-fir dar in de war," and she shook her head solemnly.

"So yer did, sister Sally," they all said, shaking their heads also.

Was there a ghost? We can only say that Mr. Henry seemed very much tickled at something the next time he saw Grant.—Youth's Companion.

Haying at Ninety-two.

Elizabeth Leibesberger, aged ninety-two, resides in Richmond Township, this county, and is in all probabilities one of the richest maiden ladies in the county. She owns several beautiful farms in Richmond Township, and she has lived nearly all her life. Her brother is also a large land-owner. Miss Leibesberger is remarkably well preserved. She was never married and has lived ninety-two years in a single house, without being dragged down by the cares of married life, domestic troubles and other vexations and tribulations. She has silvery gray hair is neat and trim in appearance, and considering her age, she is very active and alert. A few days ago her farm hands commenced hay-making. To their great surprise the aged lady and land owner made her appearance in the field, raked in hands. She was suitably attired for the occasion, her skirts and dress being well gathered in and tucked back so as not to drag or give her any trouble in moving freely over the field. She said she was going to show them how to work. This was greeted with clapping of hands and cheers. Miss Leibesberger went to work in good earnest, tossed the hay over and over, raked it into rows from one end of the field to the other, and then helping to rake it on piles, and finally assisted in loading and raking after the wagons. It was an exhibition of old time hay-making, the way "they used to do it when she was a young girl," she said, "before the patent machinery was ever heard of." The lady worked in the field the entire day and kept up her pluck remarkably well.—Reading (Pa.) Eagle.

As to all this excitement about horse races, how much trouble and loss of money might be prevented if everybody would adopt the philosophy of the Shah of Persia, who, on being invited to attend the Derby while in England, calmly said: "Why should I do this thing? It is already known to me that one horse can run faster than another?"—Graphic.

SAMUEL B. COLLIER was elected Probate Judge of Callaway County, Mo., mainly through promising to give part of the profits of the office to the school fund. The Supreme Court of that State has declared that his election was illegal.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

DR. G. H. HOCKING,
offers his professional services to the citizens of Deer Park and vicinity.
Office, Deer Park.
7 21

COMMISSIONERS' MEETING.

OFFICE OF THE
GARRETT COUNTY COMMISSIONERS,
OAKLAND, MD., JULY 17th, 1879.

Notice is hereby given that the County Commissioners of Garrett county will meet at their office in Oakland

On Wednesday, Aug. 6th, 1879,
for the transaction of business.

W. H. HAGANS,
Clerk.

Sheriff's Sale.

By virtue of a writ of fieri facias issued out of the Circuit Court for Garrett county, at the said of Thomas Browning et al., against the goods and chattels, lands and tenements of Charles B. Wheeler and Samuel Teats, and writ of fieri facias being No. 1444, docketed
September Term, 1879, of said county, docketed
and directed, I have seized and taken in execution
all the right, title, claim and interest,
both at law and in equity, of the said Charles B. Wheeler and Samuel Teats, in and to the following property, to-wit:

One Steam Engine and Saw Mill,
one brown mare, one four-horse wagon, two cross-cut saws, three axes, one lot saw mill tools. Also, all that tract, piece or parcel of land situate, lying and being in said Garrett county, adjoining lands of Thomas Browning and others, it being the same tract of land which was conveyed to the said Samuel Teats by John H. Browning and wife by deed dated March 20th, 1871, and recorded in Liber W. H. T., No. 1, folio 50, &c., one of the land records of Garrett county, to which said deed reference is hereby made for a full and particular description of said land.

And I hereby give notice that on

MONDAY, August 11th, 1879,

at the hour of 3 o'clock p. m., in front of Cal-dington's Hotel in Oakland, I will offer for sale, at public auction, to the highest bidder,
for cash, the property aforesaid, to satisfy said writ of fieri facias.

THOS. CODDINGTON,
Sheriff.

Ready-Made CLOTHING.

The undersigned would inform the citizens of Oakland and vicinity, that he has on hand
a large assortment of

Ready Made Clothing,

which he will sell very cheap for cash.

Gents Furnishing Goods,

In great variety, and at prices to suit the times.

Suits Made to Order

In the most fashionable manner. Orders by mail promptly attended to.

All work WARRANTED to give entire satisfaction.

A. LOEWENSTEIN,
Oakland, Md.

Road Examiners' Notice.

Notice is hereby given,

That the undersigned, appointed by the County Commissioners of Garrett county, to view the lands, through which the road petitioned for by Joseph Fanch, John M. Titchell, A. J. Warner, others, is to pass, and lead to land from a point on the Frankville
and North Branch roads, near Joseph Fanch
and running through lands of Joseph Fanch, John G. Brant and others, to intersect the Bloomington and Kitzmiller road near the corner of John G. Brant's pasture fence, and examine whether said petitioned road
should be located, will meet on the premises on Wednesday, August 20th, 1879, and determine whether the public convenience requires the said location of said petitioned road, and if so, to locate the same, and perform their duty in the premises.

D. J. BEVER,
WM. SHAPIROSS,
Examiners.

Trustee's Sale

OF VALUABLE
REAL ESTATE.

By virtue of a decree of the Circuit Court
for Allegany county, sitting as a Court of Equity, the undersigned, Trustee, for and for sale, AT PUBLIC AUCTION, IN FRONT OF WILLIAM MOODY'S STORE,

On Wednesday, the 13th day of August, 1879,

AT 10 O'CLOCK, A. M.,

All that valuable real estate commonly called

Walnut Bottom,

containing about 700 acres of land, more or less, situate in Garrett county, about three miles from Bloomington, one mile from North Branch of the Potomac, and adjoining the lands of Messrs. Roman, Barnard and Swanwick heirs.

The improvements consist of

TWO LOG DWELLINGS,

Apple Orchard and about 120 acres in the state of cultivation; the residue, or unim-
proved land, is heavily covered with valuable
timber.

From surrounding indications the whole
tract is supposed to overlay large veins of
coal; the growing crops reserved from sale.
TERMS OF SALE, as prescribed by this decree are: One-third cash on day of sale or ratification thereof; the balance in two equal
payments in twelve and twenty-four months,
with interest from day of sale, to be secured
by note of the purchaser with approved security.

WM. BRACE,
Trustee.

LIVERY STABLE.

THOMAS MARTIN

at the old stand, opposite the Post Office, is prepared to furnish on short notice

WIGGIES,
CARRIAGES,
WAGONS and SADDLE HORSES,
On Reasonable Terms.

For Fishing, Hunting and Pic-Nic parties supplied with transportation from point departed.
a 21 4m.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Advertisements under this heading will be inserted at the following rates: For Monday
of the Legislature, Clerk of the Circuit Court and County Commissioners, $5.00, and for Register of Wills and Judges of the Orphans' Court $2.00 each. Advertisements to run till the meeting of the Nominating Convention. The space allowed will be six lines, or less, and 30 cents per line will be charged for each line in excess of that number. No name will be announced until the day is past.

FOR CLERK CIRCUIT COURT.

To the Republicans of Garrett County:
Resolving so many voluntary assurances from all parts of the county, to the effect that the people, and especially those having employed, do not desire a change in the Clerk of the Circuit Court, I have everywhere taken the opportunity to express the brought before the Convention. I, therefore, take this method of announcing to the public that I am a candidate for the office of Clerk of the Circuit Court for Garrett county, subject to the decision of the Republican county nominating convention.

If I am again nominated, I shall appreciate the honor and responsibility thereof. And if elected, shall perform the duties thereof with care and attention, to the best of my ability,
as in the best.

W. H. TOWER,
April 26.

SHERIFFALTY.

Ed. REPUBLICAN.—Please announce my name as a candidate for the Sheriffalty of Garrett county, subject to the decision of the Republican Nominating Convention.

Ed. REPUBLICAN.—Please announce my name as a candidate for the Sheriffalty of Garrett county, subject to the decision of the Republican Nominating Convention.

Ed. REPUBLICAN.—Please announce my
name as a candidate for the Sheriffalty of Garrett county, subject to the decision of the Republican Nominating Convention.

Ed. REPUBLICAN.—Please announce my
name as a candidate for the Sheriffalty of Garrett county, subject to the decision of the Republican Nominating Convention.

Ed. REPUBLICAN.—Please announce my
name as a candidate for the Sheriffalty of Garrett county, subject to the decision of the Republican Nominating Convention.

SURVEYOR.

Ed. REPUBLICAN.—Please announce my
name as a candidate for the office of County
Surveyor, subject to the decision of the Republican Nominating Convention.

Ed. REPUBLICAN.—Please announce my
name as a candidate for the office of County
Surveyor, subject to the decision of the Republican Nominating Convention.

Ed. REPUBLICAN.—Please announce my
name as a candidate for the office of County
Surveyor, subject to the decision of the Republican Nominating Convention.

Ed. REPUBLICAN.—Please announce my
name as a candidate for the office of County
Surveyor, subject to the decision of the Republican Nominating Convention.

Ed. REPUBLICAN.—Please announce my
name as a candidate for the office of County
Surveyor, subject to the decision of the Republican Nominating Convention.

Ed. REPUBLICAN.—Please announce my
name as a candidate for the office of County
Surveyor, subject to the decision of the Republican Nominating Convention.

Ed. REPUBLICAN.—Please announce my
name as a candidate for the office of County
Surveyor, subject to the decision of the Republican Nominating Convention.

Ed. REPUBLICAN.—Please announce my
name as a candidate for the office of County
Surveyor, subject to the decision of the Republican Nominating Convention.

Ed. REPUBLICAN.—Please announce my
name as a candidate for the office of County
Surveyor, subject to the decision of the Republican Nominating Convention.

Ed. REPUBLICAN.—Please announce my
name as a candidate for the office of County
Surveyor, subject to the decision of the Republican Nominating Convention.

Ed. REPUBLICAN.—Please announce my
name as a candidate for the office of County
Surveyor, subject to the decision of the Republican Nominating Convention.

Ed. REPUBLICAN.—Please announce my
name as a candidate for the office of County
Surveyor, subject to the decision of the Republican Nominating Convention.

Ed. REPUBLICAN.—Please announce my
name as a candidate for the office of County
Surveyor, subject to the decision of the Republican Nominating Convention.

Ed. REPUBLICAN.—Please announce my
name as a candidate for the office of County
Surveyor, subject to the decision of the Republican Nominating Convention.

Ed. REPUBLICAN.—Please announce my
name as a candidate for the office of County
Surveyor, subject to the decision of the Republican Nominating Convention.

Ed. REPUBLICAN.—Please announce my
name as a candidate for the office of County
Surveyor, subject to the decision of the Republican Nominating Convention.

Ed. REPUBLICAN.—Please announce my
name as a candidate for the office of County
Surveyor, subject to the decision of the Republican Nominating Convention.

Ed. REPUBLICAN.—Please announce my
name as a candidate for the office of County
Surveyor, subject to the decision of the Republican Nominating Convention.

Ed. REPUBLICAN.—Please announce my
name as a candidate for the office of County
Surveyor, subject to the decision of the Republican Nominating Convention.

Ed. REPUBLICAN.—Please announce my
name as a candidate for the office of County
Surveyor, subject to the decision of the Republican Nominating Convention.

Ed. REPUBLICAN.—Please announce my
name as a candidate for the office of County
Surveyor, subject to the decision of the Republican Nominating Convention.

Ed. REPUBLICAN.—Please announce my
name as a candidate for the office of County
Surveyor, subject to the decision of the Republican Nominating Convention.

Ed. REPUBLICAN.—Please announce my
name as a candidate for the office of County
Surveyor, subject to the decision of the Republican Nominating Convention.

Ed. REPUBLICAN.—Please announce my
name as a candidate for the office of County
Surveyor, subject to the decision of the Republican Nominating Convention.

Ed. REPUBLICAN.—Please announce my
name as a candidate for the office of County
Surveyor, subject to the decision of the Republican Nominating Convention.

Ed. REPUBLICAN.—Please announce my
name as a candidate for the office of County
Surveyor, subject to the decision of the Republican Nominating Convention.

Ed. REPUBLICAN.—Please announce my
name as a candidate for the office of County
Surveyor, subject to the decision of the Republican Nominating Convention.

Ed. REPUBLICAN.—Please announce my
name as a candidate for the office of County
Surveyor, subject to the decision of the Republican Nominating Convention.

Ed. REPUBLICAN.—Please announce my
name as a candidate for the office of County
Surveyor, subject to the decision of the Republican Nominating Convention.

Ed. REPUBLICAN.—Please announce my
name as a candidate for the office of County
Surveyor, subject to the decision of the Republican Nominating Convention.

Ed. REPUBLICAN.—Please announce my
name as a candidate for the office of County
Surveyor, subject to the decision of the Republican Nominating Convention.

Ed. REPUBLICAN.—Please announce my
name as a candidate for the office of County
Surveyor, subject to the decision of the Republican Nominating Convention.

Ed. REPUBLICAN.—Please announce my
name as a candidate for the office of County
Surveyor, subject to the decision of the Republican Nominating Convention.

Ed. REPUBLICAN.—Please announce my
name as a candidate for the office of County
Surveyor, subject to the decision of the Republican Nominating Convention.

Ed. REPUBLICAN.—Please announce my
name as a candidate for the office of County
Surveyor, subject to the decision of the Republican Nominating Convention.

Ed. REPUBLICAN.—Please announce my
name as a candidate for the office of County
Surveyor, subject to the decision of the Republican Nominating Convention.

Ed. REPUBLICAN.—Please announce my
name as a candidate for the office of County
Surveyor, subject to the decision of the Republican Nominating Convention.

Ed. REPUBLICAN.—Please announce my
name as a candidate for the office of County
Surveyor, subject to the decision of the Republican Nominating Convention.

Ed. REPUBLICAN.—Please announce my
name as a candidate for the office of County
Surveyor, subject to the decision of the Republican Nominating Convention.

Ed. REPUBLICAN.—Please announce my
name as a candidate for the office of County
Surveyor, subject to the decision of the Republican Nominating Convention.

Ed. REPUBLICAN.—Please announce my
name as a candidate for the office of County
Surveyor, subject to the decision of the Republican Nominating Convention.

Ed. REPUBLICAN.—Please announce my
name as a candidate for the office of County
Surveyor, subject to the decision of the Republican Nominating Convention.

Ed. REPUBLICAN.—Please announce my
name as a candidate for the office of County
Surveyor, subject to the decision of the Republican Nominating Convention.

Ed. REPUBLICAN.—Please announce my
name as a candidate for the office of County
Surveyor, subject to the decision of the Republican Nominating Convention.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

H. WHEELER COMBS,

REAL ESTATE AGENT,

OAKLAND, MD.

Will negotiate sales of real estate of every description.

No charge for advertising property placed in my hands.

H. WHEELER COMBS.

The following properties

have been placed in my hands

FOR SALE.

NO. 3.

One of the best little farms in Garrett county,
2 1/2 miles west of Oakland, the county seat. This farm contains 36 ACRES, 20 acres in cultivation, and all equipped with easy and profitable cultivation. Improved by a

New 2 Story House,

containing 8 rooms and good cellar. GOOD BARN and stable. There is a good young oakland of 20 acres. The whole farm is under cultivation and the soil is very rich. It has a good water supply and is well adapted for
a small farm at a very low price and on easy terms. Title perfect. Limestone and coal
within two miles.

MILTON LAWDERMILK.

Fichtner's Mill Property.

This property, containing 250 acres, situated on Muddy Creek, in Sang Run district, Garrett county, Md., will be sold at a very low price and upon the easiest of terms. It has a good water supply and is well adapted for
a small farm at a very low price and on easy
terms. Title perfect. Limestone and coal
within two miles.

FRAME HOUSE.

containing 7 rooms; good stable attached.
The whole and runs for a saw Mill are upon
the property, and will be sold with the property at a low price for ready cash than the land is assessed for.

This is an opportunity for a bargain seldom offered.

FOR SALE.

Lot 100x100, improved by an

Excellent Frame Dwelling House,

containing 7 rooms; with good cellar. This is one of the most pleasant homes in Oakland, and is situated in the best of the city. The buildings are all new and well constructed. There is an excellent well of water on the lot. For any one desiring a pleasant home an opportunity is hereby offered to secure it at a price less than that of the buildings. Terms—One-third down, balance in three equal annual payments.

Apply to

H. WHEELER COMBS,
Real Estate Agent, Oakland, Md.

PATENTS.

To Inventors and Manufacturers.

ESTABLISHED 1865.

GILMORE SMITH & CO.

Solicitors of Patents & Attorneys at Law.

American & Foreign Patents.

No fees in advance, nor until a Patent is allowed. No fees for making preliminary combinations.

Special attention given to Interference Cases before the Patent Office, Infringement Suits in the different States, and all litigation appertain-ing to Patents or Inventions.

Sent Stamp for Pamphlet of Staty Pages.

GILMORE & CO.,
620 F. Street, N. W.,
Washington, D. C.

SHATZER & AULT

have recently removed to their new

Furniture and

Undertaking Rooms,

MAIN STREET, OAKLAND,

Where they keep constantly on hand and manufacture to order anything in the line of

HOUSEHOLD FURNITURE

All of which is offered at the

LOWEST LIVING PRICES.

Give us a call, examine our Furniture and prices, whether you wish to purchase or not. We take pleasure in showing our work.

All kinds of COFFINS and CASKETS on hand or furnished to order on short notice.

126 6m SHATZER & AULT.

MEAT MARKET.

H. B. WOLFE,

Formerly of Cumberland, Md.,

Takes this mode of announcing to the citizens of Oakland and vicinity that he has permanently located in Oakland for the purpose of carrying on the

BUTCHERING BUSINESS

In a first-class manner.

FRESH BEEF, (salted), MUTTON, PORK, Bologna SAUSAGE, PORK SAU-SAGE, &c., at all times.

Shop near the Post Office.

Customers can get what they want without delay and at any hour of the day.

Your patronage is respectfully solicited.

H. B. WOLFE.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

A. C. BROOKE,

GENERAL UNDERTAKER

OAKLAND, MD.

Having a full line of

COFFINS, CASKETS & TRIMMINGS

always on hand, direct from the factory, I can furnish, at short notice,
anything in this line.

VERY LOW PRICES FOR 1879:

Very Small Coffins, $2.50
Children's Coffins, 4.50 to 8.00

Adult SIZES:

Plain flat lid Coffin, with Glass,
Rosewood Finish, 8.00 to 12.00
G. G. Top, Rosewood Finish, 10.00 to 14.00

CASKETS:

Black Walnut, Hinged and Locked, 12.00 to 16.00
Fancy Trimmed, 16.00 to 20.00
Other styles at corresponding low prices.
Hearse in all cases furnished in town, $2.00

I will not be Undersold.

All work guaranteed to give satisfaction, and prices as reasonable

as can be had anywhere.

All orders by mail promptly attended to a20y1

To $500 A YEAR, or $5 to $20 a day
in your own locality. No 47-
The Woman does well as men. Many men make more than the amount stated above. Any one can do the work. You can make from $100 to $200 an hour by devoting your evening and spare time to the business. It costs nothing to try the business. Selling like it for money making ever offered before.
Business pleasant and strictly honorable.
Reader, if you want to know all about the best paying business, before the public, send us your address and we will send you full particulars and private terms free; samples worth $5.00 and you can then make up your mind for yourself. Address: GEORGE W. STY-SON & CO., Portland, Maine.

B. & O. R. R. Time-Table.

The following time table of the

Baltimore and Ohio Railroad went into effect on the 18th of May:

GOING WEST

No. 2, 5.00 A. M.
No. 6, 9.30 A. M.
No. 8, 3.20 P. M.
No. 10, 4.45 P. M.
Way, 10.11 A. M.

GOING EAST

No. 1, 12.00 A. M.
No. 3, 9.11 P. M.
No. 5, 12.21 P. M.
No. 7, 3.20 P. M

THE REPUBLICAN.

VOLUME 3.

OAKLAND, MD., SATURDAY, AUGUST 2, 1879.

NUMBER 23.

OAKLAND BUSINESS GUIDE.

DRY GOODS, GROCERIES, &c.

D. E. OFFUTT,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Agricultural Machinery, Stationery, Toys, Pottery, &c.

G. W. LEGGE,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Cor. Second & Oak Sts.

D. H. LOAR,
ORIGINAL NEW YORK STORE,
General Merchandise, Watches, Clocks, Jewellery, &c.

L. W. STALNAKER,
Grocery and Provision Store,
Corner Third and Oak Streets.

L. BUSH & SON,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Cor. Third and Oak Sts.

J. A. GRANT,
Dry Goods, Notions & Groceries,
SPECIAL LINE OF TOBACCO.

DAVIS & TOWNSEND,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Agents Agricultural Machinery,
Opposite Ball's Park.

C. C. MICHAEL,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Notions, Clocks, Confectionery, &c.,
Next to Coddington's Hotel.

RICHARDSON BROS.,
GROCERIES, CONFECTIONERIES,
Canned Goods, Fruit, &c.

HOTELS.

CODDINGTON'S HOTEL,
W. M. CODDINGTON, Proprietor,
Main St., Opposite Johnson's Billiard Saloon.

LIVERY STABLE.

THOMAS MARTIN,
Opposite Postoffice.

STOVES AND TINWARE.

G. A. SHIRER,
Oak Street, near Second,
A general line of Stoves and Tinware.

PHYSICIANS.

DR. J. LEE MCCOMAS,
Office on Main Street.

DR. E. H. PARSONS,
Offers his professional services
to the people of Oakland and vicinity.
Office in the old O'Fallon building, 3rd St.

PLASTERER.

JAMES ARNOLD,
Residence on Fourth Street.

BOOT AND SHOE MAKER.

W. M. WAGNER,
Shop Cor. First & Oak Sts.

GEO. F. LUTHERIDGE,
Leave orders at Express office.

SURVEYORS.

J. B. BRANT,
Surveyor, Auctioneer and
Conveyancer,
Oakland, Garrett county, Md.

JOHN HARNED,
Address, Post Office.

JEWELER.

A. B. WOODCOCK,
In Wm. Smouse's Building,
Watches and Clocks Cleaned and Repaired.

MILLINERY AND FANCY GOODS.

MRS. M. E. DAVIS,
Cor. Oak & Second Sts.

M. L. SCOTT'S Baltimore Store,
Millinery, Gents' Furnishings,
And Fancy Goods, and Shoes,
Main Street, opposite Dr. McComas's.

DRUGS AND MEDICINES.

GEO. C. STURGEISS,
Drugs, Medicines,
Essences, Toilet Articles, Stationery,
Tobacco and Cigars.

G. W. MERRILL,
Near Depot,
Pure Drugs, Medicines, Toilet Goods, Stationery,
Cigars and Tobacco, French Candy,
Toys, Fishing Tackle, &c. Physicians' prescriptions accurately compounded.

PAINTING & PAPER HANGING.

E. J. FRINGER,
House and Sign Painter,
Leave orders at Bush's Store.

S. V. B. WARD,
HOUSE AND SIGN PAINTER,
Shop near Davis House.

BLACKSMITHS.

CHAS. SINCELL,
Liberty Street.

CONTRACTORS & BUILDERS.

JOHN M. JARBOE,
Carpenter, Contractor & Builder,
Residence on Liberty St., nearly opp. Depot.

P. A. CHISHOLM,
Carpenter, Contractor,
and Builder.

GEO. A. SPEDDEN,
Residence opp. School house.

JOSEPH M. CRIM,
Residence on Alder Street.

A. C. BROOKE,
Res. near Republican office.

CABINETMAKERS AND UNDERTAKERS.

A. C. BROOKE,
Res. adjoining Gazette office.

JOHN SHATLER,
Shop on Second Street.

MEDICAL.

H. T.

HELMBOLD'S

COMPOUND

Fluid Extract

BUCHU.

PHARMACEUTICAL

A SPECIFIC REMEDY FOR ALL

DISEASES

OF THE

BLADDER & KIDNEYS.

For Debility, Loss of Memory, Indigestion, Rheumatism, Dropsy, Shortness of Breath, Troubled with Thoughts of Disease, Impotence of Vision, Pain in the Back, Chest, and Head, Rash, Blood to the Head, Pale Countenance, and Dry Skin.

If these symptoms are allowed to go on, they frequently develop into Rheumatism, Dropsy, and Consumption.

It requires the aid of an invigorating medicine to strengthen and tone up the system.

"Helmhold's Buchu"
DOES IN EVERY CASE.

HELMBOLD'S BUCHU
IS UNEQUALED

By any remedy known. It is prescribed by the most eminent physicians all over the world.

Rheumatism,
Spermatorrhoea,
Neuralgia,
Nervousness,
Dyspepsia,
Indigestion,
Constipation,
Aches and Pains,

General Debility,
Kidney Diseases,
Liver Complaints,
Nervous Debility,
Epilepsy,
Head Troubles,
Paralysis,
General Ill Health,

Spinal Diseases,
Sciatica,
Deafness,
Dysuria,
Lambert's,
Catarrhs,
Nervous Complaints,
Female Complaints, &c.

Headache, Pain in the Shoulders, Neck, Back, Stomach, Emphysema, Indigestion, Pain in the Region of the Kidneys, and a thousand other painful symptoms, are the outpourings of Dyspepsia.

HELMBOLD'S BUCHU
Invigorates the Stomach.

And stimulates the torpid Liver, Bowels, and Kidneys to healthy action, increasing the blood of all impurities, and imparting new life and vigor to the whole system.

A single trial will be quite sufficient to convince the most hesitating of its valuable remedial qualities.

Price $1 Per Bottle,
Or Six Bottles for $5.

Delivered to any address free from observation.

"Patients" may consult by letter, receiving the same attention as by calling.

Competent Physicians attend to each complaint. All letters should be addressed to

H. T. HELMBOLD,
DRUGGIST AND CHEMIST,
Philadelphia, Pa.

CAUTION:
See that the private Proprietary Stamp is on each bottle.

SOLD EVERYWHERE.
any-to-lye.

INTERNATIONAL BIBLE LESSONS.

SUNDAY, AUG. 3, 1879.

THE MINISTRY OF RECONCILIATION.

GENERAL STATEMENT.

The Second Epistle to the Corinthians written during the autumn of A. D. 55, when the apostle Paul, who was then in Macedonia, probably at Thessalonica, on his third missionary journey. He learned from Titus that his letter had been accepted by most of the Church in a spirit of submission, and as a result harmony had been restored. But a small minority of Paul's adversaries were now more opposed to him than ever, openly defied his authority, and denied his apostleship. He therefore wrote this epistle with the double purpose of expressing his joy at the submission of the majority, and of convincing the obstinate few of the power of an apostle. As an evidence of his apostolic position, he incidentally names his many labors, and in the person of the apostle Paul, who had been the realization of Christ's love to man, and his sacrifice in his life, he inspires a conservation of their lives to his service. (v. 13, 14, 15) and a new creation of character in (v. 17), and sends regenerated men forth to the world as ambassadors of God, bearing news of salvation through the blood of the cross. (v. 18-21).

2 Cor. 5, 14-21.

For the love of Christ constraineth us; because we thus judge, that if one died for all, then were all dead;

15 And that he died for all, that they which live should not henceforth live unto themselves, but unto him which died for them, and rose again.

16 Wherefore henceforth know we no man after the flesh; yet, though we have known Christ after the flesh, yet now henceforth know we him no more.

17 Therefore, if any man be in Christ, he is a new creature: old things are passed away; behold, all things are become new.

18 And all things are of God, who hath reconciled us to himself by Jesus Christ, and hath given to us the ministry of reconciliation;

19 In whom, that God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself, not imputing their trespasses unto them; and hath committed unto us the word of reconciliation.

20 Now then, as ambassadors for Christ, we pray you in Christ's stead, be ye reconciled to God.

21 For he hath made him to be for us, who knew nothing of him, that he might be the righteousness of God in him.

HOME READINGS.
M. The ministry of reconciliation, 2 Cor. 5.
P. The love of Christ, John 19, 1-18.
T. The life of Christ, John 1, 1-21.
W. The labor of Christ, Gal. 1, 1-24.
T. The hope through Christ, 2 Tim. 2, 1-13.
S. Prayers for Christ, Rom. 1, 1-17.
S. Reconciled to God, 1 Cor. 1, 1, 13, 18.

GOLDEN TEXT.
We pray you in Christ's stead, be ye reconciled to God, 2 Cor. 5, 20.

LECTURE BY DR. G. H. HAYES.
Pastor, Liberty St. Church, Baltimore.
All our sins on these were laid;
By mighty love unnumbered;
Then had full atonement made,
All thy people are forgiven.

Through the virtue of my blood;
Opened is the gate of heaven;
Fence is made 'twixt man and God.

QUESTIONS ON THE LECTURE.
1. How does Christ show his love for us?
2. What is the highest proof of his love? John 15, 13. What power does his love exert over us? 2 John 1, 6. How can we receive our love to him? John 1, 12. For how many did Christ die? How, then, should all live? How is this stated in Rom. 11, 17? How may we live unto Christ? Cor. 5, 17.

2. THE MINISTRY OF RECONCILIATION, v. 18, 19, 20. What is it to know men "after the flesh"? (v. 16). To esteem them according to worldly opinions; here Paul knew Christ after the flesh. Acts 26, 9-11. How did Paul afterward know Christ? 1 Tim. 1, 12. What is it to be in Christ? What is said of such? What power does his love exert over us? 2 John 1, 6. How can we receive our love to him? John 1, 12. For how many did Christ die? How, then, should all live? How is this stated in Rom. 11, 17? How may we live unto Christ? Cor. 5, 17.

3. THE MINISTRY OF RECONCILIATION, v. 18, 19, 20. What is it to know men "after the flesh"? (v. 16). To esteem them according to worldly opinions; here Paul knew Christ after the flesh. Acts 26, 9-11. How did Paul afterward know Christ? 1 Tim. 1, 12. What is it to be in Christ? What is said of such? What power does his love exert over us? 2 John 1, 6. How can we receive our love to him? John 1, 12. For how many did Christ die? How, then, should all live? How is this stated in Rom. 11, 17? How may we live unto Christ? Cor. 5, 17.

4. THE MINISTRY OF RECONCILIATION, v. 18, 19, 20. What is it to know men "after the flesh"? (v. 16). To esteem them according to worldly opinions; here Paul knew Christ after the flesh. Acts 26, 9-11. How did Paul afterward know Christ? 1 Tim. 1, 12. What is it to be in Christ? What is said of such? What power does his love exert over us? 2 John 1, 6. How can we receive our love to him? John 1, 12. For how many did Christ die? How, then, should all live? How is this stated in Rom. 11, 17? How may we live unto Christ? Cor. 5, 17.

5. THE MINISTRY OF RECONCILIATION, v. 18, 19, 20. What is it to know men "after the flesh"? (v. 16). To esteem them according to worldly opinions; here Paul knew Christ after the flesh. Acts 26, 9-11. How did Paul afterward know Christ? 1 Tim. 1, 12. What is it to be in Christ? What is said of such? What power does his love exert over us? 2 John 1, 6. How can we receive our love to him? John 1, 12. For how many did Christ die? How, then, should all live? How is this stated in Rom. 11, 17? How may we live unto Christ? Cor. 5, 17.

TEACHINGS OF THE LESSON.
Where in this lesson do we learn—
1. The power of love to constrain? 2. The power of love to transform? 3. The power of love to plead?

WORDS WITH LITTLE FOLKS.
1. Think how much Christ loves you.
2. Show your love to him by your new life in him.
3. Try to win others to his service.

THEOLOGICAL SUGGESTIONS.—Man reconciled to God.
1. The motive of reconciliation between God and man was love, v. 14.
2. The motive of reconciliation was Christ Jesus, the mediator, between God and man, v. 14, 15.
3. The method of reconciliation was the death of Jesus Christ, v. 14, 15.
4. The results of reconciliation are, 1. A new conduct for Christ, v. 13; 2. A new conception of Christ, v. 14; 3. A new creation in Christ, v. 17.

4. The message of reconciliation given to the world by Christ, v. 18, 19.
5. The plan for reconciliation, presenting man to God by Christ, v. 21.

6. The purpose of reconciliation, that sinners should be made righteous, v. 21.

National Supremacy.

"For the first time," said a Democratic leader recently, "we have the Republican party on the defensive."

This misconception of the situation was remarkable. It seemed to him that the Democratic proposal to repeal the election laws, and to leave to each State exclusive responsibility of adequate laws for the protection of the ballot-box, would place the Republicans at a disadvantage in public opinion; would compel them to adopt and defend an obnoxious measure and an unpopular policy; and thus would turn the scale against them.

Yet his notion, closely examined, is found to rest upon the belief that the old theory of State rights and State supremacy is dearer to the hearts of the American people than all that they defended, upheld and established by years of war and immeasurable sacrifices of blood and treasure.

State rights, State supremacy, non-interference with the States—these have for a long time been notions held by a certain class of politicians. But the outbreak of the Civil War revealed the fact that these notions had no hold upon the people. The instant the torch of rebellion was lighted, the millions of free citizens all over this land leaped up to do battle for the National idea. This is as true of the Southern people as of the Northern; they fought also for a Nationality and not for a State. "I went with my State," was only the excuse of cowardly small politicians; the people of the South fought for nationality and independence, and to the end cared for the South as a unit, for its institutions, for its customs, its prejudices and its pride. To this day, the feeling that lingers is a keen regret that "the South" did not achieve a separate national existence. On the Northern side, the spirit was the same except that there was an unconquerable hostility to the alienation of any part of the National territory. Men volunteered and lent money, and endured disease and wounds and captivity, and faced death, not for a fragment called New York, or Ohio, or Massachusetts, but "the Union forever."

Do the blind politicians fancy that this was only a passing whim?

The centennial anniversaries have intensified this National spirit. It is marvelous that there are still politicians who do not see the proof of this fact in every celebration. Those who gather at Stony Point, and remember with pride the deeds of Anthony Wayne and his heroes, scarcely know or care whether the fort was taken in one State or another, or whether the men who captured it were from either State, or any State. They were soldiers of the young Nation, and won one of those victories which gave that Nation a being; that is all men care for. From the beginning the people were cemented into one nation by a common cause, and the petting of small local politicians was but the froth on the crest of the mighty wave of patriotic feeling.

So it is now, though Democrats are so slow to believe it. The Nation is mighty, and dear to the hearts of the people, and trusted without stint, while the States have become mere lines on a map, and divisions for the convenience of local administration. Not one man in a thousand forgets that the Nation is feared and honored throughout the world, while some of the States are merely despised, and others are unknown. Local dishonesty and repudiation, local folly or knavishness in legislation respecting the greatest undertakings or investments, contrasted with the fidelity and power of the Nation, have contributed not a little to bring the States into disrepute, and make the National idea welcome and dear to a people of vast commercial and industrial interests. Men feel and know that the prosperity and grandeur of the country are largely due to the steady, unswerving and unshaken direction of a compact and massive nationality.

In no other particular has State control become more remiss than in the protection and regulation of the right of suffrage. That the existence of our free institutions, and all their value depend upon the defence of that right against force and fraud men feel instinctively. That they are seen, in one State or another, almost every conceivable method of defeating the right of suffrage law or administration. Almost of late years every case of death from unknown causes is now pronounced a suicide, unless the evidences of foul play are too strong for even the most stupid and abandoned in some States, a majority of all the citizens have been for a long time deprived of the right by law; in other States the majority has been overpowered by mob violence, or driven from the polls by terror; and in this State and many others the will of the majority has been defeated by frauds of the most glaring sort, for which State law has inflicted no penalty on anybody.

Even when States have tried most earnestly to protect their citizens in the exercise of their rights, as in Louisiana, the result has often been the adoption of methods so arbitrary and so liable to abuse that they have done more harm than good.

Reflected all other difficulties is the radical and fatal objection that the State always lacks the physical power to enforce its laws against important resistance.

The little that the United States has done in this field has been well done. It has enfranchised a million of voters. It has prohibited any disfranchisement for race, color or previous servitude. It has provided, in the election laws, means by which the citizens of any locality can invoke for their protection in the right of suffrage all the power of the General Government. It is safe to predict that all changes in the future will be in the direction, not of restriction, but of enlargement of the right of suffrage. The people, whatever Democratic politicians may think, are really disgusted with the changeable, conflicting and vexatious regulations of the States. They are citizens, not of a State, but of the United States. In their dearest rights they want the steady, equal and powerful protection which the National Government alone can give. The chief defect of existing laws is that they only scratch the surface. More will be done, before ten years have passed, to insure a Government of the United States by the people of the United States, and not by legislative tricks, rifle-clubs, State boards, bands of repeaters or bribed electors.

—N. Y. Tribune.

Is it Best to Hang Murderers?
We do not say it is not. We cannot help being in doubt about it. It is an awful thing—at least it seems so to us—when you have a human being wholly in your power to put a rope around his neck and hang him up until he is dead.

Here is the case of Chastine Cox. If ever a man deserved hanging he deserves it. Yet, what is the worst feature of his crime? When he had a woman wholly in his power he treated her cruelly and destroyed her life.

But then he is powerless as a woman in the hands of the law, and while he is thus powerless the law takes him in hand and strangles him to death.

Good enough for him. Hanging is too good; he deserves something worse.

Such are the exclamations of unregenerate men. Clergymen generally go further, and some believe there is no offering more acceptable to the Almighty than the life of a homicide.

Cox presents himself to us as a most detestable and loathsome creature. If ever any one deserved to be hanged we think he deserves to be hanged.

But is it Christian to hang any one? This is a question which deeply concerns human souls—the soul of the condemned; the soul of the executioner; the souls of the people; all of which are immortal.

We are by no means sure that it is wrong to take the life of a murderer. We should have no hesitation at all about shooting down a man who was attempting to commit a murder. But the question arises whether it is right to cooly and deliberately put to death a man who has committed a murder, but who is now helpless and wholly in your power that seems to us somewhat akin to murder. Is it clearly right?

What a momentous query!—N. Y. Sun.

A Philadelphia contemporary thinks that "suspecters and ropes" ends tied to dead bodies, long undecomposed in the woods, are getting to be presumptive evidence against suicide." There can be no doubt that the suicide theory is often resorted to by bold detectives, whose skill is not equal to solving the mysteries of a crime. Almost every case of death from unknown causes is now pronounced a suicide, unless the evidences of foul play are too strong for even the most stupid and abandoned in some States, a Feeding Exhausted Soils.

Gen. J. W. Phelps sends us an interesting letter from Vermont, in which, after mentioning the well-known fact that the farms, especially in the Southern part of the State, are now much worn out and run down, as a rule, and some of them abandoned which once supported flourishing families, he urges generous applications of lime, and cites instances of its profitable use, particularly in Pennsylvania. He does not, however, (probably under the impression that its necessity is sufficiently well understood) insist strongly enough on the importance of applying stable manure just as liberally as the lime is used.

Worn-out land cannot be renovated by lime alone, any more than the supply of water from an exhausted spring can be restored by laying another conducting pipe; elements of fertility must be added to the soil just as the supply of water at the spring must be replenished. Time and again has it been pointed out in these columns that by putting lime on the soil it is only in rare cases that we add any needed plant-food; we add a substance which acts on other plant-food in such a manner as to make it more available to the crops to be raised. Our correspondent says use stable or other manure with the lime; if by "other manure" he means guano or phosphates, the advice is dangerous, for lime should not be applied with these fertilizers.

Therefore, if a young man should attempt to renovate a worn-out farm in the manner advised, he should gauge the quantity of land to be limed by the quantity of stable manure that he can get to start with; he should produce, so far as possible, forage crops at first, to be fed in his own barn, and increase his stock of stable or yard manure; when he has a little capital to spare he may perhaps profitably invest in some good superphosphate, to be used on a turnip field to make more fodder; he should, however, keep no more stock than he can feed well; poorly fed cattle make poor manure, as well as in other respects. He should not fail to experiment with the muck-beds on his farm; the use of muck of lime slaked with brine is strongly recommended by those who have tried it. Professor Johnson says that ten bushels of lime slaked with ten bushels of brine, or with water if salt is not cheap enough in the locality, may be used with a cord of muck, being intimately mixed with the latter as it is piled up. But it is better even than this, to compost the muck with stable manure.

CULTIVATED WHEAT.—Many of our farmers are anxious to learn the result of the Groff process of cultivating wheat, now since the harvest is past and some of the grain threshed and put on the market. There are many who are willing that others should do the experimenting, and if it turns out profitably they will try it themselves next time. Well, the return by the new process is most gratifying and we are able, through the kindness of Mr. T. F. Snyder, of New Franklin, to give the increase in figures. As has already been stated in these columns, Jacob C. Snyder, Esq., of New Franklin, last fall sowed several acres of wheat by "what is known as the Groff process, with a view to giving the matter a fair test, and the result of the yield has been satisfactory. When it was ripe for harvesting he carefully measured out one square rod of his same cultivated wheat, failed it out and the yield was thirteen and two-thirds bushels, or thirty-six and two-thirds bushels to the acre. A square rod of the uncultivated yielded but ten pounds—an average of only twenty-six and two-thirds to the acre—a clear increase of ten bushels in favor of the Groff plan, while the heavy of the new process was brighter, more solid and of a uniform size, a characteristic not noticeable in the uncultivated.

An increase of ten bushels to the acre, better prices and a probability of a higher grade of flour are matters of great importance to our farmers. Mr. Snyder feels satisfied that more wheat can be raised from a small area of our farms by the new process, than by growing the usual acreage by the old method, and his experiment seems to fully sustain this belief.

—Chamberburg Public Opinion.

Cotton has off his kingly crown. The reports for the last year show that wheat and other cereals of the great West have already mounted the commercial throne. We now export more breadstuffs than we do cotton and tobacco combined.

The Republican.

JAS. A. HAYDEN, Publisher.
OAKLAND, GARRETT CO., MD.

NO TIME LIKE THE OLD TIME.

There is no time like the old time, when you and I were young,
When the buds of April blossomed and birds of spring time sang;
The garden's brightest glories by summer sun are nursed;
But, O! the sweet, sweet violets, the flowers that opened first!

There is no place like the old place, where you and I were born,
And I were born,
Where we lifted up our eyelids on the splendors of the world,
From the milk-white breast that warmed us,
From the glowing arms that love,
Where the dear eyes glistened o'er us that will look on us no more.

There is no friend like the old friend, who has shared our joys and sorrows,
No greeting like his welcome, no homage like his praise,
Fancies the scented flower, with garlands of gold,
But friendship is the breathing rose, with sweets in every fold.

There is no love like the old, that we counted on our pride,
Though our fancies are falling, falling, and we're fading side by side,
There are blossoms around us with the colors of the dawn,
And we live in hope, and we are young.

There are no times like the old times—when they shall never be forgot,
There are no places like the old place—keep green the dear old spot,
There are no friends like the old friends—may Heaven grant them lives,
There are no loves like the old loves—God bless our loving wives.

—O. W. Holmes.

THE FIFTY-SIX.

Signers of the Declaration of Independence—An Immortal Band—Personal Sketches of the Patriotic—Their Occupations and Places of Birth.

Few bodies of men have equaled in sterling patriotism and true nobility of character the immortal signers of the Declaration of Independence. The promulgation of this document meant high treason to the King of England, but true loyalty to the brotherhood of man. Fifty-six patriots, at the risk of life, liberty and property, gave their names and sanction to that act which laid the foundation of the American Republic. Of these men, ten were natives of Massachusetts, nine of Virginia, five of Pennsylvania, five of Maryland, four of New Jersey, four of South Carolina, three of Connecticut, three of New York, two of Rhode Island, two of Delaware, one of New Hampshire, three of Ireland, two of England, two of Scotland and one of Wales, thus making a total of fifty-six. Josiah Bartlett, John Hancock, John Adams, Samuel Adams, Robert Treat Paine, Elbridge Gerry, Roger Sherman, William Williams, Benjamin Franklin and William Hooper were born in Massachusetts; George Wythe, Richard Henry Lee, Thomas Jefferson, Benjamin Harrison, Thomas Nelson, Jr., Francis Pickens, Lee, Carter Braxton, George Walton and Jno. Penn in Virginia; Francis Hopkinson, Benjamin Rush, John Morton, Geo. Clymer and Thomas McKean in Pennsylvania; George Washington, Chase, Elias Stone, William Paca and Charles Carroll in Maryland; Richard Stockton, John Hart, Abraham Clark and Joseph Hewes in New Jersey; Edward Rutledge, Thomas Heyward, Jr., and Arthur Middleton in South Carolina; Samuel Huntington, Oliver Wolcott and Lyman Hall in Connecticut; Philip Livingston, William Floyd and Lewis Morris in New York; Stephen Hopkinson in New Jersey; Stephen Bland in Virginia; George Ross and Cesar Rodney in Delaware; William Whipple in New Hampshire; Matthew Thornton, James Smith and George Taylor in Ireland; Robert Morris in England; John Witherspoon and James Wilson in Scotland, and Francis Lewis in Wales.

Twenty-four were lawyers, fourteen merchants, five retired gentlemen, four farmers, three physicians, two surveyors, one a minister, one an artist, one a writer, and one a printer. In signing the Declaration, nine represented the State of Pennsylvania; seven, Virginia; five, New Jersey; four, New York; four, Massachusetts; four, Connecticut; four, Maryland; four, South Carolina; three, New Hampshire; three, Rhode Island; three, Delaware; three, North Carolina; and three, Georgia.

Two of the signers of the Declaration, John Adams and Thomas Jefferson, subsequently became the second and third Presidents of the United States, and both Adams and Jefferson died on the fiftieth anniversary of the Declaration of Independence, July 4, 1826, within a few hours of each other. Although Great Britain had not dealt justly with her American subjects, it was not until the enactment of the Stamp Act in 1765, when even the most patriotic Colonists began to feel the oppression of a writer, and one a printer. In signing the Declaration, nine represented the State of Pennsylvania; seven, Virginia; five, New Jersey; four, New York; four, Massachusetts; four, Connecticut; four, Maryland; four, South Carolina; three, New Hampshire; three, Rhode Island; three, Delaware; three, North Carolina; and three, Georgia.

Two of the signers of the Declaration, John Adams and Thomas Jefferson, subsequently became the second and third Presidents of the United States, and both Adams and Jefferson died on the fiftieth anniversary of the Declaration of Independence, July 4, 1826, within a few hours of each other. Although Great Britain had not dealt justly with her American subjects, it was not until the enactment of the Stamp Act in 1765, when even the most patriotic Colonists began to feel the oppression of a writer, and one a printer. In signing the Declaration, nine represented the State of Pennsylvania; seven, Virginia; five, New Jersey; four, New York; four, Massachusetts; four, Connecticut; four, Maryland; four, South Carolina; three, New Hampshire; three, Rhode Island; three, Delaware; three, North Carolina; and three, Georgia.

John Franklin, Roger Sherman and Robert R. Livingston, was appointed to draft a Declaration of Independence. Thomas Jefferson was the author of the Declaration.

With the exception of a few verbal alterations made by Benjamin Franklin and John Adams, it was submitted to Congress June 28, 1776. The document was laid on the table, and did not come up for discussion until July 1st, when it was taken up in Committee of the Whole, and after several amendments were made, nine States voted for independence. The Assemblies of Maryland and Pennsylvania, representatives of the people having been called, majorities were obtained, and on the Fourth of July, votes from all the Colonies were procured in its favor, and the thirteen united Colonies were declared free and independent States.

On the Fourth of July John Hancock, President of Congress, and a man of wealth, signed the immortal document only, and with his signature—a bold, masculine handwriting—it was sent out to the civilized world. On August 2d the document was signed by fifty-five of the members of the Continental Congress. Matthew Thornton, an Irishman, signed the document on taking his seat in Congress in November.

Brooklyn has the honor of having contributed one to that noble body of men, viz., Philip Livingston, who was long a resident of the village of Brooklyn. The signing of the Declaration of Independence was on the part of each patriot a probable death-warrant. Yet the richest as well as the poorest did not shrink from the act but rather gloried in it. The scene is best described by the graceful historian of the Revolution, Dr. Benson J. Lossing (to whom the writer is indebted for his facts), as follows: "Congress was assembled in Independence Hall, at Philadelphia, when the Declaration was adopted, and connected with that event the following touching incident is related: On the morning of the day of its adoption the venerable bellman ascended to the steeple, and a little boy gave him notice when the vote should be concluded. The old man waited long at his post, saying, 'They will never do it, they will never do it.' Suddenly a shout came from the hall, and there stood the blue-eyed boy, clapping his hands and shouting, 'King, King!' Grasping the iron tongue of the bell, backward and forward he hurled it a hundred times, proclaiming 'Liberty to the land and the inhabitants thereof!'"

John Hancock, President of the Continental Congress, was the son of a minister, and on graduating at the age of twenty-two, entered his uncle's counting-room as a clerk. While in this position his industry and energy were so marked that he was sent on a very important business mission to England in 1760. He returned in 1762, and became a merchant at Portsmouth, N. H. He held many important offices during the revolution, and finally accepted the appointment as chief justice of the Supreme Court of New Hampshire. He died Oct. 8, 1793, aged fifty-five years.

William Whipple received a common school education, and at an early age went to sea. He left his seafaring pursuits when he was twenty-nine years old, and became a merchant at Portsmouth, N. H. He held many important offices during the revolution, and finally accepted the appointment as chief justice of the Supreme Court of New Hampshire. He died Oct. 8, 1793, aged fifty-five years.

Josiah Bartlett was of English descent and received his education from a clergyman relative. He chose the profession of medicine and became a celebrated practitioner. He was subsequently appointed Chief Justice of the Court of Common Pleas of New Hampshire, and held other offices of trust at various periods. He died May 19, 1795, aged sixty-six years.

Matthew Thornton was a physician of distinction, and later in life a Judge of the Supreme Court of New Hampshire. He was called to many positions of eminence by his countrymen, and died June 24, 1803, at the age of eighty-nine years.

John Adams was a descendant of John Alden, one of the Pilgrims who came to this country in the Mayflower. He graduated at Harvard University at the age of twenty, practiced law with great success, and after receiving honor upon honor from his fellow countrymen was made the second President of the United States. He died on July 4, 1826, at the age of ninety-two years.

Samuel Adams was of Pilgrim ancestry and the son of a wealthy merchant. He received his education at Harvard, from which institution he obtained a degree of A. B. when he was a mere boy of eighteen years. He embraced mercantile life, but soon relinquished it, and, after holding many high offices, became Governor of Massachusetts. He died October 3, 1803, in the eighty-second year of his age.

Robert Treat Paine was the son of a clergyman, and received his education at Harvard. He taught school, studied for the ministry, was chaplain in a military expedition, relinquished theology for the law, and was admitted to the bar. He was Attorney-General and Judge of the Supreme Court of Massachusetts, and died in 1814, aged eighty-four years.

Elbridge Gerry was the son of a wealthy merchant, and graduated at Harvard University. He entered mercantile life, and was soon called to higher honors. He became Governor of Massachusetts and Vice-President of the United States. He died November 23, 1814, aged seventy years.

Stephen Hopkins was a self-taught man, a farmer, a merchant, Chief Justice and Governor of the Colony of Rhode Island. He died July 19, 1785, aged seventy-eight years.

William Ellery received a collegiate education, practiced law, was Judge of the Supreme Court of Rhode Island, and died February 15, 1820, aged seventy-three years.

Roger Sherman was originally a shoemaker, but spending his leisure hours in reading and studying, eventually turning his attention to the law. He became an eminent advocate and a member of the House of Representatives of the United States. He died July 23, 1793, aged seventy-three years.

Samuel Huntington was the son of a farmer, and his early education was limited. He became Governor of Connecticut, and died Jan. 5, 1796, aged sixty-four years.

William Williams was the son of a minister, and studied theology, which he relinquished for mercantile pursuits. He held various high offices, and died August 2, 1811, at the age of eighty-one years.

Oliver Wolcott was a graduate of Yale College, a student of medicine, a Major-General in the army and Lieutenant-Governor of Connecticut. He received his education in England, and died at the age of ninety, on Dec. 30, 1803.

Lewis Morris inherited a large landed estate from his father, and received his education at Yale College. He became a Major-General in the American army, was driven from his home, and his lands despoiled without diminishing his patriotism, and died in January, 1798, aged seventy-two years.

Richard Stockton was the son of a wealthy New Jersey farmer, received a collegiate education, practiced law and held offices of note. He died Feb. 28, 1781, aged fifty-five years.

Philip Livingston received a collegiate education, was Alderman for nine consecutive years of the East Ward of the City of New York, and held other important offices. He died June 12, 1778, aged sixty-two years.

Francis Lewis was the son of an Episcopal clergyman, and was left an orphan at the early age of five years. He received his education in Scotland and England, followed mercantile pursuits, and died at the age of ninety, on Dec. 30, 1803.

Lewis Morris inherited a large landed estate from his father, and received his education at Yale College. He became a Major-General in the American army, was driven from his home, and his lands despoiled without diminishing his patriotism, and died in January, 1798, aged seventy-two years.

Richard Stockton was the son of a wealthy New Jersey farmer, received a collegiate education, practiced law and held offices of note. He died Feb. 28, 1781, aged fifty-five years.

Philip Livingston received a collegiate education, was Alderman for nine consecutive years of the East Ward of the City of New York, and held other important offices. He died June 12, 1778, aged sixty-two years.

Francis Lewis was the son of an Episcopal clergyman, and was left an orphan at the early age of five years. He received his education in Scotland and England, followed mercantile pursuits, and died at the age of ninety, on Dec. 30, 1803.

Lewis Morris inherited a large landed estate from his father, and received his education at Yale College. He became a Major-General in the American army, was driven from his home, and his lands despoiled without diminishing his patriotism, and died in January, 1798, aged seventy-two years.

Richard Stockton was the son of a wealthy New Jersey farmer, received a collegiate education, practiced law and held offices of note. He died Feb. 28, 1781, aged fifty-five years.

Philip Livingston received a collegiate education, was Alderman for nine consecutive years of the East Ward of the City of New York, and held other important offices. He died June 12, 1778, aged sixty-two years.

Francis Lewis was the son of an Episcopal clergyman, and was left an orphan at the early age of five years. He received his education in Scotland and England, followed mercantile pursuits, and died at the age of ninety, on Dec. 30, 1803.

Lewis Morris inherited a large landed estate from his father, and received his education at Yale College. He became a Major-General in the American army, was driven from his home, and his lands despoiled without diminishing his patriotism, and died in January, 1798, aged seventy-two years.

Richard Stockton was the son of a wealthy New Jersey farmer, received a collegiate education, practiced law and held offices of note. He died Feb. 28, 1781, aged fifty-five years.

Philip Livingston received a collegiate education, was Alderman for nine consecutive years of the East Ward of the City of New York, and held other important offices. He died June 12, 1778, aged sixty-two years.

Francis Lewis was the son of an Episcopal clergyman, and was left an orphan at the early age of five years. He received his education in Scotland and England, followed mercantile pursuits, and died at the age of ninety, on Dec. 30, 1803.

Lewis Morris inherited a large landed estate from his father, and received his education at Yale College. He became a Major-General in the American army, was driven from his home, and his lands despoiled without diminishing his patriotism, and died in January, 1798, aged seventy-two years.

Richard Stockton was the son of a wealthy New Jersey farmer, received a collegiate education, practiced law and held offices of note. He died Feb. 28, 1781, aged fifty-five years.

Philip Livingston received a collegiate education, was Alderman for nine consecutive years of the East Ward of the City of New York, and held other important offices. He died June 12, 1778, aged sixty-two years.

Francis Lewis was the son of an Episcopal clergyman, and was left an orphan at the early age of five years. He received his education in Scotland and England, followed mercantile pursuits, and died at the age of ninety, on Dec. 30, 1803.

Lewis Morris inherited a large landed estate from his father, and received his education at Yale College. He became a Major-General in the American army, was driven from his home, and his lands despoiled without diminishing his patriotism, and died in January, 1798, aged seventy-two years.

Richard Stockton was the son of a wealthy New Jersey farmer, received a collegiate education, practiced law and held offices of note. He died Feb. 28, 1781, aged fifty-five years.

Philip Livingston received a collegiate education, was Alderman for nine consecutive years of the East Ward of the City of New York, and held other important offices. He died June 12, 1778, aged sixty-two years.

Francis Lewis was the son of an Episcopal clergyman, and was left an orphan at the early age of five years. He received his education in Scotland and England, followed mercantile pursuits, and died at the age of ninety, on Dec. 30, 1803.

Lewis Morris inherited a large landed estate from his father, and received his education at Yale College. He became a Major-General in the American army, was driven from his home, and his lands despoiled without diminishing his patriotism, and died in January, 1798, aged seventy-two years.

Richard Stockton was the son of a wealthy New Jersey farmer, received a collegiate education, practiced law and held offices of note. He died Feb. 28, 1781, aged fifty-five years.

Philip Livingston received a collegiate education, was Alderman for nine consecutive years of the East Ward of the City of New York, and held other important offices. He died June 12, 1778, aged sixty-two years.

Francis Lewis was the son of an Episcopal clergyman, and was left an orphan at the early age of five years. He received his education in Scotland and England, followed mercantile pursuits, and died at the age of ninety, on Dec. 30, 1803.

Lewis Morris inherited a large landed estate from his father, and received his education at Yale College. He became a Major-General in the American army, was driven from his home, and his lands despoiled without diminishing his patriotism, and died in January, 1798, aged seventy-two years.

Richard Stockton was the son of a wealthy New Jersey farmer, received a collegiate education, practiced law and held offices of note. He died Feb. 28, 1781, aged fifty-five years.

Philip Livingston received a collegiate education, was Alderman for nine consecutive years of the East Ward of the City of New York, and held other important offices. He died June 12, 1778, aged sixty-two years.

Francis Lewis was the son of an Episcopal clergyman, and was left an orphan at the early age of five years. He received his education in Scotland and England, followed mercantile pursuits, and died at the age of ninety, on Dec. 30, 1803.

Lewis Morris inherited a large landed estate from his father, and received his education at Yale College. He became a Major-General in the American army, was driven from his home, and his lands despoiled without diminishing his patriotism, and died in January, 1798, aged seventy-two years.

Richard Stockton was the son of a wealthy New Jersey farmer, received a collegiate education, practiced law and held offices of note. He died Feb. 28, 1781, aged fifty-five years.

Philip Livingston received a collegiate education, was Alderman for nine consecutive years of the East Ward of the City of New York, and held other important offices. He died June 12, 1778, aged sixty-two years.

Francis Lewis was the son of an Episcopal clergyman, and was left an orphan at the early age of five years. He received his education in Scotland and England, followed mercantile pursuits, and died at the age of ninety, on Dec. 30, 1803.

Lewis Morris inherited a large landed estate from his father, and received his education at Yale College. He became a Major-General in the American army, was driven from his home, and his lands despoiled without diminishing his patriotism, and died in January, 1798, aged seventy-two years.

Richard Stockton was the son of a wealthy New Jersey farmer, received a collegiate education, practiced law and held offices of note. He died Feb. 28, 1781, aged fifty-five years.

Philip Livingston received a collegiate education, was Alderman for nine consecutive years of the East Ward of the City of New York, and held other important offices. He died June 12, 1778, aged sixty-two years.

Francis Lewis was the son of an Episcopal clergyman, and was left an orphan at the early age of five years. He received his education in Scotland and England, followed mercantile pursuits, and died at the age of ninety, on Dec. 30, 1803.

Lewis Morris inherited a large landed estate from his father, and received his education at Yale College. He became a Major-General in the American army, was driven from his home, and his lands despoiled without diminishing his patriotism, and died in January, 1798, aged seventy-two years.

Richard Stockton was the son of a wealthy New Jersey farmer, received a collegiate education, practiced law and held offices of note. He died Feb. 28, 1781, aged fifty-five years.

Philip Livingston received a collegiate education, was Alderman for nine consecutive years of the East Ward of the City of New York, and held other important offices. He died June 12, 1778, aged sixty-two years.

Francis Lewis was the son of an Episcopal clergyman, and was left an orphan at the early age of five years. He received his education in Scotland and England, followed mercantile pursuits, and died at the age of ninety, on Dec. 30, 1803.

Lewis Morris inherited a large landed estate from his father, and received his education at Yale College. He became a Major-General in the American army, was driven from his home, and his lands despoiled without diminishing his patriotism, and died in January, 1798, aged seventy-two years.

Richard Stockton was the son of a wealthy New Jersey farmer, received a collegiate education, practiced law and held offices of note. He died Feb. 28, 1781, aged fifty-five years.

Philip Livingston received a collegiate education, was Alderman for nine consecutive years of the East Ward of the City of New York, and held other important offices. He died June 12, 1778, aged sixty-two years.

Francis Lewis was the son of an Episcopal clergyman, and was left an orphan at the early age of five years. He received his education in Scotland and England, followed mercantile pursuits, and died at the age of ninety, on Dec. 30, 1803.

Lewis Morris inherited a large landed estate from his father, and received his education at Yale College. He became a Major-General in the American army, was driven from his home, and his lands despoiled without diminishing his patriotism, and died in January, 1798, aged seventy-two years.

Richard Stockton was the son of a wealthy New Jersey farmer, received a collegiate education, practiced law and held offices of note. He died Feb. 28, 1781, aged fifty-five years.

Philip Livingston received a collegiate education, was Alderman for nine consecutive years of the East Ward of the City of New York, and held other important offices. He died June 12, 1778, aged sixty-two years.

Francis Lewis was the son of an Episcopal clergyman, and was left an orphan at the early age of five years. He received his education in Scotland and England, followed mercantile pursuits, and died at the age of ninety, on Dec. 30, 1803.

Lewis Morris inherited a large landed estate from his father, and received his education at Yale College. He became a Major-General in the American army, was driven from his home, and his lands despoiled without diminishing his patriotism, and died in January, 1798, aged seventy-two years.

Richard Stockton was the son of a wealthy New Jersey farmer, received a collegiate education, practiced law and held offices of note. He died Feb. 28, 1781, aged fifty-five years.

Philip Livingston received a collegiate education, was Alderman for nine consecutive years of the East Ward of the City of New York, and held other important offices. He died June 12, 1778, aged sixty-two years.

Francis Lewis was the son of an Episcopal clergyman, and was left an orphan at the early age of five years. He received his education in Scotland and England, followed mercantile pursuits, and died at the age of ninety, on Dec. 30, 1803.

Lewis Morris inherited a large landed estate from his father, and received his education at Yale College. He became a Major-General in the American army, was driven from his home, and his lands despoiled without diminishing his patriotism, and died in January, 1798, aged seventy-two years.

Richard Stockton was the son of a wealthy New Jersey farmer, received a collegiate education, practiced law and held offices of note. He died Feb. 28, 1781, aged fifty-five years.

Philip Livingston received a collegiate education, was Alderman for nine consecutive years of the East Ward of the City of New York, and held other important offices. He died June 12, 1778, aged sixty-two years.

Francis Lewis was the son of an Episcopal clergyman, and was left an orphan at the early age of five years. He received his education in Scotland and England, followed mercantile pursuits, and died at the age of ninety, on Dec. 30, 1803.

Lewis Morris inherited a large landed estate from his father, and received his education at Yale College. He became a Major-General in the American army, was driven from his home, and his lands despoiled without diminishing his patriotism, and died in January, 1798, aged seventy-two years.

Richard Stockton was the son of a wealthy New Jersey farmer, received a collegiate education, practiced law and held offices of note. He died Feb. 28, 1781, aged fifty-five years.

Philip Livingston received a collegiate education, was Alderman for nine consecutive years of the East Ward of the City of New York, and held other important offices. He died June 12, 1778, aged sixty-two years.

Francis Lewis was the son of an Episcopal clergyman, and was left an orphan at the early age of five years. He received his education in Scotland and England, followed mercantile pursuits, and died at the age of ninety, on Dec. 30, 1803.

Lewis Morris inherited a large landed estate from his father, and received his education at Yale College. He became a Major-General in the American army, was driven from his home, and his lands despoiled without diminishing his patriotism, and died in January, 1798, aged seventy-two years.

Richard Stockton was the son of a wealthy New Jersey farmer, received a collegiate education, practiced law and held offices of note. He died Feb. 28, 1781, aged fifty-five years.

Philip Livingston received a collegiate education, was Alderman for nine consecutive years of the East Ward of the City of New York, and held other important offices. He died June 12, 1778, aged sixty-two years.

Francis Lewis was the son of an Episcopal clergyman, and was left an orphan at the early age of five years. He received his education in Scotland and England, followed mercantile pursuits, and died at the age of ninety, on Dec. 30, 1803.

Lewis Morris inherited a large landed estate from his father, and received his education at Yale College. He became a Major-General in the American army, was driven from his home, and his lands despoiled without diminishing his patriotism, and died in January, 1798, aged seventy-two years.

Richard Stockton was the son of a wealthy New Jersey farmer, received a collegiate education, practiced law and held offices of note. He died Feb. 28, 1781, aged fifty-five years.

Philip Livingston received a collegiate education, was Alderman for nine consecutive years of the East Ward of the City of New York, and held other important offices. He died June 12, 1778, aged sixty-two years.

Francis Lewis was the son of an Episcopal clergyman, and was left an orphan at the early age of five years. He received his education in Scotland and England, followed mercantile pursuits, and died at the age of ninety, on Dec. 30, 1803.

Lewis Morris inherited a large landed estate from his father, and received his education at Yale College. He became a Major-General in the American army, was driven from his home, and his lands despoiled without diminishing his patriotism, and died in January, 1798, aged seventy-two years.

Richard Stockton was the son of a wealthy New Jersey farmer, received a collegiate education, practiced law and held offices of note. He died Feb. 28, 1781, aged fifty-five years.

Philip Livingston received a collegiate education, was Alderman for nine consecutive years of the East Ward of the City of New York, and held other important offices. He died June 12, 1778, aged sixty-two years.

Francis Lewis was the son of an Episcopal clergyman, and was left an orphan at the early age of five years. He received his education in Scotland and England, followed mercantile pursuits, and died at the age of ninety, on Dec. 30, 1803.

Lewis Morris inherited a large landed estate from his father, and received his education at Yale College. He became a Major-General in the American army, was driven from his home, and his lands despoiled without diminishing his patriotism, and died in January, 1798, aged seventy-two years.

Richard Stockton was the son of a wealthy New Jersey farmer, received a collegiate education, practiced law and held offices of note. He died Feb. 28, 1781, aged fifty-five years.

Philip Livingston received a collegiate education, was Alderman for nine consecutive years of the East Ward of the City of New York, and held other important offices. He died June 12, 1778, aged sixty-two years.

Francis Lewis was the son of an Episcopal clergyman, and was left an orphan at the early age of five years. He received his education in Scotland and England, followed mercantile pursuits, and died at the age of ninety, on Dec. 30, 1803.

Lewis Morris inherited a large landed estate from his father, and received his education at Yale College. He became a Major-General in the American army, was driven from his home, and his lands despoiled without diminishing his patriotism, and died in January, 1798, aged seventy-two years.

Richard Stockton was the son of a wealthy New Jersey farmer, received a collegiate education, practiced law and held offices of note. He died Feb. 28, 1781, aged fifty-five years.

Philip Livingston received a collegiate education, was Alderman for nine consecutive years of the East Ward of the City of New York, and held other important offices. He died June 12, 1778, aged sixty-two years.

Francis Lewis was the son of an Episcopal clergyman, and was left an orphan at the early age of five years. He received his education in Scotland and England, followed mercantile pursuits, and died at the age of ninety, on Dec. 30, 1803.

Lewis Morris inherited a large landed estate from his father, and received his education at Yale College. He became a Major-General in the American army, was driven from his home, and his lands despoiled without diminishing his patriotism, and died in January, 1798, aged seventy-two years.

Richard Stockton was the son of a wealthy New Jersey farmer, received a collegiate education, practiced law and held offices of note. He died Feb. 28, 1781, aged fifty-five years.

Philip Livingston received a collegiate education, was Alderman for nine consecutive years of the East Ward of the City of New York, and held other important offices. He died June 12, 1778, aged sixty-two years.

Francis Lewis was the son of an Episcopal clergyman, and was left an orphan at the early age of five years. He received his education in Scotland and England, followed mercantile pursuits, and died at the age of ninety, on Dec. 30, 1803.

Lewis Morris inherited a large landed estate from his father, and received his education at Yale College. He became a Major-General in the American army, was driven from his home, and his lands despoiled without diminishing his patriotism, and died in January, 1798, aged seventy-two years.

Richard Stockton was the son of a wealthy New Jersey farmer, received a collegiate education, practiced law and held offices of note. He died Feb. 28, 1781, aged fifty-five years.

Philip Livingston received a collegiate education, was Alderman for nine consecutive years of the East Ward of the City of New York, and held other important offices. He died June 12, 1778, aged sixty-two years.

Francis Lewis was the son of an Episcopal clergyman, and was left an orphan at the early age of five years. He received his education in Scotland and England, followed mercantile pursuits, and died at the age of ninety, on Dec. 30, 1803.

Lewis Morris inherited a large landed estate from his father, and received his education at Yale College. He became a Major-General in the American army, was driven from his home, and his lands despoiled without diminishing his patriotism, and died in January, 1798, aged seventy-two years.

Richard Stockton was the son of a wealthy New Jersey farmer, received a collegiate education, practiced law and held offices of note. He died Feb. 28, 1781, aged fifty-five years.

Philip Livingston received a collegiate education, was Alderman for nine consecutive years of the East Ward of the City of New York, and held other important offices. He died June 12, 1778, aged sixty-two years.

Francis Lewis was the son of an Episcopal clergyman, and was left an orphan at the early age of five years. He received his education in Scotland and England, followed mercantile pursuits, and died at the age of ninety, on Dec. 30, 1803.

Lewis Morris inherited a large landed estate from his father, and received his education at Yale College. He became a Major-General in the American army, was driven from his home, and his lands despoiled without diminishing his patriotism, and died in January, 1798, aged seventy-two years.

Richard Stockton was the son of a wealthy New Jersey farmer, received a collegiate education, practiced law and held offices of note. He died Feb. 28, 1781, aged fifty-five years.

Philip Livingston received a collegiate education, was Alderman for nine consecutive years of the East Ward of the City of New York, and held other important offices. He died June 12, 1778, aged sixty-two years.

THE REPUBLICAN.

OAKLAND, MARYLAND.

JAS. A. HAYDEN,
Editor and Proprietor.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.
One copy, one year, $1.50
Six months, $1.00
Three months, $0.50
INvariably in advance.

TERMS OF ADVERTISING.
First insertion, $1 per square of 10 lines
50 cents per square for each additional insertion. Special contracts for advertising longer
than three months.

Correspondents must enclose full name and
address, not necessarily for publication, but
as a private guarantee of good faith. Rejected
communications will not be returned.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 2, 1879.

The Republican for the Campaign.
We will send THE REPUBLICAN
to any address in the country from now until the November election, for 25 cents, invariably in advance.

While grudgingly yielding the honor of specie resumption to Mr.
Sherman, the Boston Post says that he has only "restored the credit of the government to the point where the Democrats left it nineteen years ago." As the Buchanan administration had to pay 8 per cent. for a loan of a few millions of dollars, it looks as if the Post had gone somewhat astray in its fact.

The South is improving some. It has contracted the habit of sentence-ing murderers, and we just learn, in addition, that two distinguished gentlemen of Mississippi jumped over into Alabama on Thursday to exchange shots on a question of honor. Shots were fired, no blood drawn and this adjusted the difficult case. A few more strides of this kind, and before long it will be possible to go right up to a Southern gentleman's honor and put your hand on it, like the stuffed moustrosities in a museum.

The yellow fever seems to be slackening at Memphis pretty much as a few slackens for want of fuel. The white population has been reduced to its lowest volume and the negroes
have thus far escaped almost entirely.
It would seem also that the type is less malignant than that of last year and the hospital facilities for treating those who suffer with the disease are better. The number of deaths in proportion to the total number of cases is less than the epidemic of last year. At New Orleans something of a panic prevails and thousands of citizens are leaving their homes. Several new cases of fever were reported Tuesday.

Information received at the Internal Revenue Bureau shows that one of the immediate results of the Democratic legislation of the last session is that illicit distilleries in the dangerous districts are rapidly increasing through a lack of money with which to suppress them. The "moonshine" trade last year was greatly restricted by the vigilance of the Internal Revenue officers, and owing to the great losses from seizures and destruction of property,
it was found to be more profitable to establish licensed distilleries. The
"moonshine" or illicit business,
however, since it was discovered that there is no appropriation for deputy marshals, has again begun. In the State of North Carolina, out of seventeen licensed distilleries there are now only five remaining, and it is expected that these will soon suspend. It is reported that illicit whiskey can be purchased at eighty cents a gallon, and that the makers of it cannot be molested. There is, of course, no object under such a condition of affairs to invest in tax paid whiskey.

The following paragraph is from a special dispatch to the Baltimore
American, from Cumberland, dated July 27th:

The Republicans seem well satisfied with the result of the Democratic primaries, and are confident that the Democratic party in this county are too much demoralized to be successful in electing any of their candidates for the county offices, or on the legislative ticket. The McDaniel party are very sure over the result, and they say that Western Maryland will probably send a delegation to Annapolis who will be in opposition to the friends of Mr. Hamilton. The Democratic party cannot possibly be united this fall. There are too many disturbing elements in the party that cannot be healed, and the Republicans will certainly take advantage of it in selecting strong candidates, who will probably be elected. This is the impression at present of a large number of voters (Democratic), who were anxious that Messrs. Hamilton and Gorman should do something to heal
the dissensions in the party, so that success would follow. "Stop quarrelling," said Mr. Hamilton lately at the Queen City Hotel, "and you will elect your ticket." But Mr.
Hamilton's advice was not followed,
as the two wings of the party fought each other as desperately as if they had been fighting the Republican party.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

Special Correspondence to The Republican.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 29, 1879

The series of speeches made by Secretary Sherman in Maine have struck a chord which a public man seldom succeeds in making. He has combined in them the dry and unattractive arrangement of figures which are usually so repulsive as to keep audiences very small, with the elegant and attractive periods of a finished orator. He has varied the hard facts of a successful financial policy, by enthusiastic allusions to the more important issue, that of maintaining the national government in all its integrity against the Confederate usurpers.
It is unfortunate, as Secretary Sherman showed, that in a matter not necessarily partisan in any respect,
the truth of history requires the arraignment of the Democrats as the insidious opponents of the remedial measures made necessary by the distrust and embarrassment of the country. Not satisfied with withholding support from the measure leading to resumption, they resisted it at every stage, and almost at the last moment attempted abrogation. In spite of their professed desire for resumption the Secretary shows that every one of them in Congress in 1875 voted against the Resumption act. From that time their efforts were directed to the prevention of resumption.
They derided it as unattainable; they denounced it as the cause of misfortunes with which it had no conceivable connection. At St. Louis, while pretending to be for resumption, they demanded the repeal of the act under which it was afterwards accomplished.
All their predictions then and afterward, pointed to the failure of the policy which under Mr. Sherman's administration became a brilliant success. From January, 1875, when the act was passed, to January, 1879, when its object was accomplished, the issue was one which the country ought not to forget. It was an issue between the Democrats, as the opponents of resumption, and the Republicans as its steadfast promoters, between dishonesty and honesty, the first struggling to impair the national credit and the last to uphold it. And the record is just as clearly against the Democrats in other respects.
Their whole line has been to humiliate the national government, and to promote the lost cause. Sec. Sherman has done a good deal to expose the fallacy and the humbuggery of the rebel usurpers, and put the party
under lasting obligations.

The national Greenbackers show their animus in assailing the proposed convention of the Bankers' Association in Saratoga next month, and their abuse of the financiers will have no weight. The fact is, that the meeting will be composed of men who know more about financial management and business in general than the communists ever dreamed, men whose honesty is unquestioned, and whose ability has evinced itself on many occasions. The subjects they will discuss may not be agreeable to the Greenbackers, because they relate to public honesty, and will develop new means of keeping up the national credit and improving the general prosperity. The Greenback element begin to see that their time is not when things are upon the improving order, and people are growing more and more content with their situation. The Saratoga meeting will discuss many subjects calculated to interest those who are hopeful of the future.

Appropriately accompanying this subject is the report of the Bureau of Statistics, just out, giving the imports
and exports for the last fiscal year.
The total foreign trade of the country, imports and exports, including coin and bullion, last year reached $1,156,230,894, which was an increase over the preceding year of $21,213,- 651. In round numbers this increase was made up of $15,500,000 in exports and $8,800,000 in imports. The exports exceeded the imports by $255,- 000,000, or about $7,000,000 more than last year.

LOGAN.

THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC.—The Baltimore Prevalence touches upon the liquor question and says: "A church member and liquor dealer cannot
now be one and the same person;
the jug is banished, not only from the counter, but the homes of thousands of industrious shop-keepers. To many it would be an unprofitable business, if they still continued to follow the old custom, for a demijohn
or larger beer sign adorning the window or outer walls of a mercantile establishment would not now be a magnet to draw good, responsible custom. Now, public sentiment regards rum-drinking and rum-selling
as opposed to man's vital interests for time and eternity. What is true there of the temperance cause is more or less true everywhere; and rediging these facts, temperance workers
all over our land can take courage and press forward."

Secretary Sherman at Lewiston.

LEWISTON, ME., July 21.—This evening Secretary Sherman addressed an audience of 3,000 people from all parts of Androscoggin county, C.
J. Baker presided. It was one of the largest meetings ever held here,
hundreds being turned away. Mr.
Sherman said:

When I came to Maine some doubt was expressed as to how the people would vote this fall. All my fears have been dissipated by the magnificent assemblies I have met since my arrival in the state. On arriving in Portland I found a Democratic paper, said to be the most influential Democratic paper in Maine, and it propounded to me a great variety of questions. It looked to me like a set of interrogatories propounded by some clever lawyer to bother a witness. I looked over these questions to find what it was the people of Maine desired me to talk to them about. Judge my amazement to find twelve of these questions related to a dispute that had occurred in Congress during the last ten years as to whether the bonds of the United States should be printed by a private bank note company or bureau of printing. This barren topic proposed to me Mr. Fyfe could have told you all about any day, without importing me from Ohio to do it. The balance of the questions 16 in number, related to what is called the Glover Committee, a committee appointed by a Democratic House to explore the Treasury Department to see if anybody had stolen any money.
He (Mr. Glover) came to the Treasury Department, and every facility was given him to examine all the recesses of that great department.
He was allowed experts to aid him
in that work, and after it was all over he did not find that anybody had taken any money belonging to the United States. The Democratic House decided that this report was not worth the cost of printing. Every man knows that on the 30th of June, 1865, the interest bearing debt of this country was $2,341,330,000, but now it is $1,797,000,000. As early as 1867
the whole of this debt was converted into coin bonds bearing the great mass of it, six per cent. interest.
Myself and a few Republicans tried to reduce this rate of interest and we were defeated, every Democrat
voting to issue six per cents instead of five per cent. bonds.

There is scarcely any division of opinion on this question of the unlimited coinage of gold and silver if you will make the silver dollar equal in value to the gold dollar. The Republicans are in favor of the issue of silver dollars, but we want to make them equal in value to the gold dollar. Free coinage of silver at the ratio of 16 to 1 means the single standard of silver. What we object to is the coinage of a silver dollar which is worth only 85 cents and which thus will demote gold and leave us
only silver as the basis of our coinage. It was the Republican party and the resumption act itself that provided for the coinage of silver, introduced it into current use in place
of the fractional currency, and it stands ready now to coin it without limit at its market ratio to gold,
while the Greenback element wishes to coin a silver dollar worth only on the average 80 cents, and with a view to cheaper money to impair contracts
and to banish gold.

Our Ohio Greenbackers are of a little different stripe from your Maine Greenbackers. They go the whole hog. Your people are cautious, careful and much more prudent than our Western people, when they go all at once. They want the general government to conduct all its operations with fiat money made full legal tender, and simply enough to meet the business demands of the country—in all about $2,000,000,000. In short they purpose to strike at the foundation of all values by the issue of irredeemable paper money. When the Greenbackers of Ohio and Maine and Southern Greenbackers come into convention together, they will make a beautiful platform for the Democracy of Maine. My Democratic friends, if any honor me with their presence, I ask you, members of the old Democratic party, which, if it was anything, was always a hard-money party, an honest debt-paying party, if you will follow after such blind gods as these to get into power,
why not leave such a camp and join
—all, the Republican party that has done so well.

There are battles of the future
which affect your peace and honor more than all the money question that I could discuss. There is the safety and supremacy of the national government, which is again called into dispute by the very men who managed the war against us four years; for doctrines which preceded the civil war; the very doctrine of state's rights which led to war and caused the loss of blood and treasure
to an extent for which there is no parallel. They are again coming up for discussion and decision. You cannot avoid them. An honest Greenbacker to-day told me that while he had some doubts on the Greenback question he had become alarmed at the danger of the Southern question.

I tell you it is upon us. The solid South is made solid by terror and violence. I cannot describe or depict the condition of the four or five millions of human beings we emancipated, who are now held in such terror and violence that they are practically deprived of the elective franchise. All that the solid South wants is a few people in the North,
on any kind of an issue, to act with them, and then through the caucus
they can rule and govern this country
as they tried to through a civil war.
The important question of the future
is the question of Southern domina-
tion.

The following preamble and resolutions were adopted at a meeting of the Temperance Alliance of Frederick county, held in Frederick city,
Saturday July 26th 1879:

WHEREAS, The time is near at hand
when the voting population of the State of Maryland will be called upon to exercise the right of Suffrage in selecting proper representatives to the House of Delegates and Senate of said State, whose duty it will be to legislate for the greatest good to the greatest number; and whereas there is perhaps no greater or more important subject agitating the public mind
at present than that of "local option;" and whereas this measure has been repeatedly pressed upon the attention of several of the late sessions of the Legislature of our State without effect, so far as the interest of Frederick county is concerned; being fully convinced that the "immorality
of a people can never be permanently maintained above the morality of its law;" and that bad laws ultimately paralyze opposing moral efforts; and that license laws whenever continuously maintained, more than offset all educational and moral efforts against the sale and use of intoxicating drinks; and whereas the issue against the drink traffic involves the welfare of the State infinitely more than any other, and that issue is inevitable; and whereas we believe that the people in the several counties of this State exist, and who have the opportunity of observing and judging of its effects upon the morals, health, happiness and pres-perity of the same, and who have to bear the enormous burden of taxation
and other evils inflicted thereby,
ought to have the right to determine
by ballot whether this license enormity shall longer exist therein;
therefore

Resolved, That it is the sense of this convention, unequivocally expressed, that no friend of the temperance cause, should vote for any man for the Legislature of the State at the coming election, who will not publicly pledge himself to give, if elected, his influence, efforts, and vote in favor of a law submitting to the voters of the county and State
the question of "License or no License."

Resolved, That we pledge ourselves
to select, if necessary, from both political parties, candidates sufficient to make a complete ticket from the two parties who will pledge themselves
to local option.

Resolved, That so far as this convention is concerned, the end in view is securing of local option, not the organization of a political party.

Resolved, That the President and Secretary be authorized to address
letters to the candidates of the several parties requesting their views on the subject of submitting the question of local option to the people.

Congressman Conger, the Michigan
member who stirred up the Democratic menagerie so frequently at the last session, hopes Tilden will be the Democratic candidate next year, because he considers him the easiest man to beat that the party has. Bayard is a strong and good man, he says, but has no more hope of the nomination than Hendricks, which is no hope at all. On the Republican side, he doesn't think Grant wishes
the nomination, and he is sure the people of the United States are not in favor of a third term. Blaine will be a formidable candidate, but will labor under the disadvantage of a previous defeat. "We are going to put up a good man," says Mr. Conger at the close of his observations which were addressed to a reporter of the Cincinnati Enquirer, "you may depend on that. We are going to elect him, too, and when we do that we are going to inaugurate him. Of course the shot gun policy will prevail in the South, but the North is more solid than ever, and we will find our winning votes there. We will elect a Republican without any difficulty."

Carter Harrison was noted for phenomenal stupidity when he was a member of Congress, and he has not improved since he became Mayor of Chicago. He set on foot the movement for driving the gamblers,
thieves, burglars and other professional criminals out of the city, and the Democratic party leaders now confront him with the question as to "How under the canopy we are going to keep our majority?"

One-third of the voting population
in Kentucky cannot read the ticket—
they vote, and 150,000 children in the State are growing up in ignorance of the more elements of the English language.—Exchange.

The Kind of Men Fit for Office.

The Republican State Conventions
of Pennsylvania for 1875 and 1876
demanded that they should put "honest men in office—men with brains enough to know dishonesty when they see it, and courage enough to fight it wherever they find it." These words describe perfectly the kind of men that are fit for office, who will perform all duties entrusted to them faithfully and with an eye single to the public benefit, who will never use official station to accomplish their own selfish ends, and will always command the respect of friend and
foe. Let them influence the delegates to our nominating conventions,
and the nominations there made will be such as shall command the hearty support of the voters. Honesty and capacity conjoined with genuine moral courage form a combination that will bear satisfactory fruit wherever their possessor is placed.—Frederick Examiner.

TELEGRAPHIC.

POLITICIANS FIGHTING.

ANNAPOLIS, July 29.—The Democratic county convention which was held here to-day will be remarkable as one of the most disorderly gathering that was ever witnessed in Annapolis. At noon Michael Bannan, one of the county executive committees, took the chair and called the convention to order. James S. Robison, of the Third district, was nominated as temporary chairman of the convention.

Simultaneously with this nomination the name of General Bond, of the Fourth district, was presented.
Mr. Bannan placed the name of Mr. Robison before the convention, and, without recognizing Mr. Bond, declared the former elected.

Mr. Bond insisted upon having his name voted upon by ballot. This Mr. Bannan objected to, and the greatest excitement ensued. Cries of "This is an unjust meeting!" "Put Robison out!" &c., resounded thro'
the hall.

General Bond, addressing Mr. Ban-
nan said:

"When you call the convention to order your functions cease," Mr.
Bannan replying, said, "My functions cease when the temporary chairman takes the chair." Cries of "put him out!" followed this last remark
of Bannan's, when the latter said,
"I am determined that no bulldozing will rule me."

General Bond made several ineffectual attempts to organize the convention, and proceeding to the platform he made an attempt to snatch from the Senator's hands a piece of paper supposed to be his credentials.
At this juncture a rush was made and a general melee followed. The wildest excitement prevailed, and pistols were brandished, but not used.
The crowd rushed for the doors and windows. Mr. Thomas Boon received a severe cut in the head. Sheriff Wells, Deputy Williams and the police were present and quelled the disturbance.

In the excitement several gas jets
were broken by the excited individuals. At this juncture the delegations supporting General Bond withdrew from the room and would not take any part in the proceedings. An hour elapsed when the organization was perfected by electing R. H. Green secretary, when the following ticket
was nominated:

For Senator, Michael Bannan;
House of Delegates, Dr. George
Wells, John F. Williams, Samuel
Acton; sheriff, Thos. Nutwell; State's Attorney, James Revell;
clerk of the court, Sprigg Harwood;
county commissioners, Henry, Arnold, Peter, Brown and Owens.
They were elected by acclamation;
the third fifth, sixth and eight, voting
for Judges of the Orphans' Court, Geo. Johnson, Sr., Thos. Iglehart
and H. G. Webb. The greatest excitement prevails here, Jno. Ireland,
Jno. T. Clark, Samuel Smith and J.
S. Robison were selected as delegates to the State convention. The convention adjourned.

The Bond wing of the convention
met this afternoon at three o'clock,
after the adjournment of the other body, General Frank A. Bond in the chair, and Franklin Owens, secretary.
A committee of Credentials was appointed, who reported the regular delegates from the First, Second and Fourth, two delegates from the Third, and five of the contested delegates from the Eighth, who were elected by the Johns meeting. This convention had thus twenty-two delegates to the other's eighteen.
The convention then nominated for senator, William Snowden; for clerk,
Sprigg Harwood; for state's attorney,
Henry Alquist; for sheriff, W. L.
Dorsey; for House of Delegates,
George Wells, Jr., John F. Williams,
Samuel G. Acton; for judges of Orphans' Court, Frank White, Thos.
S. Iglehart, Wm. F. Owens; for county commissioners, John W.
Williams, D. C. Handy, J. W.
Shipley, Thomas H. Phelps, Thomas
H. Arnold; for county surveyor, Amos R. Harmon; delegates to state convention, Dr. Thomas Welch,
Frank A. Bond, Wm. B. Chairs, F.
Louis Griffith. Adjourned sine die.
As the smoke clears away the exact nature of the overt act of General Bond is found to be the attempt to take Senator Bannan's papers and gavel from his hand or from the desk.

Mr. Bannan resisted and the row followed.

THE OPPOSITION WHICH GENERAL EWING MEETS IN HIS OWN PARTY.

WASHINGTON, July 28.—Private advices have been received here from friends of General Ewing in Ohio, complaining of the opposition which Ewing meets from the hard money
men of his own party. They complain that the wealthy honest money
Democrats of Cincinnati, Columbus and Cleveland, like Theo. Cook in the former place, and J. H. Wade and Henry B. Payne in the last named,
who formerly contributed very heavily to pay the expenses of the party, now positively refuse to do so. Nor is that the worst. Not only do they thus put a negative obstacle in the way of General Ewing's success, but some of them are taking positive steps to secure his defeat. Hon.
Henry B. Payne, of Cleveland, who was one of the Democratic members of the Electoral Commission, a gentleman of great wealth and commanding social position, and whose influence in the Democratic party in Ohio is hardly second to that of Thurman, having once come within 2,000 votes of beating Salmon P.
Chase for the governorship of the state, recently joined the Hard-money League in Cleveland. This league is having subordinate branches formed in all the large towns of the state, and is making a direct and open attack upon the two most prominent financial planks of the Democratic platform. The news of the accession of life-long Democrats to its ranks is daily received at its headquarters. Virgil P. Kline, the President of the Cleveland Bar Association, and a prominent Democrat,
has also joined the league, and to night
presides with General Garfield over a hard-money mass meeting. The disaffection which has been reported from time to time among the hard-money German Democrats increases daily. Every leading German paper that heretofore supported the Democratic nominees endorse the hard-money movement, and many of them are openly advocating the election of Foster. This information all comes from a reliable source. Under the circumstances, is it unnatural that Mr. Ewing's friends should feel a little despondent?

DESTRUCTIVE STORMS.

NEW YORK, July 28.—A special dispatch to the Herald from Pittsburg, Pa., dated yesterday, is as follows:

Particulars received to-day from the districts visited by the terrible storm of Saturday morning show that it was far more destructive in its results than at first supposed. The locality which was most affected was in the vicinity of Kams City and Petrolia, two towns in the oil district of Butler county, forty miles from this city.

Both of the towns named are in a narrow valley, through which Bear creek, a tributary of the Alleghany river, flows. By 12 o'clock the creek overflowed its banks and some of the houses were flooded. At 1 o'clock it seemed as though some large reservoir up the valley had broken from its limits. A large wave of water, between five and six feet deep, swept down on Kams City. Houses were picked up from their foundations and carried off as if they were chips.

The people living in the houses were taken by surprise, and the scene was a fearfully piteous one.
Women were weeping and screaming
for aid, and children, with their bodies projecting from the windows, filled the air with cries of alarm and prayers for assistance.

Boats, rafts and a few horses were hastily procured by the residents of the higher portions of the town, and one by one the helpless people were rescued from their peril. Owing to the cheap character of the houses and buildings the loss in Kams City is not over $15,000 or $20,000.

From Kams City the water rushed through the valley, laying waste farms, carrying off the grain which was standing in the fields, and tearing away such outbuildings as were on the banks.

On reaching Petrolia the wave went through the center of the town, and over fifty houses were swept away.
Among them were twenty-five of the principal business houses on Railroad street. The appearance of the town after the passage of the flood was pitiable. Nothing but the courage and determination of the men who lived on the hillsides prevented
the loss of hundreds of lives. As it is a number of people are missing,
and it is feared they were carried away in their houses and were drowned.

The loss at Petrolia is about $110,- 000. Several houses were struck by lightning. No one was hurt, but the fearful glare of the electric fluid and the crashing of the thunder made
the situation doubly frightful.

LOCAL NEWS.

—Reading matter on every page.
—The Literary Society meets this evening.

—Mr. J. S. Devenon and brother are visiting in Oakland.

—Local items are scarce about Oakland at the present time.

—The B. & O. railroad is doing an enormous business in freight.

—Hon. John S. Combs was in town this week, visiting his father.

—Messrs. Livingston and Moody, of Bloomington, were in town Monday.

—Prof. Richardson has erected a lamp post in front of his ice cream saloon.

—Rev. B. Ison attended the District Conference at Palatine, W. Va., this week.

—The hotels and boarding houses generally have as many boarders as they can accommodate.

—Mrs. Geo. Sherman and daughters arrived at Oakland Tuesday. They are stopping at Mr. Bailey's hotel.

—Those desirous of office should announce their names. The Convention will meet by and by.

—A lively time is anticipated at the Democratic county convention next Tuesday.

—The County Commissioners will be in their office next Thursday. Wednesday they will examine the Sang Run bridge.

—We call the attention of our readers to the advertisement of a valuable farm for sale, in another column. This is a rare chance for a good investment.

—A correspondent of the Wheeling Register, who visited the "ice mountain," in Preston county, last week, reports finding ice in small quantities, lying chiefly in the crevices between loose, unstratified rock.

—The Ladies' Aid Society of the Rev. Lutheran church will hold their fair and festival in Brooks' New York Store Room, beginning Aug. 11th, and continuing through the week. Patronage of the public solicited.

—An ordinary sore throat may be cured in twenty-four hours by rubbing well with cod-liver oil and wrapping a piece of flannel around it that has been saturated with the oil and gargling with a solution of alum and water. Salt and water also make a good gargle for simple sore throat.

—The Baltimore and Ohio railroad is getting up an excursion from Columbus, Newark and Zanesville to the mountains, putting the fare at exceedingly low rates and allowing excursionists ten days among the trout streams and hunting grounds of the western part of Maryland.

—The pensioned soldiers everywhere will rejoice that there are no more medical examinations of pensioners already on the rolls. Every two years the pensioners were required to go before a medical board and be examined as to the nature of their injuries. This was a great expense to the wounded veterans, and was of no real benefit to the government.—Exchange.

—Companies have sprung up in every part of the Union for making an "imitation Singer Machine." Why are not similar companies formed for making imitations of other Sewing Machines? The public will draw its own inference. Gold is continually counterfeited; brass and tin never! I. W. Stonaker is the agent in Oakland.

—A lady who speaks from experience says that probably nine of the children out of ten who die of croup might be saved by the timely application of roast onions, washed and folded in a napkin, and goose oil or even lard poured on and applied as warm to the throat as can be comfortably borne; let it extend to the upper part of the chest, and put it also to the feet and hands.

—Saturday morning the Chicago express, westbound, picked up a young man named Michael Gaway, on the seventeen-mile grade, about sixty miles east of Grafton. He was brought to the latter place and the leg amputated. His parents live in Urbana, Ohio. He was "beating" his way to Baltimore on a freight train, and, sitting on the bumper, went to sleep and fell off with the above result. He has a sister living in Baltimore.—Camb. Times.

—A twenty-seven hour walking match took place in Beldyere Hall, Cumberland, commencing at 8 o'clock Friday evening of last week, with Messrs. C. H. Slaughter, W. McCray, and George Evans, of Cumberland, and W. Alsip, of Bedford, Pa., all amateurs, as contestants. The score stood: Slaughter 111 miles and 5 laps, McCray 109 miles and 18 laps, Evans 91 miles and Alsip 81 miles and 5 laps. The distance made is far beyond that anticipated by any one, and the contest was very interesting and exciting.

—A little child of Mr. Hessen, died Sunday morning.

—200 sacks G. A. Salt for sale at Wm. P. Totten's Cheap Cash Store, Oakland, Md.

—THE REPUBLICAN will be furnished to subscribers from now until the close of the campaign this fall for 25 cents, in advance.

—Passenger train No. 5 was detained an hour and a half at Oakland Wednesday by an accident to the engine. An engine was summoned from Piedmont, which took the train through.

—Dr. W. F. Funckenberg, Dentist, and Artist, from Cumberland, Md., is at the "Davis House," where all those suffering from diseases of the eye, ear, nose and throat can consult him. All consultations free. Hours 9 A. M. to 1 P. M. Jy 19.

—Every newspaper publisher knows the number of subscribers upon his list but it would be hard for him to guess within a hundred of the number of his readers. It is a well supported fact that the subscription book of a weekly paper shows less than one-half its readers. Frequently there are as many borrowers as there are subscribers, and very often the borrower is more able to take the paper and pay for it than the subscriber. Some of our subscribers have complained to us that their REPUBLICAN wanders off sometimes before they have had an opportunity to peruse it. They do not like to be unneighborly and their paper goes from house to house and its columns are perused and enjoyed by those who do not contribute to its support. Friends, the subscription price of your local paper is but a small sum—less than three cents a week—so stop this borrowing and help it along.

—We have a request to make of all Sunday Schools that use the lesson leaf, and it is this: After you have used the leaves for the month please preserve them, and especially your journals. We want you then to send them to our office and we will tell you why. During our late visit to Allegany and Garrett counties we heard of a number of schools that did not have a lesson leaf because they were too poor to get them. Now whilst they could not get them for the proper day they would be only too glad to study them the month after. Now if our friends will only preserve their leaves and journals and send them to us we will see that they get to these poor schools that are not able to buy them. If the friends could only hear the accounts of religious destitution that we heard of us that we might send them where they would be useful. We hope our friends will think of this.—Woodberry News.

Church Services—Sunday.
Lutheran Church.—Preaching in the evening at 8 o'clock, by Rev. O. C. Miller.

M. E. Church.—Preaching in the morning at 10 o'clock, by Rev. B. Ison, subject "Methodism."

St. Matthew's P. E. Church.—Morning Prayer and Sermon every Sunday, at 11 A. M. Evening Prayer at 6 P. M. Holy Communion 1st Sunday in each month, at 11 A. M. Holy Communion Sunday, 3d, at 7 A. M. Evening Prayer every day in the week at 6 P. M.

Barn Burned.
The barn of Philip Miller, residing near the national pike, six miles west of Frostburg, in this county, was burned Friday night of last week, together with its contents. The origin of the fire is not known but the supposition is that it was struck by lightning. The barn was insured for $1,000, but are not informed whether that amount will cover the loss.

Election of Officers.
Oakland Lodge, I. O. G. T., No. 114, elected, on Tuesday evening, the following officers:
W. C. T.—F. P. Arnold.
W. V. T.—L. A. Thayer.
W. R. S.—E. H. Shedd.
W. F. S.—T. J. Peddicord.
W. T.—David Little.
W. C.—W. H. Tower.
W. M.—E. Z. Tower.
W. I. G.—Clagett Peddicord.
W. O. G.—Chas. Davis.
R. H. S.—Sarah Lawton.
L. H. S.—Geo. Little.
W. D. M.—Maggie Peddicord.

List of Letters.
List of letters remaining unclaimed in the Post Office at Oakland, August 24, 1879.

Persons calling for them will please say they are advertised.
Annie Albright, 2, Wm. Amen, Mary C. Burns or Bevans, Ellen Brown, Lillie Brown, Scott Blake, W. R. Burch, Rev. I. Barnhardt, A. L. Bardwell, J. B. Cunningham, Amanda Carter, J. E. Dawson, Lucy Dusham, Maria L. Dorsey, 2, H. W. Dowling, Asenath Harwood, Miss J. R. Homan, Henry Hamilton, Emma King, Mary Kelly, Mrs. C. E. Lee, Daniel Martin, Louisa Michael, C. F. McCay, Mr. Macenley, Louis A. Paulie, Mrs. Mary Stone, Sarah E. Sines, Jas. H. Stout, Daniel Swancy, Jos. F. Towell, Wm. C. Wilson.
R. THAYER, P. M.

An Old Book.
We were recently shown a book printed in the year 1550, making it 329 years old. It is an Italian Art Catalogue, bound in the original parchment or skin binding. The type from which it was printed must have been very perfect, as it now presents as good appearance as modern printing. The book is now in the possession of our young friend Mr. John A. Grant.

An Old Silver Souvenir Revived.
The recent revival of the silver excitement in Garrett county brings to mind the first sensation of the same sort. Nearly one hundred years ago an old hunter discovered on Savage river a handsome "find" of silver. The Xinroval gazed long and eagerly on the beautiful metal and taking a sample with him struck out for the nearest human habitation. He obtained help and undertook to return to the place where he had seen the treasure. He was unable to find the spot, however, and after long and patient endeavor gave it up as a bad job. There have been several alarms of the same sort at subsequent periods, all with the same result. Perhaps the present "find" will have substantial results, but we have our doubts.—Camb. News.

Allegany County Democratic Convention.

The Democratic Convention met at 10 o'clock Tuesday morning last. There was considerable opposition on the part of the anti-canal delegates, backed by Messrs. R. D. Johnson, F. F. McCordell and Alfred Spates, who were present. Threats to break up the convention in a row were made, but no concessions were made, and the work proceeded. The following delegates were elected: Messrs. W. T. Amison, A. Hollie, W. M. Price, Thos. Devaney and Hanson Williams; alternates, E. Mulvaney, Charles Saunders, James Wilson, Jno. Humbird and Benjamin Edwards.

The vote showed twelve districts out of fifteen for the canal men. The delegation is for Hamilton, Keating, Gwinn and Jones.

A Big Freight Business.

The traffic in freight over the Baltimore and Ohio railroad is said to be the heaviest in the history of the road. Every available car is in use, and every locomotive taxed to the utmost of its capacity, both for power and wear and tear. A number of engines last week made two round trips between this city and Martinsburg in twenty-four hours—not with the same "crews," of course. On three or four days last week the trains despatched from and passing through this city numbered from forty to fifty, including over a thousand loaded cars bound east and two thousand empty cars going west to meet the accumulating freight. The powerful locomotives haul from forty to fifty loaded cars and from sixty to eighty empty ones. A goodly proportion of the east bound freight is wheat and other grain, but there was a fair share of coal, oil, lumber, etc. The employees, in consequence, have all they can do, very many of them making from nine to twelve trips a week, receiving a full day's pay for the trip from Martinsburg to Piedmont and three-quarters of a day from Martinsburg to this city. The names of many will have from thirty-five to forty-five days' pay set opposite them on the pay-roll for July. So anxious are the men to make heavy wages that the company has been compelled to require them to take at least five hours' rest at the end of each round trip.

The same cheerful state of affairs prevails on the Pittsburg division, where some of the employees have made twelve and fourteen trips, or days, per week since the middle of the present month.—Camb. News.

Squabbling Among Themselves.

The disgraceful scenes which characterized the proceedings of the Democratic convention at Annapolis yesterday, were the legitimate result of the ring system in politics pursued to its fullest logical development. With neither of the two factions which struggled for supremacy yesterday, have the voters of Anne Arundel county apparently any special sympathy, except in so far as one may be less objectionable than the other. Both factions represent individually selfish interests; both are struggling merely for the offices in dispute. The miserable row in which the convention culminated possesses a special significance for the rank and file of the Democratic voters throughout the State, indicating as it does an indifference on the part of a portion of the party, not only to public opinion, but to the dictates of ordinary decency. To what a pitch of severity must these men have attained to be able thus, with impunity, to cast reproach upon the whole Democratic party in Maryland, and to violate the sense of propriety of every honest Democratic voter! Nor is the case of the Anne Arundel convention an isolated one. In other counties there are not wanting evidences of a determination to "bury" things with a high hand, to override public opinion, to thrust forward the very men who, whether justly or unjustly, typify in the public eye, the worst features and abuses of our present politics. What do these movements mean? Are the managers so confident that they proceed thus openly to force their purpose upon the recognition of the least informed, the most ingenious of voters? Are they so strong that they can, not only "set up" the nomination in secret, but fight over them in public, without fear of popular disaffection or rebuke? Perhaps so; but time will show.—Baltimore Bulletin, Democratic, 30th.

There is certainly every indication that the country is entering upon an era of solid prosperity. With the close of the fiscal year many interesting national statistics are furnished, and all go to show the truth of this statement. The postal receipts, one of the surest signs, for the first quarter of 1879 were nearly $8,000,000, almost as much as the total receipts for 1878, and the estimated receipts for the year, $92,000,000, will be nearly double the receipts for 1877, and far in excess of the receipts of any succeeding year. The increase in the foreign trade over the fiscal year of 1877-8, was nearly $25,000,000, two-thirds of which was exports, the latter exceeding the imports by $245,000,000. To fully understand the change that has taken place in our foreign trade during the past decade, however, it is necessary to go back of these two years. Comparing the trade of the years 1876-3 with that of 1879 we find that an excess of imports amounting to $123,000,000 in the former has been changed into an excess of exports amounting to $753,000,000 in the latter, the exports having more than doubled in value, while the imports have decreased less than a fourth, and the total trade has increased from $1,027,000,000 to $1,343,000,000. The excess of imports of bullion for the first period was $298,000,000, while for the second period it was only $65,000,000, and for the last two years of the second period there was an excess of exports of coin and bullion amounting to about $8,600,000. Internal revenue receipts, too, notwithstanding the decreased tax on tobacco, are greater than the preceding year, and from whatever point of view taken, the prospects are most encouraging.

The Democrats of Orangeburg Co., South Carolina, are already beginning to lay the pipes for the next campaign. A visitor to these parts nowadays might come away with the impression that the negroes are allowed all the rights and privileges accorded to the rest of mankind. Republicans in that county are now permitted to indulge to a limited extent in speech-making and organization. This happy condition of affairs, however, is not likely to last. Neither is it real, for the Democrats are already beginning to intimate to the colored people what they must expect. The Orangeburg Democrat, the local organ of the bulldozers in that vicinity, takes occasion to warn the Republicans that their privileges are only temporary concessions, and that they must not presume too far upon the forbearance of their Democratic neighbors. Its language is guarded, but it is readily understood by those at whom it is directed. The Democrat heads its article "Love's Labor Lost," and says: "The Radical leaders here may organize and harangue the negroes, as they did on the 4th of July, as much as they please, but there is one thing they may as well understand at once, and that is that the honest citizens of this county intend to control its affairs by electing honest men to office in 1880. They will never submit to being lorded over again by the thieves and plunderers that once ruled the destinies of grand old Orangeburg. Their day has passed, and we repeat, the Radical leaders may as well understand it at once. We also warn them to be careful how they stir up strife among the colored people and embitter them against their white neighbor, or forbearance may cease to be a virtue." Forbearance always ceases just prior to elections.

We do not find it to our mind—partisan though we may be in the estimation of some—to exult over the slight which yesterday's Democratic convention put upon Hon. William Walsh and R. D. Johnson, Esq. These gentlemen represented an element in the Democratic party which has for years past furnished the capital of brains, respectability and funds upon which the party has done business in this county. Without these gentlemen and their colleagues there would have been no party here to speak of. But they have been turned down, and must hereafter sit away back in the congregation.—Cumberland News, Wednesday.

THE FLORIDA SHIP CANAL.—The grand enterprise of a ship canal through the peninsula of Florida has assumed such form and apparent substance that it may be considered a probable fact in the near future. It is known to our readers that at the last session of the legislature a bill passed the senate to incorporate the Florida Ship Canal Company, but that it did not reach the house in time for action, sharing the fate of much other unfinished business of that very unsatisfactory session, which undertook much that it failed to accomplish. But capitalists of Paris, interested in the canal enterprise, were not deterred from movement in the enterprise, confidently hoping that the desired franchise would be obtained in due season. These capitalists have now explored the country with a view to ascertaining the most desirable route, and now ask a charter for a work which will benefit generally the commerce of all nations, and especially of the countries bordering on the Gulf of Mexico, for the contemplated canal will lessen voyages from Northern Atlantic ports into the Gulf by about a thousand miles, and effect the avoidance of the dangers of the Florida reefs and the heavy insurance rates consequent. The company wish to go to work and accomplish these great objects, and want the state authorities to give permission. We hope that Governor Drew will call the legislature together in extra session that the charter may be granted and the work commenced. Otherwise it will be deferred for at least a year and a-half and perhaps indefinitely. The canal session would cost only $10,000 or $12,000, and the interests involved and risked by delay are of vastly more value to the state than this cost of bringing them into being.—Pensacola (Fla.) Gazette.

It is stated great excitement prevails in South Carolina over the report that the colored people of that state are organizing a secret society known as the "Good Samaritans." The Southern Democrats pretend to regard this organization as a sort of Union League gotten up by Republicans for political purposes, and already make violent threats against all who engage in it. The press denounces it as a scheme to foment discord between the races, and declare that the white people of the state are on the alert and will not tolerate the organization. This is simply making a mountain out of a mole hill. The order of "Good Samaritans" was instituted several years ago, and the writer well remembers a parade of the Samaritans, which took place on the anniversary day of the order, fifteen months ago in North Carolina. It is entirely devoid of political significance, being nothing more than one of the many societies which Southern negroes delight in. It is not of recent origin, and was established purely as an eleemosynary association, which would enable its members to parade, hold picnics and make a display of their regalia. Still, there is no doubt but that the order will furnish an excellent pretext for the persecution and intimidation of the colored people about election times.

The people of Butler county, Pennsylvania, are now in a position to appreciate the value of the safeguards of the national banking system. When the old Bank of Commerce at Erie, the Farmers' Bank of Waynesburg, and the Lancaster Bank—all state banks—failed a great many laborers, clerks and storekeepers who were holders of their notes were sufferers. But when recently one of the stockholders of the First National Bank of Butler, Pa., discovered something wrong and called the attention of the government to it, an examiner was immediately sent on, the cause of complaint was found real, and the bank thrown into liquidation. The failure does not occasion the loss of a cent to the holders, and the intervention of the government arrests the mismanagement of the affairs of the bank at a point which prevents great losses from being inflicted upon the depositors and stockholders. Such is the perfection of the national banking system that failures are rare, and when they do occur they are small in amount and limited in effect.

The drought has been so extensive and long-continued that it is cheering to know that the rain of Saturday prevailed throughout the United States. Upon the entire region north of the Ohio and east of the Mississippi rain was falling at noon. At Nashville, Tenn., there was a fall of four inches. Besides the benefit to the corn crop, which was suffering, it has unlocked the blockade of the coal trade on the rivers at Pittsburg. The boats with millions of bushels of the black diamonds that are needed run now float down the rivers to their destination.

The National Board of Health, of which so much was expected, has accomplished nothing up to date beyond drawing its salary and issuing a "bulletin" which contains no news. Its history thus far is only another vivid illustration of the admitted extravagance and inefficiency, which is the great curse of our day and generation. Notwithstanding the alarming spread of the yellow fever at Memphis, the Board has not yet promulgated any specific or general plan for the mitigation of the epidemic. Its only system of labor seems to be confined to the issuance of recommendations, the appointment of firebrand inspectors and the collection of such statistics on which to base its report to Congress, or, in other words, its plea for a continuance in office. There are now employed at the rooms of the board 13 clerks, three of whom could do all the necessary work and have as much time to loaf as do the members themselves. Among these clerks is a son of Senator Harris, the father of the board, who made himself somewhat conspicuous by trying to shove the Gage scheme through the Senate in the last hours of the extra session. The actual running expenses of this grand experiment called the National Board of Health are from $25,000 to $30,000 a month.

Lieutenant Clark's skirmish with the Sioux Indians in the Northwest has rendered the War Department officials more uneasy than ever. The department is opposed to doing anything that would excite the Indians, and Miles has been repeatedly instructed not to precipitate an Indian war unnecessarily, and has been commanded not to go north of the Milk river, which is only forty miles south of the lines of the British possessions. It is difficult to tell what will come of the present outlook, although some of the most experienced officers in the service entertain the fear that another Indian war is inevitable. Gen. Miles is a man of rare judgment and of the most deliberate mind. He is brave, and the most successful Indian fighter in the army. Being in the field, he, of course, knows best what moves to make, and while the department is exceedingly anxious in the matter, it feels like doing nothing that might embarrass or restrict Miles in any emergency that might arise. The peace officers, therefore, hold their breath, while Miles dashes onward.

It is reported at Pittsburg that the Pittsburg and Lake Erie road is contemplating a movement to counteract the Pennsylvania and Baltimore and Ohio roads' connection recently consummated at Pittsburg. The new route, as understood at present, is to start from Harrisburg over the Cumberland Valley road to Chambersburg, thence to Bedford and Somerset; from Somerset to the headwaters of the Youghiogheny, which stream it will follow until it joins the Monongahela at McKeesport, and crossing on a bridge at that point, enter Pittsburg on the south side. It will here make connection with the Lake Erie road. It is understood that Vanderbilt, who is a heavy stockholder in the Pittsburg and Lake Erie, is the projector of the scheme, in which he will have the support, as he already has the sympathy, of the people of Pittsburg and Western Pennsylvania. A corps of engineers is now engaged in surveying the new route. What the combination will do to obstruct the enterprise is unknown. This is a fine field for the display of Col. Tom Scott's genius, should he return from abroad with a clear head.

To reach the highest standard of health, nature demands the utmost regularity of the bowels; a slight deviation brings many inconveniences and paves the way to more serious dangers. We can recommend Dr. Bull's Baltimore Pills as the best medicine for the needs of the digestive apparatus.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

FOR SALE CHEAP.

A Valuable Farm Near Oakland, Md.

The undersigned offers for sale a valuable farm, about four miles from Oakland, on the West Union road. This farm contains 300 acres, 200 of which is under fence and 100 improved. The improvements consist of a

New Frame House,

Good Young Orchard.

The crops usually taken from this farm are wheat, corn, oats, clover, buckwheat, potatoes, etc. This property is especially adapted to stock raising, there being a good outlet to a free range.

For terms, &c., address, DAVID SHARAUGH, Oakland, Md., aug 24m.

VARIETIES.

—The girl of the period—Rusty Kate.
—St. Louis Times-Journal.
—A good summer resort for flies—Bald Mountain.—Cleveland Sun.
—Old Sol wins every heat in the summer rays.—Witchcraft Times.
—In this country we simply support our Senators. In Italy they shoot 'em.—Free Press.

Listening to the "voices of nature" we note that green corn is a little husky.
—New Haven Register.
—The moral law is wider than a rifle range and higher than a hip-pocket.—New Orleans Picayune.

—Find out what men laugh at and you know exactly how refined and intelligent they are.—Pittsburgh.

—The sidewalk broad enough to admit of a man's passing two women with umbrellas hasn't been built.—Boston Post.

—Contentment is better than riches, but you may be ever so content and you'll want cash just the same.—Free Press.

—Cincinnati has a five-years-old boy with a caudal appendage. Sing, hey! little monkey that you are!—Graphic.

—A woman with a shabby pair of shoes can never be convinced that short dresses are not vulgar.—Philadelphia Chronicle-Herald.

—Not one person in a hundred can tell new flour from old except by observing that the cook's hairpins stick tighter to the new biscuits.—Free Press.

—Said he, as he stole one, "I send my love with a kiss." And she, sitting the action to the word, replied, "I send mine with whacks."—Boston Transcript.

—Molasses, says the proverb, catches more flies than vinegar does, which is probably the reason why molasses is more expensive than vinegar.—N. Y. Herald.

—A correspondent of the Chicago Tribune has had a three-column pow-wow with Sitting Bull. The paper took the precaution to send a bald-headed man.—Graphic.

—Now is the season of the year when the small boy teth a string around his waist and considerately himself properly arrayed to take a bath in public.—Salem Statesman.

—Half of the fun of going barefooted is to get a stone-bruise on each heel, and the boy with a good, big stone-bruise always has the sympathy of his mother when sent on an errand.

—A young lady up in Berkshire County, Mass., was stung on the lip by a bee the other day. We congratulate the bee on knowing just where the honey was.—New Haven Register.

—Several boys wedding onions in Southport were prostrated by a stroke of lightning. Boys whose fathers own onion beds should cut this out and past it in their father's hats.—Danbury News.

—It has taken outsiders about one hundred years to find out that the Chinese do not eat rats, cats and dogs, and that some of them know enough to wash a shirt-bosom and get paid for the whole shirt.—Free Press.

—A man may know all the sciences and have thirty languages at command, but when he disorbes and goes swimming in a country mill pond, the small boy can give him points and beat without half trying.—N. Y. Express.

—A young lady pupil of a high school put on a mass of false hair, penciled her eyebrows, rouged her cheeks, etc., and then went to the commencement and read her essay entitled "Deception a Prevailing Folly."—Norristown Herald.

—An old bachelor was recently heard saying to a young lady, "There is no jewelry worth now-a-days than when I was young; but there's one piece I always admired, which I don't often see now." "What is that?" asked the miss. "A thimble," was the reply.

—It is said that a young man at Saratoga, who seemed fast in his last summer with a young lady of golden tresses, this season brushes brown hair off the lapel of his coat. This doesn't indicate fickleness so much as an activity in the hair trade.—Waterloo Observer.

—In the Providence of God, and without consultation with me, I was born in South Carolina, in time to be a boy not quite eleven years old when the war began." is how Rev. William Hayne Leavell, a Southern gentleman, began his Fourth of July address at Londonderry, N. H.

—Deacon Compost says he has tried everything he could think of or hear of to stop the ravages of the potato bug, but without success until this year. He has at last found a sure way of getting rid of them. He doesn't plant any potatoes. He thinks it strange he never thought of so simple a method before.—Boston Transcript.

—Never marry a man on a small salary.—Elmira Advertiser. Now, there is good advice for you girls. Always wait until you have laid up money enough to furnish the house and keep the dear fellow in cigars and other lollipops. Man is a delicate creature and needs tender rearing.—N. Y. Commercial-Advertiser.

—No matter how smooth the sea of life may seem to the young mariner who has just launched his frail bark on its untried waters, there are shoals, hidden rocks and quicksands which will gobble him up with as much alacrity as a country editor's scraps in a subscription to his paper.—Hickensack Reynolds.

—Old Aunt Sarah Fields, a negro woman at Blue Ridge, Ky., firmly believes that she must die, be buried and rise again on the third day, in order that her race should be benefited. The accommodation boys of her neighborhood gave her chloroform, and left her in a graveyard, so that when she awoke she thought that the desired miracle had been wrought. She is now waiting for the good result.

—Our inventor is at work getting out 44,000,000 of fancy cards bearing the words, "You can bet your sweet life it is." They are intended to be worn on the lapel of the coats of all men in the United States in answer to the query, "Is it warm enough for you?" They will meet a long-felt want, and ought to have a tremendous sale.—Wheeling Sunday Leader.

—Bub, did you ever stop to think," said a grocer, recently, as he measured out half a peck of potatoes, "that those potatoes contain sugar, water, and starch?" "No, I don't," replied the boy, "but I heard mother say that you put peas and beans in your coffee, and about a pint of water in every quart of milk you sold." The subject of natural philosophy was dropped right there.

It is pretty hard to throw off old habits all at once. A Nebraska dealer in agricultural implements "got religion," felt it was his duty to point out the way to others, and said to a farmer: "Brother Jones, I will guarantee that if you join our church you will not only find it the best in the market, but it will take you straight through without any further inventory. Give it a trial, and if not satisfactory I will take back your religion and refund your money."

—Free Press.

—Eliza Jane two lovers had—They were so very near alike, She professed each a philosopher. At last, to test their qualities And give to one the vintage place, She professed each a philosopher. Of her ethereal, tempting face, Art snatched the pretty paper prize And pressed it to his heart, and then He put it to his marble lips And kissed it over and over again, But Nature hurled the painter off, And, grappling with her strong embrace, He kissed that plump Eliza Jane.

—Let's let him your praise sublime, But men are men and girls are girls—And I'll take Nature every time!"—Times-Journal.

The Too Short Eye.

Besides the condition of near-sightedness which consists in too great a length of the eye, there is another where the eye-ball is too short, or the hypermetropic eye, and which, though less dangerous to the organ, is even more distressing to the subject, because less apparent. For a short eye can, by making an effort, see in the distance usually as well as a normal eye, the only difference being that where a normal eye is using no effort to see an object clearly, that is, in the distance, a short eye is making a physical exertion proportionate to the amount of the defect—a strain which always fatigues and sometimes exhausts the nervous system, not only of the eye, but also of the whole nervous system. All this is even worse for near objects, and the result is that a hypermetropic eye never, from the beginning to the end, sees an object distinctly without an effort. From the fact that by making this effort those affected with this trouble can see both distant and near objects clearly, the defect is rarely recognized, unless of a very high degree, except by the approach of adult life, though a number of symptoms and complaints may have shown themselves in former years whose true cause was unsuspected by even the sufferer himself, such as headache, vertigo, neuralgia, and general nervous exhaustion—symptoms so grave that they occasionally lead to either a temporary reduction of or a total abstinence from all study for a shorter or longer period, during which the sufferer is supposed to have all possible ills, especially those of a nervous character.

Toward adult life—that is, from eighteen to twenty-two—however, a new symptom begins to appear. The eye which up to this time had been perfectly clear, notwithstanding the strain with which it had been performed, now begins to fail, and the page to be blurred at one moment, to become perfectly clear in the next. These temporary vanishings of the type increase in frequency, accompanied by a tense feeling over the brow, and since there is now a falling of sight, attention is called to the eye for the first time, an examination is made, and the eye remedied by the proper glass. But this is at the end of the education, not as it should be, at the beginning, or rather before it be begun.

This extreme strain must have an effect upon the character of the child and its natural disposition, and it must tend to render it often, when least expected, peevish and fretful, desponding and wanting in self-reliance. The mere effort to see must react on what is seen, and there can be no doubt that the physical exhaustion which follows the effort to adjust the eye, which is a muscular action, subtracts from the quickness of perception, and therefore of comprehension, and thus impede that maintenance of attention which is the surest evidence of mental vigor, just as the maintenance of power, not its production, is the surest sign of physical perfection.

With those who are affected with the too short eye the result is just the reverse of what it is with those who are near-sighted. People with this defect even in very early life acquire, without even knowing why, a distaste for books.

A boy with this deficiency of optical power sits down to study, apparently fresh, and with a determination to perform his task. After a little while a vague feeling of uneasiness creeps over him, and he becomes restless. He has a craving for more light. If a dark day, he wishes to get near the window; or if at night, he gets as close to the lamp as he possibly can, and so sits that the glare shines full in his face and eyes. He has found by experience that he sees a little easier in this way, as the pupils are contracted.

To his natural defect is added another evil. The glare irritates the eye and becomes heavy and congested, and the face feverish and flushed. He spurs his lagging will, and makes an effort; but struggle as he may, it is of no use, and his head finally droops over on the table and he falls asleep.

He is shaken up only to be sent to bed, with lesson unlearned, and ten to one, if a city boy, with his dinner undigested, and his first thought in the morning is of past neglect and future punishment; and when, a little later, he presents himself at school, how many equivocations, prevarications or downright falsehoods are forced from his young lips in order to meet and repel the cutting rebuke, or even the wrathful violence, of his teacher, until he becomes, so far as his studies are concerned, habitually deceitful!

This unequal struggle between intention and performance goes on day after day, until the boy, no matter how bright he may have been originally, becomes in reality what he always appeared to others, backward if not stupid and from sheer disengagement and perversity, if not mischievous and perverse. He loses the habit of application and the power of concentration, and becomes through life, as a rule, inobedient and unthinking, and all on account of a physical defect which might have been corrected before his education began.

But besides producing an effect upon the health and mind, this physical defect often leads to personal deformity, for it has been shown that of those who are cross-eyed, eighty per cent. is due to the fact that they have too short an eye.—Dr. Edward G. Loring, in Harper's Magazine for August.

New Postal Regulations.

By the provisions of recent acts of Congress, as construed by the Post-office Department, various important modifications have been made in the classification of mail matter. As these changes will largely affect the mercantile, insurance and other interests, and as they are at present but imperfectly understood, the subjoined detailed information upon the subject has been obtained through inquiry at the Post-office. It may be relied upon as being in accord with the latest official rulings and decisions of the Department, and is absolutely correct. The rate on commercial papers, insurance documents, papers in legal proceedings, etc., when partly in print and partly in writing, has heretofore been the same as on letters, viz.: three cents per half ounce. All such articles have now, with the exceptions mentioned, being assigned to the third class of mail matter, and as such are chargeable with the rate of one cent for each two ounces when sent in unsealed envelopes or wrappers. The exceptions are: If such articles contain writing in the nature of personal correspondence, or are addressed to the representatives of a monetary value. In these cases they become first class mail matter, and as such are chargeable with letter rates of postage. According to the latest rulings of the Department, which reverse a number of those recently made under the same law, the specific examples of the exceptions to third-class matter are: Insurance policies, signed and in force, daily insurance reports, and assignments, transfers, applications for insurance, promissory notes, attached to premiums or not, and all notices from local agents to policy holders respecting the same; also, notices to policy holders or other kindred matter; also, all signed notes, checks, drafts, deeds, bonds, bills of lading, receipts, bills, and signed receipts of all kinds. Insurance policies, canceled or income tax returns, notices of premium due, and monthly statements may all be sent at third-class rates of postage.

The former restrictions as to writing in books have been removed, to the extent of permitting a simple manuscript, or a form of presentation, to be written on covers or blank pages. Manuscript for publication, when accompanied by proof-sheets, may be sent at third-class rates; but uncorrected proofs, and original drawings made by hand, heretofore charged at letter rate, are now assigned to the fourth class, and may be sent on payment of postage one cent per sheet. Posters, bills, notices, or drawings made by hand, heretofore charged at letter rate, are now assigned to the fourth class, and may be sent on payment of postage one cent per sheet. Posters, bills, notices, or drawings made by hand, heretofore charged at letter rate, are now assigned to the fourth class, and may be sent on payment of postage one cent per sheet.

Articles of glass, formerly excluded from the mails, may now be sent at fourth-class rates (one cent per ounce), provided they are secured so as to guard against breakage, and are boxed in accordance with certain instructions contained in the United States Postal Guide. Original packages of tobacco, and boxes of cigars, and other articles sealed by internal revenue stamps, which were formerly charged at letter rates, are now placed in the fourth class by a decision of the Department, which states that they "will regard the stamp placed on the cover or opening of each package as evidence that no matter is contained therein which is subject to letter rates of postage."

All persons who desire to avail themselves of the concessions noted above will find that they involve no certain drawbacks. For example, with the single exception of the packages sealed by internal revenue stamps, all mail matter not sent at letter rates must be left open to inspection by the Post-office inspectors, and, in addition, other than letters and postal cards, can be returned to the senders on request; nor forwarded to other offices, unless again fully prepaid, in case the persons addressed have removed; nor can they be advertised; but if found undeliverable or unrecalled for, they will be sent to the Dead-Letter Office. Mail-matter of the third and fourth classes is not assorted and put up with, or in the same manner as letters, being placed loose in canvas sacks and not in locked pouches; and, of course, whenever it is necessary on account of unusual accumulation of mail matter or for other reasons, to give preference in dispatch, it is always accorded to letter mail.—N. Y. Times.

The gauge of the St. Louis Iron Mountain and Southern Railroad, for a distance of 90 miles, was changed from five feet to four feet eight and a half inches in less than eighteen hours, and the regular business of the road was scarcely interrupted.

A BRITISH colonial Governor can provide snugly for his sons. Lord Loftus takes out one son to Sydney as his private secretary and another as his aid. This will give about $3,500 between them.

It doesn't take a school boy long to evince a love for division, provided another boy owns the apple.—Norristown Herald.

—When the moon gets full it keeps late hours.—New Orleans Picayune.

Our Young Folks.

WHEN BABY COMES.

What a load is in the house! Charlie, loquacious little mouse, Round his nursery must roam, Teased and tickled in his home, Now Baby's come.

"Charlie's nose is out of joint," Said his "mother" say, and point To the doleful little man, Headman of the growing clan, Now Baby's come.

All the world has gone away To Charlie's heart. Now heed his cry, Patient law until to-day, For Baby's come.

"Go!" he cried, "Take her away! I don't like her. She can't play." Quivering and fearful boy—"Charlie, he is mamma's boy, Take her away."

Wonderous fair, the pillow face Emits the lovely infant's cry, Ah, her heart can hold the two, Eyes are brown and eyes of blue! When Baby's come.

Baby brings all love about, Ever growing, ever strong; Ever a source of joy and bliss, Never elude nor grow less When Baby's come.

What a lot of faint perfume, What a sweet perfume, What a lot of faint perfume, What a sweet perfume, When Baby's come.

'Tis a temple, on its shrine, Trembles every throne divine Into me, His heaven lie! In the spheres of her soft eyes, When Baby's come.

Far the world's fret and snare, Far the world's fret and snare, Once again romance is sweet, Life is young and love complete, When Baby's come.

All the earth is made anew—Far the tale and fair the true, Where a little life begins, Feet are warm, love is true, When Baby's come.

—Mary Cummings, in the Independent.

ISAAC AND LITTLE TROT.

Little Trot was really named Georgiana Jones, but the name was too long for her. She was a little dumpling with blue eyes and yellow hair, and round red cheeks; and little Isaac Jacobs, who lived next door to her, admired her exceedingly.

Little Isaac had big black eyes and a skin like a hazel-nut, and a large round nose. He was ten and Trot was five, and Isaac made up his mind that he was in love with Trot, and that when they were old enough they would be married.

One day he said this to his sister Rachel, who instantly shook her head and her black curls furiously, and cried out:

"O, no, no, that could never be, your religions are different. No one can marry a person of different religion. I could not accept the hand of Mr. Smith, the baker over the way, but I am now engaged, as everybody knows, to Mr. Moses, who is in the jewelry business. You see it never could be, Isaac. But there is little Miriam."

Then she laughed and told her mother of the good joke; but it was no joke to Isaac.

One day he climbed up over the fence and called softly to Trot: "Trot, come here, I want to talk to you."

Trot came. She held her big doll in one hand and a stick of peppermint in the other, and she was glad to see Isaac, for they had been parted an age—at least twenty-four hours.

"Come over and play," said Trot, solemnly.

"I can't," said Isaac. "Father said I must go on an errand, but I wanted to ask you have you any religion?"

Trot ran away and said "no" to Isaac, and Isaac went on the errand with a grave countenance.

That night after he went to bed he thought of a good deal. His sister Rachel was reading aloud in the next room. The story was all about love and romance, and suddenly these words caught Isaac's ear:

"Their cruel parents objected to the union and refused their consent. 'Never—never will I submit to them,' said Theodore. I will bear my Elvira away from them all, and we will dwell together upon some lonely island where stony-hearted age cannot vex us. Come, my Elvira, our boat is ready. Away!"

"Just what he should have done," cried Rachel at way of comment.

Isaac sat up in bed—a new idea had entered his mind.

He might, after all, elope with Trot. Down on the shore of the river many boats lay, and a sloop stopped once a week, and a steamer often came in sight.

He knew there were islands not far away. Why should he wait in the room? He would elope with Trot tomorrow.

If it was right for Theodore, who was a public character, being in a book, it was assuredly right for him, Isaac, and he asked his mother to let him go.

He was really thinking of it too, and at nine o'clock, having carefully folded two slices of bread and butter in paper, stuffed his pockets full of pears and tied a shilling he possessed in a corner of his handkerchief, he went in search of Trot, whom he found rocking her doll upon the little stone step of the garden.

"Trot," he said, "will you come and take a walk?"

"Yes," said Trot, and put her hand in his. Her mother smiled and nodded from the window.

She always felt quite safe about Trot when Isaac was with her. They vanished out of her sight, hand in hand, and little did she guess the plans in little Isaac's mind, or know that at that moment he was saying to Trot:

"Trot, dear, wouldn't you like to go away and live forever on a beautiful island with me, like Elvira and Theodore?"

"What is Elvira and Theodore?" asked Trot.

"Oh, here, Trot," said Isaac, "we've got cruel parents and they won't let us marry, so we must elope. Will you come and live alone with me on a lonely island?"

"Yes," said Trot, alternatively, and one hand into Isaac's hand and tucked her doll closer under her arm and was ready, and Isaac gallantly led her along to the wharf, along which at that moment people with picnic baskets were flocking on board of a steamer.

"All aboard for Muskadee Island!" cried a man with a bell, and Isaac helped Trot across the plank.

"Who pays for you, where's your folks?" yelled another man, who was taking tickets.

Isaac pointed towards the point at which the roof of his house was visible. The man fancied that he had indicated a fat lady with a basket, and said:—"All right."

And Isaac instantly dragged Trot into the thick of the crowd, and in five minutes more the boat had left the wharf, and Trot and Isaac were on their way to the romantic island of the boy's dreams.

The sail was delightful. Trot was amused by the sight of the people, the sparkling water, the dancing boat upon it.

Isaac was delighted. About noon the Muskadee Island was reached. The crowd hurried on shore and Trot was instantly conveyed by Isaac to a green spot, where the two sat down together, quite a happy family, with the doll between them.

"Isn't this nice?" asked Isaac.

"Yes," said Trot. "I want my dinner."

Isaac at once produced the bread and butter and the pears and they feasted. After this Trot fell asleep. Isaac took off his jacket and put it under her head.

Then he threw stones into the water for a long while and finally lay down upon the grass and fell asleep also.

He was awakened by piercing shrieks from Trot and started up in terror. The sun was setting. The steamboat was not to be seen; no more people were eating and drinking on the grass; there was neither dancing nor singing.

The picnic party had sailed away. Isaac was alone with his Trot upon a lonely island, where Isaac began to feel that he was not as great as he had imagined that it would be. And how Trot cried!

"I—I—I want my mamma! I—I—I want my mamma!" shrieked Trot. "Take me home to my—my mamma."

"Don't you want to stay with me, Trot?" asked Isaac, piteously.

"I want my mamma! I want my mamma! I want my supper!" shrieked Trot.

Isaac was in despair, but he thought him of the picnic ground, and there gathered up the relics of the feast—bits of sponge-cake, scraps of cold chicken and cakes.

He spread them before Trot. The child ate his dinner in five minutes, for he was hungry; but the two made short work of it, and the tears fell again, and the cries began again; and now Trot wanted not only her mamma and her papa, but her grandma and her baby.

Isaac was in despair, but he thought him of the picnic ground, and there gathered up the relics of the feast—bits of sponge-cake, scraps of cold chicken and cakes.

He spread them before Trot. The child ate his dinner in five minutes, for he was hungry; but the two made short work of it, and the tears fell again, and the cries began again; and now Trot wanted not only her mamma and her papa, but her grandma and her baby.

Isaac was in despair, but he thought him of the picnic ground, and there gathered up the relics of the feast—bits of sponge-cake, scraps of cold chicken and cakes.

He spread them before Trot. The child ate his dinner in five minutes, for he was hungry; but the two made short work of it, and the tears fell again, and the cries began again; and now Trot wanted not only her mamma and her papa, but her grandma and her baby.

Isaac was in despair, but he thought him of the picnic ground, and there gathered up the relics of the feast—bits of sponge-cake, scraps of cold chicken and cakes.

He spread them before Trot. The child ate his dinner in five minutes, for he was hungry; but the two made short work of it, and the tears fell again, and the cries began again; and now Trot wanted not only her mamma and her papa, but her grandma and her baby.

Isaac was in despair, but he thought him of the picnic ground, and there gathered up the relics of the feast—bits of sponge-cake, scraps of cold chicken and cakes.

He spread them before Trot. The child ate his dinner in five minutes, for he was hungry; but the two made short work of it, and the tears fell again, and the cries began again; and now Trot wanted not only her mamma and her papa, but her grandma and her baby.

Isaac was in despair, but he thought him of the picnic ground, and there gathered up the relics of the feast—bits of sponge-cake, scraps of cold chicken and cakes.

He spread them before Trot. The child ate his dinner in five minutes, for he was hungry; but the two made short work of it, and the tears fell again, and the cries began again; and now Trot wanted not only her mamma and her papa, but her grandma and her baby.

Isaac was in despair, but he thought him of the picnic ground, and there gathered up the relics of the feast—bits of sponge-cake, scraps of cold chicken and cakes.

He spread them before Trot. The child ate his dinner in five minutes, for he was hungry; but the two made short work of it, and the tears fell again, and the cries began again; and now Trot wanted not only her mamma and her papa, but her grandma and her baby.

Isaac was in despair, but he thought him of the picnic ground, and there gathered up the relics of the feast—bits of sponge-cake, scraps of cold chicken and cakes.

He spread them before Trot. The child ate his dinner in five minutes, for he was hungry; but the two made short work of it, and the tears fell again, and the cries began again; and now Trot wanted not only her mamma and her papa, but her grandma and her baby.

Isaac was in despair, but he thought him of the picnic ground, and there gathered up the relics of the feast—bits of sponge-cake, scraps of cold chicken and cakes.

He spread them before Trot. The child ate his dinner in five minutes, for he was hungry; but the two made short work of it, and the tears fell again, and the cries began again; and now Trot wanted not only her mamma and her papa, but her grandma and her baby.

Isaac was in despair, but he thought him of the picnic ground, and there gathered up the relics of the feast—bits of sponge-cake, scraps of cold chicken and cakes.

He spread them before Trot. The child ate his dinner in five minutes, for he was hungry; but the two made short work of it, and the tears fell again, and the cries began again; and now Trot wanted not only her mamma and her papa, but her grandma and her baby.

Isaac was in despair, but he thought him of the picnic ground, and there gathered up the relics of the feast—bits of sponge-cake, scraps of cold chicken and cakes.

He spread them before Trot. The child ate his dinner in five minutes, for he was hungry; but the two made short work of it, and the tears fell again, and the cries began again; and now Trot wanted not only her mamma and her papa, but her grandma and her baby.

Isaac was in despair, but he thought him of the picnic ground, and there gathered up the relics of the feast—bits of sponge-cake, scraps of cold chicken and cakes.

He spread them before Trot. The child ate his dinner in five minutes, for he was hungry; but the two made short work of it, and the tears fell again, and the cries began again; and now Trot wanted not only her mamma and her papa, but her grandma and her baby.

Isaac was in despair, but he thought him of the picnic ground, and there gathered up the relics of the feast—bits of sponge-cake, scraps of cold chicken and cakes.

He spread them before Trot. The child ate his dinner in five minutes, for he was hungry; but the two made short work of it, and the tears fell again, and the cries began again; and now Trot wanted not only her mamma and her papa, but her grandma and her baby.

Isaac was in despair, but he thought him of the picnic ground, and there gathered up the relics of the feast—bits of sponge-cake, scraps of cold chicken and cakes.

He spread them before Trot. The child ate his dinner in five minutes, for he was hungry; but the two made short work of it, and the tears fell again, and the cries began again; and now Trot wanted not only her mamma and her papa, but her grandma and her baby.

Isaac was in despair, but he thought him of the picnic ground, and there gathered up the relics of the feast—bits of sponge-cake, scraps of cold chicken and cakes.

He spread them before Trot. The child ate his dinner in five minutes, for he was hungry; but the two made short work of it, and the tears fell again, and the cries began again; and now Trot wanted not only her mamma and her papa, but her grandma and her baby.

Isaac was in despair, but he thought him of the picnic ground, and there gathered up the relics of the feast—bits of sponge-cake, scraps of cold chicken and cakes.

He spread them before Trot. The child ate his dinner in five minutes, for he was hungry; but the two made short work of it, and the tears fell again, and the cries began again; and now Trot wanted not only her mamma and her papa, but her grandma and her baby.

Isaac was in despair, but he thought him of the picnic ground, and there gathered up the relics of the feast—bits of sponge-cake, scraps of cold chicken and cakes.

He spread them before Trot. The child ate his dinner in five minutes, for he was hungry; but the two made short work of it, and the tears fell again, and the cries began again; and now Trot wanted not only her mamma and her papa, but her grandma and her baby.

Isaac was in despair, but he thought him of the picnic ground, and there gathered up the relics of the feast—bits of sponge-cake, scraps of

RELIGIOUS AND EDUCATIONAL.

—There is a movement to make plain sewing a regular branch of public school education in Syracuse, N. Y.

—The camp meeting is growing in favor of the Methodist, now Methodist have a list this year of not less than 150 camp meetings.

—The first missionaries ever sent out by the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions were sent out forty-four years ago and were Presbyterians. Ten Presbyterian churches have been the outcome of the work.

—Among the soldiers in the British army in Zululand are sixty or seventy Natal Kaffirs, who are professing Wesleyans, and every morning they hold prayer meetings in their camps.

—The colored Baptists of Alabama have sustained at Selma, during the past year, a theological and normal school with 262 students, and not only kept out of debt for current expenses, but have paid $1,000 besides on the purchase price of the buildings and grounds.

—A Presbyterian minister in Colorado has within a year organized churches, built one house of worship and a parsonage, bought a church organ, established two Sunday schools and three prayer meetings, taught three catechism classes, and supplied six preaching stations.

—The Rev. Alexander Clark, D. D., editor of the Methodist Recorder, of Pittsburgh, died recently at Atlanta, Ga. He was a native of Ohio, born in 1834. He entered the ministry in 1861, becoming editor in 1870, of the publication of the Methodist, now Methodist Protestant, Church. He wrote several books of travel, and stood in the front rank of his denomination.

—The Rev. Zachariah Paddock, D. D., an old Methodist minister, died recently at Binghamton, N. Y. He was born in 1775, was licensed to preach in 1818, and received Conference appointments for fifty-two years. He was an extensive writer for the press, and preached 14,000 sermons. When he entered the church it had only 214,235 members; now it reports 1,088,783.

—At the recent meeting of the Illinois school principals, it was advised that political science should be more taught in the schools; and it was complained that schools are too largely interested in unimportant and incompetent hands. One of the speakers urged that schools should make good citizens, very wisely and zealously insisting that education consists in something more than the completion of seven studies named in the school law.

—Superintendent Pease, of Cincinnati, is collecting the complaint that throughout the country the public school pupil is ignorant of language, and says that of the thousands who enter the high schools, comparatively few have ever heard the most familiar names of the greatest poets and historians. He described a proposed improvement in school literature, which provides for giving the pupils first extracts and then biographical studies.

—Useful sentences from the meeting of the Ohio Teachers' Association: "There is too much arithmetic studied, and too little understood." "We follow our fathers in underrating women; instead of weighing brains, we estimate by sex." "The teacher of today is a work to do that, in importance, rises above the usual routine of duties—that is, far above mathematics, the sciences, the arts, the classics; it is to make of the boys and girls entrusted to him men and women of purity and integrity."

—The Roman Catholic Church in the Eastern countries of Asia, where Protestantism has a comparatively feeble footing, and where a little more than half a century ago it had scarcely any at all, now reports at its mission no fewer than 109 bishops, 5,630 priests, and 2,835,663 nominal converts. Of these converts there are 887,474 in India, 772,412 in China, and 16,622 in Japan. More than 9,000 additions were made in the Cape and India last year. The early missions of the church in these countries from the days of Francis Xavier were very successful; but at the close of the last century, by the breaking up of the societies in France and Italy, they declined until little life remained in them. Since then a Society for the Promotion of the Faith has labored very zealously to recover ground that had been lost, and the figures here given illustrate the splendid success which has followed the work.

Pleasant Poisons.

We mentioned three edible nightshades—the potato, the tomato, and the Cape gooseberry. This last, of which some idea may be formed from the winter cherry of our gardens, is a native of Peru, but has been naturalized at the Cape and grows well in India. The calyx withers, but is persistent, and therefore the amber berry is contained in what may be fancifully called a thin paper bag. An excessively pleasant preserve is made from it, which is named Tiparoe jam, and would, we think, make a more welcome present than the Guava cheese, which country households always expect from Indian cousins. The amberberry, or egg-plant, also belongs to this family, but it is better known across the Channel than here. The fruit is not allowed by Paris gardeners to attain its full size, but is delivered partially ripe to the cook, who fries it and serves as a vegetable. It is violet or white, the former kind is more esteemed, and may be seen cultivated extensively in the environs of Paris, but still more so in the south of France. Under the name of Bifnjal it is familiar to Anglo-Indian housekeepers, and is welcomed chiefly as filling up an awkward time in hot weather when vegetables are scarce. Certain it is that in the Temple of the Sun at Sagemozo the seeds of the Floripondius or Datura sanguinea were used to produce religious ecstasy. The secret was doubtless known ages ago in Indian temples, and may have been carried by traveling mystics to Delphi, where the gestures and behavior of the priestess were such as a practiced and skillful use of datura might produce without danger to life.

The give and take of these nightshades have particularly noticed. Belladonna both lowers and restores the vital functions; tobacco irritates and soothes; datura relieves the laboring chest and frenzies the excited brain. Take one more rather singular instance of preparation by a plant of this family of mischief in which it has had a helping hand. One of the features of dissipated life is loss of appetite. The slender neck, generally only an excuse for more stimulant, is without difficulty got through. Still the votary of late hours has a midnight moment when he feels, or thinks he feels, that grilling bones would be a restorative, or would at any rate whip the energies sufficiently to make another bottle possible. For this reviving dish cayenne pepper is altogether a sine qua non. Grilled bones without cayenne, would, we will not say, be "Hamlet" with the Prince left out, but "Hamlet" with only the Ghost left in. It does not require a prophet to predict the end of these things, if associated with established habits, and the moralist may well stand aside and let consequences preach their own sermon. But doctors now declare that one of the most efficacious remedies in the painful disease dyspepsia is red pepper,—the capsaicin of medical revellers. It checks the craving which, where restraint is used drives the patient to the most subtle subterfuges to obtain what is preying upon his desires. This is the plant the companion of the vinegar in the hour of disastrous triumph, and it visits him when Nature lays upon him the penalty of her broken laws.—London Week.

Another Mercantile Failure.

Out on Michigan avenue a man near seventy years of age started a small confectionery store some months since, and the other day sent word to his three creditors up town that he had failed and desired to compromise. The trio went down to the store, which they found in full blast, and the four sat down for a talk.

"You see, gentlemen, I do not possess, and my family eats up all the profits," explained the tradesman by way of excuse.

"If I fail me twelve dollars," replied one of the creditors, "and each of the others fifteen a piece. That makes forty-two dollars."

"Shut forty-two," sighed the old man.

"Now, then, how much money have you on hand?"

"Shut sixty dollar and no more."

"Very well, as you have had back we will settle with you for one hundred and twenty cents on the dollar, and you can go on as before."

"Yaw, I will do dot, gentlemen, and I am much obliged for such kind treatment."

He got out his money, the twenty per cent. was added to the claims and paid, and before the creditors retired he insisted on treating them to ice cream.

They had been gone an hour before the old man rushed out and halted a policeman and said:

"If I fail in business and have one hundred and twenty cents on der dollar what does it mean?"

"It means that you don't understand how to fail," was the reply.

"Is dot possible?" whispered the old man.

"I should say so."

"Whell, I go pack to der shoe peesness again. When I fails in dot peesness again, I makes everythings. When I fails in dot peesness I pays more as I loves."

Grass Culture.

Grass is king among the crops of the earth. It lies at the very foundation of all our agricultural prosperity and success, for more land is devoted to its cultivation and more money realized from it than from any other product. Man and beast have lived without utilizing cotton, but never existed without being benefitted by the grasses and grains. Eden would never have been a paradise had not its fields been covered with the velvet carpet of green grass. The statistics of the nations of the earth prove that grass is the most essential and most remunerative of all crops. Grass is an indigenous product of our soil, as springs up spontaneously on all soils, while most other useful crops must be sown. As soon as the forests are cleared and the sunlight let in upon the ground, we find the nutritious grasses clothing the earth with verdure almost pleasing to the eye of man, and furnishing all herbivorous animals with life sustaining food. Chemical analysis and careful experiments agree in assigning a higher nutritive value to well made hay, in comparison with grain and roots than is generally allowed. From referring to several tables of nutritive equivalents, we find that 100 pounds of good English hay is equivalent in nutrition to about one bushel of corn or barley, two bushels of oats, four bushels of potatoes, or five bushels of carrots. And as we can raise 100 pounds of hay at less cost than a bushel of corn or four of potatoes, it follows that hay should be the leading crop, where crops are grown expressly to be fed to stock.

Lake George Rattlesnakes.

One denizen of this region can not be spoken of without a degree of respect combined with aversion. It is the rattlesnake. He lies the haunts of men, and is gradually disappearing from that vineyard; but, like inferior classes of men, which, before they altogether vanish before an advancing civilization, cling desperately to a few strongholds, so this reptile yet retains certain positions around the lake, which are infested in a way that demands caution on the part of the tourist. It is not uncommon to see these snakes swimming in the lake, passing from cove to cove or isle to isle. Leaving over a boat one calm day, I saw one swimming under the stern. He raised his head when he saw me, and the expression of his face was neither amiable nor assuming as he darted his head spitefully forward. I hit him with a stick when he dived and disappeared. Tongue Muskeels and Snapping Toads are most infested at present. An old man and woman who occupy a solitary cabin on the former have long made a business of catching rattlesnakes and supplying the market. The demand is much larger than one would suppose on the part of showmen and naturalists, and also from the rustics of the neighborhood, who have the notion that rattlesnake oil is an infallible remedy for the rheumatism. Doubtless this superstition—for it is nothing else—arose in the same way as the belief in former days in a newfangled remedy for a mummy, or the baboon's blood—objects remote or difficult to obtain. The quotation for good healthy rattlesnakes at Lake George average one dollar apiece, caught and delivered. Those who do not mind the trilling annoyance of being bitten by one are allowed the free range of the rattlesnake preserves, and may catch them for nothing.—S. G. W. Benjamin, in Harper's Magazine for August.

Brigham Young's Estate.

When the late head of the Mormon Church died two years ago, he left an estate valued at from $2,500,000 to $3,500,000, and from the particulars of a suit brought in the District Court of the United States for the Territory of Utah, by a daughter of Brigham, given to Arizona reporter yesterday by a gentleman from Salt Lake, it appears that a well-devised attempt has been made to turn over the larger share of it to the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints. On June 14 the suit referred to was begun in the name of Emiline A. Young McIntosh, a daughter and heir-at-law of Brigham Young, for herself and other beneficiaries under his will, numbering, as named in the complaint, some seventy heirs, and such others as may have been omitted, against George Q. Cannon, Albert Carrington, and Brigham Young, Jr., executors of the deceased, and John Taylor, trustee in trust of the Church, and others. The complaint alleges that the executors, being also assistant-trustees of the Church Corporation, have grossly neglected and violated their duties, and that they have wilfully and fraudulently wasted, converted, about $1,200,000 worth of the property of the estate. Of this $1,200,000 is alleged to have been converted to their own use, under pretense of compensation for their services, expenses, and payment of legacies. They are charged with having fraudulently allowed, in defiance of law, a false and fraudulent claim, against the estate of $300,000 and $90,000, this dissipation of the estate not less than $1,000,000. In this transfer the executors were both grantors and grantees. They were also members of the Apostles Quorum, known and called in the discipline and doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints as the Twelve Apostles, which is the head of the church, and which claims authority to control and direct the acts and conduct of the members of said church, of which the plaintiff and other beneficiaries under the will of Brigham Young's will were members. As such apostles, they claimed they had the right to dispose of the property as a religious duty, and that if any of the beneficiaries objected to their actions, they should be subject to their commands or doings, they had the right to disinherit all so refusing, and deprive them of all share in the estate. After having wasted the estate, as claimed, the executors sought to have the estate put ready for distribution; but demanded before delivering the shares under the will, full and entire releases to themselves for all other claims against them, and using their spiritual authority, they did compel the beneficiaries to release to the will to make such releases, except Nabby Howe Clawson, an heir, who refused, and received nothing. The complaint alleges that the orders for the sales of the real estate and in payment of the claims were issued by the Probate Court, and that subsequently Taylor made conveyances of the real estate to third parties, as a device to avoid the effect of the United States law, which prohibits any religious corporation from holding real estate. The income of the Young property conveyed to the church is stated to be $100,000 per annum, and this is now received by Taylor. Even the distributions as made are stated to be unfair, and unequal, favoritism being shown for some and invidious distinctions against others. The prayer of the complaint was for the appointment of a receiver; an injunction against the executors and Taylor from meddling with the estate in any way; for an allowance to carry on the suit; that all conveyances made by the executors and Taylor be declared fraudulent and void; that the executors be suspended and removed, and that trustees be appointed to settle and distribute the estate. On the day the complaint was filed the Judge of the United States District Court granted the application for a receiver, and in payment of the claims were issued by the Probate Court, and that subsequently Taylor made conveyances of the real estate to third parties, as a device to avoid the effect of the United States law, which prohibits any religious corporation from holding real estate. The income of the Young property conveyed to the church is stated to be $100,000 per annum, and this is now received by Taylor. Even the distributions as made are stated to be unfair, and unequal, favoritism being shown for some and invidious distinctions against others. The prayer of the complaint was for the appointment of a receiver; an injunction against the executors and Taylor from meddling with the estate in any way; for an allowance to carry on the suit; that all conveyances made by the executors and Taylor be declared fraudulent and void; that the executors be suspended and removed, and that trustees be appointed to settle and distribute the estate. On the day the complaint was filed the Judge of the United States District Court granted the application for a receiver, and in payment of the claims were issued by the Probate Court, and that subsequently Taylor made conveyances of the real estate to third parties, as a device to avoid the effect of the United States law, which prohibits any religious corporation from holding real estate. The income of the Young property conveyed to the church is stated to be $100,000 per annum, and this is now received by Taylor. Even the distributions as made are stated to be unfair, and unequal, favoritism being shown for some and invidious distinctions against others. The prayer of the complaint was for the appointment of a receiver; an injunction against the executors and Taylor from meddling with the estate in any way; for an allowance to carry on the suit; that all conveyances made by the executors and Taylor be declared fraudulent and void; that the executors be suspended and removed, and that trustees be appointed to settle and distribute the estate. On the day the complaint was filed the Judge of the United States District Court granted the application for a receiver, and in payment of the claims were issued by the Probate Court, and that subsequently Taylor made conveyances of the real estate to third parties, as a device to avoid the effect of the United States law, which prohibits any religious corporation from holding real estate. The income of the Young property conveyed to the church is stated to be $100,000 per annum, and this is now received by Taylor. Even the distributions as made are stated to be unfair, and unequal, favoritism being shown for some and invidious distinctions against others. The prayer of the complaint was for the appointment of a receiver; an injunction against the executors and Taylor from meddling with the estate in any way; for an allowance to carry on the suit; that all conveyances made by the executors and Taylor be declared fraudulent and void; that the executors be suspended and removed, and that trustees be appointed to settle and distribute the estate. On the day the complaint was filed the Judge of the United States District Court granted the application for a receiver, and in payment of the claims were issued by the Probate Court, and that subsequently Taylor made conveyances of the real estate to third parties, as a device to avoid the effect of the United States law, which prohibits any religious corporation from holding real estate. The income of the Young property conveyed to the church is stated to be $100,000 per annum, and this is now received by Taylor. Even the distributions as made are stated to be unfair, and unequal, favoritism being shown for some and invidious distinctions against others. The prayer of the complaint was for the appointment of a receiver; an injunction against the executors and Taylor from meddling with the estate in any way; for an allowance to carry on the suit; that all conveyances made by the executors and Taylor be declared fraudulent and void; that the executors be suspended and removed, and that trustees be appointed to settle and distribute the estate. On the day the complaint was filed the Judge of the United States District Court granted the application for a receiver, and in payment of the claims were issued by the Probate Court, and that subsequently Taylor made conveyances of the real estate to third parties, as a device to avoid the effect of the United States law, which prohibits any religious corporation from holding real estate. The income of the Young property conveyed to the church is stated to be $100,000 per annum, and this is now received by Taylor. Even the distributions as made are stated to be unfair, and unequal, favoritism being shown for some and invidious distinctions against others. The prayer of the complaint was for the appointment of a receiver; an injunction against the executors and Taylor from meddling with the estate in any way; for an allowance to carry on the suit; that all conveyances made by the executors and Taylor be declared fraudulent and void; that the executors be suspended and removed, and that trustees be appointed to settle and distribute the estate. On the day the complaint was filed the Judge of the United States District Court granted the application for a receiver, and in payment of the claims were issued by the Probate Court, and that subsequently Taylor made conveyances of the real estate to third parties, as a device to avoid the effect of the United States law, which prohibits any religious corporation from holding real estate. The income of the Young property conveyed to the church is stated to be $100,000 per annum, and this is now received by Taylor. Even the distributions as made are stated to be unfair, and unequal, favoritism being shown for some and invidious distinctions against others. The prayer of the complaint was for the appointment of a receiver; an injunction against the executors and Taylor from meddling with the estate in any way; for an allowance to carry on the suit; that all conveyances made by the executors and Taylor be declared fraudulent and void; that the executors be suspended and removed, and that trustees be appointed to settle and distribute the estate. On the day the complaint was filed the Judge of the United States District Court granted the application for a receiver, and in payment of the claims were issued by the Probate Court, and that subsequently Taylor made conveyances of the real estate to third parties, as a device to avoid the effect of the United States law, which prohibits any religious corporation from holding real estate. The income of the Young property conveyed to the church is stated to be $100,000 per annum, and this is now received by Taylor. Even the distributions as made are stated to be unfair, and unequal, favoritism being shown for some and invidious distinctions against others. The prayer of the complaint was for the appointment of a receiver; an injunction against the executors and Taylor from meddling with the estate in any way; for an allowance to carry on the suit; that all conveyances made by the executors and Taylor be declared fraudulent and void; that the executors be suspended and removed, and that trustees be appointed to settle and distribute the estate. On the day the complaint was filed the Judge of the United States District Court granted the application for a receiver, and in payment of the claims were issued by the Probate Court, and that subsequently Taylor made conveyances of the real estate to third parties, as a device to avoid the effect of the United States law, which prohibits any religious corporation from holding real estate. The income of the Young property conveyed to the church is stated to be $100,000 per annum, and this is now received by Taylor. Even the distributions as made are stated to be unfair, and unequal, favoritism being shown for some and invidious distinctions against others. The prayer of the complaint was for the appointment of a receiver; an injunction against the executors and Taylor from meddling with the estate in any way; for an allowance to carry on the suit; that all conveyances made by the executors and Taylor be declared fraudulent and void; that the executors be suspended and removed, and that trustees be appointed to settle and distribute the estate. On the day the complaint was filed the Judge of the United States District Court granted the application for a receiver, and in payment of the claims were issued by the Probate Court, and that subsequently Taylor made conveyances of the real estate to third parties, as a device to avoid the effect of the United States law, which prohibits any religious corporation from holding real estate. The income of the Young property conveyed to the church is stated to be $100,000 per annum, and this is now received by Taylor. Even the distributions as made are stated to be unfair, and unequal, favoritism being shown for some and invidious distinctions against others. The prayer of the complaint was for the appointment of a receiver; an injunction against the executors and Taylor from meddling with the estate in any way; for an allowance to carry on the suit; that all conveyances made by the executors and Taylor be declared fraudulent and void; that the executors be suspended and removed, and that trustees be appointed to settle and distribute the estate. On the day the complaint was filed the Judge of the United States District Court granted the application for a receiver, and in payment of the claims were issued by the Probate Court, and that subsequently Taylor made conveyances of the real estate to third parties, as a device to avoid the effect of the United States law, which prohibits any religious corporation from holding real estate. The income of the Young property conveyed to the church is stated to be $100,000 per annum, and this is now received by Taylor. Even the distributions as made are stated to be unfair, and unequal, favoritism being shown for some and invidious distinctions against others. The prayer of the complaint was for the appointment of a receiver; an injunction against the executors and Taylor from meddling with the estate in any way; for an allowance to carry on the suit; that all conveyances made by the executors and Taylor be declared fraudulent and void; that the executors be suspended and removed, and that trustees be appointed to settle and distribute the estate. On the day the complaint was filed the Judge of the United States District Court granted the application for a receiver, and in payment of the claims were issued by the Probate Court, and that subsequently Taylor made conveyances of the real estate to third parties, as a device to avoid the effect of the United States law, which prohibits any religious corporation from holding real estate. The income of the Young property conveyed to the church is stated to be $100,000 per annum, and this is now received by Taylor. Even the distributions as made are stated to be unfair, and unequal, favoritism being shown for some and invidious distinctions against others. The prayer of the complaint was for the appointment of a receiver; an injunction against the executors and Taylor from meddling with the estate in any way; for an allowance to carry on the suit; that all conveyances made by the executors and Taylor be declared fraudulent and void; that the executors be suspended and removed, and that trustees be appointed to settle and distribute the estate. On the day the complaint was filed the Judge of the United States District Court granted the application for a receiver, and in payment of the claims were issued by the Probate Court, and that subsequently Taylor made conveyances of the real estate to third parties, as a device to avoid the effect of the United States law, which prohibits any religious corporation from holding real estate. The income of the Young property conveyed to the church is stated to be $100,000 per annum, and this is now received by Taylor. Even the distributions as made are stated to be unfair, and unequal, favoritism being shown for some and invidious distinctions against others. The prayer of the complaint was for the appointment of a receiver; an injunction against the executors and Taylor from meddling with the estate in any way; for an allowance to carry on the suit; that all conveyances made by the executors and Taylor be declared fraudulent and void; that the executors be suspended and removed, and that trustees be appointed to settle and distribute the estate. On the day the complaint was filed the Judge of the United States District Court granted the application for a receiver, and in payment of the claims were issued by the Probate Court, and that subsequently Taylor made conveyances of the real estate to third parties, as a device to avoid the effect of the United States law, which prohibits any religious corporation from holding real estate. The income of the Young property conveyed to the church is stated to be $100,000 per annum, and this is now received by Taylor. Even the distributions as made are stated to be unfair, and unequal, favoritism being shown for some and invidious distinctions against others. The prayer of the complaint was for the appointment of a receiver; an injunction against the executors and Taylor from meddling with the estate in any way; for an allowance to carry on the suit; that all conveyances made by the executors and Taylor be declared fraudulent and void; that the executors be suspended and removed, and that trustees be appointed to settle and distribute the estate. On the day the complaint was filed the Judge of the United States District Court granted the application for a receiver, and in payment of the claims were issued by the Probate Court, and that subsequently Taylor made conveyances of the real estate to third parties, as a device to avoid the effect of the United States law, which prohibits any religious corporation from holding real estate. The income of the Young property conveyed to the church is stated to be $100,000 per annum, and this is now received by Taylor. Even the distributions as made are stated to be unfair, and unequal, favoritism being shown for some and invidious distinctions against others. The prayer of the complaint was for the appointment of a receiver; an injunction against the executors and Taylor from meddling with the estate in any way; for an allowance to carry on the suit; that all conveyances made by the executors and Taylor be declared fraudulent and void; that the executors be suspended and removed, and that trustees be appointed to settle and distribute the estate. On the day the complaint was filed the Judge of the United States District Court granted the application for a receiver, and in payment of the claims were issued by the Probate Court, and that subsequently Taylor made conveyances of the real estate to third parties, as a device to avoid the effect of the United States law, which prohibits any religious corporation from holding real estate. The income of the Young property conveyed to the church is stated to be $100,000 per annum, and this is now received by Taylor. Even the distributions as made are stated to be unfair, and unequal, favoritism being shown for some and invidious distinctions against others. The prayer of the complaint was for the appointment of a receiver; an injunction against the executors and Taylor from meddling with the estate in any way; for an allowance to carry on the suit; that all conveyances made by the executors and Taylor be declared fraudulent and void; that the executors be suspended and removed, and that trustees be appointed to settle and distribute the estate. On the day the complaint was filed the Judge of the United States District Court granted the application for a receiver, and in payment of the claims were issued by the Probate Court, and that subsequently Taylor made conveyances of the real estate to third parties, as a device to avoid the effect of the United States law, which prohibits any religious corporation from holding real estate. The income of the Young property conveyed to the church is stated to be $100,000 per annum, and this is now received by Taylor. Even the distributions as made are stated to be unfair, and unequal, favoritism being shown for some and invidious distinctions against others. The prayer of the complaint was for the appointment of a receiver; an injunction against the executors and Taylor from meddling with the estate in any way; for an allowance to carry on the suit; that all conveyances made by the executors and Taylor be declared fraudulent and void; that the executors be suspended and removed, and that trustees be appointed to settle and distribute the estate. On the day the complaint was filed the Judge of the United States District Court granted the application for a receiver, and in payment of the claims were issued by the Probate Court, and that subsequently Taylor made conveyances of the real estate to third parties, as a device to avoid the effect of the United States law, which prohibits any religious corporation from holding real estate. The income of the Young property conveyed to the church is stated to be $100,000 per annum, and this is now received by Taylor. Even the distributions as made are stated to be unfair, and unequal, favoritism being shown for some and invidious distinctions against others. The prayer of the complaint was for the appointment of a receiver; an injunction against the executors and Taylor from meddling with the estate in any way; for an allowance to carry on the suit; that all conveyances made by the executors and Taylor be declared fraudulent and void; that the executors be suspended and removed, and that trustees be appointed to settle and distribute the estate. On the day the complaint was filed the Judge of the United States District Court granted the application for a receiver, and in payment of the claims were issued by the Probate Court, and that subsequently Taylor made conveyances of the real estate to third parties, as a device to avoid the effect of the United States law, which prohibits any religious corporation from holding real estate. The income of the Young property conveyed to the church is stated to be $100,000 per annum, and this is now received by Taylor. Even the distributions as made are stated to be unfair, and unequal, favoritism being shown for some and invidious distinctions against others. The prayer of the complaint was for the appointment of a receiver; an injunction against the executors and Taylor from meddling with the estate in any way; for an allowance to carry on the suit; that all conveyances made by the executors and Taylor be declared fraudulent and void; that the executors be suspended and removed, and that trustees be appointed to settle and distribute the estate. On the day the complaint was filed the Judge of the United States District Court granted the application for a receiver, and in payment of the claims were issued by the Probate Court, and that subsequently Taylor made conveyances of the real estate to third parties, as a device to avoid the effect of the United States law, which prohibits any religious corporation from holding real estate. The income of the Young property conveyed to the church is stated to be $100,000 per annum, and this is now received by Taylor. Even the distributions as made are stated to be unfair, and unequal, favoritism being shown for some and invidious distinctions against others. The prayer of the complaint was for the appointment of a receiver; an injunction against the executors and Taylor from meddling with the estate in any way; for an allowance to carry on the suit; that all conveyances made by the executors and Taylor be declared fraudulent and void; that the executors be suspended and removed, and that trustees be appointed to settle and distribute the estate. On the day the complaint was filed the Judge of the United States District Court granted the application for a receiver, and in payment of the claims were issued by the Probate Court, and that subsequently Taylor made conveyances of the real estate to third parties, as a device to avoid the effect of the United States law, which prohibits any religious corporation from holding real estate. The income of the Young property conveyed to the church is stated to be $100,000 per annum, and this is now received by Taylor. Even the distributions as made are stated to be unfair, and unequal, favoritism being shown for some and invidious distinctions against others. The prayer of the complaint was for the appointment of a receiver; an injunction against the executors and Taylor from meddling with the estate in any way; for an allowance to carry on the suit; that all conveyances made by the executors and Taylor be declared fraudulent and void; that the executors be suspended and removed, and that trustees be appointed to settle and distribute the estate. On the day the complaint was filed the Judge of the United States District Court granted the application for a receiver, and in payment of the claims were issued by the Probate Court, and that subsequently Taylor made conveyances of the real estate to third parties, as a device to avoid the effect of the United States law, which prohibits any religious corporation from holding real estate. The income of the Young property conveyed to the church is stated to be $100,000 per annum, and this is now received by Taylor. Even the distributions as made are stated to be unfair, and unequal, favoritism being shown for some and invidious distinctions against others. The prayer of the complaint was for the appointment of a receiver; an injunction against the executors and Taylor from meddling with the estate in any way; for an allowance to carry on the suit; that all conveyances made by the executors and Taylor be declared fraudulent and void; that the executors be suspended and removed, and that trustees be appointed to settle and distribute the estate. On the day the complaint was filed the Judge of the United States District Court granted the application for a receiver, and in payment of the claims were issued by the Probate Court, and that subsequently Taylor made conveyances of the real estate to third parties, as a device to avoid the effect of the United States law, which prohibits any religious corporation from holding real estate. The income of the Young property conveyed to the church is stated to be $100,000 per annum, and this is now received by Taylor. Even the distributions as made are stated to be unfair, and unequal, favoritism being shown for some and invidious distinctions against others. The prayer of the complaint was for the appointment of a receiver; an injunction against the executors and Taylor from meddling with the estate in any way; for an allowance to carry on the suit; that all conveyances made by the executors and Taylor be declared fraudulent and void; that the executors be suspended and removed, and that trustees be appointed to settle and distribute the estate. On the day the complaint was filed the Judge of the United States District Court granted the application for a receiver, and in payment of the claims were issued by the Probate Court, and that subsequently Taylor made conveyances of the real estate to third parties, as a device to avoid the effect of the United States law, which prohibits any religious corporation from holding real estate. The income of the Young property conveyed to the church is stated to be $100,000 per annum, and this is now received by Taylor. Even the distributions as made are stated to be unfair, and unequal, favoritism being shown for some and invidious distinctions against others. The prayer of the complaint was for the appointment of a receiver; an injunction against the executors and Taylor from meddling with the estate in any way; for an allowance to carry on the suit; that all conveyances made by the executors and Taylor be declared fraudulent and void; that the executors be suspended and removed, and that trustees be appointed to settle and distribute the estate. On the day the complaint was filed the Judge of the United States District Court granted the application for a receiver, and in payment of the claims were issued by the Probate Court, and that subsequently Taylor made conveyances of the real estate to third parties, as a device to avoid the effect of the United States law, which prohibits any religious corporation from holding real estate. The income of the Young property conveyed to the church is stated to be $100,000 per annum, and this is now received by Taylor. Even the distributions as made are stated to be unfair, and unequal, favoritism being shown for some and invidious distinctions against others. The prayer of the complaint was for the appointment of a receiver; an injunction against the executors and Taylor from meddling with the estate in any way; for an allowance to carry on the suit; that all conveyances made by the executors and Taylor be declared fraudulent and void; that the executors be suspended and removed, and that trustees be appointed to settle and distribute the estate. On the day the complaint was filed the Judge of the United States District Court granted the application for a receiver, and in payment of the claims were issued by the Probate Court, and that subsequently Taylor made conveyances of the real estate to third parties, as a device to avoid the effect of the United States law, which prohibits any religious corporation from holding real estate. The income of the Young property conveyed to the church is stated to be $100,000 per annum, and this is now received by Taylor. Even the distributions as made are stated to be unfair, and unequal, favoritism being shown for some and invidious distinctions against others. The prayer of the complaint was for the appointment of a receiver; an injunction against the executors and Taylor from meddling with the estate in any way; for an allowance to carry on the suit; that all conveyances made by the executors and Taylor be declared fraudulent and void; that the executors be suspended and removed, and that trustees be appointed to settle and distribute the estate. On the day the complaint was filed the Judge of the United States District Court granted the application for a receiver, and in payment of the claims were issued by the Probate Court, and that subsequently Taylor made conveyances of the real estate to third parties, as a device to avoid the effect of the United States law, which prohibits any religious corporation from holding real estate. The income of the Young property conveyed to the church is stated to be $100,000 per annum, and this is now received by Taylor. Even the distributions as made are stated to be unfair, and unequal, favoritism being shown for some and invidious distinctions against others. The prayer of the complaint was for the appointment of a receiver; an injunction against the executors and Taylor from meddling with the estate in any way; for an allowance to carry on the suit; that all conveyances made by the executors and Taylor be declared fraudulent and void; that the executors be suspended and removed, and that trustees be appointed to settle and distribute the estate. On the day the complaint was filed the Judge of the United States District Court granted the application for a receiver, and in payment of the claims were issued by the Probate Court, and that subsequently Taylor made conveyances of the real estate to third parties, as a device to avoid the effect of the United States law, which prohibits any religious corporation from holding real estate. The income of the Young property conveyed to the church is stated to be $100,000 per annum, and this is now received by Taylor. Even the distributions as made are stated to be unfair, and unequal, favoritism being shown for some and invidious distinctions against others. The prayer of the complaint was for the appointment of a receiver; an injunction against the executors and Taylor from meddling with the estate in any way; for an allowance to carry on the suit; that all conveyances made by the executors and Taylor be declared fraudulent and void; that the executors be suspended and removed, and that trustees be appointed to settle and distribute the estate. On the day the complaint was filed the Judge of the United States District Court granted the application for a receiver, and in payment of the claims were issued by the Probate Court, and that subsequently Taylor made conveyances of the real estate to third parties, as a device to avoid the effect of the United States law, which prohibits any religious corporation from holding real estate. The income of the Young property conveyed to the church is stated to be $100,000 per annum, and this is now received by Taylor. Even the distributions as made are stated to be unfair, and unequal, favoritism being shown for some and invidious distinctions against others. The prayer of the complaint was for the appointment of a receiver; an injunction against the executors and Taylor from meddling with the estate in any way; for an allowance to carry on the suit; that all conveyances made by the executors and Taylor be declared fraudulent and void; that the executors be suspended and removed, and that trustees be appointed to settle and distribute the estate. On the day the complaint was filed the Judge of the United States District Court granted the application for a receiver, and in payment of the claims were issued by the Probate Court, and that subsequently Taylor made conveyances of the real estate to third parties, as a device to avoid the effect of the United States law, which prohibits any religious corporation from holding real estate. The income of the Young property conveyed to the church is stated to be $100,000 per annum, and this is now received by Taylor. Even the distributions as made are stated to be unfair, and unequal, favoritism being shown for some and invidious distinctions against others. The prayer of the complaint was for the appointment of a receiver; an injunction against the executors and Taylor from meddling with the estate in any way; for an allowance to carry on the suit; that all conveyances made by the executors and Taylor be declared fraudulent and void; that the executors be suspended and removed, and that trustees be appointed to settle and distribute the estate. On the day the complaint was filed the Judge of the United States District Court granted the application for a receiver, and in payment of the claims were issued by the Probate Court, and that subsequently Taylor made conveyances of the real estate to third parties, as a device to avoid the effect of the United States law, which prohibits any religious corporation from holding real estate. The income of the Young property conveyed to the church is stated to be $100,000 per annum, and this is now received by Taylor. Even the distributions as made are stated to be unfair, and unequal, favoritism being shown for some and invidious distinctions against others. The prayer of the complaint was for the appointment of a receiver; an injunction against the executors and Taylor from meddling with the estate in any way; for an allowance to carry on the suit; that all conveyances made by the executors and Taylor be declared fraudulent and void; that the executors be suspended and removed, and that trustees be appointed to settle and distribute the estate. On the day the complaint was filed the Judge of the United States District Court granted the application for a receiver, and in payment of the claims were issued by the Probate Court, and that subsequently Taylor made conveyances of the real estate to third parties, as a device to avoid the effect of the United States law, which prohibits any religious corporation from holding real estate. The income of the Young property conveyed to the church is stated to be $100,000 per annum, and this is now received by Taylor. Even the distributions as made are stated to be unfair, and unequal, favoritism being shown for some and invidious distinctions against others. The prayer of the complaint was for the appointment of a receiver; an injunction against the executors and Taylor from meddling with the estate in any way; for an allowance to carry on the suit; that all conveyances made by the executors and Taylor be declared fraudulent and void; that the executors be suspended and removed, and that trustees be appointed to settle and distribute the estate. On the day the complaint was filed the Judge of the United States District Court granted the application for a receiver, and in payment of the claims were issued by the Probate Court, and that subsequently Taylor made conveyances of the real estate to third parties, as a device to avoid the effect of the United States law, which prohibits any religious corporation from holding real estate. The income of the Young property conveyed to the church is stated to be $100,000 per annum, and this is now received by Taylor. Even the distributions as made are stated to be unfair, and unequal, favoritism being shown for some and invidious distinctions against others. The prayer of the complaint was for the appointment of a receiver; an injunction against the executors and Taylor from meddling with the estate in any way; for an allowance to carry on the suit; that all conveyances made by the executors and Taylor be declared fraudulent and void; that the executors be suspended and removed, and that trustees be appointed to settle and distribute the estate. On the day the complaint was filed the Judge of the United States District Court granted the application for a receiver, and in payment of the claims were issued by the Probate Court, and that subsequently Taylor made conveyances of the real estate to third parties, as a device to avoid the effect of the United States law, which prohibits any religious corporation from holding real estate. The income of the Young property conveyed to the church is stated to be $100,000 per annum, and this is now received by Taylor. Even the distributions as made are stated to be unfair, and unequal, favoritism being shown for some and invidious distinctions against others. The prayer of the complaint was for the appointment of a receiver; an injunction against the executors and Taylor from meddling with the estate in any way; for an allowance to carry on the suit; that all conveyances made by the executors and Taylor be declared fraudulent and void; that the executors be suspended and removed, and that trustees be appointed to settle and distribute the estate. On the day the complaint was filed the Judge of the United States District Court granted the application for a receiver, and in payment of the claims were issued by the Probate Court, and that subsequently Taylor made conveyances of the real estate to third parties, as a device to avoid the effect of the United States law, which prohibits any religious corporation from holding real estate. The income of the Young property conveyed to the church is stated to be $100,000 per annum, and this is now received by Taylor. Even the distributions as made are stated to be unfair, and unequal, favoritism being shown for some and invidious distinctions against others. The prayer of the complaint was for the appointment of a receiver; an injunction against the executors and Taylor from meddling with the estate in any way; for an allowance to carry on the suit; that all conveyances made by the executors and Taylor be declared fraudulent and void; that the executors be suspended and removed, and that trustees be appointed to settle and distribute the estate. On the day the complaint was filed the Judge of the United States District Court granted the application for a receiver, and in payment of the claims were issued by the Probate Court, and that subsequently Taylor made conveyances of the real estate to third parties, as a device to avoid the effect of the United States law, which prohibits any religious corporation from holding real estate. The income of the Young property conveyed to the church is stated to be $100,000 per annum, and this is now received by Taylor. Even the distributions as made are stated to be unfair, and unequal, favoritism being shown for some and invidious distinctions against others. The prayer of the complaint was for the appointment of a receiver; an injunction against the executors and Taylor from meddling with the estate in any way; for an allowance to carry on the suit; that all conveyances made by the executors and Taylor be declared fraudulent and void; that the executors be suspended and removed, and that trustees be appointed to settle and distribute the estate. On the day the complaint was filed the Judge of the United States District Court granted the application for a receiver, and in payment of the claims were issued by the Probate Court, and that subsequently Taylor made conveyances of the real estate to third parties, as a device to avoid the effect of the United States law, which prohibits any religious corporation from holding real estate. The income of the Young property conveyed to the church is stated to be $100,000 per annum, and this is now received by Taylor. Even the distributions as made are stated to be unfair, and unequal, favoritism being shown for some and in

THE REPUBLICAN.

VOLUME 3.

OAKLAND, MD., SATURDAY, AUGUST 9, 1879.

NUMBER 24.

OAKLAND BUSINESS GUIDE.

DRY GOODS, GROCERIES, etc.

D. E. OFFUTT,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Agricultural Machinery, Medical Instruments,
Guns, Pistols, etc.

G. W. LEGGE,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Cor. Second & Oak sts.

D. H. LOAR,
ORIGINAL NEW YORK STORE,
General Merchandise, Watches, Clocks, Jew-
elry, etc.

I. W. STALNAKER,
Grocery and Provision Store,
Corner Third and Oak Streets.

J. A. GRANT,
Dry Goods, Notions & Groceries,
SPECIAL LINE OF TOBACCO.

DAVIS & TOWNSEND,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Agents Agricultural Machinery,
Opposite Valley's Park.

C. C. MICHAEL,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Selling all kinds of Confectionery, etc., Next to Golding's Hotel.

RICHARDSON BROS.,
GROCERIES, CONFECTIONERIES,
Canned Goods, Fruit, etc.

HOTELS.

CODDINGTON'S HOTEL,
W. M. CODDINGTON, Proprietor,
Main St., opposite Harrison's Billiard Saloon.

LIVERY STABLE.

THOMAS MARTIN,
Opposite Postoffice.

STOVES AND TINWARE.

G. A. SHIRER,
Oak Street, near Second.
A general line of Stoves and Tinware.

PHYSICIANS.

DR. J. LEE MCCOMAS,
Office on Main Street.

DR. E. E. PARSONS,
offers his professional services
to the people of Oakland and vicinity.
Office in the old Offutt building,
38 3m.

PLASTERER.

JAMES ARNOLD,
Residence on Fourth Street.

BOOT AND SHOE MAKER.

W. M. M. WAGNER,
Shop Cor. First & Oak Sts.

GEO. F. LOUGHRIDGE,
Leave orders at Express office.

SURVEYORS.

J. B. BRANT,
Surveyor, Auctioneer and
Conveyancer,
Oakland, Garrett county, Md.

JOHN HARNED,
Address, Post Office.

JEWELER.

A. B. WOODCOCK,
In Wm. Stinson's Building,
Watches and Clocks Cleaned and Repaired.

MILLINERY AND FANCY GOODS.

MRS. M. E. DAVIS,
Cor. Oak & Second Sts.

M. L. SCOTT'S Baltimore Store,
Millinery, Gents' Furnishing
and Fancy Goods, and Shoes,
Main Street, opposite Dr. McComas' office.

DRUGS AND MEDICINES.

GEO. C. STURGEISS,
Drugs, Medicines,
Perfumery, Toilet articles, Stationery,
Tobacco and Cigars.

G. W. MERRILL,
Near Depot.
Pure Drugs, Medicines, Toilet Goods, Station-
ery, Cigars and Tobacco, French Candy, Folios, Fishing Tackle, &c. Physician's prescriptions accurately compounded.

PAINTING & PAPER HANG- ING.

E. J. FRISCHER,
House and Sign Painter.
And Paper Hanger.
Leave orders at Bush's Store.

S. V. B. WARD,
HOUSE AND SIGN PAINTER
Shop near Davis House.

BLACKSMITHS.

CHAS. SINCELI,
Liberty Street.

CONTRACTORS & BUILDERS.

JOHN M. JARBOE,
Carpenter, Contractor & Builder,
Residence on Liberty St., nearly oppo. Depot.

P. A. CHISHOLM,
Carpenter, Contractor,
Residence on Centre street.

GEO. A. SPEDDEN,
Residence opp. School house.

JOSEPH M. CRIM,
Residence on Adler Street.

A. C. BROOKE,
Res. near Republican office.

CABINETMAKERS AND UN- DERTAKERS.

A. C. BROOKE,
Res. adjoining Gazette office.

JOHN SHATZER,
Shop on Second Street.

H. T. HELMBOLD'S

COMPOUND

Fluid Extract

BUCHU.

PHARMACEUTICAL

A SPECIFIC REMEDY FOR ALL

DISEASES

OF THE

BLADDER & KIDNEYS.

For Debility, Loss of Memory, Indisposi-
tion to Exertion or Business, Shortness of
Breath, Troubled with Thoughts of Disease,
Business of Vision, Pain in the Back, Chest,
and Head, Kink of Blood to the Head, Pale Complexion, and Dry Skin.

If these symptoms are allowed to go on,
very frequently, Hemorrhoids, Erysipelas, and other diseases follow. When the Constitution becomes affected it requires the aid of an invigorating
medicine to strengthen and tone up the system—which

"Helmbold's Buchu"

DOES IN EVERY CASE.

HELMBOLD'S BUCHU

IS UNEQUALED

By any remedy known. It is prescribed by
the most eminent physicians all over the
world.

Rheumatism,
Spermatorrhea,
Neuralgia,
Nervousness,
Dyspepsia,
Indigestion,
Constipation,
Aches and Pains,
General Debility,
Kidney Diseases,
Liver Complaint,
Nervous Debility,
Epilepsy,
Head Troubles,
Paralysis,
General Ill Health,

Spinal Diseases,
Sciatica,
Deafness,
Decline,
Lumbago,
Catarrh,
Nervous Complaints,
Female Complaints, &c.

Headache, Pain in the Shoulders, Cough,
Rashness, Sore Throat, Eruptions, Red
Taste in the Mouth, Pimples on the Face,
Pain in the region of the Kidneys, and a
thousand other painful symptoms, are the
offspring of Dyspepsia.

HELMBOLD'S BUCHU

Invigorates the Stomach.

And stimulates the torpid Liver, Bowels, and
Kidneys to healthy action, in cleansing the
blood of all impurities, and imparting new
life and vigor to the whole system.
A single trial will be quite sufficient to
convince the most hesitating of its valuable
remedial qualities.

Price $1 Per Bottle,

Or Six Bottles for $5.

Delivered to any address free from observa-
tion.

"Patients" may consult by letter, receiving
the same attention as by calling.
Competent Physicians attend to correspondents. All letters should be addressed to

H. T. HELMBOLD,

DRUGGIST AND CHEMIST,

Philadelphia, Pa.

CAUTION!

See that the private Pro-
prietary Stamp is on
each bottle.

SOLD EVERYWHERE.

my 10-lyr.

INTERNATIONAL BIBLE LESSONS.

SUNDAY, AUG. 10, 1879.

THE FRUIT OF THE SPIRIT.

GENERAL STATEMENT.

The Province of Galatia occupied the highlands in the northern part of central Asia
Minor, and was inhabited by a tribe of Gauls (of the same race with the Frenchmen of the present) who had conquered it from the Phrygians about B. C. 300, but were reduced into subjection to the Roman rule about B. C.
25. During Paul's second missionary journey, about A. D. 51, they embraced the Gospel with all the ardor of their race. But, after the apostle's departure, Jewish teachers appeared, speaking slightly of Paul's authority,
and proclaiming the necessity of circumcision, and of obedience to the Mosaic law.
With the fickleness of the Gallic character,
they were ready at once to forsake the doctrine of the Gospel, and to put on the heavy yoke of Judaism. Paul heard of their danger, and quickly dispatched this epistle to continue the influence of the false teachers. Its tone is at once most severe and most affectionate, and its aim, not only to prove Paul's apostleship, but also to show that salvation is by faith alone; that in Christ men are freed from the fetters of Jewish law, and that spiritual Christianity requires no service of ceremonial observances. In this chapter he has been discussing of gospel liberty, which he carefully distinguishes from licentious-ness, warning against the works of the flesh
and then showing the fruit of the Spirit,
the motives which should control us in our relations with each other, and the certainty that our conduct here will determine our inheritance.

Gal. 5: 22-23; 6: 1-9.

Memory Verses, 22-23.

22 But the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy,
peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness,
faith,

23 Meekness, temperance; against such
there is no law.

24 And they that are Christ's have crucified
the flesh with the affections and lusts.

25 If we live in the Spirit, let us also walk in the Spirit.

26 Let us not be desirous of vain-glory, provoking one another, envying one another.

1 Brethren, if a man be overtaken in a fault, ye which are spiritual restore such an one in the spirit of meekness, considering thyself, lest thou also be tempted.

2 Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfil the law of Christ.

3 For if a man think himself to be something when he is nothing, he deceiveth himself.

4 But let every man prove his own work,
and then shall he have rejoicing in himself
alone, and not in another.

5 For every man shall bear his own burden.

6 Let him that is taught in the word communicate unto him that teacheth in all good
things.

7 Be not deceived; God is not mocked: for whosoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap.

8 For he that soweth to his flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he that soweth
to the Spirit shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting.

9 And let us not be weary in well-doing:
for in due season we shall reap, if we faint
not.

HOME READINGS.

M. The fruit of the Spirit, Gal. 5: 22-23; 6: 1-9.

Tu. The source of character, John 15: 1-11.

We. The formation of character, Jas. 1: 1-25.

Th. The test of character, Matt. 7: 15-23.

F. The endurance of character, Psal. 92: 1-15.

S. The result of character, Matt. 13: 21-35.

S. The blessedness of character, Matt. 5: 1-12.

GOLDEN TEXT.

Be not deceived; God is not mocked: for whosoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap. Gal. 6: 7.

LESSON HYMN, S. M.

Make it my highest bliss
Thy blessed fruits to know,
Thy joy, and peace and gentleness,
Goodness and faith, to show.

Be it my greatest fear
Thy holiness to grieve;
Walk in the Spirit ever,
And in the Spirit live.

QUESTIONS ON THE OUTLINE.

1. THE SOURCE OF CHARACTER, v. 22-23.

John 15: 5. What nine fruits are here named?

From what do they proceed? What is said of the fruit of the Spirit in the Golden Text?

2. THE TEST OF CHARACTER, v. 16. What is to be "crucified" in a fault? Are good people ever thus overcome? What should be done to such? What is said in James 5: 19, 20? In what spirit should we treat such?

3. THE RESULT OF CHARACTER, v. 24. What should lead us to crucify our flesh? What have done wrong? What command has been given in v. 25? What law of Christ is in John 13: 34? What danger is mentioned in v. 3?

4. THE BLESSEDNESS OF CHARACTER, v. 22-23.
What is required in v. 4? What truth is stated in v. 5? How is this explained by
Rom. 2: 6, 7?

5. THE RESULT OF CHARACTER, v. 7-9; Psal.
136: 5, 6. What warning is given in v. 7?
Wherein is every sinner a mocker of God?

6. THE ENDURANCE OF CHARACTER, v. 22-23.
What does this mean? What is it to sow to the flesh? [ANS.: To resist our passions and tempers.] May we have power to do this?

7. THE BLESSEDNESS OF CHARACTER, v. 22-23.
How should the moral life be lived? [ANS.:
In the Spirit.] How is this stated in 1 Pet. 1: 22?

8. THE BLESSEDNESS OF CHARACTER, v. 22-23.
What three things are forbidden in v. 26?

9. THE BLESSEDNESS OF CHARACTER, v. 22-23.
What is the result of character? [ANS.: Life
everlasting.] How is this stated in 1 Pet. 1: 22?

10. THE BLESSEDNESS OF CHARACTER, v. 22-23.
What is the result of character? [ANS.: Life
everlasting.] How is this stated in 1 Pet. 1: 22?

11. THE BLESSEDNESS OF CHARACTER, v. 22-23.
What is the result of character? [ANS.: Life
everlasting.] How is this stated in 1 Pet. 1: 22?

12. THE BLESSEDNESS OF CHARACTER, v. 22-23.
What is the result of character? [ANS.: Life
everlasting.] How is this stated in 1 Pet. 1: 22?

13. THE BLESSEDNESS OF CHARACTER, v. 22-23.
What is the result of character? [ANS.: Life
everlasting.] How is this stated in 1 Pet. 1: 22?

14. THE BLESSEDNESS OF CHARACTER, v. 22-23.
What is the result of character? [ANS.: Life
everlasting.] How is this stated in 1 Pet. 1: 22?

15. THE BLESSEDNESS OF CHARACTER, v. 22-23.
What is the result of character? [ANS.: Life
everlasting.] How is this stated in 1 Pet. 1: 22?

16. THE BLESSEDNESS OF CHARACTER, v. 22-23.
What is the result of character? [ANS.: Life
everlasting.] How is this stated in 1 Pet. 1: 22?

17. THE BLESSEDNESS OF CHARACTER, v. 22-23.
What is the result of character? [ANS.: Life
everlasting.] How is this stated in 1 Pet. 1: 22?

18. THE BLESSEDNESS OF CHARACTER, v. 22-23.
What is the result of character? [ANS.: Life
everlasting.] How is this stated in 1 Pet. 1: 22?

19. THE BLESSEDNESS OF CHARACTER, v. 22-23.
What is the result of character? [ANS.: Life
everlasting.] How is this stated in 1 Pet. 1: 22?

20. THE BLESSEDNESS OF CHARACTER, v. 22-23.
What is the result of character? [ANS.: Life
everlasting.] How is this stated in 1 Pet. 1: 22?

21. THE BLESSEDNESS OF CHARACTER, v. 22-23.
What is the result of character? [ANS.: Life
everlasting.] How is this stated in 1 Pet. 1: 22?

22. THE BLESSEDNESS OF CHARACTER, v. 22-23.
What is the result of character? [ANS.: Life
everlasting.] How is this stated in 1 Pet. 1: 22?

23. THE BLESSEDNESS OF CHARACTER, v. 22-23.
What is the result of character? [ANS.: Life
everlasting.] How is this stated in 1 Pet. 1: 22?

24. THE BLESSEDNESS OF CHARACTER, v. 22-23.
What is the result of character? [ANS.: Life
everlasting.] How is this stated in 1 Pet. 1: 22?

25. THE BLESSEDNESS OF CHARACTER, v. 22-23.
What is the result of character? [ANS.: Life
everlasting.] How is this stated in 1 Pet. 1: 22?

26. THE BLESSEDNESS OF CHARACTER, v. 22-23.
What is the result of character? [ANS.: Life
everlasting.] How is this stated in 1 Pet. 1: 22?

27. THE BLESSEDNESS OF CHARACTER, v. 22-23.
What is the result of character? [ANS.: Life
everlasting.] How is this stated in 1 Pet. 1: 22?

28. THE BLESSEDNESS OF CHARACTER, v. 22-23.
What is the result of character? [ANS.: Life
everlasting.] How is this stated in 1 Pet. 1: 22?

29. THE BLESSEDNESS OF CHARACTER, v. 22-23.
What is the result of character? [ANS.: Life
everlasting.] How is this stated in 1 Pet. 1: 22?

30. THE BLESSEDNESS OF CHARACTER, v. 22-23.
What is the result of character? [ANS.: Life
everlasting.] How is this stated in 1 Pet. 1: 22?

31. THE BLESSEDNESS OF CHARACTER, v. 22-23.
What is the result of character? [ANS.: Life
everlasting.] How is this stated in 1 Pet. 1: 22?

32. THE BLESSEDNESS OF CHARACTER, v. 22-23.
What is the result of character? [ANS.: Life
everlasting.] How is this stated in 1 Pet. 1: 22?

33. THE BLESSEDNESS OF CHARACTER, v. 22-23.
What is the result of character? [ANS.: Life
everlasting.] How is this stated in 1 Pet. 1: 22?

34. THE BLESSEDNESS OF CHARACTER, v. 22-23.
What is the result of character? [ANS.: Life
everlasting.] How is this stated in 1 Pet. 1: 22?

35. THE BLESSEDNESS OF CHARACTER, v. 22-23.
What is the result of character? [ANS.: Life
everlasting.] How is this stated in 1 Pet. 1: 22?

36. THE BLESSEDNESS OF CHARACTER, v. 22-23.
What is the result of character? [ANS.: Life
everlasting.] How is this stated in 1 Pet. 1: 22?

37. THE BLESSEDNESS OF CHARACTER, v. 22-23.
What is the result of character? [ANS.: Life
everlasting.] How is this stated in 1 Pet. 1: 22?

38. THE BLESSEDNESS OF CHARACTER, v. 22-23.
What is the result of character? [ANS.: Life
everlasting.] How is this stated in 1 Pet. 1: 22?

39. THE BLESSEDNESS OF CHARACTER, v. 22-23.
What is the result of character? [ANS.: Life
everlasting.] How is this stated in 1 Pet. 1: 22?

40. THE BLESSEDNESS OF CHARACTER, v. 22-23.
What is the result of character? [ANS.: Life
everlasting.] How is this stated in 1 Pet. 1: 22?

41. THE BLESSEDNESS OF CHARACTER, v. 22-23.
What is the result of character? [ANS.: Life
everlasting.] How is this stated in 1 Pet. 1: 22?

42. THE BLESSEDNESS OF CHARACTER, v. 22-23.
What is the result of character? [ANS.: Life
everlasting.] How is this stated in 1 Pet. 1: 22?

43. THE BLESSEDNESS OF CHARACTER, v. 22-23.
What is the result of character? [ANS.: Life
everlasting.] How is this stated in 1 Pet. 1: 22?

44. THE BLESSEDNESS OF CHARACTER, v. 22-23.
What is the result of character? [ANS.: Life
everlasting.] How is this stated in 1 Pet. 1: 22?

45. THE BLESSEDNESS OF CHARACTER, v. 22-23.
What is the result of character? [ANS.: Life
everlasting.] How is this stated in 1 Pet. 1: 22?

The Maine Liquor Law.

[Portland Cor. New York Graphic.]

Understand me—the law, which most people do not understand, absolutely prohibits the sale of wine, beer, whiskey and every beverage that will inebriate under the severest sort of penalties. You cannot get a bottle of sherry or brandy at a drug store
except upon the prescription of a physician, and then the quantity sold
is limited to a pint in every instance.

You cannot drink wine with your dinner at a hotel, because the propi-etor is not allowed to sell it to you.

You can have your private wine chest, but you will have to fill it by purchasing outside of the state. It is quite a novelty to follow a long street, especially one adjacent to wharves that are busy with seamen,
without finding the sign of a saloon.

There are some signs—a dozen or more—still hanging in the city, that once marked the place where beer and rum could be had, but the buildings to which they hung are empty and dilapidated or used for other purposes, and the signs are allowed to remain, as Congressmen Reed wittily remarked: "To remind a sensible city that the crime of intemperance did once exist."

The state government is the only liquor dealer allowed to sell. It has a system born of the necessity for spirits for medical and mechanical purposes, which is managed in an interesting way. The Governor appoints a "state liquor agent," who buys on the market wines and liquors
of the best quality and opens a warehouse. The enforcement of the law depends largely upon the disposition of this man. Any twenty citizens of any town may apply to the state agent to have a town agency opened,
which application is granted by the Governor after investigation into the case, and a local or town agent is appointed, who rents a building and is supplied with a stock of liquors from the state agency. A citizen wishing a pint of brandy, for instance, goes to the agent, to whom he must be known personally or by reputation as a reputable citizen, or being a stranger, it is necessary for him to be identified by some reputable citizen, and applies for the brandy. He registers his name and application in a book kept for the purpose, and if the agent sees no good reason why it should be refused, the brandy is granted to him, and the book, which is always open to the public, will bear record that John Smith, on the 23d of July, purchased a pint of brandy for medicinal or mechanical purposes. A great deal, they tell me, is secured for "mechanical purposes."

In this town of 35,000 inhabitants—
one-tenth of whom find their livelihood on the sea—the demand for liquor is so small that one man only is kept to attend the sales at the single place where liquor can be legally purchased.

But, it will be asked, do these 35,000 people totally abstain from all intoxicating beverages? The answer that was given me was, theoretically
they do; practically five per cent. of them drink as much as they would were there a saloon on every corner.

The law is evaded by a system of special clubs. An ordinary club is organized, procures and furnishes rooms. A sideboard is one of the articles of furniture, and it is well laden. A member of the club drops in, helps himself and extends the courtesy of the club to a friend. The water in attendance registers the amount and quantity of the liquor drank, and at the end of the month
the treasurer of the club "assesses"
the individual "club dues" to a corresponding amount. Clubs are popular in Portland.

But they tell me a drunken man is never seen here; the poor are very few; murders are almost unheard of;
crime of every sort is rapidly decreasing, until, as Senator Blaine remarked to-day, it has become useless
for the

The Republican.

JAS. A. HAYDEN, Publisher.

OAKLAND, GARRETT CO., MD.

LINES TO A CAT.

I love thee, cat, I love thy pleasant ways;
I love to see thee dozing round the house;
I love, through all these dreary summer days,
To watch thee cream the drowsy hours;
I love to hear thy calm contented purr,
And stroke thy coat—so near, and yet so far.

But I love not, when starry night is come,
To hear thee, cat, with velvet-padded hoof,
Hap as taps upon the startled drum,
Or summer rain drops pattering on the roof,
Nor when the claws slip from their velvet jacket,
Thou art a wild Niagara cat, a cat-a-racket.

Sweet warbler, when the radiant moonlight falls
In mellow splendor on the haunted shed,
Oft have I listened to thy plaintive wails,
And cursed thee, from my sleep deserted bed,
How have I wept to hear thy long drawn sob,
"Maria, oh Maria, don't you open?"

O eat ambition! Thou wert born to lead,
Thou art the first in peace, in war, the furs,
And to provide for each and every need,
Thou never grievest without the purr,
And like most human vocalists who sing,
You get your back up, cat, at everything.

Why dost thou rage, vain cat, when sable night,
With dewy freshness fills the silent air,
Why dost thou climb the roof to yell and fight,
And curdled hiss, from my sleep deserted bed,
And rip and cut and snort and claw and swear,
Dost thou not blush, sweet cat, when rosy dawn,
Sees half thy fur clawed out, and one eye gone?

O, cat, thou wouldst not rest (thou darest the moon,
It is the temperance pledge thou wouldst not stick,
Thou wouldst not get tighter, cat, than my whisk,
I know you eat, I see it in your eye,
Full of you take your cat's nap on the fly.

Go, gentle cat, go from my lap and prowl
Upon the dizzy woodshed's beetling height,
On lofty domes, where thou hadst long enjoyed,
And everything that wealth can buy to fight,
And I will love thee still, for all of that,
Because I would not have thee lose a cat.

Yet hear, when midnight pauses in the sky,
I will arise from sleep's couch of mine,
And guided by thy snoring, I will go,
And by thine eyes so brilliantly that shine,
I will take down my trusty cat's paw,
And with six pounds of buckskin fill thy skin.

"It is also fast on the woodshed," —Hank Eys.

MY DIAMOND.

I COULD give you the pedigree of the stone, but the details are so long and so many they might tire you. Sufficient to say that I bought it many years ago from an old Jew, in the lower part of Broadway, who told me a curious story concerning it. He said it was a talisman; that four hundred years ago it was owned by a Venetian family of ruined fortunes, who had long guarded it with jealous care; it had passed from them in many ways to brothers of his in the money-lending way, and should be mine if I would pay him his price for it.

In truth the stone had a strange and fiery gleam. At the first glance it seemed of the purest water; in an instant it changed to pink, blue and a pale green, and then iridescent opals, emitting sparks of fire.

I watched it curiously for nearly an hour, taking irrelevantly the while on other matters, and reluctantly coming to the conclusion that if ever a precious stone possessed uncanny properties this one certainly had. As the old Jew yielded to foolish superstition, or that my eyes were tired with long gazing at the gem, and to rest them I turned my glance to other diamonds in the case to compare them with the talisman. The Jew evidently guessed my thought, for he took from his side pocket a wallet and opened it, and from a compartment brought out several small tissue-paper packets, opened them and showed to me large and small diamonds.

"There is not one like that you have in your hand," he said. He was right. All were bright in their glistening flash and meretricious gleam—wonderously beautiful, but all were unlike the talisman.

"Why do you sell it?" I asked. "With all this wealth you cannot need money, and if you want to tell me of its talismanic property be true, the gem is priceless."

"I wish to see it," I said. "If you have the courage to buy," he made answer.

It seemed to me that he purposely made his tone dramatic and I smiled scornfully. As for the stone itself, I liked it; the story he told of its virtues, although I could not believe it, interested me. I had no fear of any evil supernatural influence; it was just the size I wanted to buy and in shape and cutting it was all that was to be desired.

The old Jew told me that when I was about to embark in any enterprise that would prove successful the stone would dazzle with unusual brilliancy. If misfortune or death were to come upon me or mine, the stone would appear dull and almost neutral.

Now I am a practical sort of a fellow, but I had no objection to take the mystery along with the stone, provided it was thrown in as a bargain and I had not to pay extra for it. In a few moments I made up my mind and counted out to him four hundred dollars, the price he asked for it, and left.

I wore the diamond for more than five years; at first in a ring, afterwards in a shirt-stud and then again in a ring. It now encircles the finger of a lovely lady, whose little daughter calls me "Papa." All this time there have been no tragedies in our family, no dear friends have died. My own health has been excellent, and I am quite resigned to have it put down to imagination on my part, that to me, my stone is bright or dull according to my prospects ahead. Only this I affirm, that twice, when, to test it, I went contrary to its warning, the punishment quickly followed the offense. Once I speculated in Pacific Mail and lost heavily, and once I asked a sweet lady friend to be my wife and she refused me—plump.

Superstitions or not, as you will, I regard my diamond as my talisman, my mentor, and ever since my unsuccessful wooing I have looked upon it with love not unmixed with awe. One morning, when riding down town in a Madison avenue car to my business, I looked up from my paper, conscious of a pair of eyes fixed steadily on me. Opposite was a lady of about twenty years, dressed in soft, sombre grey; the only bit of color to relieve it—except the bloom in her refined face—was a bit of red, low down beneath the brim of her gray felt hat. Her eyes were light, lustrous brown; her hair, much darker and glossier, was brushed back in waves from her low forehead, upon which a curl or two fell, not the detestable

"bangs," which I frankly state I abhor, but short, graceful, fringe-like ringlets, that rested upon the white brow as if they loved it. There was no doubt about it, this rare and radiant maiden was gazing at me. I looked at her in return with a face I tried to make expressive of nothing, certainly not curiosity. She glanced down again at her book, "Daniel Deronda." I returned to my telegraphic dispatches in the Herald. Again I felt her gaze, and again I looked up and met her eyes. She evidently wanted to speak to me, or else had something on her mind concerning me. Had I ever seen her before? I asked myself. No. She seemed too modestly sweet to wish to attract the attention of a stranger. Perish the thought, I said inwardly. But she was certainly looking at me again. I am not a bad-looking fellow, and, as men go, not a bad sort. I have always been popular with my lady friends, and I returned her look this time with one of interest, and I am afraid I smiled. Instantly her face clouded, she bent over her book and hid her face angrily. I turned to my paper, but not to read. Just at this moment the conductor came hurriedly to the front of the car to speak to the driver, and as he was returning the lady in gray said to him in a low voice, every word perfectly audible to me and as chilling as an iceberg:

"Conductor, the gentleman opposite me is losing his diamond."

I flushed to the roots of my hair, felt the stone in my pocket, and then I was hanging by the spiral screw, and so nearly out that a quick movement would have sent it down into the moshes of the car mat. I replaced it securely, bending back the velvet for perfect apology, gratitude and humiliation upon the kind stranger. Her face remained placid, but after a moment a demure smile stole into the corners of her mouth, and I don't think it was provoked by what she saw in her book, or that she was reading very attentively.

She left the car at Fourteenth Street and I gazed after her as she turned up to Broadway, and then I must have sighed. Perhaps because I feared I should never see her again. What more natural than for me to desire to know her? It was so kind and so sensible of her to prevent my loss of my diamond. She was such a gentle-looking creature, though she had spirit, as I saw once in the gleam of her eyes, and those eyes were so expressive of intellectuality, and her perfect nose was only less beautiful than her perfect ear.

But, pshaw! need I apologise now for my interest then. It does not take any of us very long to discover that. Love never asks the question—why? As the old Jew said, she had gone from my gaze like a beautiful dream. If I could only meet her again. Perhaps she had married. Not that it was any of my business, but somehow she did not look married. She was girlish in spite of her dignity. One thing I discovered, that there was a name on the leaf of her book, the first of which was "Maud." Perhaps the book was not hers, and if it was could I hope to find in a great city like New York a lady only knowing that her name was "Maud?" When I had arrived at this stage of common sense I had reached my place of business, and after attending to the first duty of the day, reading my mail, my thoughts flew back to my lady in gray.

"If the thing were within the bounds of possibility, I would like to find out who she is, just to thank her for her kindness to me."

How like a dunce I must have appeared to her. When I remembered my impertinence in smiling I would have been glad to have found some obliging friend to kick me down stairs for my idiosyncrasy. I toyed with the thought of dismissing the affair with a sigh, but I did not forget her face.

One rainy afternoon, about a month after, I met her in a Broadway stage. I recognized her in a moment and took a seat, the only one vacant by her side. She looked into her face, and I know she remembered me, but she did not exhibit the faintest gleam of consciousness of my existence. It was worse than Tantalus and the apples. As she left the stage the rain fell in torrents. I hoped that she was not provided with an umbrella, that I might offer her the protection of mine, but a glance showed me that she held one in her right hand, and I was disappointed again. I looked down at my diamond; it sparkled like the sunbeams and as joyously, but its dazzle conveyed no intelligence to me, only it gave me a gleam of hope. She was so near that I could easily have played a trick like that which a friend of mine once played, slip a card into her cloak pocket. Nothing of that kind would go down with this queer creature I perfectly well knew.

I was forced to watch her again leave me and turn down the street, holding her dress so dextrously that it quite escaped the pavement and disclosed two neatly-fitting little boots.

Perhaps I should have said before that my name is Eldridge, that I am a lawyer and Judge Clinton's junior partner. In the next office to ours there are two young fellows just started in law, who receive more calls from their lady friends than I do. One day as I was leaving my office I saw my lady in gray going into theirs.

I must confess to feeling a sort of chill, and then disappointment. I did not like to know that my dignified neighbor's offices, even though the gentlemen were her acquaintances. Occasionally a lady friend would call upon me, not upon business, and although I was always polite I never encouraged that sort of thing, and as a practice I heartily disapproved of it.

My second thought was more charitable. One of the fellows might be her brother. So much the better. I would make his acquaintance, and although I did this after some weeks' delay and considerable circumlocution on my part, and learned that the elder of the two men, Mr. Allyn, had a sister named Maud, and that she was engaged to his friend and partner. Just think of my dismay. Actually engaged to the other fellow! I was sad enough to know she was bound, but I regretted thinking of her as the wife of a fellow who had little ambition and less brains. There was nothing in the man, absolutely nothing. Why, only a week before he had shown a lack of legal acumen in a case—a mere technicality—of which the rawest student should not have been ignorant. What women can see in some men—but there, I must not get incoherent. I looked at my ring after my disturbed thoughts and its rosy gleam gave me fresh courage. After reflecting a day I resolved to remorselessly and determinedly cut him out—if I could.

It was quite in my power to be of service to Mr. Allyn, and in return he asked me to his father's house to dinner. So I saw my lady Maud at home, and there, where true women shine best, I found her more sweet and womanly than she had looked to me before. I had prepared myself for our first meeting, but she had not, and betrayed a little embarrassment. I did not, however, refer to our adventure until I had called upon her several times, and then I ventured to thank her for coming to the rescue of my precious diamond. She begged me to mention it. I was assiduous in my attentions and said things to her heart's content of the family, and quietly began to woo. That I had some influence over her was proved by the fact that her betrothed became jealous of me and forbade her from seeing my sister. She rebelled, after bearing with long annoyance from him, and finally she dismissed him.

I ventured to ask her like a hypo-crite why I no longer met Mr. F. and she said, "Not that I am pining for his home." I added, with a shrug, "We have broken our engagement." She said, looking at the carpet.

I consulted my talisman. Blessings upon it. It fairly danced in my hand. The situation was strong, but I resisted it, to beg her to give me the hand she had lost. I waited until one evening when I was escorting her home from the theater, and I told her the story of my ring, and she believed in its magic more firmly than I did.

"It has never failed me yet, Miss Allyn, and I am longing to put it to a stronger test."

She was so provokingly demure and unconscious that I kept back the pebble from my lips, for I felt my courage, like Bob Acres, oozing out at my finger ends, and again I waited.

"I should think you would be afraid of losing it," she said, a felly thing she said, she said in her hand, moving it this way and that to catch the gleams.

"Do you know, Miss Allyn, that I am constantly afraid of losing it, ever since I first met you?" I said. "I grew sick of it," she said, and said, "Please keep it for me. Let me put it on this finger. Please do—and—give me yourself in return."

She hung her head and blushed, and stammered a little, but she did not say—No.—Philadelphia Times.

Mexico's Gay Brigands.

Spanning the River Antigua, at the mouth of which Cortez built his Vera Cruz, and said his ships before beginning his march into the interior, stands the famous National Bridge, better known perhaps, by its old name of the Kings' Bridge, the neighborhood of which has doubtless seen more scenes of robbery than any other single spot in all this robber-haunted land. For the country that Montezuma ruled and Cortez conquered is the paradise of robbers. Every variety of the craft thrives here, from the petty highwayman who makes a swoop upon a convoy of dollars and thinks little of a fierce fight with his escort. In every city in the land, with darkness shading the streets, and the assassin's sables issues from his lair with knife, sword and lasso. The broad glare of day even is not always a protection. The press frequently directs the attention of the authorities to the robberies committed at high noon. There is scarcely a road in Mexico two miles from a city that is not infested with bandits, and the traveler is generally obliged to go well armed, and to be on his guard against anything to lose are always careful how they walk the streets at night. In the City of Mexico some years since a band of midnight robbers called Eusebio, from sebo, tallow, kept the whole city in a frenzy of fear, and ply their nefarious calling for long months before tardy justice overtook them. They derived their name from the habit of stripping stark naked and anointing themselves with tallow, and their sables were a revelation almost an impossibility. Down in the purlieus of this city, in the thieves' resort, I am told the banker sits at the monte table with a long Catalan knife, pointed as the robberies that he has committed, and the eager crowd that if any cavaliero pretends to mistake the bank for his stake he will pin his hand to the board. Crimes which in any other country would form the subject of comment for weeks here pass comparatively unnoticed, and as often go wholly unpunished. Immense are the stories of robberies which one hears, some of them of thrilling interest and romantic character.

It is not so long ago as to have passed from memory that a considerable town in the interior became the scene of a robbery which has, in all essential characteristics, been repeated in other parts of the country. As the inhabitants of the place were about their morning work a large band of horsemen rode into the plaza. The party presented the usual appearance of incensed patriots whose rights had been trampled upon by the temporary government, against which they were about to issue a pronouncement. So the townsfolk simply shrugged their shoulders and said "I was none of their affair. In less than a quarter of an hour, however, the aspect of things changed. A line of pickets was thrown about the town, preventing ingress or egress, while the dismounted patriots began systematically to plunder the place.

Nothing escaped them; private houses and stores came all alike to the bandits, and the pillage continued so long as anything of value remained. Then collecting their loot, they mounted and rode off in the regular order in which they had come. Whence they came no one knew; whether they went remains a mystery to this day. The robbery of a specie-laden train on the Vera Cruz Railway, not long since, was conducted in the same high-handed manner.

The low caste Mexican is peculiarly fitted for the trade of an assassin and a robber. A few dollars is a fortune to him, and a stab is a small matter. It is easier to kill his victim and despoil him at his leisure than to take the chances of attacking a man who may perhaps offer successful resistance. Living upon little, breakfasting on a sunbeam and dining off a paper cigar, to borrow an expression, the lepero is constantly tempted by his want and laziness to the commission of crime. The very sight of a pulque-shop, of a horchata or beverage he lacks the means to partake, or the fragrant aroma of the market frying pans whose contents are not for him, are sufficient incentives to a robbery for which the lonely roads offer a safe opportunity. The Mexican stage coach and the long, unfrequented highways abounding in secure hiding places seem designed for the special benefit of the knights of the road. A carriage loaded, the passengers are requested to the market in the manner of a soldier, never forgets his manners, even when acting in the capacity of solicitor upon the public highway. The customary order, "Cien en tierra," (a hundred ground) is then given, to which the unwilling victim is expected promptly to respond, while the robber searches his person. If a priest be of the party, however, the bandit generally deviates from his customary routine. Instead of ordering him to the ground, he approaches the holy man, and bending in mock humility before him, asks for alms; a request which the priest understands to be equivalent to a demand for his purse and valuables. Priests are a favorite prey with the Mexican robber. Non-combatants, the bandit is pretty certain to escape a fight, which he is only too anxious to avoid; beside, the holy man generally travels with a full purse. So well is this fact known that if several priests take passage in the same coach it is almost impossible to get anyone else to ride in it. "The coach will certainly be robbed," say the passengers. After the passengers have been searched the baggage is ransacked, when, if no resistance has been offered, the coach is allowed to proceed upon its way. Natives of the country, probably accustomed to being robbed, generally preferring to pay a gratuity to the first band of robbers encountered, which exempts them from further demands on the road. "I am a priest," say the "bandits." "Are you a priest?" "I am a priest," say the robbers; but they are not dangerous, for if you ask them what they ask they don't even beat you." The Mexican bandit, wisely calculating that some one may be killed, and not knowing but that one may be taken alive, seldom attacks a coach containing foreigners known to be armed. There is something so terribly certain about the aim of an American especially that he generally waits for an opportunity to strike. He waits for the night, or at some station to change horses, the baggage is examined, and if it gives promise of rich booty, and the passengers have the appearance of soft money, they are certain to be attacked as soon as the first chaparral is reached. But well-armed travelers, with that steady look of resistance so easily read, may travel anywhere.

To the inefficiency of the Mexican troops may fairly be attributed the general prevalence of robbery and crime throughout the country. The men themselves, often drawn from the refuse of the population, or tainted with the moral poison of the prisons, take little interest in hunting down a class of criminals which, for aught they know, may prove to be their own relatives. Scarcely fed, badly clothed, their meager pay oftentimes stolen by some peer in the gang, they are totally inadequate to the forced marches necessary to the successful pursuit of bandits.

In a country where horses are plentiful and cheap, they are badly mounted, and the well equipped robber laughs at them in a long chase. Cor. N. Y. Post.

A Remarkable Case.

There may be more in thy philosophy Than ere thou dreamest of.

One of the most remarkable cases on record, of peculiar medical fraternity and people generally, has come within the observation of the people of Rosedale lately, in the person of Mrs. Powellson, who has been under the care of Dr. Thorpe for treatment out of disease of the liver and stomach.

Mrs. Powellson is a widow, whose husband died about three years ago. She resides four miles from Rosedale, and has lately moved into a new house, and is constantly under medical care for cancer of the stomach and ulcers of the liver.

For three years her disease has caused violent spasms to take place, but nothing outside the ordinary conditions of such a state was observed until six weeks ago, when the physical condition of the patient underwent a wonderful change, the body after a long spasm becoming seemingly dead, while, according to Mrs. Powellson's statement, the mind became freed entirely and journeyed to an unknown realm which she minutely describes.

Mrs. Powellson is well known to the people of Rosedale, and is strict, reliable, and her statements, which may seem incredible, and have nothing but her simple word as proof, are not to be scoffed at as a deceptive conceit for the purpose of gaining notoriety, or to delude people. She states things which are to her actual facts, and are believed in as sincerely as any physical fact is believed by a natural philosopher.

When the spasm overcomes her she suffers intense pain; her medical adviser describes her contortions as terrible to behold. From this she passes into a state of seeming death, in which the most delicate instruments of the medical profession, in the hands of the experienced practitioner, fail to discover the slightest sign of animation. These orders they carried out in part, but not entirely, for though with the formidable night-clubs they were enabled to beat most of the cats out of the chamber, a few of the brutes, even more ferocious and stubborn than their fellows, went under the bed, and defied all efforts to get them out.

The officers were at last able to approach the body, and they found it uninjured. The old man could not have been long dead when his body was found, for a woman who occupies an adjoining room says she heard him wandering about his apartment at an early hour on Wednesday morning. An inquest will be held. A number of trunks and bags in the room have not been examined.

Yesterday afternoon a German, who did not tell his name, called at Mr. Scheslau's saloon and asked to see the dead man. He was disappointed when he learned that the body had been taken to the morgue, and said that he and the old peddler had been friends in Germany, where the latter had accumulated a great deal of money. He was concerned in the revolutionary movement of 1848, and fled from his native land, carrying with him the bulk of his earnings, much of which, his friend thinks, was honestly gained. He had a physical personality, capable of being a person to the touch. People there were described as needing no food nor physical pabulum to sustain life and consequently had no need to labor for support. They were in schools, studying and constantly seeking to advance in knowledge.

Mrs. Powellson is forty-one years of age, with her mental powers in good condition when out of her peculiar state. Her case is a strange one, to which no exact parallel exists within the knowledge of learned medical men who have examined her.

Dr. Joshua Thorne gives as his opinion that it is one of numerous similar but not parallel cases, where owing to peculiar conditions the mind is freed from the baser material of body and brain and floats at liberty in another sphere from this, held only by a slender thread, sufficient to retain the soul or mind from breaking away entirely, and yet too weak to retain it firmly in the body.

Mrs. Powellson is in such a condition that she may live for months, the probabilities are that she will die suddenly in the next few weeks. She has not eaten enough to keep her alive under ordinary circumstances, and she makes her assertions with the knowledge that her death within a short time is certain.

Want of space forbids giving the details and the general facts are given to the public for consideration without comment.—Kansas City Journal.

Armied's Pensioners.

Two years ago a tall old man applied to August Scheslau, the proprietor of a larger beer saloon at 139 East street, for lodging. He said that his name was Henry Armied, and his occupation was that of a peddler. He dealt altogether in teas, which he mixed skillfully and sold at a fair profit to druggists. He was a neat, clean, and well-dressed man, and he lived until Wednesday morning.

He was nearly seventy years of age, but his industry was unflagging, and he lived comfortably. He said he was unmarried, and he had no relatives, and none of them ever went to see him. He was a good tenant, keeping his room tolerably tidy, and paying his rent punctually every week. But there was one objectionable feature about him, that he was a pensioner, and an uncountable love for cats. More than two dozen of them were pensioners upon him, and they used to swarm through the window into his room every morning to receive their daily ration of food. He was a good tenant, and he paid his rent punctually every week. But there was one objectionable feature about him, that he was a pensioner, and an uncountable love for cats. More than two dozen of them were pensioners upon him, and they used to swarm through the window into his room every morning to receive their daily ration of food. He was a good tenant, and he paid his rent punctually every week. But there was one objectionable feature about him, that he was a pensioner, and an uncountable love for cats. More than two dozen of them were pensioners upon him, and they used to swarm through the window into his room every morning to receive their daily ration of food.

The great heat of the past few days affected the old man severely. He persisted in doing his work as usual, but he grew very weak, and when he returned to his home in the evenings he was so faint that he was glad to throw himself upon his bed. On Tuesday night he was more than usually exhausted, and, after remaining for a short time in his room, he went into the saloon, and asked the proprietor for a piece of ice. He was given a large piece, and as he turned to take it away, he said, "I think I am going to die." His landlord tried to joke him into better spirits, but he shook his head, and with a heavy sigh went into his room and locked the door. He never opened it again. On Wednesday morning Mr. Scheslau, finding that his lodger had not gone out to work at the usual hour, went to the door and knocked. No answer was returned, and when he called the old man's name, the only noise recognizable within was the hissing and meowing of the cats that had assembled for their morning meal. Remembering his lodger's gloomy words and manner the preceding night, Mr. Scheslau became alarmed, and going to the Eldridge Street Police Station he reported the circumstances. Officers Muller, Brady, and Cullen were sent to the house, and on bursting open the door of Mr. Armied's room, they found the dead body of the third man lying on the bed, and the apartment was literally swarming with cats. Many of them had jumped upon the bed, and two of the largest of them were licking the dead man's face.

The officers tried to clear the chamber of the intruders, but, to their astonishment, the brutes showed fight, clawing and biting fiercely when they were attacked. Finally, their assailants, who were unarmed, were forced to beat a retreat, and leave a council of war outside the door. One of them remained to watch the room while the other two went back to the station-house, reported progress, and asked for fresh instructions.

They were ordered to take their long night-clubs and drive the cats out of the room, taking care not to allow themselves to be scratched or bitten. These orders they carried out in part, but not entirely, for though with the formidable night-clubs they were enabled to beat most of the cats out of the chamber, a few of the brutes, even more ferocious and stubborn than their fellows, went under the bed, and defied all efforts to get them out.

The officers were at last able to approach the body, and they found it uninjured. The old man could not have been long dead when his body was found, for a woman who occupies an adjoining room says she heard him wandering about his apartment at an early hour on Wednesday morning. An inquest will be held. A number of trunks and bags in the room have not been examined.

Yesterday afternoon a German, who did not tell his name, called at Mr. Scheslau's saloon and asked to see the dead man. He was disappointed when he learned that the body had been taken to the morgue, and said that he and the old peddler had been friends in Germany, where the latter had accumulated a great deal of money. He was concerned in the revolutionary movement of 1848, and fled from his native land, carrying with him the bulk of his earnings, much of which, his friend thinks, was honestly gained. He had a physical personality, capable of being a person to the touch. People there were described as needing no food nor physical pabulum to sustain life and consequently had no need to labor for support. They were in schools, studying and constantly seeking to advance in knowledge.

Mrs. Powellson is forty-one years of age, with her mental powers in good condition when out of her peculiar state. Her case is a strange one, to which no exact parallel exists within the knowledge of learned medical men who have examined her.

Dr. Joshua Thorne gives as his opinion that it is one of numerous similar but not parallel cases, where owing to peculiar conditions the mind is freed from the baser material of body and brain and floats at liberty in another sphere from this, held only by a slender thread, sufficient to retain the soul or mind from breaking away entirely, and yet too weak to retain it firmly in the body.

Mrs. Powellson is in such a condition that she may live for months, the probabilities are that she will die suddenly in the next few weeks. She has not eaten enough to keep her alive under ordinary circumstances, and she makes her assertions with the knowledge that her death within a short time is certain.

Want of space forbids giving the details and the general facts are given to the public for consideration without comment.—Kansas City Journal.

Two miners sat down in the willow-bush of Southern Utah a few months since to munch their bread and then pursue their wanderings and their search for wealth. They were "prospectors," who, having left the beaten track of treasure-seekers, wandered off to the mountains to look for gold in the comparatively level country, where months of searching had revealed nothing.

"We had better get back into the mountain country, Jim," said his partner.

As he spoke his tool struck something a few inches under the sand and the prospector found a fracture on the rocks and picked up a small, yellowish piece of stone.

"What's that?" said Tom, as he saw with what feverish earnestness his "pard" examined the piece.

"Egad! I think it's horn silver!"

They were out of provisions and almost out of money, and they had to pay the fee for securing their "find." After opening up their prize sufficient to show that a vein of ore existed, they offered it to Mr. Ben Morgan, of Pittsburgh, who is operating successful works a few miles from Lead Lake, City, for $18,000. Mr. Morgan sought the advice of the Superintendent of the Ontario Mine. Together they examined the new "find," and unfortunately for the genial Ben, they decided it was not worth the risking money on.

The miners continued to open their vein, but soon again were stranded, when one of them wrote to two Irish friends, who had already lost money on speculation, and asked them to come and try their luck once more. After much importuning they invested enough money to give the miners a good start, when the development of the mine proceeded rapidly. Four shafts were sunk and a number of intermediate galleries run which connected the shafts. The work was pushed solely with a view to show the magnitude of the deposit. It was the marvel of the whole country. Conservative old engineers measured the ore-bodies actually in sight, taking nothing for granted, and made numerous analysis in all parts of the mine to determine its richness, and the most cautious calculated the silver in sight as worth $27,000,000. Jim Cooke, best of this prize, secured an option of a one-half interest for $2,500,000 for a short time, and hastening eastward he induced a number of Englishmen in New York to invest, and they took it at this price, the four original owners declining to sell the remaining half at any price. This is the now famous "Horn Silver Mine" or "New Bonanza," around which a town has in a few months clustered called "Frison," and to which one mine the Utah Southern Railroad will this summer be extended nearly 300 miles.—Pittsburgh Telegraph.

The Superintendent of one of our cemeteries was called upon not long since by a man who said he wanted to select a lot in which to bury his wife who had died the day before. The official started out with him to walk through the grounds, and on the way fell into conversation concerning the deceased. "Was her death very sudden?" he asked. "Well, yes, rather," answered the bereaved husband; "that is, at the last. She was ailing like a good while, but the last week she went off hand over fist."—Boston Traveler.

The danger of allowing innocent boys to associate with hardened criminals in jail is well illustrated by the case of the son of the jailer at the Wheeling (W. Va.) prison. He has just been arrested charged with complicity in a bank robbery which was planned in jail by two of the prisoners with whom the boy became intimate.

It is a great piece of folly for a man to be always ready to meet trouble half way. If he would put all the journey on trouble, he might never meet it at all.

The Republican.

JAS. A. HAY DEN, Publisher.
OAKLAND, GARRETT CO., MD.

WILD CLEMATIS.

Where the woodland streamlets flow,
Gushing down a rocky bed,
Where the tassled labrers grow,
Lightly greeting overhead,
When the faintest August day
Gave the freshness that they know
Then the wild clematis comes
With her depth of tangled bloom,
Reaching up and drooping low,
And her frost-leaves only shade
That which is within her bower,
Like a curtain, lightly drawn,
Half to hide her virgin flower,
None to close to let the wind
Find a place to breathe between,
Where the wild bees cannot miss
All the sweetness that there is,
Cuckooing her nest of green,
And the sunlight flickers in,
So to touch her with the east,
And between her brims of vine
Stays the wood-bird to his nest;
And the air is warm and sweet,
And the twilight lingers long,
And the young birds come to fly
In among her greenery,
And she bears their earliest song.

THE WRECK OF THE "PIONEER."

Ralph Keystone was one of those men who combine a talent for practical things with an active imagination. He was, at the same time, a most impractical man in affairs of business. Like all imaginative men, he early found a man who could do in ideal things, and then fell in love with her. Jane Besant was the only daughter of Farmer Besant, who owned and operated an immense wheat farm not far from the village of Muskaloote. To Ralph, who had been in the first flush of his love for Jane.

"You wish to marry Jane?"
The young man replied, "Not immediately," for just at the time he was out of employment.
"That's just it, Keystone," said the farmer, "you are out of work for the fourth time since you came from the East. How can you marry on so uncertain a prospect? You are too unstable; you do not stick to anything."

Ralph admitted he had been unfortunate in his ventures; but he still had a little money left, and he would now go into some manufacturing business.
"Manufacturing, indeed! There's nothing but failure within fifty miles. Wheat is the only thing that pays here, unless it be lumber, and there isn't a saw-mill within a hundred miles."

"Then I might start one," said Ralph, catching at the straw.
"That's just it, Keystone," said the farmer, "you are out of work for the fourth time since you came from the East. How can you marry on so uncertain a prospect? You are too unstable; you do not stick to anything."

Ralph admitted he had been unfortunate in his ventures; but he still had a little money left, and he would now go into some manufacturing business.
"Manufacturing, indeed! There's nothing but failure within fifty miles. Wheat is the only thing that pays here, unless it be lumber, and there isn't a saw-mill within a hundred miles."

"Then I might start one," said Ralph, catching at the straw.
"That's just it, Keystone," said the farmer, "you are out of work for the fourth time since you came from the East. How can you marry on so uncertain a prospect? You are too unstable; you do not stick to anything."

Ralph admitted he had been unfortunate in his ventures; but he still had a little money left, and he would now go into some manufacturing business.
"Manufacturing, indeed! There's nothing but failure within fifty miles. Wheat is the only thing that pays here, unless it be lumber, and there isn't a saw-mill within a hundred miles."

"Then I might start one," said Ralph, catching at the straw.
"That's just it, Keystone," said the farmer, "you are out of work for the fourth time since you came from the East. How can you marry on so uncertain a prospect? You are too unstable; you do not stick to anything."

Ralph admitted he had been unfortunate in his ventures; but he still had a little money left, and he would now go into some manufacturing business.
"Manufacturing, indeed! There's nothing but failure within fifty miles. Wheat is the only thing that pays here, unless it be lumber, and there isn't a saw-mill within a hundred miles."

"Then I might start one," said Ralph, catching at the straw.
"That's just it, Keystone," said the farmer, "you are out of work for the fourth time since you came from the East. How can you marry on so uncertain a prospect? You are too unstable; you do not stick to anything."

main on the land. Pretty hard terms, but Ralph accepted them on the spot. He in hand he headed the woodmen, directing the fall of each tree, so as to save labor in hauling the logs. When about a hundred men were down, he organized his force into companies, and began to get out logs of every size. A pair of oxen were hired, and things began to assume shape. Heavy logs laid end to end in a double row, stretched across the little valley, and marked the foundation of the dam. Stunt stakes were driven on the lower side, and shorter logs laid up stream, with the ends resting on the heavy timber, raised the dam about one foot. The news quickly spread through the country round about. Young Keystone had found water-power—in other words, wealth—in the little brook. Within three weeks the dam had been raised three feet, and the water began to back up behind it, spreading out over the marsh in a slowly widening pond. Then the people began to laugh. Keystone was a fool, after all. What could he do with only three feet fall of water?

Jane Besant heard of all this with mingled pride and hope. She wandered down to look at the work one Sunday afternoon. She went alone, not wishing to be seen showing too much interest in the affair. As she much through the woods she came suddenly upon the clearing, and saw the sheet of water sparkling and blue in the bright sunshine. Her eyes shone with pleasure at the beauty of the sight. He had made this, his talents had created the pretty lake, and, better still, had won power from the little brook.

She walked down to the dam, and paused to admire the work. Entirely unfamiliar with such structures, it seemed quite wonderful. The great logs were dripping with water, here and there tiny fountains showed how the penitence water was trying to escape, and in one place it poured over in a murmuring cascade.

"O! I knew he had genius. He has more talent than any man in the place," she said to herself. Suddenly she was startled by a laugh, and turning she saw her father near. "It does look as if he had talent, Jane; but the fact is, he is a fool. It's a very pretty piece of work, and it must have cost a good bit of money; but I'm told by those who know, and the whole thing is a failure."

"I don't know any thing about such matters, father," tears of mortification and disappointment filled her eyes. "Well, maybe he isn't. I'm only telling you what folks say."

"There's not a man in the township knows a thing about hydraulic engineering. It's a good science, for I've been working about it."

"All right, Jane. Give him a chance. Let's see how he pulls through. I don't really call him a fool, though he's smugly green at times."

The next day a small army of laborers appeared in the woods, and by night they had dug a long ditch or canal from the river up to the bed of the brook. Two days after it reached the foot of the dam, and brought the water close up to the logs. At the upper end it was five feet deep. Five and three make eight. Eight feet fall in the clear. Here's power in abundance. Thereupon the on-lookers said the young man was a smart fellow, a good engineer, etc., etc.

Within a week the village carpenter had constructed a water-wheel from Ralph's designs. Within two weeks saws and gearing arrived, a shed was put up, and the saw-mill was opened for business.

The first job was for a lot of two-inch plank for Farmer Besant. He claimed that he was half owner of the mill by their agreement, and would only pay half the bill. Keystone took the job, and he was in debt to his men.

Through a lot of logs and piled up planks on sale. Sundry jobs came in, and it began to look as if he had started a good business. One morning a stranger arrived, and introduced himself as a lumber dealer from a town fifty miles down the river. He was in search of a lot of small stuff, light scantling two inches wide and an inch and a half thick, in lengths of twelve feet and up.

He offered a good price, and gave his name and references. The offer was tempting, and Ralph took it, and agreed to have the stuff ready in two weeks. Encouraged by his success, he hired a man, and started on the new order. In ten days he wrote to the party to say that the scantling was nearly all ready, and could be put on a raft and floated down the river. No reply came, and he wrote again, and in a few days received a notification of the failure of the lumber dealer, and an account of the winding up of his affairs.

Disheartened and sick at heart, he wandered down by the river and sat down on a fallen tree. Every thing was lost. He could never marry Jane. A large part of his lumber had been cut up into a useless and unsalable shape, and he was in debt to his men. In foolishly trusting the word of a stranger, he had wrecked of everything. When the mind is ill at ease a trifling circumstance will often absorb the whole attention, and as he sat gloomily brooding over the ruin of his hopes, he saw a steamer rounding the bend of the river about a mile up stream. She was steering dangerously near a half-sunken island in the middle of the river. He watched her with a vague curiosity as she came swiftly on, and when she was close he saw her reversed, and in a moment after saw the wildest confusion among the passengers on board. Springing up, he ran at full speed along the bank till he came opposite the stranded boat.

"Are there any boats or barges about here?"
"Nothing but a punt or two. Can't you bring your passengers ashore in your own boats?"
"Bother the passengers! I can land them easy enough. It's the cargo. The steamer will never come up. The tiller broke, and she ran nose on at full speed. The pilot has laid down her bones forever. Poor old tub! I pity her."

The speech created the greatest excitement among the by-standers. The rural mind saw visions of salvage—perils and dangers in the wrecked steamer, and they were ready of one accord to go off to her in any manner of boat that could be made to float. Just then the Captain dropped from his pocket, as if by accident, a revolver, and picking it up, he said, "There's to be no fooling round the old Pioneer. I'm Captain and owner, and I mean to stand by her till the last scrap of iron is shipped down river."

"I'll take your cargo ashore, or down stream to any point you say, in three days, for five hundred dollars." "O, you've a barge or two, eh?" "I'll take you say so? I'll hire 'em of you."

"I have no barge, but I'll make one in twenty-four hours—foreash. I have a saw-mill just back of here." "I say, boss, what help?" "Here is a honest, business, and they were as ready to take advantage of it as they were to plunder the helpless steamer."

"I'll give you five hundred dollars, if you'll put the cargo on a flat within three days. I can't get a steamer up here in less than two days, and it will cost almost as much, though I don't see how you're going to make a flat in that time." "I'll have a barge 'longside before to-morrow night."

"I'll take two barges. Heavy cargo this trip." "I'll leave a single barrel behind I'll forfeit a hundred dollars. You can take the passengers to the village. Some of the folks will give them lodgings till the boats come up Monday."

The Captain agreed to the bargain, and put off to bring his passengers ashore. "Johnson," said Ralph to one of the young men, "go to the painter's, and tell him to send me three men and a lot of white lead paint and bring them to the mill. Take my horse. Pick up all the men you can find. I want all the carpenters in the place to work day and night on a good job."

Ten minutes later a dozen men, with carpenter's tools, stood ready in the mill-yard waiting for orders. "I was born next door to a Massachusetts ship-yard," said Ralph, "and I know something about building. I'm going to make a barge big enough to carry a steamer. Let every man do exactly as I tell him, and we will have her launched before to-morrow night. Every man shall have double pay while at work on the barge."

The men gave a cheer, and said they were ready for anything. It seemed as if it might be true, for in a moment after they were carrying long two-inch planks down to the river bank. Here a space was cleared next the water, and four lines of timber—ways, or slides, were laid down heading into the water, securely fastened together, and then liberally spread with grease and oil. Then, under Ralph's directions, two-inch planks were laid side by side on the ways. Till a platform was made one hundred and eighty feet long and about twenty feet wide in the center. More men began to arrive, and every one who could drive nails was promptly engaged, and within an hour forty men were at work on the new boat.

With chalk and line Ralph struck a line through the center of the platform, and from this struck out a curved line on each side, and then made the men saw off the planks to the curved line. This gave a long slender platform, ten feet wide at the upper end, or stern, twenty feet wide near the center, and running off to a long slender point at the lower end, or bows, of the future boat. Then upon this platform was laid a rough coat of paint, a dozen men plying the brushes at once, and then came the planks laid lengthwise. The two planks laid side to side, and were quickly spiked together.

The men suggested that such a long and slender raft would never hold together. "Wait and see," said Ralph. "Now for the canvas, we have been getting the canvas. Bring it down by the cart-load. Now, men, have your bits ready for boring nail-holes in the stuff. Make the holes a foot apart the whole length of the strips."

In a moment or two several pieces of scantling were ready, and taking one in hand, Ralph laid it along the edge of the raft and nailed it down, then another, till a strip had been laid entirely round the raft. As the strips were long and flexible, they were easily bent to fit the curved lines of the platform. At the upper end the cross-pieces were promptly engaged, and at the bow ended strips were brought to a point, and the platform was laid another strip from end to end, while at intervals of about five feet cross pieces were laid from side to side.

"Now, men, see my idea. Lay strip over strip, and nail them firmly one to the other through the holes, till the sides are six feet high; break the joints of the strips and nail-holes; lay on the planks as you go, and we shall soon have a steamboat without ribs. The cross-pieces will brace her, and she'll carry a big cargo, even if she isn't pretty."

The men, unaccustomed to marine architecture, greeted this novel system of boat-building with pleased surprise, and went to work with a will. More men arrived, and the clatter of twenty hammers going at once, and the sound of axes and torches and bonfires were lighted. A boy was sent round for the men's supper that there might be no lack, and by the time it reached the steamer were bestowed in sundry farm houses. Farmer Besant taking his share at two dollars each. The news of the boat building spread quickly, and the people flocked down to the mill yard to see the work, and with them came all the passengers. Among them came Farmer Besant and the Captain of the Pioneer. The farmer walked about the curious structure, now rapidly rising, and seeing the enormous consumption of scantling, he remonstrated in no pleasant mood.

"What right have you to use up your customer's stuff in this way?" "He's failed," said Keystone, without stopping his work. "How do you know? He may claim it, and you are spoiling thousands of feet of good stuff on a piece of folly."

"Don't know about that," said a big fellow near by. "It's about the smartest idea I ever seen. Guess you belong East, young man."

"Massachusetts. I've seen many a boat built without ribs, though none quite so big. She'll carry your cargo, Captain."

"O, she will when she's decked. Them Massachusetts boys are powerful 'cute at things. I say, young fellow, don't you want to sell her just as she stands?"

"No. She is to be a steamboat." Farmer Besant felt confirmed in his views of young Keystone. He was a born fool—come from the very home of lunatics and visionaries.

"I'll give you $300 for her just as she stands, and finish her myself." "The Jane is not for sale."

"Jane for sale? Don't insult the girl, Mr. Ralph."

"Then he turned away to drive some nails. Farmer Besant went home, intending to tell Jane of the latest she had received. He would never speak to Keystone again, neither should Jane. Luckily Jane had gone to bed when he returned, and knew nothing of the building of the boat.

Morning came and saw the sides of the boat well advanced. Some men left for home and rest, and others took their places. Even some of the passengers volunteered as painters and nail-drivers. The excitement of the week, the arrival of so many strangers and the boat-building brought everybody out of doors, and the yard was filled with people watching the progress of the work. During the night a stormy wind came, and the water rose, and the stern settled down in the water. She would never come off, and would be dismantled and broken up.

But she saved the cargo from damage by moving it to the forward part of the boat, that was so far uninjured. By nine o'clock there were 300 people in the new ship-yard. Carriages began to arrive from far and near. Even the parson went down to see the work of humanity," as he called it, and the church was closed for the day, for there was no congregation; the people, to the number of 500, with one accord not to see the launching of the boat.

Among them came one with shining eyes and a rosy blush upon her face. The name of her lover was on every tongue. The marked approval of the Captain of the steamer, and the confidence of his engineer, won the confidence of the rural population. Keystone had always been considered an eccentric sort of fellow, but now, after all, there might be something in it. These things she heard and treasured. She kept out of sight in the crowd, but saw everything and heard everything with the greatest interest and pleasure. There was a man painting letters in blue on the stern of the new boat. He had made a J, an A, and an X, and was at work on another letter. Ah, JAKE—her name! There was quite a company of people watching the man, and when the name was finished there was a little shout of approval.

"I allers said he was drettle sweet on Squire Besant's darter."

"Shoo! That's a pretty idea, anyway."

She blushed scarlet, and slipped away and went up to the deserted saw-mill, and sat down on a log by the little water-fall. Suddenly some one stood beside her.

"The cargo will ballast her," said Ralph. "Get out your poles, men, and push her along the shore till we come to the steamer."

The Jane Besant was quickly brought round, and went up stream, followed by an enthusiastic multitude on the shore. Shortly after the barge was secured alongside the wreck, and the men began to put the cargo on board. She did not leak a drop, and appeared to be as stiff and strong as the best ribbed boat afloat. She was very buoyant, and readily minded the rude nudges that had been hung at the stern.

"Come in my cabin—I guess it isn't wholly wrecked. Come, Bates, I want you too."

The young man followed the Captain and his engineer into the cabin and sat down, while the Captain ordered some wine and a lunch. When the lunch came the Captain began to be expansive.

"She only wants a little more sheer, and deck and house and engines. She'll not be a fast boat, but she'll sail in the lower water than any thing on the river. She'll be running regular trips when the big boats are laid up for low water. Tell you what I'll do, young man, I'll put engines in her, and make her as strong enough to put a house on her. I'll go halves with you in the business. We can haul her ashore and shackle her bottom to make it smooth, and make a good thing of it. What d' you say? Is it a bargain?"

"It is Sunday, sir."

"O yes—forgot. Bargain not binding made to-day."

"It is the Sabbath."

"Yes, Sabbath. What, if you're of the same mind to-morrow, I'll repeat the offer. We can take the engines, Bates."

"O, certain, sir. That's all that's left good for any thing on the Pioneer, 'cept the parts to the house."

"And the bedding, and furniture, and crockery, and so on."

"I shall be glad to consider your proposal, sir, to-morrow."

"Then it would be a bargain—if it was Sunday. All right. We'll go ashore this evening and hear the parson."

Two months later the purser of the new freight and passenger boat Jane Besant opened the books of the boat for business. There was a line of passengers, headed by one of the boat's servants, already waiting at the ticket-office window.

"Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Keystone—oh yes, a pair of free passes. Give them the bridal room, John; here's the key. Next?"—Harper's Bazar.

those of talent as familiar acquaintances. She is said to have outraged Thomas Carlyle, Dean Stanley, Rossetti, Herbert Spencer and many other distinguished men in correspondence. She corresponded with Jefferson Davis when he was in Europe, and on her return she offered him a home at Beauvoir, which he accepted, although he was not accompanied thither by his wife. Mrs. Dorsey had a library rich in Southern history and literature, printed and in manuscript, and in her home Mr. Davis began his history of the late rebellion, upon which he is still at work.

Two years ago, before Mr. Davis came to Beauvoir, Mrs. Dorsey visited her brother in Brooklyn, and was referred to Mr. Davis as a great patriot, who had made sacrifices for his native land beyond those of many men deemed greater in history, and she expressed displeasure at the ingratitude of the South for his services, saying that he had never been properly rewarded. She did not then indicate that she proposed to try to pay the debt. Since Mr. Davis went to live at Beauvoir she has shown a greater devotion to him as her hero. Mrs. Ellis, a talented woman, drew for Mrs. Dorsey a crayon portrait of the ex-President of the Confederacy, which Mrs. Dorsey prized so highly that when she went to the St. Charles Hotel in New Orleans to receive treatment for a malignant cancerous tumor, she took the portrait with her and hung it upon the wall of her room, although it must have been a great inconvenience.

Mr. Ellis was greatly surprised when he learned that his sister had given all her property to Jefferson Davis. It had been the expressed wish of Mrs. Dorsey that an income should be paid out of the estate for Mr. Ellis' two children, but this was not done. Mr. Ellis cannot now tell what influence was exerted upon his sister to cause her to so dispose of nearly a quarter of a million dollars' worth of property. He is thought highly of Jefferson Davis, and has believed him incapable of a design of this nature, although knowing that he was most persuasive in his friendships. Mr. Dorsey is a close of the will, and it is probable that one will be begun; but, not having thus far seen a copy of the document, or had sufficient time to confer with the other natural heirs, he is not yet possessed of a clear conclusion. He cannot think that it is right that his sister's property should be so bestowed. The estate includes much ready money and the Beauvoir plantation, the Ellis Ridge plantation, an Ellis estate in Tennessee Parish, La., and much unimproved land in Louisiana and Kansas.

Mr. Ellis will probably engage counsel in the case in a few days. He has had no legal notice that yet, will have been offered for probate, and Mr. Davis has not communicated with him or with General Dahlgren, Mrs. Dorsey's stepfather, now a resident of Brooklyn. The family of Mr. Ellis strongly suspect undue influence.

Mr. Ellis is now employed as editor of two trade journals and manager of a Spanish journal in this city. Prior to his engagements on these papers he was employed, on his arrival in Brooklyn from the South, as a correspondent of the close of the war, on the Union, and as occasional writer for some of the metropolitan journals.—N. Y. Sun.

The Ex-Empress's Income.
Napoleon III.'s widow derives her revenues from three sources—the product of savings and speculations, the insurances on the Empress's life, and the real estate which the Empress bought in her own name when she was on the throne, and which is approximately valued at $5,400,000. Nominal sales have been made since she went into exile. Engage disposed of a great sum of the property in the Rue d'Alba and of the house in which Mr. Rouher used to live rent free, at the corner of the Rue de l'Elysee, for $500,000. Hirsch, who was Baron purchaser of this estate, was Baron Hirsch, who was the Turkish Railway King. There are, besides, estates in Spain, in Switzerland and in Hungary. The Hungarian one was acquired within the present year, and is adjacent to the favorite domain of Count Zichy. Under the will of her ill-starred son, the Empress comes in for the Baciocchi properties near Trieste and in Tuscany, as well as house and grounds in Tuscany, and a considerable estate in the house and its environs, which she left to the Prince by a General who had been his equerry in his babyhood.

Facts about Phosphorus.
It is now about two hundred years since phosphorus was first obtained by Brand, of Almburg. So wonderful was the discovery then considered that the alchemist, who was a student of the Krafft, an eminent philosopher of his preparation. Krafft then traveled, and visited nearly all the courts of Europe, exhibiting. Phosphorus resembles beeswax, but it is more transparent, approaching the color of amber. Its name, which is derived from the Greek, signifies "light bearer," and is indicative of its most distinguishing quality, being self-luminous. Phosphorus, when exposed to the air, shines like a star, giving out a beautiful lambent, greenish light. Phosphorus dissolves in warm, sweet oil. If this phosphorized oil be rubbed over the face in the dark, the features assume a ghastly appearance, and the experimenter looks like a veritable living will-o'-the-wisp. The origin of phosphorus is the most singular fact concerning it. Every other substance with which we are acquainted can be traced to either earth or air, but phosphorus seems to be of animal origin. Of all animals man yields the most; and of the various parts of the body the brain yields, by analysis, more phosphorus than any other. The fact is of no little moment. Every thought has, perhaps, a phosphoric source. It is certain that the most intellectual beings contain the most phosphorus. It generally happens that when a singular discovery is made many years elapse before any appreciation of it is made to the welfare and happiness of man. This remark applies to phosphorus.—Port Jervis Union.

THE REPUBLICAN.

OAKLAND, MARYLAND.

JAS. A. HAYDEN.

Editor and Proprietor.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.
One copy, one year, $1.50
Six months, $1.00
Three months, $0.50
Invariably in advance.

TERMS OF ADVERTISING.
First insertion, 25 cents per square of 10 lines;
50 cents per square for each additional insertion.
Special contracts for advertising longer than three months.

Correspondents must enclose full name and address, not necessarily for publication, but as a private guarantee of good faith. Accepted communications will not be returned.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 9, 1879.

The Republican for the Campaign.

We will send THE REPUBLICAN to any address in the country from now until the November election, for 25 cents, invariably in advance.

Mr. S. A. Cox gave notice in the last issue of the Oakland Herald that hereafter he will have exclusive control of the editorial columns of that paper.

If it were possible to find anything new in the Herald's last tirade we certainly would answer it, but a careful reading and study of the article fails to discover anything but a rehash of the same old story of Grant, Belknap, Babcock and the St. Louis Whiskey ring. These matters have been so often discussed and are so well known to the public that we will not insult the intelligence of our readers by presuming that they are ignorant of the facts and offering to explain to them. We would, however, ask the Herald man to give true statements of our confessions. We are always ready to confess and expose the shortcomings of our party, and have ever made war on corruption in either party. This is so different from the Herald's policy that it thinks us inadvertent or forgetful when we confessed that some men in our party had been corrupt. We know you cannot understand it, as it is so foreign to your policy. We know you never confess or expose any of the fearful frauds perpetrated by your party. We know you and your party would rather spend millions of the nation's money to conceal the corruption of your party than to confess them and we are not surprised that you are shocked at our honesty. But we are willing to submit a true account of our administration: We will charge our party with what we have confessed and credit it with the benefits it has conferred on the nation and strike the balance, and then Mr. Herald, let us have your balance sheet and then we will compare.

We will charge ourselves with Belknap, Babcock and the St. Louis Whiskey ring; if there are any more items to be charged on the debtor side of the account we will cheerfully enter them up when you bring them to our notice. Now we will credit the Republican party with first preserving the Union that your party tried to crush; with establishing in a time of war the best credit enjoyed by any nation in the world; with freeing from slavery over four millions of human beings; with establishing a postal system that is the admiration of the world; with substituting for the wild-cat banking institutions of your times the safest currency ever in circulation; with causing the wild, waste lands of our far West to be populated and cultivated; with extending amnesty and pardon to the traitors who tried to overthrow our government a few years ago and whose incendiary utterances and vile vituperations so recently disgraced the halls of Congress. We will forbear naming all the benefits the Republican party has conferred upon the nation, as you have taught us that it is not always discreet to tell the whole story at first.

Mr. Hamilton may be large game, but he will find a great many peashooters in Garrett county, loaded with Republican ballots and shot at him this fall.

Your explanation of Mr. Gorman's visit here is very thin. If Mr. G. had wished to provide for the transportation of the Republicans up Salt river, he could have accomplished it all without coming up here, as he can always find tools to do his bidding; and you ought to remember that one of the canal directors lives, dwells and yields a power in our midst. No, Mr. Herald, we can't accept that explanation. Mr. G. was here for the purpose of fixing up the slate for Garrett county and in the interest of himself for U. S. Senator. He may have made a mistake, and we think he has; still, his purpose was the same.

The yellow fever visited Baltimore city in 1880, and between the 18th of August and the 26th of October there were 1,223 deaths. The city at that time contained a population of not over 50,000.

WAR ON THE YOUGH!

Brutus vs. the People.—The Battle Won by the People.

In conformity with the call of the Central Committee of the Democratic party, in Garrett county, a convention was held on Tuesday for the purpose of electing three delegates to the Hamilton convention, which was held in Baltimore on Thursday. The fight was between the Herald and Democrat wings of the party, and at the primaries on Saturday the Democrat wing carried this district by a vote of nearly 3 to 1 and they were jubilant. Among the leaders there were some who freely offered to bet 2 to 1 that Tasker would not go to the State convention, and on Tuesday when the delegates arrived and it was found that the Herald party had the largest array, it was concluded, by the Democrat wing, that it was a pretty even fight, as the advantage the Herald had in numbers was balanced by the preponderance of brutus from No. 7, and it was confidently asserted that the brains of the Oakland delegation, in connection with their parliamentary experience, would enable them to defeat Tasker and the wishes of the majority of the Democrats in this county.

It was plainly evident to all that the fight against Tasker would be a stubborn one, and the Oakland delegation seemed to be confident that by sharp practice they could win. At 2 p. m. the convention was called to order by W. H. Hall, Mr. Peddicord, of the Oakland delegation, nominated Mr. Veitch, of the Oakland delegation, for temporary chairman. Mr. Snyder, of Accident, nominated Dr. Keller, of Grantsville. Mr. Hall ignored the gentleman from Accident and declared Mr. Veitch elected, and thus the temporary organization was captured by the Oakland brains. Mr. Peddicord then nominated Dr. Keller for Secretary, who was elected. Mr. Peddicord then moved that the chair appoint one delegate from each delegation to compose the committee on credentials and permanent organization. This was one of the cards that the army of "Brutus" expected to win by, but they had discounted the intelligence of the other side too much, and were too sanguine as the result proved. Mr. Guard moved to amend the motion so that each district, and not the chair, should name its member of the committee, which was carried by the Herald army.

The committee, after being out quite a while, returned and reported delegates from eight districts; recommending Dr. Keller as President, and W. A. Brydon as Secretary, which report and recommendation was adopted. Mr. Peddicord then offered a resolution to the effect that no name should be entertained in the nominations unless it was endorsed by a majority of the delegates from the district in which the nominee resided. This was the grand plan, the sharp trick whereby Tasker was to be defeated, but it was soon evident from the discussion that followed between Mr. Peddicord and Mr. W. R. L. Getty that not all the brains were located in the Oakland delegation, and after several speeches by Peddicord and Getty the vote was taken and the resolution tabled. So the convention was left free to establish the "dangerous precedent" of delegates nominating someone from another district, which precedent was established as soon as the nominations were opened by District No. 1 nominating H. P. Tasker. Then followed the nomination of Wm. R. Getty and R. T. Browning of the Herald party, and Wm. L. Rawlings, Samuel Johnson and Wm. Hinebaugh by the Democrat party. The ballot resulted as follows: Tasker, 5 districts; Browning, 5 districts; Getty, 6 districts; Rawlings, 3 districts; Hinebaugh, 2 districts; Johnson, 3 districts; and thus ended the battle in a Waterloo victory for the Herald party. A storm is brewing and all is not lovely among the faithful of Garrett county. Harmony, thou art a jewel, but the basket that contains thee is not the Democratic party of Maryland.

And now swings the flag at half-mast. "So be it."

The reception to ex-President Grant in Tokio is unprecedented in Japanese history. In addition to demonstrations by the government, citizens have given lavish entertainments on a sumptuous scale. Every day and night there were fresh novelties for his diversion. General Grant had an audience with the Emperor on July 4th. His majesty, alluding to the sole obstacle to harmony, was caused by the demeanor of the English officials, who persistently keep aloof from General Grant, and decline to give salutes or recognition. General Grant, after visiting various points, will sail for Yezo. He will start for America the last week in August.

Dissatisfied Mississippi Democrats are coming up to the confessional and proving all that Republicans have ever charged concerning the shotgun plan of carrying the State.

Resumption.

A year ago, specie resumption was a great bugbear, which most people dreaded. Many who knew that resumption was a duty and a necessity were not the less weighed down with fear, and wished that the cup might pass from them. Solomna warnings filled the air. Things were going to sell for a trifle. The monster, resumption, was going to grind up the people's bones, and drink their life-blood. For pitiless money-lenders it was to be a day of bliss. The rich were to be made richer; the poor were to be made poorer; and labor was to be crushed and starved.

The day of doom came six months ago, and we are yet alive. Not one of the frightful things foretold has come to pass. Less property has been forced to sale than in any previous half year for a long time. Prices are higher, on the whole, than they were a year ago. Money has not grown more scarce, but for every safe and honest use more plentiful. More men and women are at work by living wages than at any time from 1872 to 1879. The rattle of mills is heard, and the blaze of furnace-fires is seen, in all parts of the land, where in July last all was still and dark. The number of failures and the losses by failures have diminished greatly. New farms by fair pay to farmers; that toil brings fair pay to farmers; new mines, new shops and mills, new railroads and new houses, in all parts of the land, give work to multitudes, and bear witness that life and hope have come back to industry and trade. In short, the weary years of sinking prices, prostrate industry and stagnant trade are past, and the country has plainly entered upon a new era of prosperity.

No man will suffer himself to be cheated twice by the same lying guide-post. The people of this land have too much sense not to profit by the practical lesson in finance which events have taught them. Many, who have been deceived by predictions of the harm to come from resumption, have turned their backs upon false guides, and have set their faces toward the truth. They have seen the dangers of resumption vanish like ghosts, as we get near them. Every word of hope, spoken in behalf of public faith and honest money, they have seen verified. The old teaching of conscience and common sense—that honesty is the best policy—has been brought home to the mind by the experience of the past year. Now, surely, a brief, clear and simple exposition of the fundamental truths of finance, as they bear upon practical and pending questions, may be welcome and do good.

For there are still multitudes who snurn the teaching of common-sense and experience. Even now there are men who say that "resumption cannot be maintained," or that it will cost horrible sacrifices. Specie payments, they assert, involve endless risks, do harm to labor, and tax the people for the sole benefit of bankers and bondholders. More money is needed, they still cry; or the paper of the Nation in place of bank notes, or unlimited coinage of silver instead of gold. The banks, they claim, wrong the people by getting double interest. They insist that the Government alone ought to issue notes, and that its paper, made good solely by its stamp, will be the cheaper if not redeemed at all, and the better if not put out without that limit as to quantity which redemption involves. To these claims, and others like them, many voters still give ear. Do they not know that the same men who say these things are those who said that resumption was impossible, or predicted that direful woes unnumbered would proceed or attend it? Are these false guides, who have not once been right in five years past, still to lead men of intelligence?

Resumption can be maintained without loss, or cost, or doubt; it ought to be maintained because it is wise as well as honest, and cheaper than anything that can take its place; and it brings, as its friends have predicted, growing prosperity, a solid footing for work and trade, a special help to labor, and the exact stimulus that is needed to lead the worker to save his earnings, and thus to lift himself to greater independence.

The great opposition which has manifested itself in the Democratic party to the renomination of Tilden is an evidence of the fact that the fraud howl is over. The cry of fraud would be an absurdity in a presidential canvass without Tilden. If the Democratic party adheres to their declaration that Tilden was elected to the presidential office, then in order to be consistent they must continue to present him for it. But when the Finance Committee got through its investigations, which were started to crush the Republican leaders, but which resulted in crushing Tilden, the fact was an end, and it is not at all likely now that Tilden will be nominated.

Democratic Habits and Tactics.

Democratic political stumblers, bunners, and editors are greatly troubled about corruption in politics. Their very souls are harrowed up in view of it. Their hours of sleep and days of waking are haunted by this spectre, and it seems to be an increasing horror with them that this world is so full of iniquity. We are apprehensive that their constant familiarity with it in their own ranks has something to do with the quickening of their own conscience. A history of the Democratic party, traced back to 1832, will open up an ample field for contemplating the fruitful theme of human depravity. Its path, whenever in power, from that time down to the last session of Congress, is traced by the slime of official corruption that finds no parallel in the records of any other party or era. So far as frauds in elections, peculations and embezzlement in office, jobs and jobberies, thefts and outrages, disloyalty, treason and rebellion are concerned, they all help to mark the corrupt track of the Democratic party since the days of Jackson and Van Buren down to the present time.

It is not strange, then, that the Democrats not only smell, but become alarmed at official and personal corruption. It has proved the bane and ruin of that party. Through it, as it marked the administrations of Jackson and Van Buren, came popular alarm and disgust, which culminated in 1850 in a perfect overthrow—a Waterloo defeat to the party. The Augean stables were thoroughly purged by the popular broom, and the Democratic party was sweepingly repudiated and spurned by popular favor, for the reason that it had proved itself innately and intensely corrupt. Through the mistakes of the Whig party, and the treacheries of those it had trusted, the ground gained in that contest was lost, and the Democratic party was enabled to crawl back to power which it held until 1848, when the popular voice declared against it again, and elected General Taylor. During that administration new mistakes and new treacheries interposed, under which the Democratic party was permitted to thrust its corrupt presence into power once more, which it was enabled to hold through Whig follies and final disintegration until 1860, when it had become so thoroughly debased and rotten that the people in the name of Republicanism, again hurled it from authority in the Government and sent it into a refectory from which it has not yet been enabled fully to recover, though it has been largely aided in that direction by Republican blunders and follies. In 1861 the Democratic party developed from its normal condition of accredited dishonesty and corruption into that of absolute treason and rebellion, with a record that was made in the best blood of the Nation.

The Democratic party has been confronted with its own record, the worst known to the political history of republics, and it has been held in check by it, so that even the most criminal blunders of the Republican party have not been able to relieve it from a chronic National minority condition down to the present hour. Under its promptings of ambition and gnawings of hunger for spoils it has become desperate, and resorts to all sorts of expedients to recover the lost confidence of the people. It has no hope under its own record of ever recovering its lost prestige, unless its own history can be wiped from public recollection and be forgotten, or what they are aiming at specially now, is to fasten a corrupt record upon the fame of the Republican party, which will depress in public estimation to the Democratic level. The Democrats have been laboring to make that point every hour since they obtained power in the House of Representatives. Every prominent Republican official in the Government has been assailed with malignity akin to diabolism and has been pursued with a venom as unrelenting as hatred and a satanic thirst for advantage could prompt. For years this line of policy has been pursued by the Democratic party through insinuations, spies, bribery, and perjury, and with all their unscrupulous ingenuity and all their desperation of purpose and character, they have utterly failed of convicting a solitary prominent Republican official of peculation, embezzlement, robbery, or malfeasance in office in any shape that has established crime or entailed punishment. All this fruitless endeavor on the part of the Democrats has accomplished this much—it has shown by comparison the fact that more defaultering, peculation and embezzlement occurred in a single year under Democratic rule than has been shown to exist in all the eighteen years that the Republicans have been in power, and yet the Democratic press and its orator statesmen are continually howling fraud and corruption, when a record of its own party confronts it, which would shame the great father of the Democratic party, Memphis himself.—Annapolis Gazette.

The Mississippi Boats and the Exodus.

The Solicitor of the Treasury having examined the question involved in the libel proceedings against four Mississippi steamboats for carrying more passengers than the number named in their respective registers, has prepared his decision in the matter. A technical violation of the law is admitted; but the solicitor is convinced that the acts were not performed for the sake of profit, but of necessity; and because it would have been inhuman for the masters of the vessels to refuse transportation to the crowds of poor homeless and footless fugitives, who stood waiting along the river bank to be taken to places of safety and peace. As soon as the boat touched the banks where the negroes were they rushed eagerly on board. To have sent them ashore would have been to manifestly expose many of them to the danger of starvation.

In these cases the liabilities of the several vessels were laid at about $12,000. The solicitor recommended that the penalties be remitted by the secretary of the Treasury, which under the law the Secretary has the power to do.

In this connection a most significant fact may be mentioned. Although a number of the Mississippi steamboats have advertised to carry back free all negroes who desire to return, not more than three hundred of all the thousands who have fled from oppression have availed themselves of the privilege to return to the land of ex-slaveholders.

The Coming State Convention.

The nomination of first rate representative men at the coming State Convention, in whom the voters can place implicit reliance, will give the party a good vantage ground at the November election. We have confidence in straight-out nominations. The people know where such men stand. They can have no doubt about their views on the issues that now claim public attention. The Democratic party has been controlled by a King, which has looked more after its own profit than the welfare of the State. Its legislation, especially on the subject of taxation, has been of a most complicated and unsatisfactory nature. Offices have been created simply for the benefit of certain leaders of the King, who seem to hang on to the public treasury with a remorseless ambition, and the State has been forced to contribute to their support. All hopes of a reform of abuses and a reduction of public expenses under Democratic rule, have proven to be fallacious. There must be a change, an absolute change, if we are ever to be lifted out of the miserable rut in which the wheels of State have been running. Give us good nominees for State officers, and a fair election, and the prospect of a radical change in the government is favorable. The people long for it, the State needs it, and by a united, vigorous effort it may be secured.—Fredrick Examiner.

The resolutions of the colored people of Orangeburg County, S. C., in approval of the Rev. Dr. Webster's recent letter, furnish a strong illustration of the uneasy feeling of the Southern blacks respecting their present condition. These resolutions admit that there are many whites who are sincerely friendly to the blacks, but declare that these well-wishes of the race are subjected to social ostracism if they attempt to carry out their views. The wages paid to negroes are said to be unsatisfactory, and complaint is made of frequent unjust dealing on the part of the landlords and merchants, and the not illogical inference is drawn that the race might be better off in some region "where justice may be obtained, labor respected, and rights secured." Just how much reason these men have to feel that there is no hope of any of these things in South Carolina is sufficiently shown in a Washington dispatch. The negroes, in that State, were allowed to celebrate the Fourth of July, and it is barely possible that some of them took the liberty of making political speeches or listening to them. In the eyes of the Democracy this was going a little too far, and the organ of the Orangeburg bulldozers has issued a warning upon the subject. The Republican leaders are admonished to be careful how they stir up "strife among the colored people and embitter them against their neighbors, or forbearance may cease to be a virtue." A little reading between the lines is necessary, but very little. The meaning plainly is—Abandon your political rights, or take the vengeance of the bulldozer. And this, it must be admitted, is a queer state of things in a Republic.

Hon. Hendrick B. Wright's Committee, which has taken out license to search for the cause of the depression of labor, has something like $1,000 standing to its credit yet and has proceeded to Omaha and Salt Lake City. When Mr. Wright reaches Salt Lake he will find Mormonism very much depressed. This doesn't exactly come under the head of labor but Mr. Wright will be justified, we think, in throwing his eagle eye over the situation.

There is considerable talk in political circles about a certain class now supporting Mr. Hamilton for the gubernatorial nomination, who were formerly his most bitter opponents. It is not because they are supporting him now that excites so much comment, but the remarkable zeal they are exhibiting, and their efforts to shove aside from the good graces of the coming Governor, the friends who have stood by him through sunshine and storm, and who are rightfully entitled to his smiles and favors. These long-trying, staunch and true supporters of Mr. Hamilton, are in nowise jealous of the action of his new friends, but they do think it "cheeky" in the extreme for them, considering their previous bitter animosity, to come forward, now that his triumph is assured, and attempt to take a first place in Mr. Hamilton's affections. Of course the inference is, that these parties have axes to grind; but it is asserted that Mr. Hamilton has a wonderful memory of names; a clear judgment of character, and is in nowise likely to be cajoled or influenced by the flattery or persuasiveness of old enemies, who now appear in the mask of new friends.—Baltimorean.

TELEGRAPHIC.

A TOWN IN ASHES.

WHEELING, August 4.—A fire broke out at Volema, a town of 2,000 inhabitants, in Wood county, in this State, early this morning, and is still raging fiercely. Half the town is now in ashes, and it is probable the flames will not be stayed until their is nothing left for them to feed upon. At the present writing all the stores, hotels, warehouses, the telegraph office and the depot are destroyed. As every house in the town is built of wood, it is almost certain that the entire town will be consumed. It is estimated here that the loss will reach fully $100,000, probably more. The fire is supposed to be the work of an incendiary.

A KEY TO TILDEN.

WASHINGTON, August 3.—Before his departure for the East, Postmaster General Key, in conversation with a friend, spoke very freely on the general situation. When asked who he thought would be likely to receive the next Democrat nomination for the Presidency, he replied that if the Democrats meant to be consistent, there would be no escape from nominating Mr. Tilden. "You see," he said, "the cry of the Democracy for over two years has been 'fraud,' no opportunity is lost by the stump orator or the partisan journalist to denounce the present occupant of the White House as a fraud, the inference being, of course, that a 'thief-in-law' Hayes is President. Tilden was the people's choice. Now, admitting from a Democratic standpoint that that is true, it would be nothing more than fair, besides being extremely politic, for the Democrats to nominate Tilden again. The people would seem to have a right to expect this, as a means of vindicating the defrauded president-elect." Subsequently, however, Mr. Key said it was possible that even after all the fuss made by the Potter committee, the Democrats might choose some other battle cry, and make the question of fraud only a side issue. In that event, it would be easy to fling Tilden overboard. The latter, however, does not seem to entertain any idea of being crowded off. His friends declare that while other aspirants may be doing their level best to pull to the front, Tilden being out of public life is less conspicuous, and is in no danger of making any serious mistakes. Nobody doubts the wire-pulling genius of the man, and those who pretend to know something of his secret movements, affirm that at no time since March, 1877, has he been inactive. On the contrary, they say that despite the reports of disaffection in the South and West, he has already succeeded in laying his pipes so as to secure a large majority of Southern and Western delegates, and that instead of having any doubts on the subject, Tilden firmly believes that he may be nominated on the first ballot, but certainly on the second.

GREAT STORM IN ENGLAND.

LONDON, August 4.—The severest storm known here for many years raged in various parts of England, and especially in the valley of the Thames, on Saturday night. The storm was attended by a fall of hail stones, some of which were five inches in circumference. The damage to glass in places immediately around London amounts to thousands of pounds sterling. In a great part of Bedfordshire the hay crop has been completely swept away, and many cattle have been drowned. Newmarket and the neighborhood are flooded. The rain-fall in Buckinghamshire is estimated at seventy tons per acre. Damages by floods and lightning are also reported from Cambridge, Norfolk, Guilford, Leicester, Bath and Monmouth.

LOCAL NEWS.

—Rain has been plenty this week.
—Miss Laura Stalnaker is visiting at Grafton.
—Where is the Oakland Democratic campaign club?
—Read the Notice to Voters, on this page.

—Attention is called to the new advertisements in this issue.
—Our town is still full of overflowing with summer visitors.
—Hon. Geo. W. Wilson shipped a car load of cherry lumber east this week.

—Among the summer visitors who arrived on Wednesday last were three Chinese.

—Hon. John S. Combs, Dr. G. E. Porter and Maj. Alex. Slaw were in town this week.

—We call the attention of those interested to the Registration Notice, which appears on our eighth page.

—H. P. Tasker, Esq., left on the noon train Wednesday, for Baltimore, to attend the State Convention.

—200 sacks G. A. Salt for sale at Wm. P. Totten's Cheap Cash Store, Oakland, Md. a26-1f.

—The Oakland Democrats put their flag at half-mast Tuesday evening, after their defeat in the convention.

—THE REPUBLICAN will be furnished to subscribers from now until the close of the campaign this fall for 25 cents, in advance.

—How about the "split in the Democratic party" now. It has assumed the proportions of a yawning chasm, as it were.

—A Sunday School meeting, under the direction of Mr. Thane Miller, will be held in the M. E. Church Sunday afternoon at 4 o'clock. All are invited.

—Messrs. R. T. Browning and W. P. Totten left on the 10:41 train Wednesday evening, to attend the State Democratic Convention as delegates from this county.

—But one marriage license was granted last month by the county clerk, and he was requested not to have the names of the parties published at present.

—A radish measuring 11 inches in length and the same in circumference was brought to our office Wednesday by Mr. J. P. Kumpfer, who raised it on his "jack oak lot," near Oakland.

—An accident occurred to a freight train bound east, Tuesday morning, by which two car loads of wheat were spoiled. The accident occurred near Hutton's Switch and was occasioned by the bursting of a wheel.

—The Ladies' Aid Society of the Ev. Lutheran church will hold their fair and festival in Brooks' New York Store Room, beginning Aug. 11th, and continuing through the week. Patronage of the public solicited.

—W. D. Ison, eldest son of the beloved pastor of the M. E. Church of this place, has received the appointment of Instructor in the Preparatory department, and Commandant of the Cadet Corps of the West Virginia University.

—The barn of Abraham Manst, three miles from Grantsville, Garrett county, was burned Monday night last. Nothing but one horse was rescued from the flames. The loss is not known, but was large. The fire was incendiary.—Camb. News.

—Dr. W. F. Funderberg, Oculist, and Aurist, from Cumberland, Md., is at the "Davis House," where all those suffering from diseases of the eye, ear, nose and throat can consult him. All consultations free. Hours 9 A. M. to 1 P. M. jy19.

—The Agricultural Society of Western Maryland has just issued its annual premium list, which is one of the best ever published in Cumberland. The managers are making preparations for a first-class fair, and solicit every person to assist in making the display superior to any heretofore made. Copies of the list may be had on application to Mr. T. L. Cushman, Secretary.

—A tournament was held at Deer Park last Saturday, Hon. Montgomery Blair making the address; Mr. Joseph Godwin, Lieut. McGowan, judges; Mr. De Meissner and Mr. E. H. Trust, marshals. Mr. A. Dennis winning, crowned Miss Jennie Hartman, of Baltimore, as queen; Lieut. T. Dixon Bolles, Miss Marian Schurz, of Washington, first maid of honor; Mr. Screven, Miss Bertha Hatch, second maid of honor.

—The firm of Phelps & Co., have awarded the contract for building the 9,000 feet of trestling on the Mining road to Messrs. J. Hawkins & Co., of Massachusetts, who, it is stated, have underbid all other competitors by $5,000. The above contract does not include 1,800 feet of trestling on the Pennsylvania railroad in Maryland, between Vally street and the depot site. Representatives of the successful bidders are expected here to-day.

—Richard J. Norris, Jr., one of the best known citizens of Baltimore, died last Friday at Deer Park, whither he had gone in hope of recovering his health. Mr. Norris was sixty-one years old, and was a member of a well-known Baltimore family. He was a prominent director in the Baltimore and Ohio railroad, and was the author of a system for flushing the basin and for supplying the new Gunpowder water supply to manufacturing purposes.

—Died—Tuesday, July 29th, 1879, at the residence of her mother, near Accident, Md., Nancy C. Beachy, aged 11 years. She had made her home with her brother-in-law, Frederick Gortner, residing near Oakland, for about two years previous to last October, when she went home to attend school. She was a remarkably intelligent and amiable child, and was much beloved by her companions, and especially the teachers and scholars of the Vutzy Sunday School, of which school she was a regular and faithful student, while making her home at Mr. Gortner's.

Church Services—Sunday.
St. Matthew's P. E. Church—Morning Prayer and Sermon every Sunday, at 11 A. M. Evening Prayer at 6 P. M. Holy Communion 1st Sunday in each month, at 11 A. M. Evening Prayer every day in the week at 6 P. M.
Stone Church—Preaching in the morning at 11 o'clock, and in the evening at 8 o'clock, by Dr. Scott.

M. E. Church—Preaching in the evening at 8 o'clock, by Rev. B. Ison.

Roll of Honor.
The following persons have paid on account of subscription, advertising, &c., since our last report:

Mrs. A. F. Funderberg, Hamilton House, E. P. Arnold, Geo. H. P. Kumpfer, Thos. C. Davidson, Joseph E. Harvey, A. J. Shank, Alex. Chisholm, E. D. Kepner, Geo. L. Bosley, H. G. Sanders, Hon. Lloyd Lowndes, W. H. H. Friend, Joseph Martin, Jacob Shatzer.

Sale of the Cumberland Civilian.
The retirement of Col. Will H. Lowdermilk from the editorial management of the Cumberland Civilian, was announced by that paper last Sunday. The purchaser is the Civilian Publishing Company, with Col. H. J. Johnson as the controlling shareholder. The Civilian will be continued as a Sunday paper.

OAKLAND, August 4th, 1879.
ED. REPUBLICAN:—State and county taxes are being inquired into by the citizens of some of the counties of this State with a view of relieving them. Would it not be advisable for the citizens of this county, regardless of party, to have a meeting to see if ours can't be lowered? Hope to hear from others upon the subject.

Very respectfully,
W. H. HALL.

Death of a Summer Visitor.
The death of Mr. M. H. Wells, at the Everstone House, Sunday morning, was one of the saddest occurrences that has come under our notice for a long time. Mr. Wells was a resident of Fairfax Court House, Va., and though but thirty-seven years of age, had attained an eminent position in the legal profession, of which he was a member. His friends brought him to Oakland about two weeks ago, but he was too far gone for his climate to do him any substantial good. Mr. Wells died the peaceful and happy death of the Christian, and left many assurances that all was well with him. The grief-stricken relatives received every kindness and comfort that could be given them, from Mr. and Mrs. Everstone and the many friends that their sorrow and trouble brought them. The remains were taken to Virginia for interment, on the midnight train, and a large number of citizens accompanied the remains to the depot. Messrs. J. W. Veitch, T. J. Peddicord, G. S. Hamill, A. B. Gonder, H. Wheeler Combs and W. A. Daily, of the Garrett county bar, acted as pall-bearers and showed much respect to their deceased brother. The family and friends have our deepest sympathy in their bereavement.

The Anti-Canal Wing.
A large meeting of Democrats belonging to the anti-canal wing of the party was held in Belydore Hall, in Cumberland Tuesday night. Dr. W. W. Wiley presided, with a number of vice presidents. Delegates from several county districts were present. Speeches in the interest of harmony were made by Thomas E. McCardell and Col. Horace Besley. Resolutions were adopted pledging the meeting to vote for no man for Governor, Comptroller or the House of Delegates who will not solemnly promise to work for a thorough change of canal management. The political course of the canal managers in that county was violently denounced. Col. Besley made one of the best speeches of his life, and declared that J. Morrison Harris was the legal Governor, and that A. P. Gorman was one of the greatest political rascals in the county. An executive committee was appointed, consisting of R. D. Johnson, Thos. F. McCardell, of Cumberland; R. O. Neill, of Mount Savage; T. B. Wood, of Lonaconing, and T. P. Rooney, of Frostburg, for the purpose of thoroughly organizing the anti-canal wing throughout the county.

County Commissioners.
County Commissioners met in extra session, Wednesday, August 6th, to present a full Board.
Bonds of G. W. Blocher, Michael Durst and Samuel Beachy, supervisors on National road, approved.
Protest of W. H. Boyler, against road being made through his farm, filed.

Board passed order allowing 5 per cent. on all taxes paid on or before Sept. 1st, 4 per cent. to October 1st, and 3 per cent. to Nov. 1st.

An order was passed instructing the clerk to advertise until Monday, Sept. 2nd, for sealed proposals for building bridge over Youth river, at Sang run; for bridge over Castleman's run, in district No. 3; for bridge over Buffalo creek, in district No. 2, and bridge over Snowy creek, in district No. 7.

County Democratic Convention.
Agreeable to the call of the chairman of the county committee the delegates selected at the primaries Saturday, met at the court house Tuesday, and were called to order by that gentleman.

J. W. Veitch, Esq., was elected temporary chairman, and Dr. B. T. Keller, temporary secretary.

On motion a committee of one from each district represented was appointed on credentials, permanent organization, &c. The committee was composed of the following gentlemen: District No. 1, R. J. West; No. 2, Jeremiah Guard; No. 3, W. R. Getty; No. 4, W. A. Brydon; No. 5, Daniel Hinebaugh; No. 6, R. T. Browning; No. 7, Thos. J. Browning; No. 8, J. McC. Mason.

The committee, after being out a short time, returned and reported the permanent organization as follows:

President—Dr. B. T. Keller.
Secretary—W. A. Brydon.
And the following delegates as entitled to seats in the convention:

District No. 1—Rudolph Beckman, R. J. West, A. Wilson, Herman Beckman, John Miller, Jr.
No. 2—Jeremiah Guard, Jas. H. Rush, George B. Frantz.
No. 3—W. R. Getty, Eli Stanton, Dr. B. T. Keller, Chas. Leish, Chas. Warlick.

No. 4—Wm. A. Brydon, W. H. Bonard, A. J. Warnick, George T. Michael, J. L. Michael.

No. 5—Daniel Hinebaugh, Adam Snyder, Christian Snyder, Melchior J. Miller, Morgan Coneyaw.

No. 6—R. T. Browning, E. A. Browning, Wm. DeWitt, Jno. Kitzmiller, C. A. Hoge.

No. 7—T. J. Peddicord, John W. Veitch, Thos. J. Browning, G. W. Delawder, John Wolf.

No. 8—J. McC. Mason, Charles Best, Geo. H. Gauer, W. D. Hoge, Robert Lee.

No. 9—Not represented.
Mr. Peddicord offered the following resolution, which was laid on the table:

Resolved, That no person shall be placed in nomination as a delegate to the State Convention unless such person shall be endorsed by a majority of the delegates from his district.

The same gentleman offered a series of resolutions expressive of the sense of the convention from a purely political standpoint, which were adopted.

The following gentlemen were then placed in nomination as delegates to the State Convention: H. P. Tasker, Hon. Wm. R. Getty, R. T. Browning, Wm. Hinebaugh, W. L. Davidson, Samuel Johnson.

The first ballot resulted as follows: Getty—Dist. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6—4. Tasker—1, 2, 3, 5, 6—5.

Browning—1, 2, 3, 5, 6—5. Rawlings—4, 7, 8—3.

Johnson—4, 7, 8—3. Hinebaugh—7, 8—2.

Messrs. Getty, Tasker and Browning were declared duly elected as delegates.

The following gentlemen were then elected as Alternates: Dr. B. T. Keller, W. P. Totten, Christian Snyder.

A resolution instructing delegates to support Hamilton for Governor and Noah Bowles for clerk of the court of appeals was lost.

The convention was well attended, and the best of order was maintained.

Real Estate Transfers.

The following is a list of real estate transfers filed for record in the office of W. H. Tower, Clerk of the Circuit Court for Garrett county, for the week ending August 6:

Joseph Brown, trustee, to August Bondy, part of a tract of land called "Mount Airy," containing 30 acres, Lill Hare and wife to August Bondy, Military Lot No. 2222, known as "Durst's Purchase;" $50.

Wm. C. Pendington, trustee, to Trench Enlow, part of a tract of land called "Emancipation," containing 50 acres; $250.

Effect of the Large Wheat Receipts.

The unusually large quantities of wheat and other grain which has been fairly pouring into Baltimore for the past few weeks have, besides greatly increasing the trade and commerce of the city, been a material benefit to the laboring man. All along the line of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad the hands on freight trains have been making "extra time." In many instances last month the men made from five to ten days more than the full month's work, which, of course, increased their pay in a corresponding ratio. In this city the same state of affairs has existed at the elevators and in the yards of the railroad at Locust Point. The increase of work has not stopped either with the railroad men, and, in fact, all who are engaged in the actual handling of grain have worked extra hours, and been glad of the opportunity to do so. The largest receipts of wheat ever known in this city in one day arrived on Tuesday last, amounting to 451,750 bushels. Up to and including yesterday the total receipts of the week were 1,582,227 bushels, and the shipments were 1,194,502 bushels.

A comparison of these figures with those of a similar time of the two last years will show the increase of this branch of trade in Baltimore.

During a corresponding period last year the total receipts of wheat were 1,010,500 bushels; shipments 575,755 bushels. In 1877, for the same period, the receipts were 122,680 bushels, and the shipments recorded only 26,280 bushels. The comparison then shows that trade increased in 1879 over 1878, during five days, 511,477 bushels, or over 50 per cent. of the business done these five days of 1877 is 1,429,547 bushels, while the amount handled this week is considerably more than ten times that handled only two years ago during the same time.

It will also be seen that the receipts of Tuesday last viz., 451,750 bushels, were not very far from one-half of those of five days last year, and that they were almost three times as great as those of the five days upon which their calculations are based of 1877.

When the business grew so rapidly in 1878 merchants felt very sanguine of the almost unlimited bulk to which it could be extended, but even the most sanguine express themselves now with much pride when pointing to the figures of this year, although still predicting a steady increase as foreign vessels are drawn to this port for their cargoes by the excellent harbor and unsurpassed terminal facilities of the railroads.—Baltimore American.

An exchange comments upon the very general demand to keep things out of the paper that ought to go in to the paper by saying that the exclamation "for Heaven's sake don't let it get into the papers," is the first cry of persons caught in a mean scrape. Keep it out of the papers, and it is all right. No matter how contemptible or dishonest the position may be, or how much reason the offender may have for shame, remorse and contrition, if the circumstances can be kept from the "columns of the press," as the people who have good reason to be afraid of newspaper reporters sometimes call them, he is tranquil and happy. We are no champion for that extreme license of the press that is sometimes displayed, but we have noticed that the ones who cry out the loudest against newspaper disclosures are generally those whose own lives and acts would not bear very close inspection. People who live clean, straightforward lives have little to fear from the newspapers.

From the looks of things in Allegany county, Mr. Hamilton has a fine job of mending his fences to do there. His old friends, who were true to him in his darker days, can hardly be blamed for displaying a nasty temper now that his former opponents have turned them down and seized upon the present advantages and prospective profits of his boom.

The original Hamiltonians seem bound to have their share in the good things, or else kick up the tremendous racket that is threatened by their organ.—Balto. American.

Some of Mr. Hamilton's fences have been knocked clean down, and the inhabitants of the fields are roaming at sweet will all over the premises. We do not believe the repairs can be made. A party will assemble to night and burn the timber. Mr. Hamilton isn't a success in the line mentioned.—Camb. News, Tuesday.

The Congressional investigation into the workings of the Supervisors' law in Cincinnati, is not making any headway. It has been impossible to find a legal voter who was prevented from voting by a supervisor, while testimony is being continually stumbled upon showing that the election of 1876, when there was no resort to the protection of the federal election laws, abounded with fraud.

So far in the Democratic campaign

this fall there has been very little reference to the extra sessions. Their stump speakers keep it in the background as far as possible, and evince a decided preference for the old financial issues on which they have been repeatedly beaten in Ohio. When a voice unreservedly approving the extra session is heard it is always found to proceed from some able statesman hard at work talking encouragement to himself, and not engaged in trying issues between the two parties before the people. Senator Ben Hill, of Georgia, is one of those who pretends to be highly delighted with the results of the extra session, for the reason, as he told a Washington Post reporter, that "it has so clearly defined the issue between the two political parties of this country." Why, then, is it that Democratic speakers on the stump have so little to say on this great issue? Mr. Hill declares that he has "always said that the mission of the Republican party was to destroy the government, and they have been forced now to occupy that position." He thinks, however, that "it is the duty of the Democratic party to save the government. It is the party of the Constitution, the party of freedom, and we must make the fight like men." There runs through this an echo of the old refrain of "All we asked was to be let alone." But the Republican party, bent on its mission of destruction, would not let them alone; and so now they have gotten back again and propose to save the government. We venture to predict that if Mr. Hill goes on the stump in any Western state he would not get off more than one speech in that key before a stopper would be clapped over his mouth by the party managers.—Balto. American.

It is perfectly idle for Republican orators to attempt to reap the credit of resumption since everybody knows that like other isms the greenback heresy originated in their camp. Resumption owes its success to the persistent efforts of hard-money men in both parties.—Baltimore Bulletin.

It won't be long until the Democrats will be trying to prove that it was the Republican party that seceded and set up a rebellion against the Government, and that Massachusetts, and not South Carolina, passed the first secession ordinance, and fired upon Fort Sumpter in the Boston harbor; that Lincoln was President of the Confederacy and Jeff Davis was a pure white-souled saint who sacrificed his life to save this Union &c., &c.—Bornsbora Odd-Fellow.

Conservative Sentiments
From the Okonoma (Miss.) States.
A brave old rebel yell, boys, for State Sovereignty and the Right of withdrawing from the Union!

A grand, old rebel yell, ye gallant lads, for the repeal of the Black Amendments.

A rousing, old rebel yell, Southern, for President Davis and the Confederate soldiers and civilians who have never deserted the Cause!

Three ringing, old rebel yells and a tiger for the capture of the Capitol and the Supremacy of the South.

Just hold a bit, you Yankees, until we have kicked the dead and stinking carcass of Centralism back into the grave that was dug for it by the grand, old statesmen of 1783;

Just hold a bit, and you will see our Sovereign States revoking the ballot from the negro race;

Just hold a bit, and you will see our people closing the last free-school house door in sunny Southland;

Just hold a bit, and you will see more fun than a few.

KENTUCKY ELECTION.

LOUISVILLE, Aug. 5.—Specials received by the Courier-Journal indicate a falling off of the Democratic vote cast at yesterday's election for State officers and members of the legislature. The Democratic central committee estimates the total vote not over 200,000—a falling off of over 50,000 on the Tilden-Hayes vote and of over 15,000 on the last gubernatorial vote. In this city alone the vote falls over 8,000. The Republicans make slight gains in the legislature and defeat the speaker of the last house, but the Democratic majority is still overwhelming in the constitutional convention fails for want of a constitutional majority in its favor. In this city, where the Workingmen elected five of the seven representatives two years ago, none but Democrats were elected yesterday. The Greenbackers cut no figure in the contest.

Some of Mr. Hamilton's "old time friends" in this city are offering to bet money that he will not carry this county this fall. What pure friendship that is, to be sure. How like these "old-time friends." They want the leaves and fishes, but not Mr. Hamilton. But we say, gentlemen, he will carry this county, and that by a good majority, too—you to the contrary, notwithstanding.—Cumberland Times.

If you want to prevent Typhoid Fever, or if you feel as if you were going to have the chills and fever, take Dr. Bull's Baltimore Pills. Price 25 cts.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

Special Correspondence to The Republican.
WASHINGTON, D. C., Aug. 5, 1879.

The Democratic papers are now endeavoring to conceal some of their iniquity by ascribing the consequences to other than their real causes. This is notably the case in the matter of the exodus of negroes from Mississippi and other southern States. With their usual duplicity and disregard for the truth of history, they strive to make it appear that it is caused by the efforts of Northern politicians for political purposes. The absurdity of such a proposition is its own refutation. Everybody knows that the negroes, denied the political rights granted them by the amendments to the Constitution, are flying from persecution—from the whip, the knife and the shot gun—from their burning dwellings—from robbery, and murder. From crimes of which Lamar, Hampton, Hill, Butler, Singleton and the other Southern leaders are just as much guilty as if their own hands had held the torch, the knife and the gun with which they were perpetrated.

Everybody knows that if the men above named and men of their class had set their faces determinedly against the innumerable cowardly crimes that have been perpetrated against the ignorant, the weak and the defenceless in the South, the civilized world would never have been shocked by the perpetration of such crimes. Everybody knows also that in Mississippi and South Carolina, two overwhelmingly Republican States, these crimes were perpetrated for the purpose of putting into the U. S. Senate Lamar, Hampton and Butler, one of whom participated personally in the massacre at Hamburg. And now representing minorities, they hold places that should be held by Republicans representing majorities.

Senator Blaine writes here that, while he does not this year expect an old fashioned Republican majority in Maine, he is very confident of such substantial victory as will regain the legislature, thus making certain the election of a Republican Governor. Secretary Sherman, writing after he left the State, and in the full knowledge of what all the leading men there believe, says the same. The importance of the election can hardly be over-estimated, as it occurs early in September and will have influence on those coming later. The Republicans never made a better fight than they are now making.

Capt Eads, all of whose schemes are as bold in conception as they are successful in results, proposes to build a marine canal across the Isthmus, to transport on it vessels and their cargoes from ocean to ocean. He says the railway can be constructed in one-fourth of the time and for one-fourth the cost of the De Lesseps canal. He will ask for a survey by Government engineers.

Editorially, the Pittsburg Post of Saturday says: "Our manufacturers cannot supply the demand for iron from the East and West, running double turn, at $38 per ton. Everything looks toward prosperity and healthy development of our industries." Pittsburg suffered more severely, proportionately, from the panic than any other city in the country, and its recovery is a sure sign of the brightening of the skies.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

To the Republican Voters of Garrett county:

You are hereby requested to meet in your respective districts on Saturday, Sept. 6th, 1879;

for the purpose of selecting five (5) delegates from each district to meet in county convention, in Oakland on

Wednesday, Sept. 10th, 1879;

for the purpose of selecting three (3) delegates to represent Garrett county in the State nominating convention which meets in Baltimore on September 12th, and three (3) alternates for said delegates, and three (3) members in the State Central Committee for Garrett Co.

The members of the district committees are requested to make the necessary arrangements for the primaries named in this call.

By order
A. G. STURGEISS,
Chairman.

NOTICE.

I hereby warn all persons from buying or trading for two notes given by Jacob Shatzer in Lewis Lintberger, as I will not pay them.

JACOB SHATZER,
Assistant, Md.

Notice to Tax-Payers.

By an Act of the General Assembly of Maryland, passed 1876, a discount of a per cent. will be allowed on all taxes paid on or before the 1st day of September, a discount of 2 per cent. on all taxes paid on or before October 1st and a discount of 3 per cent. on all taxes paid on or before November 1st, after which time no discount will be allowed.

By order County Commissioners.

W. H. HAGANS,
Clerk.

The Republican.

JAS. A. HAYDEN, Publisher.
OAKLAND, GARRETT CO., MD.

SECRET AFFINITIES.

A PANTHER'S PRYSTANT.
DEEP in the tangled thicket, two statues white,
On an old temple's front, against blue gleams,
Of an Arabian sky, looked out in light,
Beneath their marble dreams.

In the same shell imbedded (crystal tears
Of the sad sea mourning her Venus frown),
Two pearls of loneliness, through long years,
Kept whispering words unknown.

In the fresh pleasure, by Granada's river,
Close to the low-voiced fountain's silver showers,
Two roses, from Buddha's garden, ever
Mingled their murmuring flows.

Upon the domes of Venice, in a nest,
Where Love from age to age has laid his day,
Two white doves, with their feet of pink, found rest,
Through the soft noontide of May.

Dove, rose, pearl, marble, into rain dim Alike dissolve themselves, alike decay;
Pearls melt, flowers wither, marble gains distinctness,
And bright birds that away.

Each element, once free, flows back to feed
The undiminished life, and, yearning dumb;
Whence God's all-slapping hands in silence kneel
Each form that is its own.

Be slow, slow changes, to white and tender flesh
The marble softens down its flawless knead;
The rose in lips as sweet and red and fresh,
Beligred, blooms again.

The doves once more murmur and swoon beneath
The heart of two young lovers when they meet:
The pearl grows round, the flower grows red and true,
The marble smiles divinely sweet.

Hence sympathetic emanations flow,
And with soft sympathy the heart is stirred;
Touched by them, the marble spirit learns to know
The sisterhood of soul.

Obedient to the hint some fragrance sends,
Some color, or some ray with mystic power,
A form to form, a flower to flower,
As the bee seeks her flower.

Of moonlight visions round the temple shed,
Of lives linked in the sea, a narrow weaver,
Of flower talk flowing through the petals red,
Where the bright fountain breaks.

Kisses, and wings that shivered to the kiss,
On golden daisies, and on roses, and on lilies,
Sweet influence, faithful to remembered bliss,
The old love stirs again.

Forgotten presence shines forth, the past
Is for the vision, and the vision is the past;
The breathing flower, in crimson lips recast,
Lives, to herself revealed.

Where the laugh plays a glittering world within
The pearl revolves, her sister softly bright;
The marble thrills, fused in a maiden skin
As flesh, and pure, and white.

Under some law and some voice the dove
Has found an echo of her tender mood;
Resistance grows impulsive, and love
Springs up from the dove.

On wings when burning, trembling, I have
What shines, what glows, what glows, what glows,
Saw in me mingling marble, joined of yore,
As pearl, or bird, or flower?

—Through the heart, from the French
—From the French, from the French

A PHOTOGRAPH FROM LIFE.

Great excitement was caused on a certain day in the usually quiet household of M. Borno, by a letter from the married daughter, Mme. Artois, who resided in Rome, in which she informed her parents that a suitor for her sister Elsie would soon appear at Villeneuve. And she further told them that this M. A. de Villani, a young man of good birth and with a comfortable fortune, had been struck with a photograph in a shop window, and that he had been so struck that he felt he must try every means to win the original for his wife. This photograph turned out to be one of her young sisters that she had sent to be copied, and seeing that the young man was in earnest, she had promised to write and introduce him as an unexceptionable parti. Mme. Artois wound up by reminding her father that Elsie was no longer a girl, and that, in fact, it would be very foolish not to accept this bit of good fortune.

It was therefore agreed, in a family conclave, the fair Elsie consenting, and with the due approval of the family friend, M. de Beland, that the coming guest should be graciously received. M. de Beland even insisted on having him in his own house, as he laughingly said, in order that he might the better judge if this M. A. de Villani was worthy of the prize he sought.

Among the numerous and various visitors to the beautiful southern city, Villeneuve, with its girdle of mountains and blue waves, few could help remarking in the gay crowd on the promenade or in the public gardens, a girl, almost always accompanied by a favorite dog, whose elegant and quiet toilet, as well as her graceful walk and the piquant expression of her face, always made one wish to look again. It was a face, rather than a decidedly beautiful look, which, however, was often brightened by a smile which prettily curled her lips. There was a quiet elegance about her, although different from the fashionable ladies, English, French, German, or Russian, who rested on the chairs or paced up and down. Generally might be seen at her side M. de Beland, a man past youth, but with a vigorous, spare frame, whose keen, dark eyes seemed to take notice of everything, but were often turned on his fair companion with the tender familiar interest of a privileged friend. M. de Beland was rich, and having no particular occupation, he made himself useful to his friends in general, but to those of the Maison Borno in particular. Thither he brought all the news of the place to amuse M. Borno, who was too old and infirm to go out. He could tell of the last offense given to the old inhabitants of Villeneuve by the new French comers, and the latest reform in town regulations. He could say what was the prospect of the olive and grape crops, etc. He was always ready to escort Mme. Elsie to the theatre or try a new song with her. He was a convenient partner at a ball or a patient companion for a morning's shopping. Moreover, M. de Beland's taste was a proverb. All this made his visits to the old Maison Pontneuf very welcome, and with him seemed to come a little waft from the outer world to the very retired somber street in which many of the old Villeneuve aristocracy resided, withdrawn from the newer part of the town to which visitors resorted. To look at it from the outside, one would not imagine the quaint and rich carvings which adorned the walls or the broad marble steps and handsome suit of rooms which belonged to this house.

In the simple and quiet manner common to the old inhabitants of the place, the Borno family, and the Maison de Campagne, lived the Borno family with their youngest child, two other daughters having married satisfactorily. Now were the couple very eager for her to follow her sister's example, in spite of the hints of their acquaintances, and M. de Beland's serious warning, given every now and then, that it was really high time to marry her. "Such an agreeable, amiable, gentle girl! it was a pity, and very astonishing. All her contemporaries were married, or about to be; and Elsie was nearly twenty-seven!" At this the old father would look troubled, and shrugging his shoulders, ask what his friend would have. Could he do more? Had there not been two or three eligible proposals? But the girl had refused them all. Elsie was dutiful and the light of her eyes, and it was surely not their duty to force her into matrimony, if she evidently preferred to remain as she was.

To this M. de Beland said nothing, but looked aside. For his visits to the Maison Pontneuf would have been very different without Elsie. But on hearing the letter of Mme. Artois, speaking so highly of the young man, and even appealing to himself to use his influence in favor of the match, he threw himself gallantly into the spirit of the adventure, and took care to be at the diligence office to receive and welcome M. A. de Villani, whose first visit to the Maison Pontneuf was put in his calendar. His easy, genial manners and real kindness helping to put every one at ease, and to draw out the nervous and somewhat agitated lover.

When it was over, they all agreed that not a word too much had been said in his praise. His manner was all that could be desired; while it was evident that he was very much in love. On the other hand, M. de Villani poured out to his kind host, his contentment and satisfaction. There was no disappointment, Elsie was better than her picture; and each time he saw her he found some new perfection. Truly she was one of those women who bear a close inspection, and whose beauty grows gradually; a woman who can brighten a home as well as a ball-room. All the acquaintances and friends of the Borno were eager and profuse in congratulations and inquiries. M. de Beland told everyone that it was a capital thing; that there was sure to be a gay wedding; and he joked Elsie, and encouraged M. de Villani. Everybody observed what high spirits M. de Beland was in; and yet for all this he felt himself sighing as he thought of Elsie going away. But he was not a selfish man, and he felt that it was quite time for his little friend to marry.

After a little time, however, M. de Beland fancied that the young lover returned to his visits to Maison Pontneuf rather too quiet and silent in mood, though any allusion to the family only made him warmly declare that the more he saw of the lady the more he admired her. "Then pray hurry on the marriage, my friend," returned M. de Beland; "for it is very clear that courting does not suit you. You grow thinner and paler every day."

But M. A. de Villani only laughed. It was quite a gay time at the old Maison Pontneuf; so many people came to hear "all about it" and the father and mother were not at all dissatisfied to tell the romantic story over and over again, and receive the congratulations of their neighbors. But when any one ventured to speak to Elsie herself, she drew up and said that "congratulations were premature." It was some time before she had done her honor of asking her hand, but nothing was settled; which speech caused a great deal of surprise and talk. And then, as time went on and remarks were made on the evident gravity and pale looks of the suitor, people began to speculate, and even a few bets were made as to what was to be the ultimate end of it all. After the first greetings, this question was asked by everyone: "Well, and what does Mlle. Elsie say now?" One of M. de Beland, who knew everyone, grew excited and anxious and warmly expressed his certainty that all would come right.

"You are right, and I am getting ill," replied M. A. de Villani one day to his host and friend. "I cannot bear to say any longer, and I have written home to say I shall return immediately."

And when is the marriage to take place?

"Never! No, I see plainly that she does not care for me—at least not as I care for her. I have struggled against this conviction, and thought I might win her at last. But she neither yes or no, and I feel sure she is partly led on by not liking to disappoint her friends—yourself first and foremost, for it is easy to see you have a great influence over her. Even if she were to say 'yes' to-day, I don't think I should wish it. I feel I have not won her heart, and it has always been my dream and wish to marry for love—love on both sides. So thanking you over and over again for great kindness, I have decided to go and take my leave."

M. de Beland was in his garden, smoking his cigar, when this conversation took place; and he continued to pace up and down beneath the orange trees in silence. Then, suddenly turning to the other, he said:

"I shall go at once to the Maison Pontneuf, and you can follow me by and by."

M. A. de Villani shook his head, for he was convinced that his friend's well-meant interference would do no good, and he remained thinking it all over, trying to find the clew to Elsie's feelings.

Meanwhile M. de Beland arrived at the sombre old house, and, rushing up the steps quicker than usual, he thought himself lucky in finding Elsie and her dog in the drawing-room.

She was at once aware that there was something unusual in his face, and this brought a bright and becoming color to her cheeks.

"How is this, Elsie?" he said, trying to be angry. "I never suspected you of being a coquette."

And then he went on, in a somewhat excited manner, to upbraid her for keeping the poor young fellow in suspense so long.

"I don't think I have done that," she said in a low voice and downcast eyes. "I always told him that—the truth in fact. But he hoped I should change all for granted, and hurried things on so very much. And then papa and mamma seemed to wish for it so much, and—"

"Of course they did—of course we did, and do; and I'll tell you what, Elsie, you are throwing away your chance. You will never have again. There are not many young men like him, I can tell you. What can be your objection? Isn't he handsome, well-born, young, rich, agreeable, and very fond of you? The fact is, you are proud. Nothing will suit you less than a Prince. But let me tell you, as an old, privileged friend, that it is one thing to join a girl in her walks, and pay compliments, and take a chair by her in the gardens, and dance with her, and so on; but quite another thing to ask her in marriage. Ever since that Prince de—"

has been introduced to you I have observed a change in you. Don't be offended, I speak for your good. It has made me so sorry to see that young man so low and cast down, and after each visit he gets more and more so. Flesh and blood can't stand it, and take a chair by her in the gardens, and dance with her, and so on; but quite another thing to ask her in marriage. Ever since that Prince de—"

has been introduced to you I have observed a change in you. Don't be offended, I speak for your good. It has made me so sorry to see that young man so low and cast down, and after each visit he gets more and more so. Flesh and blood can't stand it, and take a chair by her in the gardens, and dance with her, and so on; but quite another thing to ask her in marriage. Ever since that Prince de—"

has been introduced to you I have observed a change in you. Don't be offended, I speak for your good. It has made me so sorry to see that young man so low and cast down, and after each visit he gets more and more so. Flesh and blood can't stand it, and take a chair by her in the gardens, and dance with her, and so on; but quite another thing to ask her in marriage. Ever since that Prince de—"

has been introduced to you I have observed a change in you. Don't be offended, I speak for your good. It has made me so sorry to see that young man so low and cast down, and after each visit he gets more and more so. Flesh and blood can't stand it, and take a chair by her in the gardens, and dance with her, and so on; but quite another thing to ask her in marriage. Ever since that Prince de—"

has been introduced to you I have observed a change in you. Don't be offended, I speak for your good. It has made me so sorry to see that young man so low and cast down, and after each visit he gets more and more so. Flesh and blood can't stand it, and take a chair by her in the gardens, and dance with her, and so on; but quite another thing to ask her in marriage. Ever since that Prince de—"

has been introduced to you I have observed a change in you. Don't be offended, I speak for your good. It has made me so sorry to see that young man so low and cast down, and after each visit he gets more and more so. Flesh and blood can't stand it, and take a chair by her in the gardens, and dance with her, and so on; but quite another thing to ask her in marriage. Ever since that Prince de—"

has been introduced to you I have observed a change in you. Don't be offended, I speak for your good. It has made me so sorry to see that young man so low and cast down, and after each visit he gets more and more so. Flesh and blood can't stand it, and take a chair by her in the gardens, and dance with her, and so on; but quite another thing to ask her in marriage. Ever since that Prince de—"

has been introduced to you I have observed a change in you. Don't be offended, I speak for your good. It has made me so sorry to see that young man so low and cast down, and after each visit he gets more and more so. Flesh and blood can't stand it, and take a chair by her in the gardens, and dance with her, and so on; but quite another thing to ask her in marriage. Ever since that Prince de—"

has been introduced to you I have observed a change in you. Don't be offended, I speak for your good. It has made me so sorry to see that young man so low and cast down, and after each visit he gets more and more so. Flesh and blood can't stand it, and take a chair by her in the gardens, and dance with her, and so on; but quite another thing to ask her in marriage. Ever since that Prince de—"

has been introduced to you I have observed a change in you. Don't be offended, I speak for your good. It has made me so sorry to see that young man so low and cast down, and after each visit he gets more and more so. Flesh and blood can't stand it, and take a chair by her in the gardens, and dance with her, and so on; but quite another thing to ask her in marriage. Ever since that Prince de—"

has been introduced to you I have observed a change in you. Don't be offended, I speak for your good. It has made me so sorry to see that young man so low and cast down, and after each visit he gets more and more so. Flesh and blood can't stand it, and take a chair by her in the gardens, and dance with her, and so on; but quite another thing to ask her in marriage. Ever since that Prince de—"

has been introduced to you I have observed a change in you. Don't be offended, I speak for your good. It has made me so sorry to see that young man so low and cast down, and after each visit he gets more and more so. Flesh and blood can't stand it, and take a chair by her in the gardens, and dance with her, and so on; but quite another thing to ask her in marriage. Ever since that Prince de—"

has been introduced to you I have observed a change in you. Don't be offended, I speak for your good. It has made me so sorry to see that young man so low and cast down, and after each visit he gets more and more so. Flesh and blood can't stand it, and take a chair by her in the gardens, and dance with her, and so on; but quite another thing to ask her in marriage. Ever since that Prince de—"

has been introduced to you I have observed a change in you. Don't be offended, I speak for your good. It has made me so sorry to see that young man so low and cast down, and after each visit he gets more and more so. Flesh and blood can't stand it, and take a chair by her in the gardens, and dance with her, and so on; but quite another thing to ask her in marriage. Ever since that Prince de—"

has been introduced to you I have observed a change in you. Don't be offended, I speak for your good. It has made me so sorry to see that young man so low and cast down, and after each visit he gets more and more so. Flesh and blood can't stand it, and take a chair by her in the gardens, and dance with her, and so on; but quite another thing to ask her in marriage. Ever since that Prince de—"

has been introduced to you I have observed a change in you. Don't be offended, I speak for your good. It has made me so sorry to see that young man so low and cast down, and after each visit he gets more and more so. Flesh and blood can't stand it, and take a chair by her in the gardens, and dance with her, and so on; but quite another thing to ask her in marriage. Ever since that Prince de—"

has been introduced to you I have observed a change in you. Don't be offended, I speak for your good. It has made me so sorry to see that young man so low and cast down, and after each visit he gets more and more so. Flesh and blood can't stand it, and take a chair by her in the gardens, and dance with her, and so on; but quite another thing to ask her in marriage. Ever since that Prince de—"

taken advantage of—I like you as a friend, of course, but—you misunderstand—"

"And I love you not as a friend, Elsie. I have done so. But I would not allow it to myself even. I was too old for you; you only thought of me as a grave relation and mentor. I know now what it all means; my dread of losing you—"

"But you urged me on," she interrupted. "It was your words which nearly all but induced me to consent. You seemed to have set your heart on it."

"Not so. Let us sit down and quickly talk together a little," he said. This they did, and he managed to convince her that if her heart had been given to him it was not until she had full possession of his. But how could he, at his age, be so vain as to suppose that he had the shadow of a chance? He had tried to still every feeling bravely; too much so, indeed. But now, surely, she would not punish him for this!

The result of it all was, to the utter surprise of M. Borno, his friend M. de Beland made a formal proposal for the hand of his daughter, Elsie. The old gentleman had to seek for, and then pour his spectacles before he could believe that he heard rightly, looking first at one and then at the other in a way to bring up blushes as well as smiles on the face of Elsie. When he really took it in, and when he fully grasped, and after a little more talk between papa and mamma, they began to wonder how it was they had never thought of this before. So this was why Mlle. Elsie had shown herself so dumb to please.

In the course of time she confessed that she had only given up all hope when M. de Beland had so urged her to accept Villani; and in the pain of that moment she had never been driven in a fit of pride and despair, to follow his advice.

There was a gay wedding; and when it was over, and the Maison Pontneuf was restored to its wonted quiet, Madame Borno, sitting in her easy chair after the fatigue of the morning, exclaimed: "And it was all owing to a photograph after all!"

The Value of Confessions.

The trial of Christine Cox for a murder to which he has confessed doubtless seems unnecessary to many people, but how little of absolute dependence to be placed in confessions. By the most notorious instance of false admission of guilt on the part of accused persons which has ever been known in this country, and perhaps in the world, is brought to light in the case of Stephen and Jesse Boorn, who were tried at the September term of the Supreme Court of Vermont in 1819, for the murder of Russell Colvin. The case is mentioned in "Greenleaf on Evidence," and the lesson of it is pointed out in the tenth volume of the North American Review. Wilkie Collins has made the case the main incident in one of his stories. Russell Colvin was the brother-in-law of the brothers Boorn, and was a man of rather weak mind; he was dependent on the brothers, who considered him in the way and were accustomed to ill-treat him. One day he disappeared, and on that day the Boorns had been seen in a field where the three were at work together. One of the brothers was observed to strike him a violent blow on the head with a club from the effects of which he fell to the ground. As the way in which his body had been disposed of, so that the Boorns were again vehemently accused of the crime. A search strieter than the first was then engaged in, and resulted in the finding of Colvin's pocket concealed in an old open cellar in the field where the quarrel had taken place. In a hollow stump, not many rods distant, two nails were discovered, together with a number of bones, which were supposed to be those of a man. The brothers were thereupon brought to trial and each made confession of the murder, giving minute details of the way in which it had been committed and of how they had disposed of the body. The circumstantial evidence was strong against them, and, taken in connection with their confession, caused them to be convicted and sentenced to the gallows. On the day of the execution, as the plea of the Legislature for a commutation of the sentence of death to that of imprisonment for life, and the request was granted in behalf of one of the brothers. Thereupon they withdrew their confession, and avowed that it was wholly devoid of truth. A reward was offered for the discovery of the missing man, Colvin, who was found in New Jersey, and returned to Vermont just in time to prevent the execution. He accounted for his absence by saying that he had fled for fear his brothers-in-law would one day kill him. The bones found in the hollow stump turned out to be those of some lower animal. It was then shown indisputably that the Boorns had confessed the crime because they saw that the circumstantial evidence was overwhelmingly strong against them, and believed that as they would certainly be convicted their only chance for life was by commutation of punishment, which was likely to be offered only on the ground that they had made a penitential confession and were in some way entitled to mercy for doing so. The case is a remarkable one, since it would hardly seem possible that under any circumstances two men should make separate confessions, which in the main agreed with each other, to a crime like murder, and that in the end the admissions of guilt should be entirely false. This case is not at all on a footing with that of the many men who confessed to the Nathan murder in order to obtain free passage to New York from distant points of the country, since each of these could readily have proved an alibi had it ever been thought worth while to bring them to trial. The writer of the remarks upon the Boorn confession in the North American Review mentions other cases of false confessions, in which it is in the highest degree difficult to imagine what could have induced prisoners to make them. One of these is recorded by Annals Robertson, who tells of a widow who having suddenly disappeared and long remained from home, was believed to have been murdered. Search was instituted and a countryman was found hidden in a marsh trembling and evidently in great fear and remorse. He was arrested, and, having confessed the murder, was executed. Shortly afterwards the widow returned home alive and well. Another instance in point occurred in a village in Friesland, where a woman suddenly died under circumstances which led to the belief that her husband had poisoned her. Her body was brought before a magistrate he confessed that he had poisoned her, told where he had bought the poison and said that he had wrapped a part of it in a paper and buried it in a particular field. Upon inquiry the whole story proved to be a fabrication out of whole cloth, and a post-mortem examination showed that the woman had died a natural death. Such confessions as these are not to be classed with those often made by wholesale in New England during the witchcraft delusion in the latter part of the seventeenth century, when men's minds were commonly unbalanced and could not resist the suggestion of a confession of falsehood. They certainly show that confession is not proof, and that it is not always wise to condemn a man "out of his own mouth."—Cor. N. Y. Graphic.

Florida's Red Men.

Secretary Schurz determined some time ago to ascertain the number and condition of the Creek and Seminole tribes remaining in southern Florida, and what could be done for their advancement in civilization. Representations had frequently been made that the Indians were stealing cattle and living principally on the herds belonging to white men which pasture on the savannas of that region. While game is considered plentiful by the white men, it is regarded scarce by the Indians, and while the latter have cattle of their own, they refrain from eating their white brothers better. The Indian wants "heap cattle," and knows that he will have them in time if they are "let alone." The whites did not like to incur the enmity of the Indians by forcibly resisting their thieving operations, knowing that it will be attended with personal danger, and accordingly applied to the Secretary of the Interior for help. In consequence of the war department, the Indian Bureau formed a party to proceed to the Indian country and make observations. Captain Pratt, who had charge of the band of Indians placed in Hampton, Virginia, four years ago, was made commander, and Lieutenant Brown, at the St. Augustine barracks, detailed to accompany him. Tich-hem-matse, a young Indian who had been attending the Government school at Hampton, Virginia, made one of the party, and went with the expedition in the interests of the Smithsonian Institution, which he is now serving as a taxidermist. The remainder of the party was made up of guides, drivers of pack animals, and cooks. Having accomplished its purpose in a much shorter time than was expected, the expedition is now at Fort Meyers on its return North.

I have learned a number of interesting things regarding these Indians from the officers of the expedition. The whole number now in Florida is about 300, divided into four bands or camps. About one-third are Creeks, the remainder Seminoles. Chicta, the chief of the Creeks, is a most hospitable man. Everything he had in the way of comforts was at the disposal of his visitors. His band raise corn, garden vegetables, and sugar cane. They have a young man has invented a mill for crushing cane, which gives evidence of considerable genius. He is anxious to learn English and receive an education, but is forbidden to do so. The children are sent away from the whites as much as possible in order to prevent them from their own affairs is broached. Some of the young men are fine specimens of physical development, and their movements are characterized by gracefulness and activity. In fact all the tribe, as far as seen, were remarkable for their handsome proportions.

The Seminoles prevented a visit to their camps by sending a delegation of their head men to Fort Meyers. Like the Creeks, they are averse to their children learning English or having anything to do with white people. They live in continual fear of removal west, and would communicate nothing as to their condition, wants or desires. They do not cultivate grain to the extent that the Creeks do, but give more attention to cattle raising and stealing. Tiger Tail, who was a noted warrior in the late conflict with the Seminoles, is a very old man, if living. It is not known whether he is living or dead, and the fact could not be ascertained. He has a son who does his tribe, and is regarded as rather too effeminate for a chief. The chieftaincy is sought by a negro who has been adopted as a member of the tribe, and he is likely to be successful. His person is already ornamented with six "new moons." These new moons are made from silver dollars hammered into the shape of crescents, and each one represents so many deer, bears, wild cats or other animals slain by the wearer. When he is entitled to put on the seventh new moon his supremacy as chief will be acknowledged. Billy Bowlegs was chief of the Seminoles when the treaty for their removal to the Indian Territory was made. The Government had expended $50,000,000 fighting the savages, and finally concluded that bribery would be cheaper than warfare. So Billy Bowlegs and the head of his tribe were shown piles of gold coin and told that it should be theirs if they would leave Florida and take in exchange better lands than those they left. All but Tiger Tail agreed to this and migrated. They were made rich, while Tiger Tail chose to remain poor and keep that for which he had fought so long and so hard. The few Creeks who had come into Florida from Georgia when their tribe was conquered took up their abode near Tiger Tail, when the latter left his tribe and sought the everglades for protection and a home. These and their descendants make up the band of 300 found in Florida to-day.

The facts obtained by the expedition will be communicated to the Interior Department by Captain Pratt, and will be the first official information conveyed from this band for many years. While the Department is anxious to have all the Indians of the country instructed in the rudiments of education and taught the means of self-support, doubt if any immediate change can be made in the condition of the Seminoles. They are no expense to the Government at this time, and while they are opposed to any closer relationship with the whites, their surroundings are such that they cannot much longer resist it. They must gradually yield to the inevitable, and assimilate, in manner of life, at least, with those whose contact they cannot avoid.—Cor. Springfield (Mass.) Republican.

Dynamite Warfare.

Few incidents in modern warfare have provoked such extensive and unanimous discussion as the Algerian attack of the Cayes of the Ouled Riah, which all readers of Kinglake's History will remember. In June, 1845, the Ouled Riah, closely pursued by Polisier, Saint Arnaud and Labrousse, took refuge in one of the caverns with which their country abounded. Polisier surrounding the cave, first kindled faggots at its entrance to convince the Arabs that the French could see and then sent out a detachment of troops to them out at pleasure, and then threw in letters demanding a surrender. The Arabs offered to surrender if the troops were withdrawn. The condition was deemed inadmissible and more faggots were lighted. A tremendous din of wretches in despairing council. There were two parties, but the fanatics prevailed and the French terms were again refused. Some of the minority escaped and the wives and daughters of all endeavored to fly, but were shot down by their husbands and fathers, resolved to impose as well as to endure martyrdom. Still another cartel was sent in, but the French would not accept it. The officer was fired on, and on the night of the 19th, "losing all patience and no longer having a hope of otherwise subduing these fanatics, who formed a perpetual nucleus of revolt in the country, drove them out of the cave, and after a long and desperate fight, in which it was reported that 500 dead bodies." This dreadful story caused a terrible outburst in England against French inhumanity, and yet, after all, wherein did it differ, except other to the magnitude of the deed, in which it was conducted, from this, which we find reported in the Cape Watchman?

Some dynamite that had been sent for arrival and the Colonel decided to try its effect. Sergeant Jones, who thoroughly understands its use, was sent with a small party to cross the river higher up and come round to the great cave. At great risk to himself he leaned over the top of the cave and threw in a charge of dynamite with a fuse attached. We heard a great commotion in the cave, then an explosion, and then an awful yell. We have since heard what happened. A nephew of Letiska picked up a tremendous dynamite to the chief, who, not liking the looks of it, threw it down. Just then it exploded, shattering Letiska's hand and actually ripping his nephew open from the waist to the throat. Several other charges were thrown in, doing more or less damage. Subsequently the cave was smoked. A fire was lit in the entrance and fed by dropping fuel down on to it from the first step. The fire was kept built up until everyone began to think the enemy must have escaped by some underground passage. However, just as we were thinking of giving it up a cough was heard. Then the men set to and piled up the fuel. In a few minutes the enemy was driven out, and it was found that they had had enough and were willing to surrender. We put out the fire as quickly as possible, and after some delay four men and a boy came out, giving up one old gun and a few assegais. Then there was a pause and the others called that they were so stupid with the smoke that they could not get out. Some of our men volunteered to go in and help them, which when they did the treacherous brutes inside fired on them. This was a little too much. We piled up the fire again and kept it going till midnight, the consequence being that nine men and boys were killed in the cave and three escaped in the night but have since been taken. One of them has died from the effects of the fire, and the other two are still very bad, but likely to recover.

A SCAMP, who represented himself as a Government agent, excited the negroes of Holm County, Miss., by telling them that a free train would take them on the following Sunday to Kansas. He charged every man one dollar for a small flag, which was to be his title to a spot of land when he reached Kansas. The negroes spread like wildfire, and selling their cows for two dollars, their chickens for a penny a piece, and other possessions at as ruinous rates, 1,000 negroes gathered to wait for the train that never came.

A BAD little boy calls himself Compass, because he is boxed so often.

THE REPUBLICAN.

OAKLAND, MARYLAND.

JAS. A. HAYDEN,
Editor and Proprietor.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.
One copy, one year, in advance, $1.50
Six months, in advance, .75
INvariably in advance.

TERMS OF ADVERTISING.
First insertion, 25 cents per square of 8 lines;
50 cents per square for each additional insertion. Special contracts for advertising longer than three months.

Correspondents must enclose full name and
address, not necessarily for publication, but
as a private guarantee of good faith. Rejected
communications will not be returned.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 16, 1879.

To the Republican Voters of Garrett county.

You are hereby requested to meet in your respective districts on Saturday, Sept. 6th, 1879,

for the purpose of selecting five (5) delegates from each district to meet in county convention, in Oakland on

Wednesday, Sept. 10th, 1879,

for the purpose of selecting three (3) delegates to represent Garrett county in the State non-partisan convention which meets in Baltimore
on September 12th, and three (3) alternates for said delegates, and three (3) members of the State Central Committee for Garrett Co.

The members of the district committees are requested to make the necessary arrangements for the primaries named in this call.
By order
A. G. STURGEISS,
Chairman.

FOR THE CAMPAIGN.

The coming campaign promises to be one of the most exciting on record.
Much is at stake and it behooves
every citizen of this county to prepare himself to vote with intelligence and judgment on the 4th of next November.

As the regular perusal of a live newspaper will give a clear idea of the issues at stake, and as the leading points between the Republican and Democratic parties will be clearly and distinctly submitted in the columns of THE REPUBLICAN, this paper will be sent to any address in the county, from now until November 15th, 1879, for 25 cents.

Let every Republican in the county act as an agent for THE REPUBLICAN and enlarge its circulation so that no voter in the county can plead ignorance. Send in your orders immediately.

The Democratic State Convention
meets in Baltimore to-day, to nominate a State ticket. "Continental Bill" will undoubtedly receive the nomination for Governor. The Canal Ring and all other Rings have affiliated with him, and been absorbed by him. Hamilton, and we would not be surprised to see the convention make the nomination by acclamation. As Mr. Hamilton is a very extensive mortgage holder, having invested many thousands of dollars in that kind of securities for which he pays not one cent of tax, it is hardly to be expected the platform will contain a plank in it favoring the taxing of mortgages.—Baltimore Odd Fellow,
last week.

The appropriations made by Congress for the fiscal years of 1878, 1879
and 1880 are as follows:

1878	$11,000,000
1879	$12,000,000
1880	$13,000,000

These are the official figures furnished by the Treasury Department.
They show up the boasted economy of the Democratic Congresses in its true light.

Gov. St. John, of Kansas, writes that the tide of colored immigration still continues, and unless stopped by yellow-fever quarantine regulations
there is no telling when it will end.
About 4,000 people have been relieved by the governor's aid society. The society is in need of money, and while they have received liberal aid from some quarters, have not had general support. He says "young Kansas will not falter in her duty towards this people."

Senator Booth, who went to Congress as an Independent, said in a recent speech at San Francisco, that
"it is the satire of the time and of all time to see men claiming the especial care of the letter of the Constitution today, who, but yesterday, were striving to rend the instrument to pieces and scatter it to the winds."
Mr. Booth seems to be showing up strongly as a stalwart.

Mr. Benjamin Hill precipitates upon a helpless Washington reporter
the extraordinary statement that the mission of the Republican party has always been "to destroy the Government," the mission of the Democratic party "to save it." Then during 1861-'65 things must have become a little mixed, Mr. Hill.

Cincinnati Commercial: Every thing points to a thundering Republican victory in Ohio this fall. There is not a county from which reports
do not come that the Republicans are stronger than ever before.

The condemnation of an increase of the public debt comes with a bail grace from a party which at the last session of the legislature added half a million to the funded debt of the state in order to defray current expenses of the government—a policy condemned as vicious in the extreme
by every financial authority.

Democracy in Ohio means Greenbackism and inflation; in Maryland
it means hard money of the hardest kind. But if the party were to exchange platforms in these two States
it would make very little difference.
The loaves and fishes are the main object of the organization wherever it exists, and next after them the revival of State Rights.

Iowa continues to send cheering news about her tremendous crop of wheat. Having gathered all the fall planted crop her farmers are now harvesting the spring grain. The aggregate is estimated at fifty millions of bushels—a bushel for every man, woman and child in the United States for a single State. Iowa takes rank as the Empire State for wheat.

The Democratic gubernatorial convention of Maryland met on Thursday of last week, in Masonic Temple, Baltimore and nominated Wm.
T. Hamilton, of Washington county,
for Governor, by acclamation; Chas.
J. M. Gwynn, of Baltimore city, for Attorney General; Thos. J. Keating, of Queen Anne's county, for Comptroller
of the Treasury; Spencer C.
Jones, of Montgomery county, for Clerk of the Court of Appeals.

The idea of the Maryland Democracy crying for a clean registration and a pure ballot! Such a thing was charmingly cool in the hot weather
of last week, but is the least bit unseasonable just now.

"When the devil was sick the devil a saint would be—
When the devil got well a devil of a saint was he!"

suits the Maryland Democracy just now.—Columb. News.

The election returns from Kentucky tell how completely the greenback party has fizzled out in that State. Last fall in Louisville the Greenbackers elected five out of seven Legislators. On Monday they elected none anywhere, while throughout the State the Republicans gained several Assembliesmen. But still the Legislature is of course heavily Democratic.

The Sun and Press of Jacksonville,
Florida, has come out on the Republican side. It says that "there can be no disguising the fact that a creditable and able Republican administration would give a new impulse to immigration to the state, and restore confidence in the North, so that we could take a new start. The new administration might not be any wiser than the present one, but then it would restore confidence, and do for the state—its whole people—what now seems a necessity to have done
for its present and future prosperity."

To date there have been 370 cases of yellow fever in and around Memphis and over 100 deaths. Saturday the fever was declared epidemic and all hopes of its discontinuance before frost were given up. Twelve thousand and negroes continue in the city, and refuse to leave. Strenuous efforts will be made to force them to leave.
Six physicians have charge of 450 patients. City expenses on account of the fever are $500 a day, and increasing. Nearly 200 nurses are on duty. A fatal case has occurred at Mayersville, Miss., and a doubtful case at Meridian. There has been no death from the fever at New Orleans during the past week. One fatal case occurred in New York Saturday.

While Senator Blaine was speaking at Saco, Me., last Saturday, he asked if any man in the audience believed that he was overtaxed by the Government. A Greenbacker rose and said he was. "Directly?"
asked the Senator. "No, but by duties," was the reply. "On What?"
asked Mr. Blaine. "On matches," replied the man. "How many matches do you use in a day?" inquired the Senator. The man at first evaded, but finally fixed the number,
and the Senator figured out that the individual was being taxed in that direction, according to his own statement, just 7 cents a year. "It strikes me," said the Senator, "that the Government may save you more than 7 cents a year" and the fellow was laughed down, but rallied far enough to say that the duty on tea bore hard on the farming class, but was shut up with the assurance that there was no duty on tea at all. A whisper of whiskey ran around the audience, and the Greenbacker subsided.

The Philadelphia North American
remarks that the Democrats of Maryland have sense enough to know
a good thing when they see it, which entitles them to honorable distinction
in their party. Instead of railing against resumption as a delusion and a snare, after the fashion of their colleagues in other States, they concede without a murmur its value and importance. Indeed, their appreciation of the good work goes so far that they want to claim the credit of it to themselves. In the seventh resolution of the platform adopted at Baltimore by the Democratic State convention, last Thursday, it is gravely laid down that resumption was only made possible by the economy with which public affairs have been administered since the advent of the Democrats to power. This is certainly an amazing display of assurance, but if the Democrats have a mind to make themselves ridiculous
by appealing for votes on the strength of what they did to bring about resumption, the Republicans have no reason to object. Nothing could suit them better, for there is hardly a voter so ignorant as not to know exactly what the Democrats have done
in this connection.

So far from having helped to bring about specie payments, they have done everything that lay in their power to make that desirable consummation an impossibility. From the time the Resumption Bill was passed up to the time when it was about to become a law the Democrats attached it without ceasing. Its repeal was made a prominent part of their program, and if their efforts in that direction failed it was not from any want of persistence and nudaity. They had promised their constituents in the South and West to kill the hated measure, and they did their best to make their pledges
good. When it was proved impossible to carry a direct repeal—thanks to the wisdom and bravery of the Republicans in the Senate and President Hayes—they changed their tactics and strenuously sought to make it a dead-letter by indirect means.
The Bland silver bill; the bill which forbade the cancellation of redeemed
greenbacks; the bill which directed Secretary Sherman to pay the pension arrears out of the reserve fund held for the redemption of fractional currency; the bill which ordered the acceptance of greenbacks in payment of custom duties—all these were so many blows aimed by the Democrats at the success of resumption. They did no great harm, it is true, either because the Republicans were able to ward them off, or because their effect was different to what had been anticipated; but the Democrats cannot be charged with their failure. They meant mischief, and it is by their intention that they must be judged.

There is therefore something very like impudence about the claim that these very men who worked hard and long to defeat resumption ought to be credited with its success. The Maryland Democrats base their extraordinary pretensions upon the assumption that Secretary Sherman's reserve fund has been accumulated out of the savings yielded by an increased economy of administration under the rule of their party. Every one who knows anything at all is aware that the much-talked of Democratic economy is a fraud of the first water. Here is a statement of the annual appropriations for the last four years:

Fiscal year ending June 30, 1877	$121,022,000
Fiscal year ending June 30, 1878	$144,082,000
Fiscal year ending June 30, 1879	$172,000,000
Fiscal year ending June 30, 1880	$161,500,000

The amount for 1878 is exclusive of the River and Harbor bill, which went over.

The annual convention of the bankers at Saratoga brings together many of the ablest financiers in the country and affords opportunity for the presentation of papers and interchange of views concerning financial questions that are both interesting and important. A stout defence of the national banking system has been made, although the convention is not entirely composed of gentlemen interested in it. On the contrary, private bankers and the managers of State banks are in the majority. We confess to some surprise at a statement by the New York Herald that among the supporters of a movement to extinguish the national banks are not a few national bankers. They prefer, it is said, state banking, because it would afford them greater profits, with much less responsibility. Comptroller Knox, in his remarks on Thursday, again demonstrated the falsity of the idea that national banking is very profitable, and he conclusively showed that as to making profits on circulation the State banks, if the ten per cent. tax on their circulation were removed, would have far the advantage. It is also interesting to have it definitely pointed out that Southern and Western men are not demanding the repeal of the Banking Act because they desire more greenbacks, but because they want to re-

establish the old state and local banks, whose wild-cat and red-dog currency was before the war such an introduction to the people and source of profit to speculators and exchange brokers. It is a curious folly that anyone who can remember how, previous to 1862, they lost five or ten per cent. in carrying the currency of banks of one State into another, should now clamor for a return to such a system. Perhaps Mr.
Knox's predictions of the permanence of the national system may prove to be justified by events. By the action of the people at the polls
the twin follies of irredeemable and inflationary greenbacks, and a bank currency discounted outside of the State in which it is altered, may share a common defeat. In truth we pay very little for the system we have now, in virtue of which the bank note is always good in the holder's hands, no matter what may happen to the institution issuing it.
Everything with regard to these questions depends upon the elections
of this and next year, and the decision of the Supreme Court, probably to be rendered in the fall or winter, upon the issue of government legal-tenders in time of peace.

The Best of All.

One of the most effective campaign documents of the season is now being prepared by the Republican Congressional Committee, and it will soon be ready for distribution. It is a complete review of the whole
financial operations of the government since the war, as disclosed by the various official reports and statements of the Treasury Department.
It is to be put in a form so as to be conveniently used as a supplement to Republican newspapers, and will be supplied at a nominal price to clubs and campaign committees as well. The review will consist of something more than figures, but in the latter respect the statement will be indisputable. It disproves some of the heresies and misrepresentations of such men as Ewing, demonstrating the fact that the whole tendency of events under Republican domination has been towards an honest fulfillment of public obligations and the preservation of national credit. It shows that instead of an increase of public debt, as some demagogues would have the country believe, the debt, principal and interest, has been decreased by a system of steady reductions. It shows that as a result of the war to put down the rebellion and preserve the Union the country was saddled with an aggregate debt of $2,581,539,291.89,
the annual interest upon which was $150,977,637.87. The reduction of the principal of this debt under Republican administrations since 1865 has been over $583,000,000, with an aggregate saving in interest of $579, 625,109.68. It also shows that while a steady reduction in the rate of taxation was carried on from 1865, to 1875,
the reductions ceased when the Democrats came into control of one branch of Congress, except with regard to whiskey and tobacco, commodities
which are consumed most extensivelly by Democrats. It will give other important information which will put to flight the sham theories and pretensions of Democratic economies, and will contrast the records of the two parties in their influence upon the well or woe of the nation.

A Fine showing.

The following interesting letter speaks for itself, and pays a high tribute to the efficiency and integrity of the officials of the internal revenue service, as well as to the systematic management of the Internal Revenue Bureau under the present administration:

THEATRE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF INTERNAL REVENUE,
WASHINGTON, August 7, 1879.
Hon. John Sherman, Secretary of the Treasury.

Sir:—At the close of the fiscal year ended June 30, 1879, I caused a careful examination to be made of the records and accounts of each collector of internal revenue throughout the United States, with a view of ascertaining if the public moneys received had been properly accounted for. I have the honor of transmitting herewith a statement of the collections made by districts, with the name of each collector and the amount collected and accounted for by him, from which it will be seen that the total collections of internal revenue during the past year were $118,718,830.95,
and that the entire amount thus received has been duly accounted for and paid into the treasury. These figures indicate a faithful discharge of public trust, for which I have deemed it proper to address my thanks to the respective officers.
During the past three fiscal years the total collections of internal revenue have been $341,098,178.57, all of which was duly accounted for, and there remains in the hands of two collectors, who have been retired from the public service, the sum of $2,786, 13, which has been reported to the Honorable the First Comptroller for audit, and which is collectable. The average cost of collection for the same period has been less than three and three-quarters per cent., including the salaries and expenses of the bureau. Very respectfully, your obedient servant, GALEX B. RICH, Commissioner.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

Special Correspondence to The Republican.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Aug. 12, 1879.

The Democratic howl about political assessments is somewhat amusing to the persons here supposed to be assessed. Everybody who has mixed in politics knows that the expenses of political campaigns are paid by the contributions of those interested, and everybody here knows that Republicans in the employ of the Government give for that purpose or not, at their own pleasure, and that nobody is discharged for not giving. Of course those now in office have a selfish interest in desiring the continuance of Republican administration,
for they know that if a Democratic President should be elected the departments would be swept as clear of Republicans as the Democratic broom could sweep them. They know, too, that the old Democratic practice of assessing all persons in Government employ for party purposes, and discharging them at once if they do not pay, would be at once resumed under a Democratic administration. It is creditable to Republican officials that they give cheerfully for campaign expenses, and would feel slighted if the persons making such collections neglected them. There are, however, a few Republicans who have been in office here for years without contributing a cent for campaign purposes,
who lose nothing by their selfishness
except—except something of the respect and esteem of more liberal Republicans. And there are Democrats here holding fat places under a Republican administration who give liberally for Democratic party purposes, who are not disturbed in their places. It is well that they should not be turned out for not giving for Republican campaign expenses. But they should be discharged because they are Democrats and advocate political doctrines inimical to the best interests of the country.

Gen. Fitz John Porter does not deem it necessary to charge Senator
Chandler and Representative Garfield,
as some of his indiscreet friends do,
with unfair treatment of himself.
He based his demand for the late inquiry into his case on the fact that new evidence, not obtainable at the time of his trial, could be had after the war was over. If this new evidence is found to be such as to vindicate the General, we know that Sen.
Chandler and Representative Garfield
will work as earnestly as any men
for favorable Congressional action.
The Democrats who are trying to make "an issue" out of Gen. Porter's case have not the sympathy of the General himself.

LOGAN.

The Louisville Courier-Journal,
which cannot well be accused of hostility to the Southern people, says,
"that an outrage of a very real and substantial character was committed
several days ago in Yazoo county, Mississippi, there is not a particle of doubt." The same paper then goes on to narrate the facts, which, in substance, are these:

"A few months ago Captain H. M.
Dixon, a Democrat and a planter of that county, announced himself as an independent candidate for the office of sheriff. He had a good following in the independent movement, and the registration gradually indicated that the independent ticket would carry the county against the regular Democratic candidates.
When this was discovered the Democratic committee at Yazoo City in-sulted and threatened a mob of four or five hundred armed and mounted men, who threatened to drive Dixon and his associates out of county if he did not withdraw and leave the field for the Democratic candidates.

"As the men were desperate and threatened violence, Dixon was obliged to withdraw from the contest.
The mob then threatened to compel all the independents to pledge their support to the Democratic party, or burn their property if they refused.
Captain Dixon and his associates,
after this disgraceful proceeding, held
a meeting and addressed a communication to Judge J. S. Morris, of Vicksburg, formerly Attorney General of the State, asking his advice.
The Judge replied at length, counseling the retention of their organization and condemning the lawless action of the Yazoo City Democracy."

Senator Matt Carpenter, who was said to have independent proclivities
when he was re-elected to the Senate,
has developed into a thorough stalwart. He wrote to the Wisconsin Republican remonstrance that "it was never more essential to the public welfare than it is now that the Republican party should maintain the ascendancy in the administration of the Government. If it was a duty to put down the rebellion, it is equally a duty to keep it down. If we were bound to preserve the Union at the risk of so many lives and so much treasure against armed treason, we are equally bound to protect it from insidious revolution. In civil administration." That is the creed of the Republican party of to-day as it burns in the hearts of a solid North.

Mr. George Wm. Curtis, in a survey of the political field, which he publishes in Harper's, comes to the conclusion that the campaign of 1880
is to be fought out on the sectional issues, and that, for this turn in affairs, the Democratic leaders are mainly, if not wholly, responsible.
He claims that the Republicans at the North were wearied of the bloody shirt business, and that it was in the power of members of Congress from the Southern States to have forever put this matter at rest. Instead of doing this, however, they have deliberately taken up the war issues, which, only a short time ago, they asserted were dead, and have put them in the front as representative principles. Mr. Curtis points out that the debate in Congress on the theory of State sovereignty, the repeated attempts to repeal National laws governing elections, and similar questions brought forward by the party in power, have in them all the elements of sectionalism, and have had for their object the firing of the Southern heart and the consolidation of opposition in the Southern States against the North. He asserts that the only check upon a more outspoken sectionalism was the necessity of moderation, in view of the approaching election, but that the spirit of the party, as exhibited by its "driving wheels," Messrs. Thurman, Beck, Blaine and Randall, is such that it will cause patriotic Americans, in spite of their disgust with individual Republicans, to dread a renewal of Democratic supremacy.

The Chief Issue.

Mr. Stephens, of Georgia, uttered
a solemn truth when he declared that the greatest issue now before the people of this country is that which the Democrats have raised between State sovereignty and National supremacy. Beside it the discussions concerning finance, the tariff and matters of administrative reform sink into insignificance. We heartily agree with Mr. Stephens in this view of the political situation. The financial question is practically settled, and though frothy Democratic and Greenback orators may declaim
against the hardships of resumption,
nothing will be done, either in Congress or out of it, to repeal the resumption act or to disturb its workings. But the State rights doctrine advanced and acted upon during the late session by Mr. Stephens and his associates is something that everybody can understand. Both Democrats and Republicans recognize it on sight as the main cause of the civil war.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Boundless stimulated by the successful finding operations of our government, the Prussian government now announces that it will consolidate and refund its entire interest-bearing debt, now amounting to about $250,000,000. This probably will be accomplished without much difficulty. Although the credit of this nation ought to be better than any other and the productiveness of our taxes is enough to make the financiers of other monarchies turn green with envy, yet the activity of the Democratic party in opposing the resumption of specie payments and denouncing the holding of government bonds as an unholy act, engenders some prejudice abroad against our securities.

The following letter, received by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue from a gentleman down in Tennessee, is not much for literary or orthographical style but it contains a question in political economy severe enough to tax the intellect of even Judge Kelley:

"DEAR SIR:—I have a man say that you said that the redneck-shin
on the ticks on tobaccoer wood release
the revenue. This year ten millions dollars now we have to pay the same price for a plug as tobaccoer we did before the redneck-shin on the ticks
and how gets the benefit of the redneck-shin is what I would like to no
for it and us fellows as chaws share
yours with respects.

GEORGE SMITH."

Senator Lamar has not yet felt called upon to express his views concerning the Yazoo county outrage,
although he had plenty to say on the floor of Congress about securing equal rights in the South. As the most prominent man in Mississippi,
the Vicksburg Herald requests him
to say emphatically what he thinks of the Yazoo idea as applied to white Democrats.

A bright and beautiful child shows
in its very expression that its Baby-hood was not associated with Opium, cordials etc.,—for the continued use of Opium is antagonistic to health.
That valuable and highly recommended remedy for the disorders of Babyhood, Dr. Bull's Baby Syrup is absolutely free from Morphia and all other dangerous agents, and can be safely employed at all times. Price 25 cents.

The Republican.

JAS. A. HAYDEN, Publisher.
OAKLAND, GARETT CO., MD.

THE WATER-CURE.

Cardenio's fortune was so misarranged
Until the day Cardenio married,
What then? the Nymph no doubt was young?
She was, but yet—she had a tongue!
Most women have, you seem to say,
I grant it—in a different way.

"Twas not that organ half-divine,
With which, dear friend, your spouse or mine,
What time we seek our blameless pillows,
Relieve our easy peccadilloes;
Twas not so tuneful, as composing;
Twas tender and less often hurting;
At Ombre, Basses, Loos, Quadrille;
You heard it resolute and shrill;
You heard it rising, rising yet
Beyond Solida's paragon;
You heard it rival and outvie
The chattering and the link-boy, too;
In short, wherever lungs perform,
Like Marlborough, it rode the storm.

So, neverthel, it came to be,
Cardenio feared his chere amie
Like Echo by Cupid's shafts,
Would turn to stone and nothing more.
That, 'tis conceded, must be cured
Which can't be cured by love or cure,
Cardenio, though he loved the maid,
Grew daily more and more afraid.
And since advice could not prevail
(Reproof but seemed to fan the tale),
A vindictive man, he had about
To find some fitting posthumous out;
What need to say the deed he did
Had not in any mine been dug?
What need to say the deed he did
Had not in any mine been dug?

A Hermit (there were hermits then;
The most accessible of men)
Near Van Hall's sacred shade resided;
In him, at last, our friend confided.
Simple, for slow, he used to sell;
But erst Nutcracker as well;
Consulted, he looked wondrous wise;
Then undertook the enterprise.

What that might be, the Muse must spare,
To tell the truth, she was not there,
She seems to patch what she ignores
With smiles and metaphors;
And, in a word, to change the scene,
Permit me to say the enterprise.

Behold our pair then (quite by chance)
In Van Hall's garden of romance,
The lamps and goddess all reviewed;
The windmills of the Maze pursued;
The new-worked waltzes—what more part
Than such the Hermit after that?
Who then, more fair, her fate to see
Than this, the most Lenonous?
On fire to fast the lighted candles
In "Byzantine manner" hidden?
Portents, they took the darkness road
To Albion's habitation.

Arriving, they beheld the sage Intent on inorganic page,
In high Armenian manuscript
And girl with engines of his trade
As Socrates and Plato; Calves;
As Amalthea and Dido; Fables;
With ducks depicted behind him;
Strange shapes that dangled from the ceiling;
While more to puzzle the beholder
A Black Cat sat upon his shoulder.

The Hermit eyed the Lady's face
As one whose face he'd seen before,
And then, with agitated looks,
He fell to fumbling at his books.
Cardenio knew his spouse was frightened,
Her grasp upon his hand tightened;
Judge then her horror and her dread
When Vox Nocturna's hoarse head
Then darkly spoke in phrase forlorn
Of Taurus and of Capricorn;
Of stars adverse, and stars ascendant,
And stars entirely independent;
In fact, it seemed as though the heavens
Were set at naught and at naught,
Fortending, in her case, some fate
Too fearful to prophesy.

Meanwhile the Dame was well-nigh dead,
But 'tis there naught, Cardenio said,
No sign nor look nor word nor sign,
From whence, or what, this dismal woe?"

The Sage, with circle and with plane,
Betoek him to his charts again,
It surely seems to me, dear friend,
No more (he said) the sign can teach.

But still Cardenio tried once more:
Is there no potion in your store,
No charm by which these things may come
By which this doom can be averted?"

The Sage, with motion doubly in vain,
Heumed his judgment; but he said:
The aspects here again were various;
But seemed to him, in fact, the same;
Thereat portentously he frowned;
Then frowned again, then smiled—"twas found!
Two words too simple to be tried."
"What is it, then?" at once they cried,
"Whereof by chance you feel me tried."
To speak at length, or univerted,
Where or how you feel your tones grow shrill
(At times, we know, the softest will)
This word oracular, my daughter,
Bids you to fill your chamber with water;
Further, to hold it firm and fast,
Until the danger is averted.

The Dame, by this in part relieved,
(The prospect of escape perceived)
Relieved a little, she said:
Cardenio said discreetly: "Try it!"
Try it, my own! You have no choice,
What if you lose your chamber water?
She tried, it seems, And, since, they say,
She takes in quite a different way.

CLIFFORD'S RETURN.

"Beautiful weather," said Teresa, having thrown open the shutter and looked out and up, now looking in again, with ever so pleasant a smile on her round, homely face, now almost handsome in the cheery sunshine that streamed in. "Not a cloud; no rain to-day, Miss, and he will come for sure."

"Do you think so?" returned Miss Dinah, smiling brightly also, and rising from her bed to run across the floor
and peep over Teresa's broad shoulder.

No longer, young, was Miss Dinah Pryne—quite fifty; and perhaps even more; but wonderfully active, with eyes pretty and bright as in her girlhood, not much wrinkled, and faculties clear as they had ever been. With springing step and quick motion she fitted about the room, making her toilet, humming to herself, stopping now and then to scold old Teresa, who hobbled after her that sort of scolding which is under certain circumstances an expression of special good humor, such as possessed
Miss Dinah this morning.

"And you think it will not rain," she said for the tenth time. "This time of year thunder-storms come up very suddenly, remember." She spoke as if Teresa was some important officer on the staff of the clerk of the weather,
and had better be careful about her predictions.

"Tut! September thunder-storms are rare, miss, and he ain't afraid of a little wetting, I do suppose. A little thing like that wouldn't keep him back," said
Teresa, with scorn.

Miss Dinah ate her breakfast in feverish
impatience, which she strove to hide.
Afterward she put on her sun-bonnet
and mittens and went into the garden, attended by old Teresa, with watering-
pot, trowel and rake, and other tools, and together they worked among the flowers. Miss Dinah, as she progressed, nipped off contributions for a bouquet
—very near as large as a cabbage-head.

"He always liked flowers, Teresa,"
she said, smelling this horticultural marvel when it was completed. "He never failed to leave me a bunch every morning. Sometimes I let them wither, to vex him," and she laughed at the memory of her beautiful girlhood's seasions.

"It was a pity to worry him, miss,"
said Teresa, with honest approval.
"Poo! The more I did the fonder
he was of me. There was nothing I wouldn't do to pain him sometimes.
That was thirty years ago, and with a little sigh, she glanced backward, as one may in a minute, through that long vista.

"Thirty years!" said Teresa; "and you ain't seen him since, and changed
he must be now—as changed as you,
miss. I mind your picture up stairs—"
"I was nineteen then; it's very like;
everybody thought so," interrupted Miss Pryne.

"Nobody could tell it for you now,"
said Teresa. "Do you think so?" asked Miss Dinah, disappointed. "It will be a shock to him when he sees me. They say old sweethearts always think of the face that was, and never of what time must have done. It is so, too. I can't call him up, except as he was then—I've tried hundreds of times, but can't—and he was a fine young man, Teresa—
a beautiful young man, with great large blue eyes, and a straight nose,
and white teeth, and elegant hair,
and a tall and graceful figure; nobody that I've ever seen is the least bit like him. And he is not a bit altered.
Teresa," and she laughed again, almost believing it.

"But he is, miss. He is old and crooked and feeble, and you will feel wonderment when you see him," said Teresa,
which was Job's comfort sometimes.

Miss Dinah looked pained and sighed
again. "I almost wish I was not to see him again, and sometimes I believe I shall not. Perhaps he will not come at all. You know I—I made such a foolish vow," and she looked a little frightened.

"You often promised to tell me about it, miss," replied her ancient hand-maid, who felt a profound curiosity in all that concerned this great meeting that was to be.

"I will—I'll tell you so now, and hear what you think. It will frighten you, I dare say; but you must remember it was only a girl's folly, and God knows I've repented since."

They stood now in the shade of the great cherry-tree at the end of the old garden—this little Miss Dinah, with her great bonnet on, and stout old Teresa —homely figures, but the picture was a pretty one. Bright was the September sunshine, and the fragrant air full of the sweet music of the birds. And as they stood thus, Miss Dinah glanced back again through that long vista of thirty years and told her story of her girl love, simple, but not without its tragedy and pain.

"Well, I've told you often how handsome he was and how dearly I loved him. A noble fellow, Teresa! What a fool I was! There was not a girl in the county who would not have parted with one of her eyes to marry Richard Clifford; but he cared for no one but me.
We were engaged, of course; but what difference did it make? I trifled with him as much as ever, and he was no more sure of me than he had been before. I loved him, Teresa—he had no idea how much—and I was the most selfish being in the world. While I flirted with whom I pleased, I did not allow him to look at a girl. I had no going to make a short story too long—
a painful story that I never want to think of. There was a Spaniard came to the brook, who lived through a slight,
elegant fellow, with deep, dreamy eyes—Ignacio Maldero, his name was—a Roman Catholic, very pious, and afterward, I have heard, a priest and a great man in his church. He gave me a crucifix—you have seen it up stairs—
you know, and ivory, and all that —very valuable; and I wore it around my neck, at the end of a chain. He admired me, and I could have had him if I had wished; but he was a little real idea of marrying any one but Richard. Poor Dick did not dream this,
however; he thought I was in love with Ignacio—wild about him. One day
there was to be a picnic, and Richard asked me to go with him. I said—I didn't know what made me do it, for it was not true—that I was going with Ignacio. For the first time Richard flamed up. He answered: 'If you are going with him, I am going with Miss Graham.' Now, I was jealous of Miss Graham, who was very pretty, as he was of Ignacio, though I knew how to keep it to myself—or had known up to that moment. But something in his eye alarmed me; he looked like he was pretty tired of my trifling, and also, I thought, that he appreciated Miss Graham quite as highly as she deserved.

"Go with her, if you choose," replied I,
and I will never see you again." He was all. I thought he would make his appearance as usual next morning,
which was the day of the picnic, and take me there; in fact, I depended on him to get there, having, as I said, no engagement with Ignacio, as I pretended.
But Richard did not come; consequently,
I was obliged to remain at home, and you may fancy, perhaps, the miserable day I spent. But on the following day Richard appeared—it was Thursday—
and expressed his surprise at the absence. 'You were there, then,' said
I. He said 'Yes,' I looked at him a minute—he was smiling; you can't tell what I suffered—rage, mortification, jealousy. You took those Graham?"
I gasped. He said, as before 'Yes,' I don't know how it was; but I hated him that minute enough to have killed him. I drew the crucifix out of my bosom and said: 'I swear to the Almighty I will never see you again!' and I kissed the ivory image on the cross;
and, without a syllable more, turned and left him there. And that was the last time I saw Richard Clifford."

"Tut tut!" said Teresa, kicking with her tongue upon the roof of her mouth
after the fashion of her kind.

"He called at the house twice a day
for a week, and sent me messages by the score; but I was resolute. The eighth day I grew more composed—
began to recover my senses, you know.
The ninth I cried, and the tenth I sent him word to come to me. He had gone to California! For thirty years he has been there, as you know. I have never saw him nor seen his face—each has been true to the old love—and a pretty pair of fools we make!" And poor Miss Dinah suddenly burst out crying, and for a while sobbed unrestrainedly.

"Well, well," said old Teresa, when her mistress had grown calmer, and was, in fact, smiling again through the water drops. "You'll see each other now, and it'll be made up—and who knows! Stranger things have happened, and you are not a bit too old."

"But if I perceive those terrible changes in him that you speak of Teresa," said Miss Dinah, half in fun,
in earnest, "I can never want him,
even if he should want me."

"Love never sees nothing but what it chooses," replied Teresa, earnestly.
"But look, woman!" cried her mistress, suddenly, "there's a cloud over the sun—I tell you it will rain to-day."

"What if it does. I say he will come all the same, and you'll see him just as you've been counting on for the last three months. You said he never broke his word."

"That's no merit, Teresa. I kept mine for a week, and see what came of
it!"

Yes, clouds had blown up as they do
sometimes on a warm September day,
but, as we know, rain does not always follow.

It was now time for old Teresa to think about dinner, and a great feast of counters of the appetite about the table.

"We must do our best, miss, to-day.
All old men are fond of good eatin'."

"Old men? What do you mean, woman?" cried Miss Pryne, indignantly,
but she laughed.

"Wonderful preparations they make,
appetite; you would have thought they were providing for an 'Eating Town,'
or some other gastronomic celebrity;
chickens and ducks, a ham, every imaginable vegetable, six different desserts
—enough for three or four of the large-sized giants.

But it continued to cloud up. Poor
Miss Dinah peeped out and upward with the hope of the approach of the rain, but it was hopeless—at half-past one the sky was dark, with a faint flashing and rumbling in the distance, and he was expected at two.

As the minutes went by the thunder grew louder and nearer, and the lightning fiercer, and after a while down splashed the big round drops which always precede a summer storm.

At five minutes of two, Miss Dinah stood on the balcony looking toward the road. The rain was terrific, the flashing and roaring overhead, as she remarked to old Teresa, busy within giving the last touches to the table, beyond anything in her experience.

"Ain't you afraid, miss, to stand there?"

"Nonsense. I must see him as he gets out of the carriage. Have an umbrella ready."

In her excitement I doubt if she thought of the approach of the rain. Suddenly she cried, with her hand on her heart, and her face as pale as death:

"Here he comes!"

It was quite true. The buggy was rattling up the road, and the driver had caught a glimpse of the victim's face as he came.

When Teresa came to herself she glanced out, terribly bewildered, and saw her mistress lying on the porch.
She ran out with a dreadful cry of "God help mercy!" and lifted the prostrated woman.

An old gentleman had by this time got out of the carriage and ascended the steps.

"Is she injured?" he asked, stooping
to take her pulse.

Poor Miss Dinah heard his voice—in thirty years he had forgotten many things, but not that—and the sound revived her even from the coma in which the thunderbolt had cast her.

"Richard," she murmured, with a pale smile.

They made her sit up, Teresa propping her back with her own stout knee.

"Are you hurt, Dinah?" asked Richard Clifford.

She moved her head with a strange helplessness, striving for something—they could not tell what. Then she said:

"I can't see—I am blind. I shall never see you again, Richard. The lightning has done it!" and from those sightless eyes came two or three great tears that rolled down on his hand and hers, looked together in greeting, after so long.

He took her in and gave her some stimulants, and very soon she was quite herself, in all things but one; but that was never to be any more—never.

He remained; but the great dinner went begging. A doctor came and examined—"No use; sight quite gone."
and he left her alone.

Poor Miss Dinah cried. Her vow—the crucifix! Was it a judgment?

Richard Clifford lingered there many weeks, and she became more resigned.
One day they went quietly to the village
church and were married.

"I am so changed, Richard."

"Not to me," he said.

But there was a disenchantment for him, although he thus denied it, which she, poor thing, never knew. Perhaps that was some compensation for her great loss. To her mind Richard Clifford was not as to others—gray-headed,
wrinkled and bowed; but the proud and splendid lover of her youth—the brilliant apparition she had looked on for the last, last time, thirty long years before.

WE'VE got a conundrum, says the Toronto Graphic. What is the difference between a piece of mica and a follow taking his nip of grog? One is insoluble, t'other is nose-in-glass.

DAGGETT, a Texas man, has been socially ostracised. They have had three lynchings in his neighborhood recently,
and he hasn't been invited once.—Boston Post.

A NORTHERN paper, commenting on the fact that Virginia bachelors are allowed homesteads, thinks that even bedsteads are more than they deserve.

Railroad Train Yarns.

A wealthy old miserant in Iowa, a farmer, did not fence his land properly, yet grumbled when his cattle were killed. The railroad beat him in the courts, and he treasured up the hardest feelings against the company. One day a rail was tied across the track near the old farmer's land, and the first passenger train that came along was wrecked.

It was believed at the time that the farmer had tied the rail to the track.
Many persons were killed, and all the bodies but that of an aged woman were identified. The first day after the accident the old farmer did not go to the town wherein this body awaited burial,
but on the following morning he visited the post-office and received word that his sister was coming from the East to visit him. He rushed to the morgue and identified the body of the unknown lady as that of his sister. In less than a year he became a maniac, and in his ravings admitted that he had wrecked
the train.

A stupid lamb was sent to run between the wheels of a rapidly moving locomotive near Sumbury. The engineer suffered a pang of regret, for he was tender-hearted, and would not run over a snake if he could help it. He looked back over the road for the corpse of the unfortunate lamb. To his astonishment he saw the lamb leap from the track behind the train, and he was wagging its tail. It had passed under the train and was unharmed.

"A HAWK and was unharmed."
The President's remains were that suddenly stepped in front of his engine. He had been watching the man and saw his face as he crossed over the track and walked into the engine. The man was blind. The engineer caught a glimpse of the victim's face as he was struck. His expression was one of terror. His scream was heard above the pounding of the engine.

The sight haunted the engineer until he quit his business. Every night at that spot that scene was re-enacted. He took a day-train, but at noon the apparition haunted the spot. He even went into the service of another company,
yet at unexpected moments the spectre of the blind man seemed to start up in the track, to throw his arms over his head wildly, to scream, and to be crushed under the locomotive. It was more than the engineer could bear.

There is narrated a weird story about an apparition of a train on the Hudson River Railroad. It is said that there are many trackmen and laborers along the line of the Hudson River Railroad who pretend to have seen the specter.

The tale is about a mystic counterpart
of the funeral train that bore Abraham Lincoln's remains from New York to the West. The actual and substantial train passed over the road on a certain day in April, 1865. The car that contained the President's remains was heavily draped. It is said that on that night, every day, all the train men who are on the road during a certain hour (that varies in different subdivisions of the road) hear and see and feel the specter train rush by them with sounds hollow and awful. Its lights are yellow, pale, and funereal. Its train hands and passengers are sepulchral figures. It looks like the outline of a train, and it is as real as any train who have seen it say, though they felt that it was only a vision, that a man could walk through it if he had the power to do so.

It seems perfect in everything except substantiality. It even carries with it a whirl of wind as fast trains do, but it is a cold, clammy, gravelike atmosphere, all its own. As it passes among the trees, the shrubs, the fields, and the
of its bell strike terror to the hearts of those that hear them.

Said a gray haired man about sixty-
five years of age, who had been a quiet listener to the boys' yarns: "We have not but much talk about the specter down my way"—adding in parenthesis,
"I'm from Kentucky!"—"but perhaps you never heard of Captain Phillips' experience in a railroad wreck. It was a little singular. Captain Phillips is a conductor on the Louisville & Cincinnati Short Line Road, and at the time I speak of was running a 'freight.' A heavy storm had followed his train from Cincinnati—a severe winter storm that was accompanied by a fearful wind and rain and had raged a considerable time. His train was just beyond Walton, thirty miles the other side of Cincinnati, and was approaching a bridge that spanned
a little creek that empties into the Licking River. Usually this stream is low, but on that night (this was some four years ago) it had become a swollen, roaring torrent. A passenger train had crossed the bridge safely, but it gave way under the weight of the freight, and was in the caudex which was next to the tender. He was alone there. As the caudex rolled upon the bridge Captain Phillips felt car, bridge and everything else suddenly sink beneath him. He felt the caudex and engine part, and then the caudex struck the rushing stream. The caudex light went out and the water poured in upon the flooring upon which he stood. The Captain was thrown down, but he regained his feet and managed to stand while the car was swept along. It was an awful position. The water poured in and rose higher and higher around him; the car floated, but it turned from side to side, pitching and rolling, and struck with fearful force upon the cottonwood trees that stood in the way of the torrent. Phillips did not lose his presence of mind but struggled persistently to reach the car door. Again and again he approached it, but the rolling
and plunging of the car threw him back.
The minutes seemed hours to Phillips.
The water in the car rose higher and higher—past his knees, past his waist,
up to his chest, over his shoulders—
even up to his chin. Finally his head struck the top of the car whenever the car changed its motion. Suddenly,
when all chance of escape seemed out
of question, the car doors burst open,
and, by a tremendous effort, Phillips
reached and braced himself in its framework. The next instant he seized a limb of a cottonwood tree, against which the caudex was carried. He held tight, and the car was swept on, while he hung to the tree. The other cars of the train rushed past one by one, and more than once the tree he clung to was struck by them. So great was the force of the torrent that the locomotive was carried many yards down the stream,

and some loaded cars of wheat were swept into the Licking River and down to Cincinnati, thirty miles away. Phillips was rescued in the morning."

A Woman of Nerve.

A Morris, Ill., dispatch to the Chicago Tribune says: A bold and desperate attempt was made by a prisoner in the jail at Morris to escape, which was happily frustrated by Mrs. Schroeder, the Sheriff's wife. John Sullivan is confined in jail for robbing the railroad cars, awaiting the next session of the Circuit Court for his trial. He was confined in the upper tier of cells. There are two upper and two lower rows, which are locked by bars handled in the jail; but one of the upper corridors is usually left unlocked, being occupied by insane or harmless prisoners. When the prisoners this noon went from dinner to their cells, Sullivan slipped into the cell of an insane man, and, therefore, was not locked in. After the Sheriff had locked all of the other rows
a prisoner, evidently a pal of Sullivan,
handed out some money from between
the bars of his cell, asking the Sheriff
to buy him some tobacco. The Sheriff
supposing that all were locked within
their cells, unlocked the iron gate leading into the hall, went in, and, just as
he had reached out to take the money,
heard a voice behind him, and saw that
Sullivan had locked all of the other rows
a prisoner, evidently a pal of Sullivan,
handed out some money from between
the bars of his cell, asking the Sheriff
to buy him some tobacco. The Sheriff
supposing that all were locked within
their cells, unlocked the iron gate lead-
ing into the hall, went in, and, just as
he had reached out to take the money,
heard a voice behind him, and saw that
Sullivan had locked all of the other rows

a prisoner, evidently a pal of Sullivan,
handed out some money from between
the bars of his cell, asking the Sheriff
to buy him some tobacco. The Sheriff
supposing that all were locked within
their cells, unlocked the iron gate lead-
ing into the hall, went in, and, just as
he had reached out to take the money,
heard a voice behind him, and saw that
Sullivan had locked all of the other rows

a prisoner, evidently a pal of Sullivan,
handed out some money from between
the bars of his cell, asking the Sheriff
to buy him some tobacco. The Sheriff
supposing that all were locked within
their cells, unlocked the iron gate lead-
ing into the hall, went in, and, just as
he had reached out to take the money,
heard a voice behind him, and saw that
Sullivan had locked all of the other rows

a prisoner, evidently a pal of Sullivan,
handed out some money from between
the bars of his cell, asking the Sheriff
to buy him some tobacco. The Sheriff
supposing that all were locked within
their cells, unlocked the iron gate lead-
ing into the hall, went in, and, just as
he had reached out to take the money,
heard a voice behind him, and saw that
Sullivan had locked all of the other rows

a prisoner, evidently a pal of Sullivan,
handed out some money from between
the bars of his cell, asking the Sheriff
to buy him some tobacco. The Sheriff
supposing that all were locked within
their cells, unlocked the iron gate lead-
ing into the hall, went in, and, just as
he had reached out to take the money,
heard a voice behind him, and saw that
Sullivan had locked all of the other rows

a prisoner, evidently a pal of Sullivan,
handed out some money from between
the bars of his cell, asking the Sheriff
to buy him some tobacco. The Sheriff
supposing that all were locked within
their cells, unlocked the iron gate lead-
ing into the hall, went in, and, just as
he had reached out to take the money,
heard a voice behind him, and saw that
Sullivan had locked all of the other rows

a prisoner, evidently a pal of Sullivan,
handed out some money from between
the bars of his cell, asking the Sheriff
to buy him some tobacco. The Sheriff
supposing that all were locked within
their cells, unlocked the iron gate lead-
ing into the hall, went in, and, just as
he had reached out to take the money,
heard a voice behind him, and saw that
Sullivan had locked all of the other rows

a prisoner, evidently a pal of Sullivan,
handed out some money from between
the bars of his cell, asking the Sheriff
to buy him some tobacco. The Sheriff
supposing that all were locked within
their cells, unlocked the iron gate lead-
ing into the hall, went in, and, just as
he had reached out to take the money,
heard a voice behind him, and saw that
Sullivan had locked all of the other rows

a prisoner, evidently a pal of Sullivan,
handed out some money from between
the bars of his cell, asking the Sheriff
to buy him some tobacco. The Sheriff
supposing that all were locked within
their cells, unlocked the iron gate lead-
ing into the hall, went in, and, just as
he had reached out to take the money,
heard a voice behind him, and saw that
Sullivan had locked all of the other rows

a prisoner, evidently a pal of Sullivan,
handed out some money from between
the bars of his cell, asking the Sheriff
to buy him some tobacco. The Sheriff
supposing that all were locked within
their cells, unlocked the iron gate lead-
ing into the hall, went in, and, just as
he had reached out to take the money,
heard a voice behind him, and saw that
Sullivan had locked all of the other rows

a prisoner, evidently a pal of Sullivan,
handed out some money from between
the bars of his cell, asking the Sheriff
to buy him some tobacco. The Sheriff
supposing that all were locked within
their cells, unlocked the iron gate lead-
ing into the hall, went in, and, just as
he had reached out to take the money,
heard a voice behind him, and saw that
Sullivan had locked all of the other rows

a prisoner, evidently a pal of Sullivan,
handed out some money from between
the bars of his cell, asking the Sheriff
to buy him some tobacco. The Sheriff
supposing that all were locked within
their cells, unlocked the iron gate lead-
ing into the hall, went in, and, just as
he had reached out to take the money,
heard a voice behind him, and saw that
Sullivan had locked all of the other rows

a prisoner, evidently a pal of Sullivan,
handed out some money from between
the bars of his cell, asking the Sheriff
to buy him some tobacco. The Sheriff
supposing that all were locked within
their cells, unlocked the iron gate lead-
ing into the hall, went in, and, just as
he had reached out to take the money,
heard a voice behind him, and saw that
Sullivan had locked all of the other rows

a prisoner, evidently a pal of Sullivan,
handed out some money from between
the bars of his cell, asking the Sheriff
to buy him some tobacco. The Sheriff
supposing that all were locked within
their cells, unlocked the iron gate lead-
ing into the hall, went in, and, just as
he had reached out to take the money,
heard a voice behind him, and saw that
Sullivan had locked all of the other rows

a prisoner, evidently a pal of Sullivan,
handed out some money from between
the bars of his cell, asking the Sheriff
to buy him some tobacco. The Sheriff
supposing that all were locked within
their cells, unlocked the iron gate lead-
ing into the hall, went in, and, just as
he had reached out to take the money,
heard a voice behind him, and saw that
Sullivan had locked all of the other rows

a prisoner, evidently a pal of Sullivan,
handed out some money from between
the bars of his cell, asking the Sheriff
to buy him some tobacco. The Sheriff
supposing that all were locked within
their cells, unlocked the iron gate lead-
ing into the hall, went in, and, just as
he had reached out to take the money,
heard a voice behind him

THE REPUBLICAN.

OAKLAND, MARYLAND.

JAS. A. HAYDEN,
Editor and Proprietor.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.
One copy, one year, $1.50
Six months, $1.00
Three months, $0.50
Invariably in advance.

TERMS OF ADVERTISING.
First insertion, 5¢ per square of 8 lines;
Subsequent insertions, 3¢ per square of 8 lines;
Special contracts for advertising longer
than three months.

